One who uses an instrument played with the hand, as a drum or tambourine pG issaraC
A sort of music
pG ihito
Kind to living beings, benevolent pG +
A living being, a sentient being, a creature, animal, man pG upeto Possessed of breath, living pG o Breath; life, vitality; a living being, creature; energy, vigour, strength ptañjali
Having the hands clasped ptabbo Drinkable
ptarso Morning meal, breakfast
ptavyat Injuring, destroying

ptlaC
The nga world, the lower regions, infernal regions; submarine fire
pti
To protect ptito
see <see>pteti</see> ptimokkhaC
This is the name given to a collection of the various sikkhpadas or precepts contained in the beginning with the four prjikas and ending with the seventy-five sekhiyadhammas, which are solemnly read twice a month in every monastery, see <see>uposatho</see>, and individual make confession, if they have broken any of the precepts read out; ptimokkha may be descr criminal code of the priests. The origin of the term is exceedingly obscure.
pt+
A vessel, bowl, dish
ptu
and before a vowel ptur-, evidently, manifestly ptuC see <see>pivati</see> ptukaraG aC Production, manifestation ptukaroti
To produce, manifest ptubhavati
To become visible or manifest, to appear, to arise, to spring into existence ptubhvo Appearance, manifestation, apparition, arising ptur see <see>ptu</see> pto
Falling, fall; a cast, throw; discharge
pto
and before a vowel sometimes ptar-, at dawn, early, tommorrow morning ptheyyaC Provisions for a journey
pdakam ako
An anklet or foot bangle pdako
Having feet

pdagaG m hi
The ankle pdaggaC
The point of the foot pdaE gadaC
An anklet, foot-bangle pdaE gum m ho
The great toe pdatalaC
The sole of the foot pdato
At or by the feet pdaparicrik
A wife
pdap+m haC
A footstool pdapo
A tree
pdaphom o
A tumour on the foot pdaso
For the worth of a pda pdsi and (pd)He gave pduk
A shoe, a slipper pdk
A shoe
pdkdaro
A snake
pdo
A foot; a hill at the foot of a mountain; a ray of light; a quarter. foot of a tree; base of a stkpa pnaC Drinking; draught; drink, beverage; enjoyment pnakkpo
A drinking well pngraC
A tavern

pn+yo Drinkable
ppako
Bad, evil, wicked, sinful ppatamo
Most sinful
ppataro
Worse,more sinful ppanaC Attainment
ppabh+rut
Fear of sinning ppamittat
Friendship or association with sinners, evil communications ppicchat
State of having sinful desires ppiccho
Having sinful desires ppim m ho
Most sinful
ppim Sinful
ppiyo
Worse; wicked ppiyyasik see <see>tassappiyyasik</see> ppissiko
More sinful, very sinful pp+ Sinful
ppuG anaC Attainment
ppuG ti
To attain, reach, arrive, obtain, find ppuG oti
To attain, reach, arrive, obtain, find ppuraG aC
Dressing, putting on a garment; a covering, mantle, cloak, upper robe

ppurati
To dress, put on an outer garment ppo Evil, bad, wicked, sinful pbhataC
Money, price; a present pmaC
Scab, herpes, skin disease pmujjaC see <see>pmojjaC </see>, joy, delight, bliss, happiness pmokkho Principal chief, eminent pmojjaC
see <see>pmujjaC </see>, joy, delight, bliss, happiness pyaC pi ayaC
pyako
One who drinks
pyso
Rice boiled in milk, milk-rice, rice porridge py+ Drinking
pyu
The anus pyeti see <see>pivati</see>
pyo
Drinking. Only at the end of a compound; sindhupyo, drinking the river pyo Abundance
pyo Abundantly praC
The further or opposite shore of a sea, or bank of a river, nirvG a, as being the goal reache pilgrim crossing the ocean of existence pragk and (prago) One who has crossed to the other side, who has passed beyond , escaped fror accomplished or versed in

praE gato Versed or accomplished in pradriko
An adulterer prado Quicksilver
pramit Completeness, perfection, highest state
pram+ Completeness, perfection, highest state
prampariyaC Traditional instruction, tradition pralokikaC
The next world, another world
prjiko Meriting expulsion prpato
A dove, pigeon prpraC
The hither and further shores, the far bank and the near bank pricariy Service, ministration, honour; wandering about pricchattako
The coral tree, erythmia indica, a tree in Indra's heaven prijtako
A tree in Indra's heaven, the coral tree or erythrina indica prijuññaC
Decay, loss pripkr+ Accomplishment, fulfilment, perfection pribhogiko Belonging to use or enjoyment primo
Further, opposite privam m akaC
A robe, civaraC , lent to a priest and returned by him after a period prisajjo Belonging to an assembly

prisuddhi
Purity, perfection, freedom from blame, innocence prupati
To dress, put on an outer garment
prkpaghto Injuring others, cruelty prevato
A dove or pigeon plako
A keeper, guardian planaC Guarding, keeping, maintaining pli
A line, row, range; a ridge, bank, causeway; a sacred text; a passage in a text pliko
Having lines or ridges pliccaC
Hoariness, greyness of hair
plito
According to the text or words of the scriptures
plito Preserved, guarded, maintained plibhaddo
The kiC [uka tree, butea frondosa pleti
To guard, keep, preserve, maintain, observe plo
A guardian, keeper
pvaki
An epithet of skanda or krttikeya pvako
Fire
pvacanaC
The word of Buddha, the holy Scriptures pvadati
To speak out, express pvanaC
Purification; winnowing of grain

pv
A city of the Mallas, also a place near Rjagaha pvro
A cloak or mantle
pvuso
The rainy season; a sort of fish pvussako Belonging to the rainy season
pveyyako Belonging to pv psako
A die psaG i see <see>paG hi</see>, the heel psaG
iko Heretical
psaG
o Heretical
psG o
A stone, a rock
psdiko Pleasing, engaging, amiable, gracious psdo
A building erected on high foundations and approached by means of steps, a terrace, tower psiko
Connected with snares, using snares, caught in a snare pso
A noose, string, snare, fetter
phuG eyyo
Worthy of being guests, worthy of hospitality phuG o
A guest phuno Sufficient pheti
To send pi

see <see>api</see> piC speti
To cause to be ground, or bruised, or crushed piko
The Indian cuckoo piE galo
Reddish yellow, brown, tawny piE go Brown, tawny
picu Cotton
piculo
The tamarisk tree
picchil
The silk-cotton tree, bombax heptophyllum piñjaC
A feather of a peacock's tail; a peacock's tail or train; a wing piñjaro Yellow, tawny
pim akattayaC
The Three Baskets or Treasuries, a name of the buddhist scriptures pim ako see <see>tipim akaC </see> pim m haC and (pim m h+)The back; the hinder part; the surface, top pim m hako
A cake made of flour, a meal
pim m hik Grits, porridge
pim m hito
From the back; from behind, behind pim m ho Ground, crushed
pim haro
A pot or pan piG
ako

Incense, myrrh, perfume piG
acriko
Going about in search of alms piG
anaC
Rolling together, forming into a lump piG
aptiko
One who keeps the piG aptikaE ga
piG
apto
Food received in the alms-bowl of a Buddhist monk piG
ik
The nave of a wheel, the central part of a wheel
piG
iylopo
Morsels of food, broken meat piG
+
A lump, mass
piG
eti
To roll into a lump; to assemble
piG
o
A lump, ball, mass; uniting, putting together; a lump of food, morsel; food; food given in alms livelihood; the body pitar (pitaro)see <see>pit</see> pit
A father; a name of the Hindu Brahma pitmaho
A grandfather; a name of the Hindu Brahma piti see <see>pit</see>

pitito
On the father's side pitu (pitunnaC)see <see>pit</see> pitucch Father's sister, aunt pittaC
Bile, the bilious humour pittiko Bilious
pith+yati
To be shut, closed, obstructed "is covered" pidahati
To cover; to shut, close; to guard pidahanaC Covering, closing, fencing; sheath; a lid, cover
pidhnaC Covering, closing, fencing; sheath; a lid, cover
pinso
Cold in the head, catarrh pips Thirst
pipsito Thirsty
pipphalaC Scissors, shears pipphal+
The wave-leaved fig-tree; long pepper
pipphalo
The Sacred fig-tree, ficus religiosa pibati
To drink, imbibe, swallow, drink in, enjoy, feast upon piyaC vado Speaking kindly piyako
A kind of spotted deer
piyaE gu
Panick seed; a medicinal plant, priyaE gu

piyadass+
Name of one of the twenty-four Buddhas piyavd+ Speaking kindly, affable
piyyati
To be fond of, to be devoted to, honour piylo
The piyal tree, buchanania latifolia piyo
An oar
piyo
Dear, beloved; agreeable, pleasant; kind, loving pilakkho
The wave-leaved fig-tree, ficus infectoria pilandhati
To put on, wear an ornament, to deck oneself pilandhanaC
Wearing or putting on an ornament; ornament pilavo
A kind of duck piluvati
To float
pilotik
A cloth, bandage
pillako
A child, or the young of an animal pi7 ak
A boil, pustule, pimple pivati
To drink, imbibe, swallow, drink in, enjoy, feast upon pivsati
To be thirsty pisaE go Brown, tawny
pisco
A class of demons, a goblin, sprite pisitaC Flesh

pisuno
Backbiting, calumnious, malicious a tale-bearer, informer, traitor pissa Pi'ssa that is pi assa pihakaC
The spleen pih Desire, envy pihito see <see>pidahati</see> piheti
To desire; to envy
p+m haC
A chair, stool, bench; the counter of a shop
p+m hakaC
A chair, stool
p+m hasapp+
A cripple
p+m hik
A bench, stool; a platform, framework p+G anaC Satisfaction
p+G eti
To gratify, cheer, regale, please p+tako Yellow
p+tanaC Yellow orpiment
p+tanako
The hog-plum, spondias mangifera p+taslo
The tree terminalia tomentosa
p+ti Drinking
p+ti
Joy, delight
p+t+ Drinking

p+to Yellow
p+to Drunk, swallowed p+to Delighted p+no Fat, bulky p+yati
see <see>pivati</see> p+yksaC Ambrosia p+lu
The tree careya arborea
p+7 anaC Pressing or weighing on; oppression
p+7
Pain, suffering; wrong, injury
p+7 eti
To press, crush, weigh upon; to vex, to oppress, ravage, harass, hurt p+varo
Fat, bulky
pukkuso
A man of the pukkasa caste puggaliko Connected with an individual puggalo
An individual or person as opposed to a multitude or class; a creature, being, man puE kho
The feathered part of an arrow pucimando
The nimba tree, azadirachta indica pucchako Asking
pucchati
To ask; to question; to ask for; to ask about pucchanaC Asking, inquiring

pucch
Questioning, a question puccho and (pucchaC)A tail puñchati
To wipe puñchanaC Wiping, cleaning; a towel puñjo Heap, mass, multitude puññat Meritoriousness, merit, good works puññav Meritorious, righteous; fortunate puññ o
Good, virtuous; just, righteous, meritorious, pure, holy pum akaC
A small basket made of a rolled leaf
pum abhedanaC
A town
pum +
A vessel, cup
pum o
 and (pum aC)A cup, vessel, basket pum m ho Nourished
puG gavo
A bull; at the end of a compound, best, chief puG
  ar+kaC
A white lotus flower; one of the Buddhist high numerals, 10,000,000(to the 16th power), or 1 ciphers
puG
  ar+kin+
A pond of white lotuses puG
  ar+ko
A fragrant kind of mango; a tiger

puG G am
The day or night of full moon
puG G o Full, fulfilled, complete, entire puttako
A little son, a beloved son; a son puttattaC Sonship
puttadro
Son and wife, wife and child puttiko Connected with sons
puttimo
Having sons
puttiyo Relating to or connected with sons putt+yati
To treat as a son putto
A son, child
puthakktabbo
That ought to be separated puthag see <see>puthu</see> puthav+
The earth
puthu and before a vowel sometimes puthag-, separately, without, except puthu
Broad, extensive, great, big; abundant, numerous puthuko
A child; young of an animal puthukkaraG aC Separation
puthugattat Discrimination
puthujjaniko
see <see>pothujjaniko</see>

puthujjaniko
Belonging to an unconverted person
puthujjano
A man of the lower classes or of low character; a common or ordinary man, one who is unco one who has entered the paths, a worldling, natural or unsanctified man puthubhkto
Separated
puthubhkto
Become great; become numerous puthulo Broad, large puthulomo
A fish
puthuvsanaC
A large seat or chair puthuv+ see <see>pam hav+</see> puna
 puno(1) and before a vowel punar(2) and punad(3)Again, anew, afresh; back; after that, nex moreover punappunaC and (punappuna)Again and again, repeatedly punabbasu
Name of a nakkhatta
punabbhavo
Renewed existence, re-birth, transmigration punarutto
 and (punaruttako)Said over again, repeated punti
To purify puno see <see>puna</see> punnanav
Hogweed, boerhavia procumbens pupphaC
A flower; the menses pupphati
To blossom

pupphanaC Flowering pupphavat+
A menstruous woman
pupph+ Bearing flowers pubbako Former, accompanied by pubbaE gamo
Going before, preceding, prior; leading, chief pubbajo Older, elder pubbaG G aC
A name given to the seven dhaññas, rice, etc.
pubbaG ho Forenoon, morning
pubbaddho Upper part pubbanto
Beginning; the east pubbavuttako
Before mentioned pubbcariyo Ancient teacher, scholar of previous times pubbparo
First and last, preceding and following, successive, mutual pubbum m hy+
A servant getting up before the master, or a wife before the husband pubbuttaro North-eastern pubbo
Pus, matter
pubbo
Fore, first, foremost; eastern; earlier, former, preceding; ancient, customary; at the end of a sometimes means "preceded by, attended by, accompanied by"
pum
A male, a man puraC

A town, city, fortress; a house purakkharoti
To put in front, to make a person one's leader, to follow, revere, honour puram m hito Standing before purato
Before, in front, in the presence of puratthato Eastwards
puratth
In front; first and foremost; on the East; formerly puratthimo Eastern
purassaro
Going in advance pur
Formerly, previously, in a previous existence purG o
Ancient, past, former, pristine; old, worn out purtano Ancient, pristine purindado
A name of Sakka or Indra purimako Previous
purimo
Former, preceding, foremost, first; eastern purisattaC Manhood, virility purisjañño
A man of noble birth, a superior, distinguished man, a man who is to other men what the tho to other horses.
puriso
A man; a male; a person, individual; an attendant pur+
A town
puruttamaC
A noble or splendid city

pure
Loc. from puraC
pure Formerly, previously, first, originally; in front, before purekkhro Precedence, preference, deference puregm+ Preceding, leading purecaro Leading
purecriko Leading
purecr+ Preceding, leading puretaraC Forward, further, in front; before, sooner puredvraC Front door purebhattaC
Before the morning meal purohiccaC see <see>porohiccaC </see> purohito
A brahmin who is a king's domestic chaplain pulinaC
A sand-bank, island of alluvial formation in a river pulomo
The asura vepacitti pulliE gaC
Manhood, male sex; in grammar masculine gender pu7 avo
A worm, maggot pkgo
A multitude; the areca-nut tree pkjako Honouring
pkjan Veneration

pkj Attention, care; veneration; offering pkjeti
To honour, revere; to honour with, present with; to offer, present pkti Stinking, foul, putrid pktiko Stinking, foul pkto Purified, clean, pure pkpiyo
A cake-seller, confectioner
pkpo
A cake, sweetmeat
pkyo
Pus, matter
pkrako Filling, completing pkraG aC Filling
pkraG o Filling, completing
pkrati
To be filled, to get full; to be fulfilled pkrpeti
To cause to be filled pkreti
To fill, to complete, to fulfil, to attain pkro
Full
pkvako
A cake
pkviko
A cake seller, confectioner
pkvo
A cake, sweetmeat
pekkhati
To look at, behold, observe, watch with expectation; to look out for, expect pekkh

see <see>pekh</see>, wish, desire, expectation pekh
Wish, desire, expectation
pekh+ Desiring, looking for, awaiting pekhuG aC
A wing
pecca
Having departed, after death, in the next world or existence, hereafter pem ako
A basket
peto
Dead, departed pettiko Paternal, ancestral pettiyo Paternal, ancestral
pettivisayo
The peta realm or world
petteyyat Paternity
petteyyo Paternal pemaC
Love, affection, kindness; joy, pleasure peman+yo Affectionate
peyyavajjaC Kindness of language
peyylaC
Repetition, succession, "to be supplied, or filled up, or read in full" peyyo
see <see>pivati</see>
peyyo Beloved, dear pelako
A hare

pelavo Delicate, tender pe7
A basket
pesakro
A weaver
pesanaC Sending, despatching; message, despatch pesalo Beautiful, delightful pesik Rind, shell pes+
A piece of flesh or meat
pesuññaC Backbiting, slander, evil-speaking pesuG eyyaC Backbiting, slander, evil-speaking
peseti
To send pessaC Servitude
pessiko
A servant
pesso
A messenger, servant, slave, hireling, menial po Guarding, ruling
pokkharaC
A lotus, nelumbium speciosum; the tip of an elephant's trunk; water; the body; the head of a pokkharaG +
A lotus-pond, tank, reservoir
pokkharat Beauty
pokkharastako Name of a bird pokkharo
The body of a lute

poE khnupoE khaC Shot after shot
pom agalo
The grass saccharum spontaneum pom m hapdo
Name of a month
pom hilo
A proper name
pom heti
To crack, snap; to knock, to throw poG o Sloping
potako
The young of any animal potik
see <see>potako</see> poto
The young of an animal; a boat, ship
potthaC Plastering, working in clay, modelling potthakro
A modeller in clay potthako
and (potthakaC)A manuscript, a book; working in clay, modelling, etc; cloth made of maka potthalik
A doll or puppet pothanaC Beating
pothujjaniko Belonging to an unconverted person
potheti
To strike, beat
potheti
To speak many languages
ponobhaviko
Connected with re-birth in another existence porG o
and (porG ako)Ancient, primeval, former

porisaC
Manliness; the height of a man with his arms extended over his head poriso
A human being, a man, a person
poro Belonging to a town; urbane, polite porohiccaC
The office of a purohita or a priest porohito
A purohita or priest posako Nourishing
posati
To feed, nourish, support, cherish, bring up posanaC Nourishing
posvanaC Supporting, cherishing poso
see <see>poriso</see>, a human being, a man, a person plavaE gamo and (plavaE go)A monkey plavati
To float; to soar; to spring; to vibrate, hover plavo
A raft, float phaggavo
A sort of pot herb phagguG o
The month phlguG a phaG ijjako
The plant sam+raG a phaG indo
A hooded snake phaG +
A snake
phaG o
The hood of a snake, especially of a cobra

phandati
To throb, palpitate, tremble, struggle phandano Palpitating, trembling, agitated, unsteady pharaG aC Pervading
pharati
To flash, shine forth; to thrill or dart through, to pervade; to diffuse, send forth, emit pharasu
A hatchet, axe pharuso
Harsh, unkind, fierce, savage; rough, rugged; severe, cruel
phalaC
A certain measure or weight
phalaC
Fruit, a fruit, grain, crop, produce; result, consequence; reward, profit, advantage; a testicle phalakaC and (phalako)A board, slab; a shield phalati
To split asunder, break open, burst; to bear fruit phalav Bearing fruit
phalphalaC and (phalphalni)Wild fruits, berries phalrmo
Fruit garden, orchard phaliko and (phalik)Crystal, quartz phalito
Bearing fruit or crop, fruitful; broken; grey, grey-haired phalino Bearing fruit
phal+ Bearing fruit
phalu
A knot or joint in a reed phallati
To bear fruit

phassanaC Contact
phassito
Made to touch, brought into contact phasseti see <see>phusati</see> phasso Touch, contact phG itaC
The concentrated thick juice of the sugar cane, raw sugar, molasses phti Increase, growth phrusakaC
Name of one of Indra's groves phlanaC Splitting, bursting phlpeti
To cause to be split or torn phleti
To split, cut, sever, break open phlo
A ploughshare
phsu
Enviable, agreeable, pleasant, easy, comfortable phsuk
A rib. Of the side rafters or ribs of a hut phsuko Pleasurable, agreeable, comfortable phsulik
A rib
ph+to Prosperous
phum anaC Tearing, bursting phum o Thrilled, pervaded phum m ho
see <see>phusati</see>

phuliE gaC
A spark phullito Blossoming
phullo Expanded, blown; split, broken phusati
To touch; to reach phusan Touching, attaining phussito Flowered, blossoming phusso
Name of a nakkhatta; name of a month; name of a Buddha pheggu Empty, vain, poor pheG o Foam, froth
phenilo
The soap plant, sapindus detergens phom o
A swelling, boil, tumour bako
A crane bird
bajjhati
To be bound; to be imprisoned battiC s Thirty-two badar Cotton
badar+
The jujube tree
badaro
The jujube fruit baddhaC
A leather thong or strip baddho
Bound; fixed; continuous; acquired, contracted badhiro Deaf bandhak+

An unchaste woman
bandhati
To bind; to fasten; to fix; to embank; to acquire, to get, to contract bandhanaC
Binding; bonds; a fetter; a band, ligature; a snare, a trap; the stalk of a leaf or flower bandhangraC
A prison
bandhan+yo
To be bound, fit to be bound bandhavo
A kinsman
bandhgraC
A prison
bandhpeti
To cause to be bound; to cause to be embanked, of a river bandhu
A relative, a kinsman bandhuj+vo
and (bandhuj+vako)The plant penapeted phoenicea bandhum
Having relatives bandhuro Uneven, undulating bandhkko
The plant pentapetes phoenicea
bandheti
To cause to be bound; to bind, to fix, to tie, to fasten bandho Binding; bonds; union; bandage bappo
A tear
babbajo
A sort of coarse grass babbu
A mongoose or ichneumon; a cat

barihaC
A peacock's tail
barihisaC Sacrificial grass
barih+
A peacock
balaC
Strength, power, force; an army, troops, forces; bulkiness balakyo
An army
balakkro Violence
balaggaC
Front of an army, troops in array balati
To live balattho
A royal messeger or peon, a palace servant balavataro Stronger
balav Strong
balk
A crane bird
bali
Religious offering, oblation; royal revenue, tax bali Strong
balikammaC
Religious offering, offering of food to bhutas balipum m ho
A crow
balim Receiving offerings
balivaddo
An ox
baliso
A fish-hook

bavhbdho
Much sickness, also an adj. meaning "having much sickness", "having bad health" bahalato
In thickness
bahalo Thick
bahi Outwards, outside, out of doors
bahiC
Outwards, outside, out of doors
bahiddh Outside bahu Much; many; large, ample bahukicco
Having many duties, very busy bahuko Much; many bahujgaro
Keeping many vigils, very watchful bahujjano
Most people, the multitude, the world bahutaro
More bahuttaC Multitude
bahutthaC
In many ways
bahudh
In many ways
bahunadiko
Receiving many rivers, an epithet of the ocean bahuppado Liberal, munificent bahubb+hi
This is the technical name for one sort of samsa bahubhG it Garrulousness, talkativeness

bahubhG + Garrulous, talkative bahubhvo Quantity, multiplicity bahubhedo Multiform, various bahumato Esteemed, venerated
bahul+kato Enlarged, increased bahul+karoti
To increase, to extend bahulo
Much, abundant; abounding in bahuvacanaC
In gram. the plural number bahuvrako
The tree cordia myxa
bahuvidho
Various, multiform bahuso Greatly, abundantly bahussutattaC Learnedness, erudition bahussuto
Having great religious knowledge, learned, erudite bahkdako Holding much water bahkpakro
Very helpful, very useful bkuc+
The plant vernonia anthelminthica bG adhi
A quiver
bG o
A arrow
bdhati
To obstruct, to annoy, to afflict, to oppress bdh Annoyance, affliction; refutation, contradiction brasa Twelve

brG as+
The city of Benares
brG aseyyako Belonging to Benares
blako
A boy, a child; the young of any animal blat Childhood
blattaC Childhood
bltapo
The rays of the newly-risen sun blvatro
Name of a well-known pali grammar blisiko
A fisherman
bliso Young; ignorant bleyyo
Fit for a child
blo
Young; ignorant, foolish blyaC Childhood, youth; ignorance, folly
b7 ho
Hard, severe, excessive bv+sati Twenty-two bhati
To remove, to put away, to reject bh
The arm bhito
see <see>bdhati</see>

bhirako External, foreign, heretical bhirato
From outside
bhir
From outside
bhire Outside, externally; outside Buddhism bhiro External; foreign; non-Buddhist, heretical; external to the individual, objective bhu
The arm
bhujañño
Having many adherents, extended to many people bhujo
A khattiya
bhumklaC
The armpit bhulyaC Abundance bhullaC Abundance
bhusaccaC Great learning
bheti
To remove, to put away, to reject
bhyo External
bindu
A drop; a spot; a little circle or dot used as a symbol for anusvra; one of the high numerals, 1
the 7th power) or 1 followed by 49 ciphers bimb
A name of Yasodhar bimbisro
Name of a king of Magadha, a convert of Buddha bimbo and (bimbaC)The disk of the sun or moon; an image, a figure; the fruit of momordica mon bimbohanaC

A pillow
biraG aC
A fragrant grass, andropogon muricatum
bilaC
A hole, a chasm
bilaC
A part, a bit bilaE go Sour gruel
bilaso
Bit by bit bilro
A cat billaC
A sort of salt
billo
The tree egle marmelos
bi7 lo
A cat
b+jaC
A germ; a seed; cause, origin
b+jagmo
Seed-group, seed-kingdom, collection of germs
b+bhaccho
Loathsome, dreadful; altered, disguised
b+mbik
The plant momordica monadelpha bujjhati
To know, to perceive, to understand bujjhanaC Knowing
bu

  hataro
Elder, senior
bu

  hat

Seniority, greater age
bu

ho Old, aged buddhakappo
A kappa in which one or more Buddhas appear buddhakiccaC
That which has to be done by a Buddha, his duty or mission buddhaguG o
Quality, attribute, virtue of a Buddha buddhaghoso
An eminent Buddhist divine who flourished in the fourth-fifth century A.D. buddhaE kuro
An embryo Buddha, one destined to become a Buddha buddhacakkhu
The eye of Buddha, his omniscience buddhat Knowledge
buddhattaC
Buddhahood
buddhadhammo Condition or attribute of a Buddha buddhantaraC
The period between the death of one Buddha and the appearance of another buddhabhvo
State of a Buddha, Buddhahood buddhabhkmi
Degree or condition of a Buddha, Buddhaship buddhavisayo
The extent of Buddha's power or wisdom buddhassanaC
The commandment or religion of Buddha buddhi Understanding, knowledge, intelligence buddhiko
Having faith in Buddha buddhim

Intelligent, wise
buddhuppdo
Appearance or birth of a Buddha in the world
buddho
Known, understood; possessing knowledge, enlightened, wise; expanded, full-blown budho
Wise
bundikbaddho
Name of a sort of bed.
bundo
The root of a tree
bubbu7 aC
A bubble; a blister, pimple bubbu7 akaC
A bubble
bubhukkhati
To wish to eat, to be hungry bubhukkhito Hungry
bkddho
A Buddha, a supreme Buddha; Skyamuni, Gotama Buddha beluvo
Relating to the vilva tree; made of vilva wood bojjhaE go Member or constituent of bodhi, there are seven bojjhaE gas or requisites for attaining the
of a buddha
bodhakaro
One whose duty it is to awaken a prince with music and song, a vetalika bodhati
see <see>bujjhati</see> bodhanaC
Knowing, understanding bodhaneyyo
Capable of being enlightened, to be taught the truth bodhapakkhiyo and -iko(1) also bodhipakkhiyo(2) and iko(3), accessory to the bodha or supreme knowledg bodhi
The knowledge possessed by a Buddha, supreme or infinite knowledge, omniscience, the T

bodhi-aE go Member or constituent of bodhi, there are seven bojjhaE gas or requisites for attaining the
of a buddha
bodhipakkhiyo see <see>bodhapakkhiyo</see> bodhimaG
  alaC
The region where Skyamuni attained Buddhaship surrounding the Bo tree, considered the m India
bodhimaG
  o
The miraculous throne under the Bodhi tree upon which Skyamuni sat when he attained Bu bodhimlako
The sacred enclosure in which a Bo tree stands bodhisatto
A being destined to attain Buddhaship bodheti
To inform; to teach; to cause to blossom bodho Knowledge, wisdom, intelligence; Buddhaship, supreme knowledge bondi
The body
by
For all words beginning thus see under <see>vy</see>-, which is the more correct spelling.
byañjanaC
see <see>vyañjanaC </see>, A consonant; a letter, syllable, word; the words or letter as op sign, mark, characteristic; sauce, condiment, curry byatto Evident, manifest; perspicuous; wise, learned byantikaroti
To abolish, remove, get rid of, destroy byasanaC Misfortune; unhappiness, destruction, loss; bad habit, sin bypako Pervading
bypajjati
To be malevolent
bypanaC

Pervading, penetration
bypdo
Wish to injure, malevolence, hatred, fury bypro Occupation, business, profession, exertion, action, work bymo
A fathom of about 6 feet, being the distance between the tips of the fingers of the two hands are extended byrosan Anger, hatred
bysatto
Attached to pleasure, covetous, etc.
bykho
see <see>vykho</see>, An array of troops; a host, multitude; a street closed at one end brav+ti
To say; to tell; to call, to name
brah Large, great brahmaC
The practice of austere devotion; the Vedas brahmakyiko
Belonging to the company of Mahbrahma brahmaghoso
Either a voice like Mahbrahma's, or a glorious voice brahmacariyaC
The duties or practice of a religious student; celibacy; chastity, purity; the life of holiness led sanctified; living according to Buddha's precepts; charity or almsgiving; the practice of the ap brahmacariyav Celibate, chaste, virtuous, holy brahmacariyavso
Living as a religious student; living a life in accordance with Buddha's law brahmacr+
A religious student; celibate, chaste, holy brahmajlaC
Name of a sermon of Buddha, the first of the sutta pim aka brahmajo Sprung from Brahma brahmattaC

Brahmaship
brahmadaG
o
One of the punishments to which monks are subject for certain ecclesiastical offences brahmapakkhiko Belonging to the brahminical party brahmaprisajjo Belonging to the retinue of Mahbrahma brahmapurohito Minister or priest to Mahbrahma brahmabandhu
A brahmin
brahmaloko Brahma world brahmavihro
Excellent or perfect state; life or abode in the brahma world; the exercise of the appamañ̃ñs, good will towards all beings brahmassaro
The voice of Mahbrahma brahm
Mahbrahma; the Hindu brahma; a brahmin; parents; a brahma angel; a Buddha brahmo
see <see>brahm</see> brhmañ̃ñat
The state of being a brahmin, brahminhood brhmaG amahslo
A wealthy brahmin brhmaG +
A brahmin woman
brhmaG o
A brahmin; an arhat brkti
To say; to tell; to call, to name
brkheti
To increase, to augment, to develope, to perfect, to devote oneself to bhaC
A star, a lunar asterism; a planet bhakkhako

Voracious
bhakkhaG aC Eating, enjoying bhakkheti
To eat; to devour; to feed upon; to enjoy bhakkho
Eating, feeding on bhakkho
Eatable, to be eaten
bhakkho
Food
bhagaC
Power, majesty; fortune, prosperity; fame, glory; virtue, merit; desire, love; pudendum muliel bhagadal Fistula bhagav
Worshipful, venerable, blessed, holy. This word is generally used as an epithet or name of a particular, Skyamuni bhagin+
A sister
bhagu
Name of one of the ten [ishis
bhaggavo
A descendant of bh[igu bhagg
Name of a people and country
bhaggo
Broken
bhacco
A servant, an attendant
bhajati
To serve; to honour; to cultivate the acquaintance of; to be devoted to, to follow, to embrace bhajjati
To fry, to roast, to bake bhajjpeti
To cause to be fried or baked bhañjati
To break, to crush, to destroy bhañjanaC Breaking, fracture; injuring, destruction bhaññaC Preaching

bhaññati
To be spoken, told, preached bham o
A soldier bham m ho
Fallen
bham m ho
Fried, roasted
bhaG ati
To speak, to say, to tell, to recite, to preach bhaG ito Spoken, said
bhaG e
This is the 1st pers. sing. pres. tmane, from bhaG ati, and is used an interjection, "I say", "t
It is a familiar term of address, frequently used by a king to a subject.
bhaG go Hempen
bhaG
aC
A utensil, article, implement; goods, wares, property; the stock-in-trade of a tradesman
bhaG
akaC
A utensil, article, implement; goods, property
bhaG
agabbho
A store-room
bhaG
ati
To quarrel; to abuse
bhaG
anaC Quarrelling, strife
bhaG
k+

The plant solanum melongena
bhaG
  griko
A treasurer; a royal treasurer, one of the ministers of state
bhaG
  ik
An article, utensil; goods, wares, merchandise; a bundle
bhaG
  iko
The plant pentapetes phoenicea
bhaG
  ilo
The tree mimosa sirisha
bhaG
  u Close shaven, bald bhatako
A servant, hireling
bhati
Support, maintenance; wages, hire
bhatiko
One who works for hire, a labourer bhattaC
Food, boiled rice; a meal
bhattakro
A cook
bhattakiccaC
Business of food, i.e. a meal bhattaggaC
A refectory, see <see>aggaC </see> bhatt
A husband
bhatti Division; service, devotion bhattuddesako
One whose duty it is to regulate the distribution of food to the monks bhaddakaccn
A name of the wife of Siddhattha, Buddha

bhaddakumbho
An auspicious vase, a jar with holy water bhaddako
Good, happy bhaddadru
The tree pinus deodora bhaddapad
Name of two nakkhattas, pubbabhaddapad and uttarabhaddapad bhaddamuttaC
The grass cyperus rotundus
bhadde
My good woman, my dear madam bhaddo
Good, excellent, noble, worthy, pious; fortunate, auspicious, happy, blest bhadro
Good, excellent, noble, worthy, pious; fortunate, auspicious, happy, blest bhante
This is a contracted form of bhadante. It is used as a reverential term of address, "Lord", "Re and is the proper address of Buddha, of Buddhist priests, of [ishis, tpasas, etc.
bhanto
Whirling, rolling; confused
bhandanto
A venerable man; a Buddhist monk bhabbo
Right, proper, good, well conducted; future bhamati
To whirl about, to revolve to roam bhamaro
A bee
bhampeti
To cause to revolve
bhamu
An eyebrow bhamuko
An eyebrow
bhameti
To cause to revolve, to whirl
bhamo

Whirling; a lathe; a watercourse, drain bhayaC Fear, fright; danger, calamity
bhayaE karo Fearful, dreadful bhayam m ho
In danger; terrified bhaynako
Frightful, horrible
bharaG aC Bearing, supporting, maintenance bharaG +
Name of the second nakkhatta bharati
To bear, to support, to maintain, to nourish bharito Filled with bhariy
A wife
bharo Supporting
bharo
A load; much, excessive bhalltako
 and (bhalltak+)The marking nut plant, semicarpus anacardium bhall+
The marking nut plant bhavaC
Lord, Sir
bhavakkhayo
Cessation of birth or existence, arahatta or nirvG a bhavaggaC Culminating point of existence bhavati and (hoti)To be; to exist; to become; to take place; to befall; to behave bhavat+ see <see>bhavaC </see> bhavadim m hi

The heresy of believing matter and being to be everlasting bhavanaC
Being, existence; a house, dwelling, palace bhavan+yo
That ought to be, that must be bhavanetti Desire, lust
bhavantaraC
Another birth or existence, viz. either a previous or a subsequent one bhavant
see <see>bhavaC </see> bhavant+
see <see>bhavaC </see>
bhavbhavo
Various births, repeated birth, existence under different forms successively, as deva, man, p bhavitabbo and (hotabbo)That is or ought to be bhavissanti
The future tense, vibhatti is understood bhave
1st pers. pres. tm, from bhavati; also 3rd pers. opt. par. from bhavati; also loc. sing. from bha bhavo
Being, existence; birth, origin; renewed existence, saC sara; a birth or existence in the Bud gain, increase, welfare bhavyo Existing, being bhast
A bellows bhasmaC Ashes
bhasm+karaG aC
Reducing to ashes
bhasm+bhavati
To be reduced to ashes bhassaC Talk bhassati
To fall

bhassaro Shining, brilliant bh
Light, ray, splendour bhkaro
The sun
bhgadheyyaC
Lot, destiny
bhgav Partaker of, having a share in bhgineyyo
A sister's son, nephew bhgiyo Connected with, conducive to
bhg+
Partaking in; undergoing, suffering
bhg+rath+
The Ganges
bhgo
A portion, part, share; region, quarter, side; time; lot, destiny bhgyaC
Fortune, lot, destiny; merit and demerit acquired in former existences bhjanaC
A vessel, bowl, jar; dividing, distribution bhjpeti
To cause to be distributed bhjeti
To divide, to distribute bhG aC
Saying, reciting
bhG aC
Telling, expounding
bhG ako
A jar
bhG ako
Reciting, saying, preaching
bhG avraC
A recitation, a portion for recital

bhG + Speaking; talking bht
A brother; a cousin germane
bhti
To shine; to appear bhtikattaC
State of being a brother bhtiko
A brother
bhtuko
A brother
bhtuno see <see>bht</see> bhtussa
see <see>bht</see> bhnu
A ray of light; the sun bhnum Luminous, brilliant bhyati
To fear, to be afraid of bhrako
A load bhrataC
The mahbhrata bhrat+ Speech
bhradvjo
Name of one of the ten [ishis
bhrapdat Elephantiasis of the leg
bhriko
A porter
bhriko Serious, grievous
bhriyo Serious, grievous

bhr+ Carrying, bearing bhro
A weight, a burden; charge, duty, business; a weight of 2000 palas bhvanaC Consideration, reputation
bhvan
Producing; increasing, developing, being devoted to, realizing, attaining; earnest considerati bhvanmayo Consisting of or sprung from meditation bhvito
Increased, enlarged, perfected; trained, practised; occupied with, intent; attained; perfumed bhv+ Future
bhveti
To cause to exist, to produce, to obtain; to increase, to enlarge, to perfect; to be occupied w practise, to be versed in; to develop the idea of, to dwell upon, to contemplate bhvo
Property, nature; state, condition; meaning, intention; gesture; amorous dalliance; substance
bhsati
To speak; to say; to address
bhsati
To shine
bhsanaC
Lustre, radiance
bhs
Speech, language
bhs
Light, radiance bhsit
One who speaks or utters
bhsito
Spoken; told, stated; spoken to, addressed bhsuro Shining
bhseti
To illuminate bhso

A vulture
bhiC sanako Alarming
bhiC sano Dreadful, horrible
bhiC spanaC Terrifying, intimidation bhiC speti
To frighten, to terrify bhiC sik Terrifying, an alarm
bhikkhati
To ask for, to beg bhikkh
Begging; alms; begged food, boiled rice, food bhikkhcariy
Going about for alms, going the rounds bhikkhcro
Going the rounds for alms
bhikkhu
A beggar; a mendicant friar; a Buddhist monk bhikkhun+
A female mendicant, a Buddhist nun bhikkhusaE gho
A company of monks
bhiE kro
A golden vase
bhiE ko
A young elephant
bhiE garjo
Name of a shrub, eclipta prostrata bhijjati see <see>bhindati</see> bhijjanaC
Breaking up, dissolution bhijjo
To be broken
bhitti

A wall of earth or masonry bhid Difference, kind bhindati
To break; to break up, to injure, to destroy; to divide; to separate bhindanaC Breaking destrying bhindivlo
A sort of spear bhinnako Schismatic
bhinno
Broken; divided; disunited; separated; other, different; joined, connected bhisaC
The film or fibres of the stalk of the water lily bhisakko
A physician
bhis+
A mat or mattress
bh+ Fear
bh+ti Fear
bh+to Frightened, afraid bh+mo
Dreadful, horrible; cruel bh+yo and (bhiyyo)More bh+yo
 and (bhiyyo)Again, further, besides; repeatedly, frequently; much bh+yosomattya
 and (bhiyyosomattya)More and more, exceedingly, abundantly bh+ru Timid, afraid
bh+ruko Timid, afraid
bh+rut

Timidity, dread
bh+s+lo Timid bhujago
A snake
bhujaG gamo
A snake
bhujaG go A snake
bhujasiro
The shoulder
bhuj
The arm
bhujisso
A freed slave, a freedman; a freeman bhujo
The arm
bhuñjati
To eat, to partake of, to enjoy; to possess, to govern bhuñjanaC Enjoying, eating bhuñj+ Eating bhuttav Having eaten
bhutti
Having eaten
bhutti Eating, enjoying bhutto Eaten; possessed, used bhutv
see <see>bhuñjati</see> bhummam m ho
Standing on the ground
bhummattharaG aC
A carpet
bhummo

Terrestrial bhuvanaC
The world
bhuvi
see <see>bhk</see> bhusaC
Chaff of corn
bhusaC
Much, exceedingly bhuso
Much, excessive bhk
The earth
bhk
An eyebrow
bhkjapatto
The bhojpatra tree, a kind of birch bhktagmo Vegetation, as grass, plants, shrubs, trees bhktattaC
State of being a bhkta
bhktadhar
The earth
bhktapati Indra
bhktapubbo
That has been or existed before bhktapo
A yakkha chief or king
bhktavd+
Speaking according to facts, truthful bhktavijj
Knowledge of spirits or demons, exorcism bhktavejjo
An exorcist
bhkti
Being, existence, birth; welfare bhktiG aC

and (bhktiG akaC)A fragrant grass, andropogon schoenanthus bhkto
Been, become, being; gone, past, former; real, true, right bhkdharo
A mountain
bhkntho
A king
bhkpati
A king
bhkplo
A king
bhkpo
A king
bhkbhujo
A king
bhkmako
Having stages or stories
bhkmi
The earth; place; stage, degree, state; the ground; story of a house bhkmik
A story or stage
bhkmindo
A king
bhkmiplo
A king
bhkmipo
A king bhkyati see <see>bhavati</see> bhkri
Much, many, abundant bhkr+ Wisdom
bhkr+
The earth
bhksanaC Ornament
bhks

Adornment
bhkspeti
To adorn bhkseti
To adorn
bhek+ Breaking, cleaving bheko
A frog
bhett
One who breaks bhetv
see <see>bhindati</see> bhedako
One who breaks, one who causes disunion bhedanaC Breaking, division
bhedanako
Liable to be broken bhedeti
To break, to cleave, to divide bhedo
Breaking; rending; division; disunion; breach, schism; sort, kind bheraG
o
A jackal
bheravo Fearful, terrible bheri
A kettle-drum, tomtom bhesajaC
A medicine, drug bhesajjaC
A medicine, drug bhesamo Terrible
bho
Oh! I say! Sir! Friend! This is a familiar term of address, and is used to inferiors and equals.

bhogav Wealthy
bhogini
A royal concubine
bhog+
A snake; a village headman
bhogo
A snake's body; a snake's expanded hood; a fold; eating, enjoying; food; wealth bhojako
A village headman bhojanaC Food
bhojaniyo
To be eaten
bhojpeti
To feed, entertain bhoj+
One who eats
bhojeti
To cause to eat, to feed; to maintain; to entertain bhojjo
To be eaten, edible
bhottabbo
To be eaten
bhott
One who eats or enjoys bhottuC
see <see>bhuñjati</see> bhonto (bhot+)see <see>bhavaC </see> bhovd+
One who says bho, a brahmin maC
mama(1), mamaC (2),see <see>ahaC </see> maC saC Flesh, meat makarando
The nectar of a flower

makaro
Name of a mythical fish or sea monster makaso
A gnat, a mosquito makum o
 and (makum aC)A crest, diadem, topknot, a crown makulo
 and (makulaC)An opening bud; a knob makkam ako
A spider makkam o
A monkey
makkhaG aC Smearing; oil makkhpeti
To cause to be anointed
makkhik
A fly
makkhito
Smeared, anointed, stained, soiled makkh+ Concealing one's vices makkheti
To smear, to anoint; to rub out makkho Concealing one's vices, hypocrisy magadh
Name of a people and country, Southern Behar magasiraC
Name of a nakkhatta
mago
A deer or antelope
maggam m ho
Walking in one of the Four Paths maggati
To trace out, to seek maggan
and (magganaC)Tracing out, research

maggasiro
Name of a month
maggmaggo
The right and the wrong way maggiko
A traveller magguro
A sort of fish
maggeti
To trace out, to seek maggo
Trace, track; road, path, course, passage; urethra maghav
Indra
magh
Name of a nakkhatta
maE ku
Troubled, restless, disturbed, put out, irritable, annoyed, angry, fretful, discontented maE kuG o
A bug or flea maE galim m hak
Auspicious brick, viz. what we call a foundation stone maE galo
Auspicious, lucky; joyous, festive; belonging to state occasions maccu Death; yama maccudheyyaC
The realm of Death
macco
Mortal, a man, a mortal
macco Maternal
macchako
A fish
macchaG
+
Thickened or condensed juice of the sugarcane macchabandho

A fisherman
maccharyati
To be envious macchariyaC
Avarice, niggardliness, selfishness, envy, churlishness macchar+ Envious, niggardly
maccharo
Niggardly, envious, grudging macch
Good soil macchiko
A fisherman
maccheraC
Avarice, niggardliness, selfishness, envy, churlishness
maccho
A fish
majjaC
Strong drink, spirituous liquor, wine, spirits
majjati
To be joyous; to be intoxicated
majjati
To rub, to polish
majjanaC
Intoxication; pride
majjanaC
Rubbing, polishing majjapo
One who drinks strong drink; a winebibber, a drunkard majjro
A cat
majjhagato Same meaning as next majjhago
Going among, being in the midst of majjhaG ho Midday
majjhattat

Impartiality, moderation, indifference majjhatto Impartial, neutral majjhantiko
Midday
majjhanho
Midday
majjhimadeso
The Central Region, Central India
majjhimo Middle, central, mean, moderate, of medium size majjho
 and (majjhaC) Middle, centre, interior; the waist
majjho
Middle, central mañcako
A bed, a bedstead mañcdhro
A bedstead mañco
A bed mañjar+
A sprout; a compound pedicle mañjim m h Bengal madder
mañj+ro
A foot ring, bangle mañju
Beautiful, lovely, delightful mañjksako
Name of a celestial flower mañjks
A bask box, casket
mañjem m ho
Light red mañña ti
To think, to suppose, to imagine, to consider, to esteem, to know, to believe, to understand mam m o

Polished, cleansed, pure, see <see>mam m ho</see> mam m ho
Polished, cleansed, pure maG i
A gem, a jewel; a waterpot maG ikaC and (maG iko)A waterpot maG ikkhandho
A magic jewel maG ibandho
The wrist maG imayo
Made of gems, or jewelled maG ilakkhaG aC
Telling a person's fortune from the jewels in his possession maG isappo
A sort of venomous snake
maG akappo see <see>kappo</see>
maG
anaC
Adornment; an ornament
maG
ano
Adorning
maG
apaC
A roofed open hall or temple, generally built for a temporary purpose, a pavilion
maG
abbo
Patronymic from MaG
u
maG
alaC
A disk, a circle; circuit, circumference; a district comprising a number of villages, a region, a heap; a multitude
maG

alaggo
A crooked sword, a sabre
maG
alamlo
A circular house or hall with a peaked roof, a pavilion
maG
alikaC
Anything round, a circle or globe
maG
alissaro
A ruler, a sovereign
maG
al+
A disk, a circle
maG
al+
Having a disk, orbed, circular
maG
peti
To cause to be adorned
maG
ito Adorned
maG ukaG m ako
A maG
u thorn, supposed to destroy a tree or plant pierced with it
maG
kko
A frog
maG
eti
To adorn, to decorate
maG
o Scum, the top part of milk matako
Dead; belonging to the dead, a ghost

mataE gajo
An elephant
matapitiko
One whose father is dead
mati
Mind, understanding, intelligence, thought, imagination; knowledge, wisdom; wish; opinion, a matim Sensible, intelligent, wise
mato
Having died, dead
mato
Thought, considered, believed, understood, known mattaC
This word is used only as the latter part of a compound, with the meaning "measure, quantit quantity, only, mere", or "exact time, as soon as" pañcadharaG amattaC , a weight of five mattakaC
A substitute for mattaC at the end of a compound; dim m hamattako mitto, a friend as so at first sight
mattaksin+
A charming woman
mattaññut Moderation
mattaññk
Moderate, temperate matt
Measure, quantity; right or suitable quantity, moderation; a little, an atom; greatness, importa mattsit Moderation in eating, temperance mattik
Earth, loam, clay, mud mattikmayo Earthen
mattiko
Consisting of one mntr or short syllable
mattiko Maternal
mattiyo Maternal

matteyyat
State of being a mother, maternity matteyyo Maternal
matto
Intoxicated, drunk; mad, furious; excited; glad, joyful matthako
 and (matthakaC)The head; top, summit, end; excellence, eminence matthaluE gaC
The brain matthu Whey
mathati
To churn; to stir up, to agitate; to crush, to destroy mathanaC Churning, crushing
madan+yo Intoxicating
madano
Kma, the god of love; the plant vanguiera spinosa madir Spirituous liquor mad+yo Mine
mado
Intoxication; pride; enjoyment; the juice that flows from an elephant's temples when in rut maddati
To rub; to compress, to crush, to trample, to destroy maddanaC
Rubbing, grinding, crushing, trampling maddalo
A sort of drum
maddavo
Hanging loose or wrinkled, withered madd
Name of a country and its inhabitants madhu
Sweet; pleasant, nice

madhukaro
A bee
madhukaro
Sweet
madhuko
Sweet
madhucchim m haC
Wax madhuddumo
The tree bassia latifolia
madhupo
A bee
madhubbato
A honey bee madhumeho Diabetes
madhurako
The j+vaka plant
madhurattaC Sweetness
madhuras
A grape madhurassaro
A sweet voice
madhuro Sweet; agreeable
madhulam m hik
Liquorice, black root extract used as sweet madhul+ho
A bee
madhvsavo
Wine made from the flowers of bassia latifolia manaC
see <see>mano</see> manaC
A little manakkro
Acute consciousness of pain or pleasure, sensitiveness

manaccham m ho
Of which mind is the sixth manasikato
Attended to, borne in mind, pondered manasikaroti
To mind, to attend, to pay attention to, to bear in mind, to think about, to ponder, to fix the m take to heart manasikreti
To fix the attention
manasikro Attention
manasicchati
To wish, to desire manaso
A substitute for mano at the latter end of a compound manass+ Sensible, intelligent, clever, prudent manpo Pleasing, pleasant, charming, pretty manyatanaC
The mind
manituC
see <see>mañña ti</see> manindriyaC
The organ of mind, the mind, the intellect manujdhipo
A king
manujo
A man manuñño
Beautiful, pleasing, delightful manussako
Human manussattaC
Man's condition, humanity
manusso
A human being; a man
manesik

One of the amusements forbidden to a bhikkhu, guessing the thoughts of others mano
 and (manaC)The mind, the intellect, the thoughts, the heart manoduccaritaC Sin of the mind or thoughts
manopubbaE gamo
Having mind for its predecessor, following upon or resulting from the mind or thoughts, caus manobhk Kama the god of love, the Indian Cupid manomayo
Springing from the mind, caused by the mind manoratho Wish, desire manoramo
Pleasant, delightful, beautiful manosil
Red arsenic
manosem m ho
Having mind or viññG a for its chief, governed by the mind, founded on the mind manoharo Striking, beautiful, charming, captivating mantaG aC Deliberation, consultation, resolution mantadharo Versed in the mantras mantabbo
To be thought, to be considered mantabhG + Speaking wisely
mant Wisdom
mantindo
A chief counsellor, a minister
mant+
A counsellor, a minister mantuC
and (mantv)see <see>mañňati</see> manteti

To consult, to deliberate, to discuss; to talk, to converse manto Deliberation, resolution, counsel, design, plan, artifice; the vedic hymns; a sacred text; a my charm, an incantation manthan+ A churn
mantharo Slow, stupid manthno
A churning-stick mantho
A churning-stick; a sort of rice cake i.e., sattu mandagm+ Marching slowly
mandabhG + Speaking little mandkin+
A name of the ksagE g or celestial river; name of one of the mahsaras or great lakes of Hin
mandravo Erythrina fulgens mandro
A name of the western mountain behind which the sun sets mandiraC
A house, an edifice; a town
mand+bhvo Slackening, dulling
mando
Slow; stupid; dull; small; low, slight, weak mamako
Mine
mamyati
To be attached or devoted to mamyito
Concerning or belonging to oneself, own mammacchedako Breaking the joints
maykkho
A ray of light

maykro
A peacock mayo
Made of, consisting of maraG aC Dying, death
maraG antiko
Bordering upon death
maraG asati
Recollection of death, meditation on death marati
To die
marammo Burmese
maricaC
Pepper
mariyd
A boundary, limit, rectitude, good conduct mar+ci
A ray of light; mirage mar+cik Mirage
maru
A sandy desert; a mountain maru
A deva
maro
Death
malaC
Dirt, filth; excrement; stain, taint; fault, defect; impurity, sin; rust malataraC
A greater or worse taint malayajo Sandal wood malayo
A mountainous range in the Dekhan; a mountainous district in Ceylon of which Adam's Peak garden, a park; jungle malin+karoti

To stain, to pollute
malin+bhavati
To be stained malino
Dirty; dark, brown, black mal+maso
Dirty, stained, polluted mallako
A cup mallik Arabian jasmine
malliko
A sort of goose with brown legs and bill mallo
A professional wrestler; name of a people masakkasro
A name of Indra's city.
masrako
A sort of bed masragallaC
A precious stone, a sort of cat's eye masi Soot; ink masuro
A sort of lentil, an edible seed of leguminous plant massu
The beard mahanubhvo Powerful, mighty mahaggato Enlarged, extensive, great, lofty mahagghaso
Eating much, highly fed mahagghiyo Costly
mahaggho
Of great value, costly, valuable mahacchaG o

A great festival
mahaG G avo
The ocean
mahati
To revere, to worship mahatt
Great-souled, magnanimous mahatthiko Productive of great good, very advantageous mahaddhano Wealthy
mahantataro
Greater, superior, bigger mahantat Greatness, bigness mahanto and mahaC (1) and mah(2)Great, large, big; great, eminent; much; excessive; excellent mahapphalo
Very fruitful, having great reward
mahabbalaC
Great strength; a strong force, a great army mahabbalo
Having great strength, powerful, mighty mahabbhayaC Great fear, horror mahallakattaC
Old age, seniority
mahallako
Old, aged; spacious, large, broad, big mahallo Old
mah
Great
maham m hakath
The Great Commentary; the Mah-Am m hakath was the oldest and most important of the Tipim aka; the tradition is that it was rehearsed at the first Council, and brought to Ceylon b translated it into Singhalese. The commentaries of Buddhaghosa appear to have been chief mahkathnaC

One of the high numerals, 10,000,000(to the 19th power), or 1 followed by a hundred and th
mahkando Garlic
mahkappo see <see>kappo</see> mahkassapo
Name of a famous disciple of Buddha mahkruG iko
Very compassionate
mahkulaC
A high family, a noble family
mahkulo
Belonging to a high or noble family mahgaG +
Having crowds of disciples or followers
mahguG o
Having great qualities, virtuous mahcgo Munificent, splendidly generous mahjaniko
Belonging to the people mahjano
The people, the populace, the public; most people, the generality of men, mankind; a great r multitude mahtaG ho Lustful
mahtalaC
The earth
mahtimi
Name of a mythical fish of vast size mahthkpo
The Great Dagoba. This is the name of a gigantic bell-shaped relic shrine built at Anurdhapu Dum m hagmiG + about 160 years B.C. It is still standing, though its outline is much injur feet in height mahthero
A great or eminent thera mahdayo
Very compassionate, all-merciful

mahdaro Anguish
mahdnaC
Great gifts or charity
mahd+po Great island mahdhiti
Having great fortitude or perseverance mahnaC
A kitchen
mahnad+
A great river
mahnasaC
A kitchen
mahngo
A great elephant, a state elephant; a great snake, a cobra; a great naga; an eminent person a bold warrior, a champion mahnmo
Name of a plant; name of the author of MahvaC sa mahnibbnaC NirvG a mahnilo
A gale or hurricane, a strong wind mahnisaC so Great advantage, great blessing mahnis Midnight
mahnubhvat Great power mahpaññat Great wisdom
mahpañṇ̃o
Having great wisdom, wise, learned mahpatho
A high road
mahpardho
Very guilty, criminal mahpariccgo

see <see>pariccgo</see> mahparinibbnaC
By this term is meant the death of Buddha, lit. "the great attainment of nirvG a". mahptakaC
A great sin, a crime
mahpuñño Possessing great virtue or merit
mahpuriso
A great man, an eminent man, a man born to greatness mahbalaC Great strength
mahbalo Strong, mighty mahbodhi
The great Bo tree. This name is given to the ficus religiosa at Buddha Gaya, under which Go Buddhaship, and also to the tree grown from it at Anurdhapura which still flourishes.
mahbrahm
The archangel Brahman, also called Brahm Sahampati mahbhaddakappo
The Great Auspicious Cycle
mahbhayaC Great fear
mahbhinikkhamanaC
The Great Retirement. This means Gotama's retirement from the world and adoption of the a preparatory to the attainment of Buddhaship. Great Renunciation mahbhkto and (mahbhktaC)A principal element mahbhogo
Wealthy; having a great hood, said of a cobra mahmaggo
A high road
mahmacco
A minister mahmati
Wise
mahmatto
A king's minister or companion, a great noble at court mahmah+

The earth
mahmaho
A great festival, pomp, festivity mahmt Grandmother
mahmukho
Having a big mouth
mahmuni
A great sage or philosopher. Epithet of a Buddha. Epithet of Gotama Buddha mahmegho
A storm of rain, a thunderstorm mahyaso Illustrious mahrañña C
A great forest
mahram m haC Siam
mahraho Valuable, costly
mahrj
A great king, a king
mahroruvo
Name of one of the eight narakas or hells mahva C so
The Great Dynasty. This is the name of a famous history of Ceylon written in Pli by a monk in the fifth century A.D. mahvana C
A great forest
mahvm o
A great pit mahvireko Cholera
mahvihro Great monastery
mahv+ro
. A common epithet of a Buddha; a mighty man, a great hero mahsatto
A noble or excellent man; a bodhisatta

mahsaddo
A great noise, a loud shout mahsaddho
Having great faith
mahsamaG o
The great ascetic, the great philosopher, an epithet of the Buddha mahsammato
The Great Elect
mahsaro
A great lake
mahsah Globe amaranth, gomphraena globosa
mahslo
A man of great wealth and position, a magnate
mahslo
A great Sal-tree mahsvako
A great disciple
mahsir
A tendon mahhanu
Large-jawed, gigantic mahhavo War
mahhso
Loud laughter, a horse-laugh mahiC sakamaG
  alaC
The modern Mysore, Karnataka
mahiC sko Mah+[saka
mahik
Frost
mahicchat Lust, desire mahiccho Lustful
mahitalaC

The ground mahito Revered, worshipped mahiddhikat
Magical power mahiddhiko
 and (mahiddhiyo)Possessing supernatural power, miraculous, magical mahindo Indra; Mahendra, a great Buddhist missionary mahindharo
A mountain
mahil
A woman mahisamaG
  alaC
The modern Mysore, Karnataka
mahiso
A buffalo
mahissaro VishG u mahissaro
A king
mah+
The earth, the ground; place; land; name of a river
mah+dharo
A mountain
mah+pati
A king mah+plo
A king
mah+po
A king
mah+yati
To be revered mah+ruho
A tree
mah+lat
An earth-worm

mahussavo
A great festival
mahussho Energetic, persevering mahesakkhattaC Power, eminence, superiority mahesakkho
Possessing great authority or influence, powerful, eminent, lit. "having the name of a great lo mahesi
Great sage, great saint "the great [ishi" is a common epithet of Buddha, or of any Buddha mahesittaC Queenship
mahes+
A king's wife, a queen
maho
A festival
mahogho
A torrent, a flood
mahogho
Having a mighty stream
mahodadhi
The sea
mahorago
A great snake, a nga mahosadhaC
Dry ginger; the plant ativisk
m
The moon
m
Not, do not mkkavo
The shrub eclipta prostrata mgadhako Belonging to Magadha mgadhiko
Belonging to Magadha
mgadho
Belonging to Magadha

mgaviko
A deer-stalker, huntsman, sportsman mgasiro
Name of a month
mghto
Non-slaughter, interdiction of slaughter mgho
Name of a month
mghyaC
The blossoms of the many-flowered jasmine mG avako
A young man, a youth, especially a young Brahmin mG avik
A young woman, a girl, a brahmin girl mG avo
A boy; a youth, a young man, especially a young brahmin mtaE go
An elephant; a caG la or man of the lowest caste mtabbo
To be measured mtali
Name of the charioteer of Sakka or Indra
mt
A mother; a maternal grandmother mtpitaro
Father and mother, parents mtpettiko
Belonging to father and mother mtpettibharo
Supporting one's parents
mtmaho
A maternal grandfather mtik
A conduit, watercourse, canal for irrigation; a heading, head, outline, sketch, text, list, table o mtito
On the mother's side mtiyo

Maternal
mt+
A conduit, canal, see <see>mt+</see> mtuko
Having a mother
mtugmo Womankind, a woman, a female mtughtako
A matricide mtughto Matricide
mtucch Mother's sister, aunt mtujo
Born of a mother
mtuln+
A mother's brother's wife, an aunt mtuluE go
The citron tree
mtulo
A mother's brother, an uncle mdanaC
Delighting; cloves
mdiso
Like me, such as I md+ Like me
mdo Pride
mdhuro
Belonging to the town of Madhur mnaC Measuring; a measure
mnattaC
This is the name of some sort of penance or punishment attached to the commission of a sa mnado
Inspiring pride, a term of respect mnan

and (mnanaC)Honouring, revering offering mnan+yo and (mnaniyyo)That ought to be honoured, venerable mnav Proud
mnav+
A woman
mnavo Mankind, man; a man mnasaC
The mind; arhatship; intention, purpose mnasiko Mental
mnaso
Lust intention, purpose
mnik
A weight i.e., four doG as mnito Revered, honoured mn+
Proud, as latter part of a compound, thinking, fancying mnuññakaC Beauty, charm mnusako Human
mnuso Human
mneti
To honour, to revere
mno
Pride, arrogance, vanity; honour, respect mpako Causing to appear by supernatural power mpeti
To make, to prepare; to cause to appear by supernatural power, to create mmako
Mine, my own; treating as one's own, loving my

Illusion, phantom, deceptive appearance, deceit; jugglery, magic; name of Buddha's mother myv+
Deceitful, hypocritical; subject to illusion; deluded myu
Bile, gall mykriko
A peacock hunter
mykro Belonging to peafowl myo Measuring
mrako
A slaver mrakheyyaC
The realm of Mra or Death, saC sara or continued existence mraji
Conqueror of Mra, an epithet of Buddha mraG aC Killing, slaughter
mrattaC
State of being mra, mraship
mrpeti
To cause to be killed, to put to death mriciko
Prepared with pepper, peppered mrito
see <see>mareti</see> mriso
see <see>mdiso</see>, like me, such as I mriso
A venerable person; the plant amaranthus polygamus; the voc. mrisa is sometimes used in a of high position
mruto Wind
mreti
To kill, to destroy, to murder mro
Death; killing; the Tempter, the Evil principle

mlako
A circular enclosure, yard, terrace, a consecrated enclosure mlat+
The great-flowered jasmine
ml
A wreath, a garland; a necklace; a flower; a row, a line mlkro
A gardener
mlguG o
A garland of flowers
mlgu7 o
A bouquet of flowers
mlik
A garland; double jasmine mliko
A gardener, a florist
ml+
Having a garland or row mluto
Wind, air
mluv
A creeper
mlkro
The tree eagle marmelos
mlo
A pavilion, a pagoda mlyaC
A flower; a garland of flowers
msako
A bean or vetch; a weight i.e., two guñjs; a coin of a low value
mso
A sort of kidney-bean, phaseolus radiatus mso
and (msaC)A month mhikso Belonging to buffaloes
mhisako
Belonging to buffaloes

migataG hik Mirage
migadyo
A deer park migabandhin+
A hunting net
migamado
Musk
migamtuk
A sort of antelope
migavo Hunting, deerstalking, the chase migavyadho
The chase
migdano
A hyena migdhibhk
King of beasts, the lion
migindo
King of beasts, the lion mig+
A doe
mig+
King of beasts, a lion
migo
A deer or antelope; a wild beast, an animal; game micchattaC
Wrongness, falsity, sin, misconduct micch Falsely, wrongly micchcr+
Acting or living wrongly micchcro
Wrong conduct or living
micchdim m hi
Wrong views, false doctrine, scepticism, heresy, unbelief
micchdim m hi
Heretical

micchdim m hiko
Holding false doctrine, heretical, schismatic, unbelieving, pagan micchdim m hit False doctrine, heresy
micchsaE kappo
Wrong thought or resolve miñjakaC Same meaning as last miñj
and (miñjaC)Marrow; pith; kernel of a fruit or vegetable mitabhG +
Speaking in moderation, a moderate talker
mito Measured, reckoned; moderate mittadkbh+
and (mittadkbhiko)Injuring one's friends, treacherous, perfidious mittadkbho and (mittadkbhiko)Treacherous mittaddu
and (mittadu)Injuring one's friends, treacherous, perfidious mittav
Having friends
mitto
A friend
mithil
Name of a town in India, the capital of the Videhas mithunaC
A couple mitho
and (mithu)Mutually, reciprocally, with each other, together; privately middhaC
Sleepiness, drowsiness, somnolence, torpor, stupor middh+ Sleepy, drowsy, torpid, sluggish minanaC Measuring, surveying minti
To measure, gauge, survey

miyyati
To die, see <see>marati</see> milakkhako
A barbarian, a foreigner, an out-caste, a hillman, one of the aborigines milakkho
A barbarian, a foreigner, an out-caste, a hillman, one of the aborigines
milayati
To languish, to fade, to wither milto
Withered, faded; languid milito
Mixed, conjoined
milindo
Menander, a king of the Yonakas whose theological discussions with the great Buddhist divi the subject of the well-known pli work Milindapañha.
missako
Mixed; combined missati
To be mixed miss+bhkto
Mixed, joined, associated misseti
To mix
misso
Mixed mihitaC
A smile
m+no
A fish; the zodiacal sign Pisces
m+yati
To be measured
m+yati
see <see>marati</see>, to die
m+lati
To wink
m+7 haC Excrement
mukuro

A mirror mukulo
and (mukulaC)A bud mukko
Another form of mutto mukhaC
The mouth; the face; front; entrance; brim; commencement; means, cause mukhapm ho
Verbal recital, by word of mouth, orally mukharat
Garrulity, talkativeness
mukharo
Noisiness; garrulous, noisy talkative mukhavsako
Mouth-perfume, a fragrant substance chewed to make the breath smell sweet mukhdhnaC
The bit of a bridle mukhullokako
Looking in a person's face, cheerful, willing mukhodakaC Water to rinse the mouth with mukhyo
Chief
muggariko
Armed with a club
muggaro
A hammer, mallet, club
muggo
A sort of kidney bean, phaseolus mungo
muE guso
The mungoose or ichneumon mucalindo
The tree barringtonia acutangula; name of a nga king; name of one of the great lakes muccati see <see>muñcati</see> muccanaC
Being released
mucchati

To become faint mucchanaC Fainting
mucchan
A musical tone, the seventh part of the scale mucch
Fainting; swooning, faintness muñcati
To loose; to release; to dismiss, to give up, to abandon, to omit; to send forth muñcpeti
To cause to be released
muñjno
A proper name, patronymic from muñja
muñjyano
A proper name, patronymic from muñja
muñjo
A sort of grass, saccharum muñja, from the fibre of which the brahminical string is made; a s mum m hasaccaC Forgetfulness, bewilderment
mum m hassati
Forgetful, careless, inattentive, unconscious, bewildered mum m hi
The fist; a handful; a smith's hammer muG
akaC Tonsure, shaving of head
muG
ako
A shaveling muG
anaC
Tonsure, shaving of head
muG
iko Shaven, bald muG
eti
To shave

muG
o Shaved, bald, bare muG diyaC Baldness
muti
Understanding, intelligence
mutiE go
A small drum, a tabour mutim Sensible, intelligent, wise
muto Thought, supposed, considered muttaC
Urine muttakmayo
Made of pearls mutt
A pearl muttguG o
A string of pearls
muttmayo
Made of pearls
muttmuttaC
A weapon which is both missile and non-missile, as a bludgeon muttval+
A string or necklace of pearls
mutthro
A string or necklace of pearls
mutti Release, deliverance; nirvG a muttikaC
A pearl
mutto
Released, delivered; free, free from; discharged, shot mud
Joy, pleasure muditbhvan

Increase or development of the feeling of benignity or kindliness, an exercise of religious me mudito Pleased, glad mudu
Soft; mild; weak; blunt, slow muduko
Soft mudut
Softness, impressibility mudd
A seal, a signet; a seal-ring; a stamp, impression
muddik
A seal, seal-ring, signet
muddik
The vine, the grape, a grape muddiko
One who practises mudd muddito Stamped, printed muddeti
To stamp, to print
muddhajo Sprung from the head muddhat Simplicity, folly
muddh
The head; top, summit muddhbhisitto
A khattiya; a king
muddho Stupid, foolish, simple mudh
In vain; gratis, for nothing
munti
To gain knowledge of, to know, to learn muni
A sage, an inspired man, a holy ascetic munindo

Chief of sages, an epithet of Buddha munissaro
Chief of sages, Buddha
mubb
The creeper sanseviera zeylanica muyhati
To be faint; to be perplexed, bewildered, infatuated murajo
A sort of drum, a tambourine
mu7 lo
and (mu7 laC)The stalk of the lotus musati
To steal; to rob, to plunder musal+ Armed with a club
musalo
and (musalaC)A club; a pestle mus Falsely
musbhaG it A liar
musvd+
Speaking falsely, lying musvdo
Lying, falsehood muhu and (muhuC)Momently, repeatedly muhuttiko
An astrologer
muhutto
A moment, a while; a period of forty-eight minutes mkgo Dumb
mklaC
A root; lowest part, base, foundation; origin, source, commencement; front, foremost, first; c sum, amount, mass; price, money; capital, principal mklako
and (mklakaC)A radish

mklako
Having its root or origin in, springing from mklyaC Wages; price
mk7 ho
Foolish; ignorant; deceived, erring, astray; misguided, infatuated; perplexed, confused mks
A crucible mksiko
A mouse, a rat me
A substitute for the instr. dat. and gen. cases of ahaC mekhal
A zone, a girdle meghavaG G o
Cloud-coloured megho
A cloud; storm, rain
mecako
Black, dark blue mejjho
Pure
meG
  o
A ram; a groom metabbo
To be measured
mett
Friendliness, friendly feeling, good will, kinduess, love, charity mettbhvan
Development or increase of friendliness and good will towards all living beings, an exercise meditation
mett+
Friendship, good will, love, charity metteyyo
Name of a bodhisatta now in the tusita heaven who is to be the next buddha metto Friendly, kind, benevolent

metyaC Friendship
methuno
Relating to sexual intercourse medin+
The earth
meduro Smooth
medo
A serous secretion that spreads among the mucular fibres, fat medhago Quarrel, strife
medhaE karo
Name of a Buddha
medh Intelligence
medhv+ Intelligent, wise
medho Sacrifice
meniko
A fisherman
meyyo
To be measured, measurable merayaC
Intoxicating liquor, spirits, rum, arrack meru
Mount Meru, a vast mountain occupying the centre of each cakkav7 a, around which are th concentric circles of rock, and beyond these the four mahd+pas or great continents melako Assemblage
meso
A ram; the zodiacal sign Aries mehanaC Membrum virile
meho
Urine; a urinary disease mokkhacikaC

Tumbling, acrobatic feats mokkhati
see <see>muñcati</see> mokkho
Principal, pre-eminent
mokkho
Release; Arhatship, nirvG a moggallno
Name of a famous disciple of Buddha, one of the aggasvakas; name of a pali grammarian w twelfth century
mogho
Vain, useless, foolish mocanaC Release; removing mocet
One who liberates
moceti
To liberate; to release; to loose, to detach
moco
The plantain or banana tree, musa sapientum modako
A sort of sweetmeat; ferment modaE giko
One who plays the mutinga modati
To rejoice, to enjoy oneself, to be happy modanaC Rejoicing
monaC Silence
moneyyaC
State of a muni, moral perfection momkho
Silly, mad moro
A peacock
moli
A topknot of hair, chignon; a crest, diadem, aigrette

moleyy
Name of a people
mosako
A thief mosaliko
Armed with a club
moso
Theft, robbery
mohito Infatuated, deluded moheti
To bewilder, mislead moho
Fainting, loss of consciousness; ignorance, delusion, error, folly, infatuation yakanaC
The liver
yakkhin+
A female yakkha
yakkho
Name of certain superhuman beings. Some of the yakkhas are attendants on VessavaG a, Yakkhdhipo, lord of yakkhas yagghe
This is an interjection or exclamation used in addressing a person; yagghe jneyysi ayyaputto anuppatto, please ma'am, do you know my young master Ram m hapla has come back!
yaE kraG Because
yajati
To sacrifice, make an offering in a Hindu sense, to give alms yajanaC Sacrifice
yaju
The yajurveda
yajubbedo
The yajurveda
yaññaE go
The glomerous fig-tree
yañño
A brahminical sacrifice

yam m hi
A staff, stick, pole; a stem, stalk; a measure of length seven ratanas
yati
A pious ascetic, a Buddhist monk yati Caesura
yato
From what, from whom; inasmuch as, since, because; from the time when yato Restrained, temperate yattako
However much, of whatever size yattha
Where, in which place, wherein, whereon, whither yatra
Since, inasmuch as yathattaC and (yathatt) Rightly, exactly yathayidaC
As; so that yath
As, like, how, when mt yath niyam puttaC nurakkhe, as a mother would watch over her ow yathkammaC
According to one's kamma or actions yathkaro
Acting in which way
yathklaC
As long as possible
yathkkamaC
In due order, successively
yathgato
As contained in a book, as written yathñyaC Rightly, fitly
yathm m hnaC Former or original place
yathm hnaC
Former or original place

yathtatho
Real, true
yathdhammaC Equitably, legally, righteously, fair, just yathdhammo
Just award, righteous punishment yathdhoto Washed, clean yathnurkpo Suitable, commensurate yathnusim m haC
According to instructions, in accordance with what has been taught yathpemaC
Out of love or affection
yathphsuko
According to comfort, pleasant
yathbalaC
According to one's power or means, to the best of one's ability yathbu

haC
According to seniority yathbhirantaC
As long as one likes yathbhucco
As is the case
yathbhktaC
According to the reality, rightly, truly, correctly yathmato
As if dead, like a dead man yathrahaC
According to worth or station; properly, satisfactorily, correctly, appropriately, duly yathruciC
According to one's pleasure or wish, as one likes, at will yathrucito
As liked, pleasant
yathruciy
As one likes, at pleasure

yathrkpo
Of that kind which, such yathlaE kato
All decorated as he was, without changing his state dress yathvajjaC
Mimicry of a person's defects yathvidhiC Duly, fitly yathvihito
As appointed, regular yathvutto
As above mentioned yathvegaC
As quickly as possible yathsako
Each his own, respective yathsaE khyaC
According to number or order, respectively yathsattiC (yathsattiy) According to one's ability yathsaddhaC
According to faith, in faith
yathsanthatikaE gaC
This is the 12th dhutaE ga precept. It means "taking any seat that may be provided".
yathsukhaC
As one likes, at pleasure, comfortably, at one's ease yathha
As he has said yathicchitaC
To one's liking, to one's heart's content yathedaC
As; so that yad
When, whenever yadi
If yadicchakaC
Whatever one wishes

yadicch
Self-will, independence yadicchito
Whatever is desired
yadidaC Namely, that is to say yadiv
see <see>yadi</see> yantaC
Implements, appliance, machine, engine yamaC
A pair
yamakaC
A pair, couple yamako Double, twin yamataggi
Name of a [ishi
yamalaC
A pair
yamun
The river Jamuna
yamo
Restraint, temperance, moral duty; a pair or couple; name of the sovereign of the infernal re yavanapupphaC
Name of a perfume
yavano Foreign, barbarian; Ionian, Greek yavaso Pasture, fodder
yavo Barley
yasav Famous
yasassiv
Surrounded by eminent men
yasass+ Famous

yaso Fame, renown, reputation, honour
yasodhar
Name of the wife of Siddhattha Gotama before he became the Buddha yahiC
Where, wherever ygu
Rice gruel ygo
A sacrifice
ycako
A beggar
ycati
To ask, beg, entreat ycanako
A beggar
ycan
Asking, begging
yjako
A sacrificing priest
yji
An institutor of a sacrifice
ytan
Torment
yti
To go; to go away; to undergo ytr
A march or expedition; livelihood ydikkho
Of what sort, like what or which ydiso Same meaning as last yd+
Of which sort
ynaC
Going, proceeding; a conveyance, vehicle, carriage, car ynakaC
A cart, carriage, car

ynikato
Made a habit of indulged in, acquired, mastered ypanaC Living, maintenance ypeti see <see>yti</see> ypyaynaC
A palanquin
ymakliko Lasting for a watch of night; yamakdlikaC is said to mean "drinkables taken by priests afte ymo
Restraint; a watch of three hours; name of the inhabitants of one of the deva worlds yy+ Going
yva
 and (yvaC) Until, while, as long as, in order that yvajar Until old age
yvaj+vaC
As long as life lasts, all one's life
yvaj+viko
Lasting one's whole life, lifelong yvatako
As long, as far, as much, as many; yvatako assa kyo tvatako assa vymo, as long as his bod is the stretch of his arms yvatatiyaC
Up to the third time
yvat
As far as, inasmuch as, because. In conjunction with tena: na tena paG ito hoti yvat bahu' bhsati, he is not on that account a wise man because he talks much yvatyukaC
As long as life should last yvatihaC
As many days as yvadatthaC
As much as required yvadicchakaC
As much as desired

yvanto
As many as yvamahanto However big yim m ho
see <see>yajati</see> yugaC
A pair, couple; a generation; an age of the world yuganto
The end of a kappa yugandharo
see <see>kulcalo</see> yugapatto Mountain ebony
yugalaC
A pair, couple
yugo
and (yugaC) The yoke of a carriage or plough yujjati see <see>yuñjati</see> yujjhati
To fight, make war
yuñjati
Turn one's attention to, be zealous, active, devote oneself to yuto
Furnished or fitted with; yoked, harnessed yuttako Worthy, proper, right
yutti
Use, application; aptness, fitness, propriety; an emblem yutto
Yoked, joined, connected, attached; right, fitting; possessing; used, adopted, performed; eng to, versed yuddhaC see <see>yujjhati</see> yuvarj
A royal prince, a crown prince associate with the king in the government yuv

Young
yuvno Young
ykthik
A sort of jasmine
yktho
 and (ykthaC) A herd of animals. A herd of elephants ykno
Young
ykpo
A pillar, column; a sacrificial post; a psda ykso and (yksaC) Juice. Of the juice of a mango. Of the juice of a jack fruit yenakammaC
Where one's karma leads yenakmaC Wherever one likes, at will yenicchakaC Wherever one likes yebhuyyat
Abundance, preponderance, predominance yebhuyyasik
Name of one of the adhikaraG asamathas. lit "according to majority" yebhuyyo
Abundant, numerous; yebhuyyena generally, mostly, as a general rule, frequently, numerou yeva see <see>eva</see> yo
Who, what, which; he who; whoever. Declined like sabbo yogakkhemo Security; nirvG a yog+
An ascetic yogo
Junction, union; method, means, plan, device; application, endeavour, diligence, devotion, m concentration; connexion, attachment; relation, order, series; in gram. a rule, aphorism yoggaC
A conveyance, carriage

yogg Training, practice
yoggo Worthy, proper, fit, adapted yojanaC
Junction, union; a measure of length, four gvutas yojaniko
A yojana in extent yojaniyo
A yojana in length or height yojeti see <see>yuñjati</see> yottaC
The tie of the yoke of a plough yodh+
A warrior
yodho
A warrior, soldier
yonako Foreign, barbarian; Ionian, Greek
yoni
The womb; the vagina; source, origin, material, cause; a class of beings; form of birth yonijo
Born from the womb, born of a mother yoniso
Causally, really; wisely
yono Foreign, barbarian; Ionian, Greek yobbañña C
Youth yobbanaC Youth
raC si
A rope; rein, bridle; a ray of light
raC sima Radiant rakkhako Protecting, guarding

rakkhati
To protect, guard; to protect from; to ward off; to keep, preserve; to beware of, guard agains rakkhanaC Protection, defence rakkhanako
One who guards
rakkhaso
A rakshasa, demon, ogre rakkh Protection rag
Name of one of Mra's daughters
raE ku
A species of deer
raE go Colour, paint; a theatre, stage, play-house racati
To prepare, compose racan
A literary production, composition racayit
Composer, author
racch
A carriage road, or street
rajako Washerman
rajakkho
Having defilement or passion. Only at the end of a compound, the termination ka belonging compound; apparajakkho mahrajakkho, having little moral defilement, having much moral de rajataC
Silver
rajati
To colour, dye
rajanaC Colouring, dye
rajan+ Night
rajan+yo

Lustful
rajassal
A menstruous woman
rajpatho
A narrow dark place where dust accumulates, lit. "dust-path", a dust hole, cellar rajpeti
To cause to be dyed rajo and (rajaC)Dust, dirt; the pollen of flowers; human passion, impurity, moral defilement; the rajovajallaC Dust and dirt
rajoharaG aC Water, in a metaphorical sense, "that which removes human passion", or "removal of human rajjaC Sovereignty, royalty, monarchy, government; kingdom, empire, country
rajjaE gaC Requisite of regal administration
rajju
A rope, string rajjuko
A string rañjanaC
Dyeing; delighting; red sandal-wood rañjeti
To dye, redden; to illuminate; to gratify, charm; to conciliate rañ̃ñ (rañño)see <see>rj</see> ram m haC
Kingdom, realm, country, land, district
ram m hiko
An inhabitant
ram m hiyo
An inhabitant raG eji Victorious in battle raG o Sin; turmoil; war, battle
ratanaC

A jewel; a precious or desirable thing rataniko
A ratana in length
rati Pleasure; love, attachment; sexual intercourse ratim Having pleasure in rato see <see>ramati</see> rattaC Night
rattakkh+ (rattakkho)With blood-shot eyes, grim, fearful of a rakkhasa rattaññk Experienced
rattap
A leech ratti Night
rattindivo
A day and a night
ratto
By night
ratto
Coloured, dyed; red; agitated or inflamed by passion; fond of, attached to rathareG u
A very minute measure of weight, a mite rathcr+
A charioteer rathn+kaC
An array of chariots
rathroho
One who fights from a chariot
rathik
A carriage road or street
rathiko
One who fights from a chariot
rathesabho

A king, lit. lord of charioteers ratho
A car, two-wheeled carriage, chariot radano
A tooth
rado
A tooth
randhaC
A hole, cavity; a fault, defect
randheti
To make subject to; to hurt, destroy ramaG +yo Delightful, beautiful
ramaG o Pleasing, charming ramati
To enjoy oneself, to delight in rambh
A plantain or banana tree; name of an apsaras rammako
A name of the month citta rammo
Agreeable, beautiful rayo
Speed
ravati
To cry, make a noise
rav Noise
ravi
The sun
ravo Noise, cry, shout
rasako
A cook
rasaggas
A nerve of sensation rasanaC

Taste, flavour
rasan
The tongue
rasan
A woman's zone
rasavat+
A kitchen
rastalaC
The infernal region or lower world
raslo
Sugar-cane, the mango tree
rasiko Spirited, witty rasitaC Thunder
raso
Sap, juice, best part or extract of a thing, essence, sweetness; liquid, fluid; juices of the body quicksilver; flavour; taste, sentiment rasmi
A rope; rein, bridle; a ray of light
rasso Short rahado
A deep pool, a lake rahasi
see <see>raho</see> rahasso Secret, private rahito Deprived of, without raho
Solitude, secrecy, privacy
rgo
Dyeing, dye; colour; human passion, evil desire, greed, attachment, lust rjakakudhabhaG
aC
An ensign or symbol of royalty
rjakulaC

Royal family; a member of a royal family, prince; a king's court, a royal palace or household; justice rjako
A king
rjagahaC
Name of the capital of Magadha rjagahiko
Belonging to or living in Rjagiha rjageho
A palace
rjagharaC
A palace
rjaE gaG aC
The court or quadrangle in a royal palace, a palace yard rjaññ o
A khattiya
rjati
To shine
rjattaC Royalty
rjadhammo
Duty of a king rjadhn+
A royal city
rjaputto
A king's son, prince rjabhoggo
A king's servant or minister, a courtier rjarukkho
The tree cassia fistula rjahaC so
A sort of goose or swan, or perhaps a flamingo rj
A king; a prince, ruler, governor
rjG
Royal authority, punishment inflicted by a king rjnurjaC
From king to king, during a succession of kings

rjbhirj
King above kings
rjyatanaC
Name of a tree, apparently an umbrageous one rji
A streak, line, row rjitthi
A royal lady, princess rjin+
A queen rjiyaC Sovereignty, royalty, monarchy, government; kingdom, empire, country rjilo Stupid
rjuyynaC
A royal garden
rjulo
An amphisbaena, a sort of lizard without legs rjknaC (rjusu),see <see>rj</see> rjorodho
Royal harem; a lady of the royal harem rdhito Accomplished, performed
rmaG +yakaC Delightfulness
rmaG eyyako Delightful
rmo Joy, delight
rvo Noise, cry, shout
rsi
A heap, quantity; a sign of the zodiac rhu
Name of an asura who is supposed to cause eclipses by taking the sun and moon into his m node of the moon rhulo

Name of Gotama Buddha's son, born before he renounced the world rim m haC
Sin; misfortune rite Except, without rittako Empty
ritto Empty
ripu
An enemy
rir+ Brass
rukkhako
A small tree
rukkhamkliko
One who lives at the foot of a tree rukkhav
Having trees, wooded rukkho
A tree
rukkho
Rough; cruel
ruci
Light, splendour, ray; desire, inclination, pleasure, preference rucim Brilliant
ruciro Brilliant, beautiful; agreeable ruccati
see <see>rocati</see> ruccanaC
Choice, pleasure
ruccanako
Pleasing, satisfying rujati
To cause pain
ruj

Disease, pain
rum m ho Enraged
ruG G aC
Weeping, lamentation rutaC
Cry, noise rudati
To weep, wail
ruddo Furious
ruddho Obstructed
rudhiraC Blood
rundhati
To restrain, shut up
rundh+ti
To restrain, shut up
ruppanaC
Being formed ruru
A sort of deer
ruho Growing
rkpaC
Form, figure, shape; image, representation; the body; in gram. a verbal or nominal form; bea state; characteristic rkpakaC
A figure, image, representation rkpav Having form; beautiful
rkpi
Silver
rkpik
An image, statue
rkpiyaC
Silver; bullion

rkp+ Having form; beautiful
rkpkpaj+vin+
A harlot, prostitute
rkhati
To grow, grow up, flourish
re
Heigh! holloa!
rekh
A line, streak
reG u Dust; pollen
revat+
Name of a nakkhatta
rog+ Sick, ill
rogo Disease
rocati
To appear good, please rocano Shining
roG G aC see <see>ruG G aC </see> rodati
To weep, wail
rodanaC Weeping
rodhaC
A bank, dam
rodhanaC Obstructing
rodho
Stopping, obstruction
ropanaC Planting
ropeti
To set up; to put in the ground, plant, sow

romaC
The hair on the body of men and animals
romañco Horripilation, bristling of hair roruvo
Name of a naraka rosako Wrathful
rosaneyyo
Capable of being enraged, irritable rosano Angry
roseti
To annoy
roso
Anger
rohi
The tree andersonia rohitaka
rohiG +
A red cow; name of a Nakkhatta rohitako
The tree andersonia rohitaka
rohito
Red rohiso
A kind of deer
lakro
The letter L
lakro
A part of a ship
lakuG m ako
A dwarf
lakkhaC
A mark; a target; a lac or 100,000
lakkhaññ o Auspicious, beautiful
lakkhaG aC
Mark, sign, symptom, characteristic; attribute, property, nature, quality; a definition; a gramm lucky mark, a personal characteristic from which good fortune may be predicted; the art of fo lakkhaG añ̃k

Knowing signs, skilled in predicting a man's future from the marks on his person lakkhaG +yo Distinguished, characterized lakkhito Distinguished, marked; renowned lakkh+ Prosperity, splendour, beauty, royal power; Lakshm+, the goddess of properity lakkheti
To mark, to characterize, to distinguish, to discern lagati
To adhere, to stick fast, to hang from lagito Adhering
lagu7 o
A club, a mallet lageti
To fasten, to tie, to hang up laggati
To adhere, to stick fast, to hang from laggpeti
To cause to be hung up laggeti
To fasten, to tie, to hang up laggo
Attached, tied, adhering laE k Ceylon
laE kd+pam m ho
Living in Ceylon
laE kd+po
 and (laE kd+paC)Island of Ceylon
laE kiko
Belonging to Ceylon. The SiC halese people, the SiE ghalese laE kindo
King of Ceylon
laE kissaro

King of Ceylon
laE gal+
Name of a plant
laE gi
A bolt or bar
laE ghati
To disregard; to jump over, to step over laE gheti
To jump over; to lift up lacchati see <see>labhati</see> lajjati
To be ashamed
lajjanaC
Being ashamed
lajj
Shame, modesty, timidity lajjito Ashamed; shameful
lajj+
Feeling shame, modest, quiet, well-conducted lañco
A present; a bribe lañchati
To seal
lañchanaC
A mark; the seal of a letter lañcho
A mark, an imprint
lam ukik
The diminutive Indian quail, perdix chinensis lam m hi
and (lam m hik)A staff, a stick; an offshoot, a plant laG cheti
To seal laG
aC
The dung of animals

lat
A creeping plant, a creeper; a branch lattakaC Lac, a red animal dye
laddhako Delightful, pleasing laddhabbo
That ought to be received or obtained laddh
ger. from labhati laddhi
Religious belief; wrong views, heresy laddhiko
Heretical, schismatic laddho
Taken, obtained, received lapako
One who mutters holy words for pray lapati
To talk, to prattle, to mutter, to whine, to lament lapanaC
Speaking; the mouth
lapanajo
A tooth
lapayati
To talk, to prattle, to whine, to beg lappeti
To cause to talk or beg lapitaC Talk; voice
labujo
The tree artocarpus lacucha labbhati
To be taken, to be received, to be obtained; to be permitted labbhaneyyo Obtainable
labbh
Allowable, possible

labbho
Obtainable, attainable; proper, right, suitable, admissible labhati
To obtain, to get, to acquire, to meet with, to find; to receive; to take; to obtain permission, to allowed; to receive an opportunity, to get a chance, to be able labhanaC Taking, receiving, acquisition lambakaG G o
Having hanging ears, or ears with long lobes. Name of a family in Ceylon lambati
To droop, to fall; to hang down, to be suspended lambiko Hanging, suspended lambito
Suspended, hanging downwards lambo Swinging, long, large layo
A brief measure of time; equal time in music and dancing lalati
To sport, to dally
lalan
A woman
lalm aC
The forehead
lavaE gaC Cloves
lavaG aC
Salt
lavanaC Cutting, reaping
lavano Reaping
lavittaC
A sickle
lavo
Cutting, reaping; a small piece, a chip, a very little; a drop lasati

To shine; to sport
lasanaC Dancing
lasik
The fluid which lubricates the joints las+ Brains
lasunaC Garlic
lahu
Light; quick; vain; frivolous, flighty; trifling, insignificant; beautiful, delightful
lahu
 and (lahuC)Quickly; surely, certainly lahuko
Light; trifling
lahum m hnaC Bodily vigour
lahut
Lightness, buoyancy
lkh
Lac, an animal dye
ljo
 and (lj)Fried grain, parched corn lti
To take lpu
see <see>alpu</see> lpo
A sort of quail, perdix chinensis lbu
A pumpkin lbhaggaC Highest gain
lbh
see <see>lbho</see> lbh+ Possessed of lbho

Receiving, getting, acquistion, obtaining, taking; gain, receipts lmako
Low, inferior, vile lyati
To reap llako
A fool llanaC
Dalliance, sport llapati To lament llappati
To lament
llas Ardent desire ll
Saliva lvako
A reaper
lveti
To cut, to reap
likuco
A sort of breadfruit, artocarpus lacucha likocako
The plant alangium hexapetalum
likkh
A measure of weight i.e., 1296 aG us likhati
To scratch, to scrape; to write, to inscribe likhanaC Writing
likhpeti
To cause to be written; to cause to be cut likhitako Written
likhito
Scratched; erased; written, inscribed liE gaC

A mark, sign, characteristic; pudendum; gender, sex; nominal theme or crude base liE gav
Having marks or characteristics liE g+ Having gender licchavi
Proper name of a race of Indian princes, also called Vajji litto
Smeared, plastered
lipi
A letter of the alphabet; writing lippati
see <see>limpati</see> limpati
To smear, to daub, to plaster, to stain limpanaC Smearing, plastering
l+no
Attached, adhering; inherent hidden
l+yati
To adhere
l+l Play, sport, dalliance
l+7 h
Ease, grace, playfulness, facility, adroitness, skill, proficiency, mastery luñcati
To pull up or out lutto
Cut off, elided luddako
A huntsman, a sportsman luddo Cruel, murderous luddho
Greedy, covetous
lunti
To cut, to reap
lupanaC

Cutting off lupyati
To be elided
lulyo
A buffalo
lkkho
Rough; unpleasant; hard, harsh lkt
A spider
lktik
A spider
lkno
Cut, reaped lkyati
To be cut or reaped lekhako
A scribe, a secretary
lekhanaC
Writing; a letter
lekh
A line, a streak, a scratch lekheti
To write, to delineate lekho
Writing, manuscript, inscription; a letter, epistle; a drawing, delineation lekhyaC Writing
le

u
A clod of earth
lenaC
A cave a rock cavern, asylum, retreat, refuge; nirvG a lepanaC
Smearing, plastering
lepo
Plastering; plaster, mortar lepyaC

Plastering, modelling in clay
leyyo
To be licked, or lapped, or sipped
leso
A bit, an atom, a little leso
A trick, a stratagem lehati
To lick lokakkhyik
see <see>akkhyik</see> and <see>lokyataC </see> lokagaru
Teacher of the world, an epithet of the Buddha or of any of the Buddhas lokaggo
Chief of the world, i.e. Buddha lokadhammat
The vicissitudes of life, the vanity of worldly things lokadhammo Worldly condition
lokadhtu
A world or sphere
lokantho
Protector or saviour of the world, an epithet of Buddha lokantariko see <see>cakkavlaC </see>, Belonging to the lokantaraC , or space between three spher lokaplo
Guardian of the world. This term is applied to several devas, as Sakka, Yama, VaruG a. Th are lokaplas. lokavidk
Knowing the universe. A common epithet of a Buddha lokdhipateyyaC Influence of the world
lokmisaC
Temptation of the world, pleasures of sense lokyataC
Controversy on fabulous or absurd points, casuistry lokiyo
Common, popular; worldly, earthly, temporal lokuttaro

Transcending the world supernatural, spiritual lokeso Brahman
loko
The universe; a world; the world; the inhabitants of a world or region; mankind; a being, a cr locanaC
The eye
loG aC
Salt
loG iko
Relating to salt, having a salt taste loddo
The tree symplocos racemosa lopo
Cutting off; in gram. elision, omission of letter lobhan+yo Connected with covetousness lobho Covetousness, desire, cupidity, greed lomaC
The hair of the body
lomaso Hairy
lomahaC sanaC
Bristling of the hair of the body caused by astonishment or fear or delight lomahaC sano
Causing bristling of hair, astounding, stupendous lomahaC so Horripilation, erection of hair of the body
lomaham m hajto
Having the hair of the body erect with wonder or fear, terrified, astounded, thunderstruck lom+ Having hair
lolat
Longing, eagerness
lolupo
Desirous, covetous, greedy

lolo Tremulous; desirous, longing; greedy; unsteady, agitated lohaC
Any metal lohakrako
A blacksmith lohakumbh+
An iron cauldron; name of a lake in hell lohagu7 o
An iron or metal ball lohajaC Brass, bronze lohitako
Red lohitaE ko
A ruby lohitapG +
Red-handed, bloody, murderous, destroying life whether animal or human lohituppdako
One who has committed the crime of shedding the blood of a Buddha lohituppdo
The crime of wounding a supreme Buddha so as to draw blood lohito Red, blood loho
and (lohaC)Iron; copper, brass; any metal va
see <see>iva</see>
va
Eva with the initial a elided after a long vowel
va
see <see>vaC sakkamo</see> vaC sakkamo Lineage, pedigree
vaC sajo Belonging to a race vaC savaG G o
The ve7 uriya gem

vaC sgato
Come down from father to son, hereditary vaC siko
A flute-player, piper vaC so
A bamboo; a shrill flute, a pipe; race, family, lineage; dynasty; hereditary custom, tradition vakulo
The tree mimusops elengi
vako
A wolf vakkaC
The kidney vakkaE go
The ruddy goose vakkalaC
 and (vakkalo) Bark of a tree; bark garment worn by ascetics vakko Crooked vakkhati
see <see>vatti</see> vaggati
To jump
vaggiyo
Belonging to a class
vaggu
Beautiful, pleasant
vaggo
A class, multitude, company, tribe, party
vaE ko
Crooked, bent; cunning, dishonest
vaE go Bengal
vaE go Discolouration of the face, a cutaneous complaint vacaC yamo
A muni or sage vacanaC
Speaking, saying, declaring; enjoining, injunction; advice; word, speech, utterance, expressi passage, text vacan+yo see <see>vatti</see> vacas

see <see>vaco</see> vacaso
At the end of a compound a substitute for; saddheyyavacaso, of credible speech, trustworth vac Orris root
vac+ Speech, words
vaco
Speech, words, saying; advice, injunction, order vaccaC
see <see>vacco</see> vacco
 and (vaccaC) Lustre; form; excrement vacchako
A calf
vacchataro
A bullock, steer vacchati see <see>vasati</see> vacchalo Affectionate
vacchno
A proper name
vacchyano
A proper name
vaccho
A calf
vajati
To go, to walk vajiro
 and (vajiraC) The thunderbolt of Indra; diamond, adamant; a stone which bores gems vajo
A cow-pen
vajjaC

A musical instrument
vajjaC
That which should be avoided, fault, sin, which is of a personal defect. Of an error in a book vajjati see <see>vadati</see> vajjanaC
Avoiding, forsaking, escaping
vajjanity
That should be shunned, improper vajj+
Name of a people, the Licchavi princes vajjeti
To avoid, abstain from, renounce, escape, leave out, pass over, except; to remove, dispel vajjh Execution
vajjho
To be killed or destroyed, meriting death vañcako
Deceitful
vañceti
To deceive, delude, elude vañjulo
The ratan, calamus rotang
vañjho
Barren, sterile vañño Sylvan
vam kro
A cord
vam umaC
A road
vam o
The banyan or Indian fig-tree
vam m aC
see <see>vattati</see> vam m ak
A quail
vam m ati

To begin; to proceed, to go on, to be carried on, to take place; to stay, remain; to exist, be; to oneself with, practise; to conduce, tend; to prevail, be customary; while vam m ati means t right. The following are examples of the use of these words: khar vedan vattanti, severe pain saE gme vattamne, when the battle began; taC mrpetuC vi, here it now behoves me to lying permissible to you, or "worthy of you"?
vam m i
A fringe; a run, brim; a wick; a lump, ball
vam m ik
A thong; a wick; a rim; a lump, ball, pill vam m +
A fringe; a run, brim; a wick; a lump, ball
vam m ulo Circular
vam m o
"Round"
vam m o
Expenditure
vam m o
"Rained" vam haro Bulky, gross
va

haki
An artisan, carpenter; mason
va

hako
Augmenting, enlarging
va

hataro
see <see>va

hati</see> va

hati

To grow, increase, multiply; to prosper
va

hanaC
Increase, enlargement
va

hano Augmenting
va

hamnako Growing
va

hi
see <see>vuddhi</see>, Increase, growth; prosperity, advantage
va

hito
see <see>va

hati</see>
vaG aC
A sore, wound, boil
vaG ijj
Trade
vaG it
A woman
vaG ito
Wounded, bruised
vaG ippatho
A trading town, mart; trade vaG o see <see>vaG aC </see>
vaG m aC
A stalk
vaG G akaC

Paint, rouge
vaG G ads+
A prostitute vaG G an Description, narration; explanation; a comment, commentary vaG G av
Having colour, having beauty
vaG G avd+ Eulogizing, a panegyrist vaG G +
Having colour; having the appearance of vaG G u
Sand
vaG G eti
To depict, describe; to praise, applaud, approve; to explain, comment upon
vaG G o
Appearance, form, figure; colour; sort, kind; tribe, caste; complexion; beauty; praise, fame; a syllable; quality, property vata
O! ah! alas! indeed, verily vataC see <see>vato</see> vatav
Devout, observant of religious duties vati
A fence vato
and (vataC) Observance, practice, habit; religious duty or act, rite vattaC
The mouth, face
vattaC
see <see>vattati</see> vattati
To begin; to proceed, to go on, to be carried on, to take place; to stay, remain; to exist, be; t
oneself with, practise; to conduce, tend; to prevail, be customary; while vam m ati means t right. The following are examples of the use of these words: khar vedan vattanti, severe pain
saE gme vattamne, when the battle began; taC mrpetuC vi, here it now behoves me to lying permissible to you, or "worthy of you"?

vattanaC Livelihood, subsistence; going on, continuing to exist vattan+ Abiding, living; a road vattabbo
see <see>vatti</see> vattamno
Fr. vattati
vatt
One who says or tells; one who speaks sensibly vattpako Causing to take place vattpeti see <see>vattati</see> vattro
see <see>vatt</see> vatti
To speak, to say; to speak to, address vatto Shaven
vatto
"Round"
vatthaC
Cloth; clothes, raiment vatthakaC
A cloth garment vatthaguyhaC
Sexual organ lit. "that which should be concealed by clothes" vatthi
The abdomen, the bladder
vatthiko Belonging to cloth
vatth+yati
To wish for clothes
vatthu
 and (vatthuC) Substance, object, thing, matter; occasion, cause; plot or subject, story, nar vatthusmiC , on what subject or matter? on what occasion?
vatthu

A site, building ground, floor; vatthudesan, fixing or consecrating a site for a religious buildin vatthuC see <see>vasati</see> and <see>vatthu</see> vatthuko
having site of foundation or ground vatthuttayaC
The three objects, namely, buddha, dhamma and saE gha vatthuvijj
A magic art by which the proper site for a building, etc. is ascertained vatrabhk
A name of Indra
vadaññk Generous, bountiful, affable vadati
To speak, say; to declare, proclaim vadanaC
The mouth; the face; speech, utterance vadn+yo Bountiful vadeti
see <see>vadati</see>, To speak, say; to declare, proclaim vado Speaking sensible vaddalik Rainy weather vaddhamayo Leathern vaddho
see <see>va

hati</see> vadhako Murderous vadhati
To strike; to kill vadhuk
A daughter-in-law
vadhk

A bride, a young wife; a girl; a daughter-in-law vadho
Killing, slaughter, murder, assassination; striking vanaC
A wood, forest; water vanacarako
A forester vanacaro
Wandering in the forest
vanatho
The undergrowth in a forest, brushwood, shrubs, saplings; desire, lust vananto
The edge or skirt of a forest vanappati
A tree bearing fruit, but without apparent blossoms; any tree
vanarji
A tract of forest; an open glade or ride in a forest vanavso
Name of a country vanasaG
o
A forest, wood vanaspati
A tree bearing fruit, but without apparent blossoms; any tree vanibbako
A beggar, mendicant, pauper vantsiko
Name of a sort of peta, "eating what has been vomited" vantso
One who has renounced all desires, an arhat vanto
see <see>vamati</see> vandati
To salute, make obeisance, pay homage to, revere, venerate vandan
and (vandanaC) Salutation, paying reverence, veneration, homage vandan+yo Deserving homage

vandk
A parasitical plant
vandpanaC
Causing to do homage vandi
A prisoner
vandi
A bard, panegyrist
vapati
To sow; to shave vapanaC Sowing
vap
The serious secretion or fat that spreads among the muscles vapu
The body
vappo
Sowing; the bank of a river
vamati
To vomit; to eject, discharge vamathu Vomiting
vamanaC
Vomiting; an emetic
vamo
Vomiting
vammaC
Armour
vammiko
An ant-hill
vammito Wearing armour
vamm+ko
and (vammikaC)An ant-hill
vayam m ho
Young, in the prime of life vayasso
A friend

vayo
see <see>vyayo</see>, Loss, perishing, decay; expenditure
vayo
 and (vayaC) Youth, prime of life; any period of life, age varako
The bean phaseolus trilobus
varaE gaC
The head; the female pudenda
varaE gan
A noble or beautiful woman
varañ̃k
An epithet of Buddha, one who has known or discovered nirvG a varaG o
A surrounding wall, rampart; the tree crataeva roxburghii varataro
Better, more excellent varatt
A strap, thong
varad+po
The Glorious Isle, viz. Ceylon varado
An epithet of Buddha as having shown men the way to nirvG a, lit. giver of the boon varapañño
Of noble wisdom, epithet of a Buddha varavaG G in+ An excellent woman
varko Wretched, miserable
varko
A pot, jar varroh
An excellent seat, chair of state varharo Bringing the boon of nirvG a varho
A boar, wild hog; an elephant varktho
A wooden ledge or fender round a chariot

varo
Choosing, appointing; a boon, blessing, favour
varo
Excellent, best, precious, noble valajo
A sort of fish
valañjako
Using, frequenting
valañjanaC
Use, resorting to valañjeti
To use, to resort to, to spend valañjo
Use, expenditure; a mark; resorting to, frequenting valayito Encircled valayo
and (valayaC) A bracelet, ring, circle valhako
A cloud
valito Wrinkled valittaco Wrinkled
valiro
Squinting looking sidelong val+
A fold of the skin, wrinkle; a line, streak val+mukho
A monkey
vallak+
An Indian lute
vallabho Beloved
vallar+
A compound pedicle, a branching footstalk vallibho
The plant kumhaG

a vall+
A creeper, creeping plant
vallkro
and vallkr(1) and vallkraC (2) Dried flesh
va7 abnalo
A submarine fire at the South Pole va7 abhi
A roof
va7 av
A mare
vavakam m ho
Withdrawn, secluded vavatthnaC
Fixing
vavatthpanaC
Fixing
vavatthpeti
To place, fix, settle, establish vavatthito Fixed, arranged, appointed vasaC see <see>vaso</see> vasago
Subject, obedient vasati
To dwell, stay, live, abide; spend time
vasati
Dwelling, residence; a dwelling-place, abode vasanaC Dwelling
vasanaC
Cloth, clothes, clothing
vasanto
One of the seasons, spring
vasabho
A bull
vasalo

A [udra; an outcaste, pariah; a low person, reprobate vasavatt+ Bringing into subjection
vas
A barren cow; an obedient wife
vas
Serum, marrow of the flesh, fat vasikat Subjection
vasiko Subject to vasito
see <see>vasati</see>
vas+
Having the senses under control
vas+karoti
To bring into subjection
vas+bhvo
Subjection; self-control, subjugation of the senses vas+bhkto
Subjected, self-controlled
vasu
A class of Hindu gods
vasu
Wealth; a gem vasudh
The earth
vasundhar
The earth
vasumat+
The earth
vasena
see <see>vaso</see> vaso
and(vasaC) Wish, desire; will, authority, power, influence, control, mastership, ownership vassaC
see <see>vasso</see> vassakammaC

Giving virility
vassati
To utter a cry, of an animal
vassati
To fall, pour down, rain vassanaC
The rainy season
vassavaro
A eunuch castrated man vassavsiko
Connected with spending the rainy season vassasataC
A century
vassik+
Great-flowered jasmine.
vassiko
Belonging to the rainy season; belonging to a year vasskpanyik
Entrance upon Lent, commencement of the vassa residence vasso
A he-goat
vasso
and (vassaC) Rain; a year vassokasr
A name of Sakka's city
vahati
To carry, transport, draw; to bear along, carry off; to experience, possess vah
A river
vaho Carrying
v
Or. Never at the beginning of a sentence; itthiy purisassa v, by a woman or by a man. Repea
v karoti v, speaks or acts vkaC
Bark of a tree
vkar
A net or snare

vkkaraG aC
Talk, assertion vkyaC
A speech, a sentence
vguriko
A sportsman using nets vcako Speaking, expressing vcan
and (vcanaC) Recitation, reading, teaching, declaring vcasiko Connected with speech, verbal vc
Word, saying, speech vcpeti
see <see>vatti</see> vclo Talkative vcikaC
News
vcito
see <see>vatti</see> vceti
see <see>vatti</see> vcco
see <see>vatti</see> vjo
The feather of an arrow
vm ako
Enclosure, circle
vG ijako
A trader
vG ijo
A trader
vG ijjaC Trade
vG + Voice, speech

vtaghtako
The tree cassia fistula vtaG
aC
Elephantiasis of the scrotum vtapnaC
A window
vtamigo
A swift antelope vtbdho Rheumatism
vtyanaC
A window
vti
see <see>vyati</see>, To blow, as the wind; to breathe forth, emit, as an odour; to be emitte vtiko Rheumatic
vtiE gaG o
The egg-plant solanum melongena vtt Rumour, news
vttk+
The egg-plant
vdako Playing
vdanaC
Playing on a musical instrument, music vdiko
At the end of a compound a substitute for vd+; paravdiko, the man who said "Across the sea vdittaC
A musical instrument; instrumental music vd+
Saying, speaking, asserting, holding doctrine; disputing, arguing vdeti
see <see>vadati</see> vdo
Speaking, speech, talk; assertion; controversy, dispute; doctrine, creed, belief; school of doc
vnaC

Sewing
vnaC Desire, lust
vnapattho
A brahmin of the third order, an anchorite, a hermit vnaro
A monkey
vneyyaC
The fragrant grass cyperus rotundus
vno
Left; reverse, opposite; beautiful vpito
Shorn removed by cutting vp+
A reservoir, lake, tank
vpo
Sowing
vmato
On the left side, to the left vmano Dwarfish
vyati
To blow, as the wind; to breathe forth, emit, as an odour; to be emitted vyanaC
Weaving vyamati
To struggle, strive, endeavour vyasri
An owl
vyaso
A crow
vymo
Toil, fatigue, exertion, effort, contention vyu and (vyo) Air, wind vraG aC Resistance
vraG o

An elephant; the hatthiliE ga bird vrattiko
Bound with a thong
vrabG aC
 and (vrabG o) A woman's jacket or bodice vri
Water
vrijaC
A lotus vrijo
A fish
vrito see <see>vuG ti</see> vrittaC Avoidance
vrido
A cloud
vrimaggo
An issue from a sluice, watercourse vriyati
see <see>vuG ti</see> vrivho
A cloud
vruG + Spirituous liquor
vreti
see <see>vuG dti</see>
vro
Time, occasion; turn, time; day of the week vlaC
Water
vlaggaC
The tip of a hair
vladhi
A horse's or cow's tail
vlav+jan+
A fan made of a yak's tail, a chowrie vlavedh+

An archer who can hit a hair vlahattho
A horse's tail
vlik Sand
vluk Sand
vlo
Hair of the head; hair of animals; the hairy tail of an animal v7 agh+
A snake charmer
v7 amigo
A tiger, leopard, or other beast of prey v7 o
A snake; a beast of prey vsacuG G aC
and (vsacuG G akaC) Toilet perfume vsanaC
Perfuming and decorating the person
vsan
Impression remaining on the mind from past good or evil actions and producing pleasure or vsant+
The creeper gaertnera racemosa
vsayogo Toilet powder
vsavo Sakka or Indra vsgraC
A bedroom vsi
A razor
vsiko
Dwelling, inhabiting
vsim m ho
A proper name
vsitako Perfumed
vsito

see <see>vasati</see> vsito
Scented
vs+
An axe, adze, hatchet vs+ Dwelling
vsuki
The king of snakes
vsudevo
The Hindu god Krishna
vsem m ho
Name of a [ishi; a proper name vseti
see <see>vasati</see> vso Perfume
vso
Cloth, clothing
vso
Dwelling, staying, stopping, living; an abode, habitation, lodging, house vhanaC
Carrying; a vehicle; an animal used in riding vhaso
A boa constrictor or python vh+ Carrying
vho
A bearer, leader; a horse; a vehicle, cart; a measure of capacity 20 kharis, in this sense it m vi
A preposition much used in composition with verbs and their derivatives, frequently with the separation, difference, opposition vikaE kato
Name of a plant
vikaco Blossoming
vikam o
Changed, altered

vikatik
A woolen coverlet embroidered with figures of lions, tigers vikat+
Change; emotion, anger, etc.; sort, kind; altered form, product vikato Changed
vikappanaC
Option, alternative; indecision vikappan Apportioning, assignment
vikappeti
To apportion, assign vikappo
Option, uncertainty; thinking over, considering vikaroti
To alter
vikalo
Defective, wanting; deprived of vikasati
To expand, blossom vikas Bengal madder
vikro
Change, alteration; perturbation; wrong state of mind viklo
Afternoon, evening; wrong time
viks+ Illumining, delighting
vikiraG aC
Dispersing; investment of money
vikiraG o Dispersing, spending, squandering vikirati
To scatter, sprinkle, spread abroad; to overwhelm vikubbanaC
Assuming a different form by supernatural power, magical or miraculous transformation vikkjati
To chirp, warble

vikopanaC Injuring
vikopeti
To cause or suffer to be injured vikkanto
Stepping, walking; heroic vikkamo
Advancing, walking; strength, heroism, prowess vikkay+ (vikkayiko) A vendor
vikkayo Sale
vikkiG ti
To sell vikket
A vendor vikkeyyo
Saleable, for sale
vikkhabhito
Obstructed, stopped destroyed
vikkhambhanaC
Withdrawl of support, arresting, paralysing, elimination, obstructing, stopping vikkhambho Diameter
vikkhyitakaC
One of the asubha kammam m hnas, obtained by the contemplation of a corpse gnawed b vikkhlanaC Washing
vikkhleti
To wash
vikkh+pati
To scatter
vikkhepo
Scattering, confusion; perplexity, puzzle, disorder of mind vikkhobheti
To agitate vigacchati
To depart

vigamo Departure, dispelling vigarahati
To reproach, rebuke, censure vighati
To plunge or wade into; to enter vigheti
To plunge or wade into; to enter viguG m hito Arrested, foiled viggahav
Having the form of; handsome viggaho
The body; strife; in gram. resolution of a word into its elements, analysis vigghako Quarrelsome
viggho
An obstacle
vighm anaC Overthrow, removal
vighm eti
To overthrow, remove, batter down vighto Destruction; annoyance, vexation; opposition vighsdo
One who eats the remains of food vighso Remains of food, broken meat, scraps, rots vicakkhaG o
Knowing, wise, discerning, sensible, skilful vicayo
Research, investigation
vicaraG aC Going about vicarati
To walk or go about vicrako
One who investigates, a judge

vicraG and (vicraG aC) Investigation, doubt vicro Investigation, examination vicikicchati
To doubt, hesitate
vicikicch Doubt, uncertainty
viciti Examination
vicito Separated
vicitto
Variegated, painted, oramented, embroidered
vicitro
Variegated, painted, oramented, embroidered vicinati
To seek, search, investigate, examine; to gather, collect vicintako Devising, finding out vicinteti
To think, consider, imagine vicuG G o Crushed
viceyyo Accompanied with discrimination
viccuto Fallen down viccha

eti
To throw away
vicch Succession
vicchiko
A break off, interrupt vicchiddakaC
One of the asubha kammam m hnas, obtained by the contemplation of a corpse fissured f

vijam anaC Disentangling
vijam peti
To comb out, disentangle; metaphorically, to unravel, explain
vijam eti
To comb out, disentangle; metaphorically, to unravel, explain vijano Lonely, deserted vijambhati
To rouse oneself, display activity vijayo
Victory, triumph; name of the first Aryan coloniser and sovereign of Ceylon vijahati
To leave, forsake, relinquish, reject vijnaC Understanding
vijnanaC Knowing
vijnti
To discern, distinguish, be wise, perceive, learn, understand, know exactly, find out, ascerta vijyati
To bring forth young vijyanaC
Bringing forth, delivery vijigucchati
To loathe vijitv+ Victorious
vijinati
To conquer, master, triumph over vijinanaC Conquering
vij+vito Dead
vijeti
To conquer, master, triumph over vijj
Knowledge, learning, scholarship, science; wisdom

vijju and (vijjut) Lightning
vijjullat
Forked lightning
vijjotati
To shine
vijjhati
To pierce, perforate; to strike, hit, break throught; to hurt, wound; to shoot with an arrow vijjhanaC Piercing
vijjhyati
To burn out, go out, be extinguished viñjho
The Vindhya mountain-range viññatiti
Information, intimation; intimation of a want, asking viññG aC
Intelligence, knowledge; consciousness; thought, mind
viññG añcyatanaC Realm of infinity of intelligence, name of the second arkpabrahmaloka viññG am m hiti Station or abode of Intelligence viññpano Informing, instructing viññpet
One who informs viññpeti
see <see>vijnti</see> viññya
see <see>vijnti</see> viññk Intelligent, wise, learned, discreet viññkt Intelligence
viññeyyo
see <see>vijnti</see> vim aE ko
 and (vim aE kaC) A dove-cot, aviary; pigeon house

vim ap+ A tree
vim apo
The fork of a tree; a clump, thicket vim abh+
The fork of a tree
vitakkanaC Reasoning
vitakketi
To reason, argue, consider, reflect vitakko
Reflection, thought, argument, reasoning vitacchik Scabies
vitacchito Planed, smoothed
vitaññati
To be spread, diffused vitaG

Idle talk, gossiping. Frivolous or captious discussion vitato Extended, diffused, overspread vitatho False, unreal
vitaraG aC
Donation, gift; abandoning, escaping from vitarati
To continue, go through; to perform vitno
and (vitnaC) Spreading, expansion; multitude; a canopy, awning vitiG G o
see <see>vitarati</see> vitkdati
To strike, sting
vittaC
See end of art. <see>vidati</see> vitti

Joy; feeling, sensation vitthato
Extended, wide vitthambhanaC Instability
vitthriko
Extended, diffused vitthreti
To expand, detail vitthro
Width, breadth; extension, amplification, detail vitthiG G o Extensive, large vida

hat
Bravery, gallantry, wit vidati
To know, ascertain vidatthi
A span of twelve aE gulas vidahati
To allot, assign, appoint, fix, order, prescribe; to provide, practise vidraG aC Rending
vidrito Rent, split
vidro Tearing vidlano Breaking up vidleti
To break open, split, rip up vidis
An intermediate point of the compass viduro
Wise
vidk

Knowing, skilled; wise
vidksito Corrupted videh
Name of a people
vidojo
A name of Indra
viddasu Skilled, wise
viddumo Coral
viddes+
An enemy
viddeso Enmity, hatred
viddhaC sanaC crushing, destruction
viddhaC speti
To crush, destroy, overthrow, scatter, disperse
viddhaC seti
To crush, destroy, overthrow, scatter, disperse viddhaC so Demolition viddhasto
Broken, fallen to pieces viddho see <see>vijjhati</see> vidv
Wise
vidhamati
To scatter, dispel vidhamanaC Dispelling
vidhav
A widow vidh Pride
vidhnaC

Arrangement, disposal, assignment; act, performance; precept, rule vidhya see <see>vidahati</see> vidhvati
To run about vidhi
Rule, precept; ceremony; luck, destiny vidhu
The moon
vidhuraC Absence, seclusion
vidhknati
To shake vidhkpanaC
A fan vidhkpito Scattered, destroyed vidheyyo
see <see>vidahati</see> vidho
Form, measure, kind, sort; part, fold vinat
The mother of the garu7 as vinandhati
To encircle, cover vinayanaC
Instruction, conversion
vinayo
Putting away, avoidance; subduing, conversion; training, discipline; name of a portion of the scriptures vinassati
To be lost; to perish, be destroyed vin Without, except vinmeti
To bend about, twist vinyako
A spiritual leader or teacher, a buddha

vins+ Destructive vinseti see <see>vinassati</see> vinso
Loss; destruction, ruin
viniggato Departing; free from viniggamo Departure
vinicchayo
Bondage
vinicchayo
Investigation, trial; ascertainment, decision vinicchinati
To investigate, try; to judge, decide, determine vinidhya Having deposited vinipatito Fallen down
viniptiko
Destined to suffer in purgatory, liable to punishment after death vinipteti
To do away with, destroy vinipto
State of punishment, or suffering vinibandho Bondage
vinimmutto Released; discharged, as an arrow
vinimutto
Released; discharged, as an arrow
vinivam m ati
To roll back vinivijjhati
To pierce through and through vinivem hanaC
Unwrapping, explaining, refuting

vin+to see <see>vineti</see>
vin+lako
Purple, black and blue
vin+varaG o Unbiased vineti
To remove, put away; to subdue, conquer, restrain; to instruct, educate, train vinodako Dispelling
vinodanaC Dispelling, removal
vinodeti
To dispel, put away, get rid of vindati
see <see>vidati</see> vipakkhako Opposite vipakkho Opposite; hostile vipaccati
To be cooked, scorched, etc.
vipaccan+ko
Hostile
vipajjati
To fail; to perish vipatti
Misfortune; failure vipanno see <see>vipajjati</see> viparmoso Highway robbery viparvatto Reversed, changed
vipariG ato Changed
vipariG meti
To transform oneself

vipariG mo Change, reverse vipariyayo
and (vipariyyo) Reversal, change vipariyso
see <see>vipallso</see>, Reversal, change vipar+to Reversed, opposite, contrary, different, changed; wrong, false vipallso Reversal, change
vipassako Contemplating; endowed with vipassan vipassati
To see clearly, to obtain spiritual insight vipassan
Seeing clearly, spiritual insight V. is produced by the successful exercise of ecstatic meditati attribute of arhatship vipass+
Seeing clearly, wise name of a buddha vipk+
Having a result vipko
Result, product, consequence; good result, fruit, profit, reward; evil result, retribution vipceti
To work oneself up into indignation, to be indignant, angry, annoyed viptik
An abscess on the foot vipteti
To crush
vipim m hikaroti
To throw behind one vipinaC
A grove, wood vipubbakaC
One of the asubbakammam m hanas, obtained by the contemplation of a festering corpse vipulo
Large, great, broad, exm ensive vipekkhati

To stare about vipotheti
To bruise
vippakam m hako Distant
vippakato
Imperfectly executed, left unfinished vippakro
Change of state; impropriety incorrectness vippakirati
To scatter
vippakkhitto Scattered about vippajahati
To abandon, give up vippam isr+ Remorseful
vippam isro
Remorse, regret, repentance
vippanam m ho
Ruined, sunk, lost vippamuñcati
To cast off, free oneself from vippayogo Separation
vippaladdho Disappointed, deceived vippalapati
To chatter, talk nonsense; to lament vippalambheti
To mock, delude vippalpo Wrangling
vippavasati
To go abroad, leave home, be away from home, be absent vippavso Absence
vippaviddho

Pierced through and through vippavuttho see <see>vippavasati</see> vippas+dati
To become calm or serene vippo
A brahmin
vipphandati
To struggle, writhe
vipphandattaC
State of writhing, suffering, mental torture vippharaG aC Thrilling, pervading
vipphriko
Pervading, spreading, diffusing vipphro
Diffusion, pervasion vipphuraG aC
Spreading out, pervasion vipphurati
To vibrate, wave, flash
vipphuliE gaC
A spark of fire
vibuddhi Enlightenment
vibudho
A learned or wise man; a deva vibodhanaC Awakening
vibbhamanaC Roaming
vibbhamo
Whirling; agitation, hurry, flurry; amorous dalliance vibhaE go Division; distinction, determination, explanation vibhajati
To divide, apportion; to distinguish, go into details, be minutely accurate vibhajanaC

Division, sharing with others
vibhatti
In gram. inflection of nouns and verbs, declension, conjugation vibhatto
see <see>vibhajati</see> vibhavo
Power, prosperity, majesty, splendour; property, wealth
vibhavo
Absence or cessation of existence, non-existence, nirvG a vibh Light, lustre vibhgo Division
vibhti
To glitter
vibhvanaC
Making clear, ascertainment vibhvar+ Night
vibhv+ Wise
vibhveti
To understand clearly vibhvo
Doubling
vibhvo
Condition or sentiment of the body or mind vibhs
An alternative vibhinno Scattered; divided, at variance vibh+tako
 and vibh+tak+(1) and vibh+takaC (2) Beleric myrobolan vibhk
A lord, ruler vibhkti Splendour, dignity
vibhksanaC

Adornment
vibhksito Adorned
vibhedanaC Division
vibhedik
The Palmyra tree
vimam m ho
Soft
vimati
Perplexity, doubt vimaddutto
Sent arising from the grinding of perfumes vimano
Perplexed, distressed, doubtful vimalo
Pure, clear, spotless vimnaC
and (vimno) A pagoda or palace of seven stories, the abode of a deva, a celestial mansion; abode vimukho Averted, neglectful
vimuñcati
To release; to give up, to spend vimuttyatanaC
Point of emancipation
vimutti
Release, emancipation, arhatship, nirvG a or annihilation vimutto Released, emancipated vimuyhati
To be confused, bewildered vimokkha
Release, escape, deliverance, salvation; release from human passion, arhatship; release fro nirvG a or annihilation vimokho
and (vimokkha) Release, escape, deliverance, salvation; release from human passion, arha existence, nirvG a or annihilation

vimocanaC Release vimohako Bewitching, deluding vimhayo Astonishment, surprise vimhpeti
To astonish
vimhito
Astonished, amazed viya see <see>iva</see> viyaggo
Bewildered
viyutto Separated
viykhati
To remove, take out, disengage
viyogo
Separation, disunion; absence, deprivation; loss, death viyojeti
To separate viyyati
see <see>viyati</see>, To be woven viracito
Made, composed virajo
Free from corruption or human passion virajjati
To be displeased, disgusted, to loathe virajjhati
To fail, go wrong, miss, lose virati Abstinence
virato
see <see>viramati</see> viratto
see <see>virajjati</see>

viramaG aC Abstaining
viramati
To abstain, refrain, desist viralañjano
Thinly peopled viralo Delicate, fine viravati
To cry aloud, shout, cry out; to rattle, jingle viravo Crying, shouting, clamour
virahito Bereft of, exempt from
virgo
Absence of desire or human passion, arhatship, nirvG a virjati
To shine, be conspicuous or eminent virdheti see <see>virajjhati</see> virvo
Crying, shouting, clamour
viriyaC Strength, vigour, energy, fortitude, effort, exertion; dignity, influence viriyav Energetic
virujjati
To fall to pieces, to decay virujjhati
To be obstructed, annoyed, disturbed, troubled virujjhanaC
Being obstructed viruddho
see <see>virujjhati</see> virkdhanako Growing
virkpakkho
Name of the Regent of the West, and chief of the ngas

virkpo Deformed, monstrous, ugly
virk7 hi Growth, increase virk7 ho
Grown, blossoming
vireko Purging, diarrhoea
virecanaC
Purging; a purgative
virocati
To shine, be brilliant or splendid; to be eminent, conspicuous virocano Shining
virodhanaC Opposition, contradiction
virodhito Rendered hostile
virodh+ Opposing, obstructing, adverse virodho Opposition; contradiction, inconsistency; enmity virodhotti Contradiction, quarrel
vilaggo Fastened
vilapati
To lament, wail; to talk idly, to lie vilambati
To loiter, tarry
vilayo Destruction
vilpo Lamentation
vilso
Sport, pastime; dalliance; charm, beauty vilimpati
To smear, to anoint

vil+no Clinging, adhering vil+vakro
A basket-maker
vilumpati
To plunder
vilkno
Cut off
vilekhito
Rendered by Gog "smooth" vilekho
Perplexity, confusion
vilepanaC
Toilet perfume
vilokanaC Looking, a look viloketi
To look at, look over, examine vilocanaC
The eye
vilopako
Plundering
vilopo Plunder, pillage vilomenti
To disarrange, invert vilomo
Against the grain, reversed, different, wrong vilo7 eti
To stir, move about vi7 aE gaC
The plant erycibe paniculata
vi7 ambanaC Disguise, masquerade vivajjeti
To forsake, to avoid vivam o
see <see>vivarati</see>

vivam m aC
Part of the dress of a Buddhist priest; turning round the other way, rolling back
vivam m aC
Absence of vam m or transmigration, nirvG a vivam m ati
To roll on or round, revolve
vivam m o
Beginning again, renovation
vivaG G akaC
Dispraise, reviling, contempt vivaG G o Discoloured, wan vivattacchaddo
and (vivattacchado) One by whom the veil of human passion is rolled away. This is an epith vivadati
To dispute, quarrel vivadanaC Causing separation
vivaraC
A hole, hollow, fissure, cleft; gap, interstice; an empty space, vacuum; recess, core; a flaw, c vivaraG aC
Explanation, comment
vivarati
To open vivaso Unrestrained, independent vivdo
Dispute, contention; litigation
vivhanaC
Getting a husband for a girl vivho Marriage
vivicca Separating oneself from viviccati
To separate oneself, retire vivicch
Said to mean vicikicch or doubt vivitto

see <see>viviccati</see> vividho
Various; manifold vivekajo Caused by seclusion or detachment viveko Separation, seclusion; discrimination vivecanam Investigation
viveceti
To separate, seclude visaC Poison, venom
visaC yutto Separated, detached visaC yogo
Separation, disjunction
visaC vdako Deceiving, lying visaC vdeti
To break one's word to a person, deceive, disappoint visaC vdo Deceiving, disappointing, etc.
visakaG m hakaC
A sort of sugar
visaE khro Destruction, annihilation
visaE khito Destroyed, annihilated visajja see <see>vissajjati</see> visajjeti
see <see>vissajjati</see> visaññit
Unconsciousness, syncope
visaññ+bhuto
Unconscious, swooned away

visaññutto
see <see>visaC y</see>-, Separated, detached visañño Unconscious
visaññogo
see <see>visaC y</see>-, Separation, disjunction
visam o Spread, diffused
visam m hi Emission visato Spread, diffused
visattik Desire, lust
visadattaC Purity
visado
Pure, white; clear, manifest visadharo
A snake
visappanaC Spreading
visaphalat Unprofitableness
visabhgo
Not common to all, different, dissimilar
visamo
Uneven, unequal; unjust, lawless, wicked visayi
An organ of sense
visayo
District, region, country; realm, domain, range, sphere, scope; an object of sense visaro
A multitude visallo
Free from pain or grief
visahati
To be able, to dare, to venture

viskh
Name of a nakkhatta; name of a celebrated female saint, a contemporary and disciple of Bu visG aC
A horn, an elephant's tusk visdo Dejection
visrado
Bold, confident, ready, self-possessed; wise, skilled visr+ Spreading
vislo Wide, extensive, great visikh
A street, road; an arrow
visim m ho
Superior, excellent visibbati
To unsew, unpick vis+dati
To be afflicted
vis+lo
Immoral vis+vanaC Warming oneself vis+veti
To warm oneself visuC
Separately, individually visujjhati
To be cleansed, to be pure visuddhayati
To become bright or clear visuddh+
Purity, holiness, rectitude, correctness; nirvG a viskkaC
A show, spectacle, worldly amusement viskcik
Cholera

visesako
A sectarial mark on the forehead
visesaññk
Knowing distinctions, discerning, critical visesanaC Distinguishing
viseseti
To distinguish, define, specify viseso
Distinction, discrimination, speciality, specification; sort, kind; peculiar merit or advantage, ex superiority visesso Principal, chief visoko
Free from sorrow
visodhanaC
Cleansing; emending visodheti
see <see>visujjhati</see> visoseti
see <see>vissussati</see> vissaC
A smell like raw meat vissakammo
Name of the celestial architect, a deva of the ctummahrjika heaven, who acts as architect ar
the devas vissaggo
Serving, donation, giving out vissajjati
To send forth, emit, throw, shoot, etc.; to let go, dismiss; to answer; to leave, forsake; to spe vissajjanaC
A gift
vissajjan
An answer, reply
vissam m ho
see <see>vissajjati</see> vissattho
see <see>vissanati</see>

vissandati
To flow, well up, overflow vissamati
To cease from toil, rest, repose vissamanaC Resting
vissambho
Trust, confidence, intimacy vissarati
To forget vissaro
Shout, cry of distress, scream vissavati
To ooze vissasati
To confide in, trust to vissG anaC Gift, donation
visssiko Intimate, confidential, trusty visssiyo
Confidential, trustworthy vissso Intimacy, confidence, trust. Sincerity, faith vissuto Renowned vissussati
To be dried up visso Whole, entire vihago
A bird
vihaE gamo
Going through the air, flying vihaE go A bird
vihaññati
To be vexed, grieved, afflicted

vihattho Perplexed viharati
To dwell, sojourn, live vihyas
Through the air
vihyaso
The air, sky
vihyitaC
A gift
vihriyo Living
vihr+ Dwelling, living
vihro
Rambling, roaming, recreation; a Buddhist monastery or convent; state of life, condition; sto sojourn, living, abiding, dwelling vihiC sati
To hurt, injure vihiC s Hurting, injury, cruelty
vihem hako Harassing
vihem hanaC Harassing, hurting
vihem heti
To annoy, barass, hurt
vihesako
Annoying, troubling, wearying
vihes
Annoyance, vexation, worry, weariness, fatigue
v+ci
A wave; leisure
v+jati
To fan a person
v+jan+
A fan
v+G

The Indian lute
v+taddaro
Fearless
v+tamalo
Pure, clear, spotless
v+targo
Free from human passion, an arhat
v+tikkamati
To exceed, transgress
v+tikkamo
Going beyond bounds, transgression, sin
v+tinmanako
Spending one's time, living
v+tinmeti
To spend or pass the time, to live; to wait
v+tipatati
To fall away, transgress
v+tivatto
Having passed, exceeded; past
v+tisreti
To remind mutually v+tihro
A long footstep, stride
v+to see <see>v+yati</see>
v+to Devoid of, free from v+thi
A row, line; a road; a bazaar, street
v+thiko
Substitute for v+thi at the end of a compound, cruv+thiko, having a delightful street
v+maC sati
To think over, consider, reflect upon; to examine, investigate, try, test
v+maC sanaC Trying, testing
v+maC s Investigation, examination, trial
v+yati

To be woven
v+rk
A spreading creeper
v+ro
Strong, mighty, heroic v+sa see <see>visaC </see>
v+saC
Twenty
v+sati Twenty
v+satimo Twentieth
v+hi
Rice, paddy vum m hahati see <see>um m h</see>- vum m hnaC
see <see>um m h</see>- vum m hi
Rain
vum m hito
see <see>um m hahati</see> vu

  ho
see <see>va

  hati</see>
vuG ti
To restrain, prevent vutapadaC
Points of conduct vuti Enclosure, fence vuttaC
see <see>vattati</see> vuttako

A substitute for vutto at the end of a compound e.g., pubbavuttako, aforementioned vuttanto Tidings vuttari
see <see>uttariC </see> vutti
Conduct, behaviour, manner; business, profession, livelihood; in poetry, measure, rhythm, m gloss vuddhi
Increase, growth; prosperity, advantage vuddhim Prosperous
vuddho
see <see>va

  hati</see> vuyhati
To be carried, etc.
vusitav Dwelling, residing vusitvi Dwelling, residing vuso
A bull
vussati
see <see>vasati</see> vkpakam m ho Distant, removed vkpasamanaC
Suppressing, cessation, extinction vkpasampanaC Suppression
vkpasamo Pacification, suppression, cessation vkpasammati
To be assuaged or quieted or suppressed, to cease, be extinguished ve
Indeed, truly, verily

vekallaC Deficiency
veg+
A courier
vego
Impetus, impulse, shock, attack; speed, velocity; stream; impulse of the mind, emotion, pass vejayantik
Name of a tree
vejayanto
Name of the palace of Sakka vejjo
A physician
vejjhaC
A target
vem hako Surrounding, enveloping
vem hanaC Surrounding, enveloping; a turban, diadem
vem heti
To surround, encompass, envelope, wrap, clothe vem ho Surrounding, etc.
veG aviko
A flute-player
veG i
A woman's hair simply plaited without ornament veG iko
A lute-player
veG u
see <see>ve7 u</see>, A bamboo, reed; a flute veG ukro
One who works in bamboo or wicker work veG udhamo
A flute-player
veG o
A worker in bamboo or wicker work vetanaC Hire, wages

vetaniko
A hired servant, labourer vetaraG +
The river of hell
vetaso
The ratan reed calamus rotang vetliko
A bard whose duty it is to awaken a king at dawn with music and song vet7 aC
Magic art vettaC
A stick, staff
vedaE gaC
A vedaE ga vedanaC Sensation
vedanam m ho Agonized
vedanattanaC Sensation
vedan
Feeling, sensation, perception; pain, suffering vedankkhandho
The second khandha, Sensation vedan+yo see <see>vidati</see> vedayitaC
see <see>vidati</see> vedallaC
Name of one of the nine aE gas or divisions of the Buddhist scriptures according to matter
vedi
An altar; a bench; a ledge, cornice, eaves vedik
A bench; a cornice, eaves vediso
Belonging to the town of Vidis ved+ Knowing

ved+
An altar; a bench; a ledge, cornice, eaves vedeti see <see>vidati</see> vedeho
Belonging to the videhas vedo
Knowledge; pleasure, emotion, excitement; a Hindu veda vedhati Tremble, quake vedhavero
The son of a widow vedhi Trembling
vedh+ Piercing, shooting, hitting vedho Piercing
venateyyo
A Garu7 a venayiko
Versed in the vinaya veneyyo
Tractable, that can be converted vepacitti
Name of an asura
vepathu Trembling, tremor vepanaC
 (vepo) Trembling, tremor vepk+ see <see>samavepk+</see> vepullaC Development
vebhassaC
Bullying or threatening language vebhro
Name of a mountain

vebhktiyaC
Knowing the vedas
vemajjhaC
The middle, centre
vematiko
In doubt uncertain, doubtful, inconsistent, variable vemattam Difference
vemtiko
Born of a different mother
vemo
A loom veyyaggho
Belonging to a tiger veyykaraG aC
Answer; explanation, exposition, exegesis veyykaraG o
 and (veyykaraG iko) A grammarian veyybdhiko
An adj, formed from vybdho veyyvaccaC
Service or duty performed by an inferior for a superior veyyvam ikaC Same meaning as last
veraC
Wrath, anger, hatred; sin, enmity verajjako
Belonging to various provinces or kingdoms veramaG + Abstinence
veravasiko
Falling under the influence of hatred or revenge veriv
An enemy
ver+
Hating, hostile, revengeful
verocano
The sun

vel
Time; shore; boundary; multitude vellito
Shaken, trembling; crooked
ve7 u
A bamboo, reed; a flute
ve7 umayo
Made of bamboo
ve7 uriyaC
A precious stone, perhaps lapis lazuli
ve7 uvanaC
A Bamboo-grove; the name of a monastery presented by the King Bimbisara to Gautama Bu vevaG G iyaC Change, diversity
vevaG G o Various, different vesamaC Inequality
vesayiko
Belonging to a sphere of action
veskho
Name of a month, April-May vest+
A name of Yama vesrajjaC
Confidence. A Buddha has four vesrajjas or subjects of confidence or fearlessness. They ar that he has attained omniscience, that he has freed himself from human passion, that he ha the obstacles to a religious life, that he has rightly taught the way to obtain salvation.
vesliko
and (vesliyo) Belonging to Vesali vesl+
Name of a town in the Licchavi country
vesiy
A harlot
ves+
A harlot
veso
Dress, apparel, equipment; disguise

vesmaC
A house
vessantaro
Fire
vessantaro
Name of a king who was the bodhisatta in the last birth but one–the last was in the tusita he vessabhk
Name of a buddha
vessavaG o
A name of Kuvera
vessnaro Fire
vessmitto
Name of a [ishi
vesso
A Vai[ya vehapphalo
Name of the inhabitants of the tenth brahmaloka vehgamanaC Coming through the air
vehsam m ho
In the air
vehsayo
The air, sky
vehso
The air, sky, heaven
vokro
Worthlessness; the khandhas; difference
vokiG G o Separated from vokkamati
To turn aside, deviate from vochijjati
To be cut off
votto Shaven
vodapeti
To purify

vodnaC Purification, purity
vodpanaC Purification
vodpeti
To purify vomissako Miscellaneous
voropeti
To deprive of
vosnaC
End, consummation
vossati
To give orders, act authoritatively vosito Ended, accomplished vossakammaC Making a man a eunuch vossaggo
Relinquishment, relaxation; gift, donation vossajanaC
and (vossajjanaC)Relinquishment, giving up vossajjati
To relinquish, give up voharati
To give currency to, use; express vohriko
A royal officer skilled in the law, a magistrate vohro
Practice, custom, law; lawsuit; business, trade; common use, currency; current speech, verr appellation, name vyaggo Bewildered
vyaggh+naso
A hawk vyaggho
A tiger
vyañjanaC

A consonant; a letter, syllable, word; the words or letter as opposed to the sense; sign, mark characteristic; sauce, condiment, curry vyañj+yati
To be expressed, indicated
vyattayo
Contrariety, opposition, reversal vyatto Evident, manifest; perspicuous; wise, learned vyadho Piercing
vyantikaroti
To abolish, remove, get rid of, destroy vyapagacchati
To depart, be dispelled vyamhaC
A celestial mansion i.e., vimna vyayo
see <see>vayo</see>, Loss, perishing, decay; expenditure vyavadhnaC Covering, screen vyavanujja
Having dispelled vyavyo Coition, sexual intercourse vyasanaC Misfortune; unhappiness, destruction, loss; bad habit, sin
vyasan+
Meeting with ruin, unfortunate vykaraG aC
Explanation, exposition; declaration, answer; utterance, response, oracle, prediction; gramm vykaroti
To expound, explain; declare, call name; to answer; to give a response, predict, prophesy vykulo Bewildered, agitated vykhy
A comment, gloss
vydhi
Sickness, malady, disease; the plant costus speciosus

vydhito
Sick, ill
vydho
A huntsman, deer-hunter
vypako Pervading
vypajjati
To be malevolent
vypanaC Pervading, penetration
vypdo
Wish to injure, malevolence, hatred, fury vypreti
To employ, suborn, incite vypro Occupation, business, profession, exertion, action, work vyp+ Pervading, extending vypeti
To pervade, permeate, fill vybdheti
To oppress, injure vybdho Oppression, injury
vybhaE g+
A kja or pole for carrying burdens vymisso Mingled
vymo
A fathom of about 6 feet, being the distance between the tips of the fingers of the two hands are extended vyrosan Anger, hatred
vyvam o
Covered, obstructed vysatto
Attached to pleasure, covetous, etc.
vyso

Diffusion
vyharati
To utter vykho
An array of troops; a host, multitude; a street closed at one end sa
"own"
sa
A prefix much used as the first part of compound adjectives and adverbs, and generally con possession or similarity; some of these compounds are as sace, santikaC , seyyath, sakub
saC
With, together. One of the upasaggas, only used as the first part of compounds.
saC
Happily
saC yato
Tied, fastened; restrained, self-controlled saC yattiko
A voyaging merchant, sea-trader
saC yamo
Restraint, self control, abstinence, sobriety saC yugaC Strife
saC yutto Joined, connected saC yogo
Union, bond; connexion, association, society
saC yojanaC Bond, attachment
saC yojeti
To put together, prepare a medicament saC rakkhanaC Preservation, guarding saC rambho
see <see>srambho</see> saC rahito Deprived or devoid of saC rvo Uproar

saC vaccharo
and (saC vaccharaC) A year
saC vaccharo
An astrologer
saC vam m o
The destruction of a kappa saC va

hito
Reared, fostered, brought up; enlarged; grown up; flourishing saC vaG G an Explanation, commentary; description; praise
saC vaG G eti
To describe, explain; to praise
saC vattati
To lead, conduce
saC vattaniko Conducive to saC vadanaC
One of the magic arts forbidden to Buddhist priests saC vaddhanaC Causing to grow
saC vaddho
Brought up, grown up; flourishing saC varaG aC Covering saC var+ Night
saC varo
Closing, restraint
saC vasati
To live, pass one's time; to live with saC vasatho
A village
saC vso Living with saC viggo
Excited; agitated, alarmed

saC vijjati
To exist, to be found saC vijjati
To be moved or agitated saC vidahati
To dispose, fix, arrange, direct, appoint, assign, accomplish saC vidahanaC Appointment
saC vidhnaC Appointment
saC vibhajati
To divide
saC vibhgo Partition, distribution saC vihito
see <see>saC vidahati</see> saC v+to Surrounded, shut in saC vuG ti
and (saC vuG oti) To cover saC veg+
Quick, vehement
saC vego Agitation, emotion, grief
saC vejanaC
Agitating, alarming
saC vejeti
To agitate, cause emotion or alarm saC vem heti
To wrap saC vohro
Business, traffic
saC saggo Connection, conjunction, association
saC sam m ho Joined, associated; living in society saC sati
To proclaim

saC satto Adhering
saC sado
Session, assembly
saC sandati
To run together, unite, associate saC sanno Distressed, weak saC sappati
To creep along saC sayo Doubt
saC saraG aC Transmigrating
saC sarati
To go through continually, to transmigrate saC saho Able saC sro
Passing through a succession of births, continued existence, transmigration saC sito see <see>saC sarati</see> saC sibbati
To entwine, entangle saC sibbanaC
Entwining, entangling
saC suddho
Pure
saC skcako Indicating saC sedo
Sweat, moisture, vapour
saC sevanaC
and (saC sevo) Attending on, associating saC hati Assemblage, mass
saC hato
Firm, well-knit, compact

saC hananaC Striking, destroying saC harati
To collect; to fold up saC hro
A compilation, abridgement saC hito see <see>sandahati</see> sakam aC
A cart, waggon; a measure of capacity, a cart-load sakatt One's own self sakattho
One's own object or advantage sakadgm+ Returning once sakabalo Containing a mouthful, full sakaraG +yo Having duties to perform
sakalo
All
sakalo
 and (sakalaC)A portion; a potsherd sakiC
Once; at once, simultaneously sakiñcano
Having something, wealthy sakiyo
Own
sakuG aggh+
A kind of hawk sakuG i and (sakuG iko)A bird sakuG o
A bird
sakunto
A bird; the Indian vulture

sako
Own
sakkaccaC
Respectfully, attentively, carefully, zealously, thoroughly sakkam o Sanskrit
sakkatañ̃k
Acquainted with the Sanskrit language
sakkati
To go sakkati
 To be able or competent
sakkato
Entertained, honoured
sakkato
Sanskrit
sakkattaC Cakraship
sakkaroti
To receive hospitably, to honour, revere sakk
see <see>sakko</see> sakkyo
Own body or person
sakkro
Hospitable reception, hospitality, honour, festival sakkuG ti
To be able or competent
sakko
Name of the princely family to which Gautama Buddha belonged
sakko Zakra or Indra
sakko Able; possible sakkoti
To be able or competent sakkhar
A potsherd; gravel; clayed or brown sugar, jaggery, sugar

sakkhi (sakkhissati), see <see>sakkoti</see> sakkh+
A witness sakyaputtiko
 and (sakyaputtiyo)Belonging to the Skya prince sakyo
Name of the princely family to which Gotama Buddha belonged, see <see>skiyo</see>
sakh
Companion, friend
sakhilo Friendly
sakh+
A female friend
sagaG o
Having a retinue; attended by an army sagandhako Fragrant
sagabbho
A uterine brother
sagthako Containing gths sagravo Respectful
sagotto
A kinsman, a relative sagguG o
Good quality
saggo
Abandonment; natural state, nature; making, creating; chapter, section
saggo
Heaven, paradise
saE kam +raC
A dust-heap
saE kam o Narrow
saE ka

hati
To collect
saE kati
To hesitate, doubt, suspect
saE kath Conversation
saE kan+yo see <see>saE kati</see>
saE kappeti
To will, determine, arrange saE kappo Thought, imagination; determination, resolve, wish saE kamati
To go, pass on saE kamo
Difficult progress
saE kampati
To tremble
saE karo Confusion
saE kalanaC Addition
saE kassaC
Name of a town in India
saE kassaro
Anxious, hesitating
saE k
Doubt, uncertainty
saE kro
Dust, sweepings, rubbish saE kso Resembling
saE kiG G o
Confused, crowded; of mixed caste, impure saE kito Anxious, alarmed
saE kiraG aC
Collecting together

saE kilissati
To be impure, depraved, sinful
saE kileso Impurity
saE k+ Anxious saE ku
A stake or stump; a javelin
saE kucati
To contract, draw together
saE kuppo
That can be shaken
saE kulo
Crowded; confused, contradictory
saE keto Engagement, appointment, rendezvous saE khato
Put together, aggregated, organized, made, wrought, built, created, perfected, embellished; compounded saE khayo
Loss; destruction; end
saE khal
and (saE khalaC and saE khalo) A chain saE khalik
A chain
saE kh
Calculation; number, sum; numeral; understanding, reason, intelligence
saE khti
To calculate, reckon
saE khto
Reckoned, numbered; considered, reckoned, called, named; weighed, estimated, learnt
saE khro Constructing, preparing, perfecting, embellishing; aggregation; matter; karma; the skandhas saE khipati
To shorten, abridge
saE khubhati
To be shaken, agitated saE khepo

Abridgment, abstract
saE khеyyo Calculable
saE kho
and (saE khaC) A shell; a chank or conch shell; a conch trumpet; the frontal bone, the ar
saE khobho Commotion
saE khy
Calculation; number, sum; numeral; understanding, reason, intelligence
saE khyto Reckoned, numbered; considered, reckoned, called, named; weighed, estimated, learnt
saE khynaC Calculation
saE gaG ik Communication, association
saE gaG hti
To seize, take, collect; to compile; to abridge; to contain, embrace, include; to treat kindly, fa conciliate, provide for the welfare of, help, protect saE gati
Union, intercourse
saE gato
Meeting, associating or uniting with saE gamo
Meeting; intercourse, connexion, association saE gamma Having assembled; having united with saE garo Calamity; war; promise saE gah+to see <see>saE gaG hti</see> saE gahesi
see <see>saE gaG hti</see>
saE gaho
Taking, collecting; conjunction, assemblage; a compilation, abridgment; favour, kindness saE gmaji
and (saE gmajito) Victorious in battle saE gmo Conflict, battle

saE gyati
To chant, rehearse saE gyanaC
Rehearsing
saE ghako
Compiling, making a recension
saE ghiko Including, embracing saE g+ti Chanting together, rehearsal
saE go Attachment, bond, tie
saE ghakammaC
An act or ceremony performed by a chapter of monks assembled in solemn conclave saE gham anaC Junction
saE gham ito
Struck, sounded
saE gham m ati
To knock against, or together
saE ghabhattaC
Food belonging to a community of monks as opposed to food belonging to an individual mon
saE ghabhedo
Causing divisions or schisms among the monkhood, one of the Abhim m hnas saE ghabhogo Maintenance of monks
saE ghm +
One of the three robes of a Buddhist monk saE ghm o
One of the perpendicular timbers of a house; junction
saE ghto
Assemblage, multitude; killing, hurting; name of one of the eight principal hells saE ghdiseso Requiring a saE ghakamma at every stage saE ghrmo
A Buddhist monastery i.e., vihra
saE ghiko
Belonging to or connected with the monkhood

saE gh+ Having a crowd of disciples
saE ghum m ho Sounded, resounding saE gho
A multitude, assemblage; the assembly of Buddha's monks, the monkhood, clergy, church; a sacittaC
One's own mind or heart or thoughts sacivo
A minister, statesman
sace
If
sacetano Conscious, animate, rational saccakro
Ratification; pledge, earnest, payment in advance as guarantee saccakiriy
Truth, act, asseveration, a solemn declaration saccpanaC
Ratification of a bargain, an agreement made by formal consent sacco Truth
sacchando Self-willed sacchikaroti
To bring before one's eyes, see face to face, realize, experience, attain sajati
To cling sajano
A kinsman
sajalo Watery sajti
and sajtiko(1) and sajat+yo(2)Of the same class or species, or caste saj+vo Alive; living with sajjati
see <see>sajati</see>

sajjanaC
Decking, equipping sajjano
Well-born, respectable, good, virtuous sajju and (sajjukaC)Instantly, immediately, quickly, suddenly sajjulaso
Resin, sticky secretion of trees and plants sajjeti
To prepare, equip, deck
sajjo Diligent
sajjo
The sal tree, shorea robusta
sajjo
Prepared, ready, equipped, decorated sajjhaC and (sajjhu)Silver sajjhyati
To repeat, rehearse, read aloud sajjhyo Repetition, rehearsal
sañcayo
Accumulation-quantity sañcaraG aC
Wandering about; uniting sañcarati
To go about, wander; to meet, unite sañcarittaC
Going backwards and forwards, acting as go-between sañcaro Defile, passage sañcrik
A female messenger
sañcicca Intentionally, consciously, purposely sañcinati
To accumulate

sañcuG G o Crushed, shattered
sañcetan Thought, intention sañcetaniko Intentional
sañceteti
To be aware, intend sañchdeti
To cover, hide
sañchinno Cut sañjananaC Producing
sañjanito Arisen, produced sañjti Birth, origin
sañjnanaC Perceiving
sañjnti
To think, suppose; to recognize, perceive, comprehend; to call, name sañjyati
To arise, be produced or born sañj+vo Alive
sañjh Evening
sañ̃ñato
see <see>saC yato</see>
sañ̃ñato
Tied, fastened; restrained, self-controlled
sañ̃ñ
Sense, consciousness, perception; intellect, thought; sign, gesture; name sañ̃ñkkhandho see <see>sañ̃ñ</see>
sañ̃ñG aC
Perception; sign, monument

sañño see <see>sañjnti</see> sañnatto
see <see>sañjnti</see> sañnya
see <see>sañjnti</see> sañnyati
see <see>sañjnti</see> sañnpanaC
Pacifying, etc.
sañnpeti
see <see>sañjnti</see> sañnmeti
To restrain sañnmo
see <see>saC yamo</see>, restraint, self control, abstinence, sobriety sañnito Called, named sañn+ Conscious, perceiving; thinking, imagining
sañnutto
Joined, connected
sañnutto
see <see>saC y</see>- sañnogo
see <see>saC y</see>-
sañnogo
Union, bond; connexion, association, society sañnojanaC
see <see>saC y</see>- sañnyojanaC
Bond, attachment
sam m hi
Sixty
sam m ho
Sixtieth
sam m hyaC
Villainy, fraud

sam hilo Crafty, treacherous
sam ho
Crafty, treacherous, fraudulent
saG iC Slowly, softly, quickly
saG ikaC
Slowly; softly; quickly
saG m hahati
To stand
saG m hti
To stand
saG m hnaC
Form, figure; mark; position, station saG m hpanaC Arranging, fixing saG m hiti Position, station saG m hito see <see>saG m hahati</see> saG
so
A smith's tongs
saG
o
and (saG
aC) An assemblage of lotuses
saG
o
A multitude
saG ho
Smooth; soft, gentle, mild; delicate, minute, subtle, abstruse sataC see <see>santo</see>
sataC
A hundred satakaC
A hundred

satakkhattuC
A hundred times
satato Continual satapatto
The Indian crane
satapad+
A centipede satabhisajo
Name of a nakkhatta
satamkl+ Asparagus racemosus
sataraC si
The sun
satavaE ko
A sort of fish
satvar+ Asparagus racemosus
sati
Recollection; active state of mind, fixing the mind strongly upon any subject, attention, atten thought, reflection, consciousness satiko
Belonging to a hundred, consisting of a hundred, costing a hundred satipam m hnaC
Fixing the attention, earnest meditation.
satim
Of retentive memory or active mind, thoughtful, reflecting sativinayo
Name of one of the adhikaraG asamathas. "It is a method of procedure by which the innoc accused of a crime is proclaimed; when the offence has been inquired into by a chapter and honourably acquitted, he is declared blameless, and exhorted to keep steady in the path of saterat Lightning sato Recollecting, mindful, attentive, thoughtful, conscious satta
Seven sattaC

Substance, thing; form, body; sentient being; strength; breath, life sattakaC
A collection of seven sattakkhattuC Seven times
sattaguG o Sevenfold
sattam m ha
Seven or eight sattati Seventy
sattadasa Seventeen
sattadh
In seven ways, in seven pieces sattapaG G o
The tree echites scholaris
sattamo
Best, excellent sattamo
Seventh
sattarasa Seventeen
sattal
A sort of jasmine
sattaloko
World of sentient being satt
Existence
sattvso
Abode of beings
satthaC
A week
satthiko
Belonging to a week, hebdomadal, weekly satti Ability, power; an iron spear, javelin
satt+

A knife
sattu
An enemy
sattu
Barley meal, or flour generally, also a cake made of meal sattuko
An enemy
satto
A being creature, animal, sentient being, man satto
Able, strong
satto
see <see>sajati</see>
satthaC
A weapon, sword; iron, steel
satthaC
A treatise, book; a science or art satthakaC
A small weapon
satth
A teacher, master
satthi
The thigh
satthi
Ability, power; an iron spear, javelin satthuko Belonging to a teacher
sattho
A troop, caravan satraC
A sacrifice; munificence, liberality sadattho One's own advantage or good sadanaC
A house sad Always
sadcro

Good manners, right or virtuous conduct sadtano Perpetual sadro One's own wife sadisat and (sadisattaC)Similarity sadiso
Like, similar sadumaC
A house
sadevako
Together with the devas or deva-world sadeviko Accompanied by his queen saddanaC Making a noise saddalo Grassy
saddahati
To believe, to have faith
saddklo
A leopard. At the end of a compound used in the sense of "excellent, pre-eminent" saddo
Sound, noise; voice; a word saddhaC
Alms offered to petas, or the manes of deceased relatives saddhammo
Good doctrine, true religion, the true faith, the religion of Buddha; good condition saddh Faith
saddhyiko Trustworthy saddhlk Believing
saddhiC
With saddhivihr+

and (saddhivihriko)A fellow or brother monk, one who lives at the same monastery with ano saddho Faithful, believing sadhano Rich sadhamm+
Practising similar duties
sanaC Always
sanantano
Perpetual; ancient, primeval sanbhiko
Having a nave of a wheel sanmako
Having a name
sanito Sounding sanemiko
Having a felly or tire
sangho Collecting, taking santako Belonging to santajjeti
To menace, abuse, threaten santataC Continually
santat Goodness
santati
Extension, continuity, duration; lineage santatto Scorched, burnt santappeti
To satisfy santarati
To be in haste, to be agitated, to tremble santarabhiro

Inside and out santav Tranquil, calm santno
Spreading, extension; lineage; name of a tree in heaven santpanaC Burning up
santpeti
To burn, scorch, inflame, torment santpo Burning, fire; torment
sants+ Trembling, fearful santseti
To terrify santi
Calm, tranquillity, peace; nirvG a; bliss; pacification, settlement santiko Near
santim m hati
see <see>saG m hahati</see>, to stand santum m hi
Contentment, satisfaction, happiness santussako Contented, satisfied
santussati
To be satisfied, pleased, happy santo tranquilled calmed; see <see>sammati</see> santo Wearied, tired
santo
Being; good; wise
santoso
Contentment, happiness, satisfaction santhanaC
Appeasing, calming down santhambhati

To restrain oneself santharati
To spread, strew
santhavo Acquaintance, intimacy, friendship
santhgraC
A royal rest-house, a building at which kings transacted business when travelling in the prov santhro
A layer, stratum; a couch santhuto Praised
sandam m ho
Bitten, compressed sandati
To flow
sandano
A war chariot sandassanaC Showing, exhibition sandasseti
To show, teach sandahati
To connect; to get ready, arrange sandnaC
A cord
sandleti
To break
sandim m hiko
Visible, actual, belonging to this life
sandim m ho Seen
sandiddho
Smeared
sandeso
News; a message, communication sandeho
Doubt; accumulation
sando

Thick, coarse sandoho
An assemblage sandht
One who joins or reconciles sandhnito Bound sandhya
see <see>sandahati</see> sandhreti
To hold back, repress; to bear, carry sandhvati
To run through, traverse sandhi
Junction, union; agreement; a joint of the body sandhkpyati
To smoke
sandheti
To connect; to get ready, arrange sannakaddu
The tree buchanania latifolia sannaddho see <see>sannayhati</see> sannayhati
To bind, fasten sannmeti
To bend, contract
sannho Armour, mail sannikso Resembling
sannikkhepo Placing
sannicayo
Piling up, accumulation, hoarding
sannim m hnaC
Conclusion, consummation; ascertainment, resolve sannidhnaC

Proximity sannidhpeti
To bring about, cause to come to pass sannidhi
Proximity; presence, visibility sannidh+yati
To be combined
sanninno Bent, inclined sannipatati
To assemble, meet together
sannipto
Union, collocation, assemblage; assembly, congregation sannibho Resembling sanniyojeti
To appoint, enjoin, command sannirumbhati
To impede, restrain, block
sannirumhati
To impede, restrain, block
sannivso
Living with, association
sanniveso
Construction, preparation; station, encampment sannisajj Sitting together
sannis+dati
To subside, to be quiet sannissito
Connected with; devoted to sannihito Stored up sanneti
To mix, knead sanno see <see>s+dal+</see> sapaco

A pariah, out-caste sapati
To swear; to revile sapatto Hostile
sapatho
An oath
sapadnaC
In the common phrase sapadnaC piG ya carati, which is explained to mean "goes his begging rounds uninterruptedly", that is, fro house in regular succession, without passing any by sapadi Instantly
saparattho
One's own good, and the good of others sapariyanto Limited
saparivro
Accompanied by an escort or attendants sapko
A pariah, caG la sapiG
o
A near kinsman saputto
Together with his son sapuriso
Accompanied by attendants sappaccayo
Having a cause
sappañño
Wise
sappam ibhayo
Dangerous, beset with fear sappam ibhgo Resembling sappabho

Brilliant
sappG ako
Containing insects or animalculae sappyo Desirable, advantageous, beneficial sappi Clarified butter, ghee
sapp+tiko Joyful
sappuriso
A good or pious man
sappo
A snake
saphaC
A horse's hoof saphar+
The fish cyprius sophore
saphalo
Bearing fruit. Metaphorically, having its reward sabalo Variegated, mottled, spotted sabbako
All, every sabbaE gapaccaE g+
Provided with greater and less members or requisites, complete in all its parts sabbañjaho Leaving everything sabbaññut and (sabbaññkt)Omniscience sabbaññk
Omniscient. This is a common epithet of a Buddha, the only being who is omniscient sabbato
From every side sabbattat
"Identification of all beings with oneself", i.e. universal goodwill sabbattha and (sabbatra)Everywhere sabbatthakaC

Everywhere
sabbathatt
In every way sabbath
In every way, thoroughly sabbad Always
sabbadhi
Everywhere, on every side, in every respect sabbabhummo
A universal monarch sabbaso
Wholly, altogether, from beginning to end, throughout sabbv Entire
sabbo
All, every; whole, entire sabbhi
see <see>santo</see> sabbhkto
Real, true
sabrahmako
Including the Brahma sabrahmacr+
One who practises religious duties in association with others, a fellow student, fellow monk sabhatto
Accepting an invitation to a meal
sabh
An assembly; a hall, court, mansion; a court of justice
sabhgo
Common, shared by all, identical
sabhgo
Own share sabhjanaC Courtesy
sabhyaC
A hall of assembly sabhvo

Natural state, nature sabhikkhuko Containing monks
sabhogo Wealthy
sabhyo
Polite, well-bred, refined samaC see <see>samo</see> samako Equal, same, similar samaggo
All, entire; friendly, harmonious, reconciled samaE g+ Possessing, endowed with samacariy Living tranquilly
samacr+ Living tranquilly
samacittat Equanimity
samacchati
To sit down samacchinno
Cut off
samajtiko
Of equal birth, of the same caste samajj
An assembly
samaññ
Name, designation, term
samaG ako
A bad or contemptible ascetic
samaG amacalo
An epithet of the sotpanna, sramaG a rock samaG + see <see>samaG o</see> samaG o

An ascetic; a Buddhist ascetic or monk, a Buddhist priest samatalaC
A level surface samat Sameness, equality
samatiC sa
see <see>samo</see> samatikkamati
To cross over a stream, to elapse of time samatikkamo
Rising above, getting beyond samatitthiko
Said of the Ganges when quite brimming samativijjhati
To penetrate samattaC Equality
samatto Concluded; complete, entire, all samatthanaC Allaying disputes
samattho
Fit, able, adequate, competent, strong; significant samatho Tranquillity, calm, quietude; cessation samadhigacchati
To attain samadhim m hahati
To practise resolutely samanaC
Stopping, suppression samanantar and (samanantaraC) Immediately after samanugghiyamno
Being taken up, about a false assertion, being pressed, closely questioned samanuññto Approved, allowed samanupassati

To see, perceive samanupassan Consideration
samanubandhati
To start together in pursuit samanubhsati
To join in addressing a person samanubhsan Addressing
samanuyuñjiyamno
Being inquired about samanussati
To direct, rule, exhort samanto
All, entire samanngato Endowed with samannesati
To seek samanvito Possessed of samappeti
To put, deposit, fix; to consign, commit, deliver; to give back samabhiva

heti To encourage samabhivh+ Leading up together
samabhisiñcati
To sprinkle or inaungurate as a king samayo
Agreement, combination; multitude; season, time; custom, rule,religious obligation; order, pr belief, doctrine samaro and (samaraC) Battle
samalaE karoti
To adorn splendidly, decorate

samavam m hito Ready samavyo Combination, union; multitude samaveti
To be united samavhayo
A name
samasamo
Exactly the same samasyati
To be compounded samassseti
To console, encourage; to relieve, refresh sam
A year
samka

hati
To pull along; to attract, entice samkiG G o
Covered, crowded samkulo Covered, filled samgacchati
To assemble; to associate with samgamo
Assembly; intercourse, society
samcaraG aC Good manners
samcarati
To follow, practise; to act, behave samcro Conduct, manners samciG G o Practised, performed
samcito Overspread

samjiko
A member of an assembly
samjo
An assembly
samdapeti see <see>samdiyati</see> samdahati
To put together samdnaC Undertaking; taking, acquiring samdya
see <see>samdiyati</see> samdinnattaC
Fact of having been undertaken samdiyati
To take with one, take away; to take upon oneself, solemnly undertake samdisati
To indicate; to command
samdhi
Agreement, peace, reconciliation; tranquillity, self-concentration, calm samdhiko
Connected with self-absorption samdhijo Originating in self-absorption samdhiyati see <see>samdahati</see> samnattat
Impartiality, feeling towards others as towards oneself samneti
To bring together, put together; to assemble; to compare samno
Similar, equal, same samno
Being
sampajjati
To come into, enter upon, undergo, attain sampatti
Attainment

sampanaC
Conclusion, completion
sampeti
To complete, conclude samyogo Combination, multitude samrako
Including the Mra world samrabhati
To begin, undertake samrambho Undertaking; injury, obstruction samruhati
To ascend samlapati
To speak
samsanno Near
samseti
To abbreviate, condense samsetha
Associate with the good samso
An abridgment samharati
To collect together
samhro Collection
samhito Steadfast, firm, fixed; tranquil; attentive; established in samiC su see <see>sameti</see> samikkhaC Investigation
samijjhati
To succeed, prosper, take effect. Of business prospering, a wish or prayer being fulfilled or samijjhanaC Success, accomplishment

samiñjati
To be moved, tremble, falter samitaC
see <see>sameti</see> samitattaC
State of being quelled or removed samiti
Union; an assembly samito see <see>sammati</see> samiddhi Success, prosperity samiddho see <see>samijjhati</see> samidh
Firewood
sam+
The tree acacia suma
sam+pako
At the end of a compound sam+pa
sam+pago Approaching
sam+pam m ho Standing near sam+po Near. Of time, proximate, recent sam+raG o
Air, wind; name of a plant
sam+rati
To be moved
sam+ro
Air, wind
samukkaC sati
To elevate, exalt, praise samuggato Arisen
samuggah+to Accepted, understood

samuggo
A box, basket
samugghto Removal, abolishing
samuccayo
Collection, accumulation samuccinati
To select, appoint samucchindati
To extirpate; to break off, put an end to samucchedo
Extirpation, rooting out samujjalito
and (samujjalo) Blazing, resplendent, brilliant; ratanasamujjalo e.g., blazing with jewels samujjhito Abandoned
samum m hahati
To rise up; to come to life again
samum m hnaC Rising, origination
samuttejeti
To stir, excite, fill with delight samutrsanaC Frightening
samudayo
Rise, origin, commencement; origination, cause; multitude samudgamo Beginning
samudcarati
To treat, behave towards; to lay claim to samudcro Behaviour, practice
samudyo Quantity, entirety
samudham o
"Brought forward, produced, got ready"
samudeti
To arise

samuddim m ho
Pointed out, illustrated
samuddo
A sea samuddham o
Entirely removed, extirpated, rooted out samunnadati
To utter loud cries samupagacchati
To approach
samupam m hati
To serve, supply
samupabbk7 ho
Set up, heaped, in full swing samupamo Resembling samupasobhito Splendidly adorned samupgacchati
To come to samupeti
To approach, meet samuppanno Arisen, produced
samuppdo Arising, production, origination samubbahati
To pull out samubbhavo
Springing up, production
samullapanaC Speaking with samussayo
Accumulation; the body, as an assemblage of various constituents, comp. kya samusseti
To raise, lift up samklako
Roots and all

samkhananaC Removal, abolishing
samkhanti
To remove, abolish samkheti
To bring together, assemble samkho Multitude, assemblage, aggregation, mass samekkhito Considered, reflected upon samecca
Having acquired, learnt, known
sameti
To meet together; to harmonize; to be equal to, correspond with sameti
see <see>sammati</see> sameto
Brought into contact with, connected with, possessing samo
Tranquillity
samo
Toil, fatigue
samo
Even, level; like, similar, same, equal; upright, just, impartial; full, complete, entire samokirati
To sprinkle all over samotarati
To descend, disembark samodhnaC Combination samodhneti
To join, connect samoruyha
Having descended samosaraG aC
Union, junction samosarati
To come together

sampakampati
To tremble, be shaken violently sampaksito Displayed
sampakiG G o Strewn, crowded sampakkhandanaC
Leaping forward, aspiration sampaggaho Favour, patronage sampajaññaC Consciousness, intelligence
sampajno
Knowing, understanding, conscious
sampajjati
To turn out, happen; to succeed, prosper; to be obtained, fall into any one's possession sampajjalito Kindled, burning sampam iggaho Favourable reception, welcome
sampam icchati
To assent, agree; to accept, receive, take sampam icchanaC Assent
sampati
Now
sampatti
Success, prosperity, glory, magnificence, beauty; successful attainment, attainment sampatto see <see>samppuG ti</see> sampad
Success, happiness, blessing; successful attainment, success in obtaining, attainment, poss sampadnaC Giving. In gram. a name of the dative relation sampadleti
To cleave, rend
sampadum m ho Impure, wicked

sampadhkpyati
To send forth clouds of smoke sampayto Gone away sampayutto
Connected with, dependent on, resulting from sampayogo
Union
samparyiko
Relating to the future state samparyo
Futurity, the future state, future life, the next world samparivattati
To roll oneself, grovel; to turn, revolve samparivreti
To surround
sampavaE ko
A friend, companion sampavattanaC Causing to proceed sampavatteti
To set going sampavreti
To cause to refuse sampavedhati
To be shaken violently sampavedh+ Shaky, loose
sampasdanaC
Making serene, tranquillization
sampas+dati
To be tranquillized, re-assured sampassati
To behold, discern, see clearly sampahaC s and (sampahaC sanaC) Satisfaction, pleasure, approval
sampahaC seti
To gladden, delight; to express approbation of a person, to praise

sampahro Wounding; strife, battle sampto
Fall, descent
sampdanaC Effecting, accomplishment; preparing, obtaining sampdan+yo
To be prepared or effected sampdeti
see <see>sampajjati</see> samppako
Causing to obtain, bringing, procuring samppuG ti
To attain; to come to, find, meet with sampleti
To protect, keep sampiG
ati
To be added together
sampiyo Friendly
sampum o
A box, casket sampuG G o Filled, full sampkjeti
To venerate sampkrito Filled, full samphappalpo Frivolous talk, idle talk samphasso
Contact
samphullito
In full blossom samphusati
To come in contact with, touch sambandhati

To bind sambandhanaC Binding
sambandho
Connection; relationship, kinship sambar+ Jugglery
sambaro
Name of an asura
sambalaC
Provision for a journey
sambahulo
Many
sambdheti
To oppress, afflict
sambdho
Pressure, crowding, difficulty, obstruction sambhati
To rub, shampoo
sambhanaC
Rubbing the body, shampooing
sambuko
A bivalve shell sambujjhanaC
Knowing thoroughly sambuddho
Thoroughly known or understood; one who is thoroughly enlightened, has known or discove sambojjhaE go see <see>bojjhaE go</see> sambodhi
Perfect knowledge or enlightenment; perception of the truth, attainment of Buddhaship; Bud sambhaggo
Broken
sambhajjati
To be broken
sambhatto
Devoted, faithfully attached of a friend imagination, idea, reflection sambhamo

Confusion, excitement; fear; respect sambhavati
To arise, be produced, spring from; to meet with sambhavo
Production, birth; origin, cause; union; semen sambhro
Preparation; materials; necessaries; constituent part, element sambhvan and (sambhvanaC) Honour, fame sambhs and (sambhsanaC) Conversation sambhinno Broken, interrupted sambh+to Terrified
sambhuñjati
To eat with sambhk
Progeny, off spring, descendants, issue sambhkto
see <see>sambhavati</see> sambhedo
Confluence of two rivers; difference
sambhogo
Sensual enjoyment; happiness, enjoyment; use samma
A term of familiar address, used by equals, or by a superior to an inferior, my good sir! frienc sammaggato
Walking rightly, living a blameless life sammajjati
To sweep sammajjanaC Sweeping
sammajjan+
A broom sammam m ho
see <see>sammajjati</see> sammati

To be appeased or calmed; to cease sammato see <see>sammannati</see> sammattaC
Correctness, truth
sammatto Delighting in, intoxicated with sammadeti
To intoxicate, exhilarate, cause drowsiness sammado Exhilaration, drowsiness sammaddati
To trample, tread under foot sammanteti
To consult together
sammannati
To agree to, decide, resolve; to sanction, approve, select sammappadhnaC Right exertion, right effort sammasati
To seize, grasp samm
The pin of a yoke
samm
Fully, thoroughly, accurately, rightly, properly, well, really, truly; sammadakkhto i.e., well pre sammadaññh, perfect knowledge sammnaC and (sammnanaC) Honour, veneration sammpso
see <see>ygo</see> sammsati
see <see>sati</see> sammiñjeti
To bend back or together, double up sammisso
Mixed
sammukhat Presence, confrontation

sammukho Face to face with, in the presence of sammuñjan+ see <see>sammajjan+</see>, A broom sammuti
Consent, authorization, permission; choice, selection; general consent or use sammuyhati
To be stupefied, bewildered, paralyzed sammk7 ho
see <see>sammuyhati</see> sammodati
To agree with, be in harmony with, be friendly with sammoso Confusion
sammoho
Bewilderment, infatuation, error
sayaC
Oneself, by oneself, spontaneously
sayaC var
A maiden who chooses a husband
sayaE kato
Made by oneself
sayañjto
Sprung up spontaneously
sayati
To lie down
sayati
To go, to take refuge
sayathu Swelling
sayanaC
Lying, sleeping; a bed, couch sayaniggahaC
A sleeping-room, bed-chamber sayanigharaC
A sleeping-room, bed-chamber sayampabho
Self-resplendent, self-brilliant

sayambhk
Self-produced, self-sufficient, independent sayo Lying, sleeping
sayhati
To endure saraC see <see>saro</see> sarako
 and (sarakaC)A drinking vessel saram o
A chameleon
saraG aC
Remembrance
saraG aC
Refuge, protection, salvation; nirvG a; a protector; a house, home sarati
see <see>sumarati</see>, to remember sarado
A year; autumn, the two months succeeding the rains sarabk
A lizard
sarabhaE go Indistinctness of the voice, or broken articulation sarabhañña C
A particular mode of reciting or intoning sacred compositions sarabhk
Name of a river
sarabho
A sort of deer
saralo
The tree pinus longifolia
saravo
Noisy
saravyaC
A target
sarasi
see <see>saro</see>

saras+
A large pond
sarasvat+ Name of a river
sarahasso
Along with the Upanishads
sargo
Coloured; affected with rga or passion sarjako Including the king
sarbhyso
Archery
sarvo
A shallow cup, saucer
sarsanaC
A bow sarikkho Resembling, having similarlity to sarit
One who remembers
sarit
A river
sarito Flowing, running sar+raC
The body
sar+r+ An animal, man
sarkpaC
Own form, natural state, nature sarkpo Resembling, having similarity to saro Flowing, going
saro
The reed saccharum sara; an arrow
saro
Sound; voice; musical sound, tone; a vowel

saro
and (saraC) A large sheet of water, a lake saroruhaC
A lotus
salaC
A porcupine's quill salakkhaG aC see <see>smañño</see> salabho
A grasshopper or moth salk
A peg, slip, bit of wood; a blade or sprout salm u Unripe
salbho
One's own advantage, self-gain salilaC
Water
sallaC
A javelin; an arrow; a stake, splinter sallakattiyaC and (sallakattikaC)The art of the surgeon or physician sallakatto
A surgeon, physician
sallak+
The tree boswellia thurifera
sallako
A porcupine sallakkhanaC
Distinguishing, testing sallakkheti
To observe, perceive, distinguish, consider, intend sallapati
To talk with sallavejjo
A surgeon or physician
sallahuko
Light

sallpo Conversation
sall+no Bent together, cowering, depressed shrink back in fear sallekhiyaC Scratching out, erasing sallekho Scratching out, erasing
sallo
A javelin, arrow, stake, etc. a porcupine; the shrub vangueria spinosa sa7 yatanaC
The six organs of sense
savaE ko
A sort of fish
savati
To flow
savanaC
Hearing; the ear
savanaC Flowing savan+yo Pleasant to hear savano
Name of a nakkhatta
savali
Wrinkled
saviññG ako
Possessed of intelligence or consciousness, animate savibhatti Having inflections savupdiseso see <see>updiseso</see> savo Flowing, dripping
savyo Left, on the left hand savhayo Called, named

sasako
A hare, rabbit
sasakkaC Certainly
sasaE ko
The moon
sasaE khriko Induced by others
sasanaC Slaughter
sas+
The moon
sas+so
Together with the head
sasuro
Father-in-law
sasenako Accompanied by an army
saso
A hare sasneho Loving sassaC
Corn in the field, crop sassatiko Eternal sassato Perpetual, eternal sassamaG abrhmaG o
Together with monks and brahmins sassmiko
Having a master
sassir+ko
Auspicious, glorious, blessed sassk
Mother-in-law
saha
With, together with

sahaC
Power
sahakro
A sort of fragrant mango tree sahagato Accompanying or associated with, joined to sahagm+ Accompanying
sahajti
Name of a town in India
sahajto
Born at the same time
sahaj+v+ Living with sahajo
A uterine brother
sahati
To bear, endure, resist, overcome sahattho One's own hand sahadhammiko
Practising the same religious duties sahadhenuko Accompanied by a cow sahanaC Endurance
sahano Enduring
sahabhvo Endurance
sahampati
This is an epithet of Mahbrahma, who is often called by the name of Sahampatibrahm or Sahampatimahbrahm sahavyat Companionship
sahas Hastily, arbitrarily sahassaC

A thousand sahassadh
In a thousand ways
sahyako
A companion, ally, friend sahyat and (sahyattaC   )Companionship sahyo
A companion, ally, friend
sahit
One who endures
sahito Endowed with, accompanied by; united sahiriko Modest
sahetuko
Having a cause
saho Enduring
sahodako Containing water
s
A dog
sC   alo
Brown, dark skacch Conversation
skam   no
 and (skam   yano)A proper name skam   iko Belonging to a cart skalyaC Totality
skro
With its characteristics
skso Near skiyo

Name of the princely family to which Gautama Buddha belonged skuG iko
A fowler sketaC
Name of the city Ayodhy sko and (skaC)A potherb skkharappabhedo
Together with the distinction of letters skhalyaC
see <see>sakhilo</see> skh
A branch
skh+ A tree
sgaro
An ocean
sgal
 and (sgalaC)Name of a city, the capital of King Milinda sE go Together with its aE gas of the veda; with its divisions sj+vaC
Rule of life, precept governing the monastic life of the buddhist monks sm ako
 and (sm akaC) Cloth; a cloth, an outer garment, tunic, cloak sm ik
An upper robe, mantle, cloak sm +
A garment, mantle
sm m hakatho
Together with the commentary
sm heyyaC
Craft, treachery sG aC Hempen cloth, coarse cloth sG +
A curtain, screen, tent sG o

A touchstone; a grindstone stakumbhaC
Gold staccaC Constantly, perseveringly
statiko
Persevering, continuing steadfastly sti
Name of a nakkhatta
stireko Excessive
stisayo Excessive sto Joyful
stthako Useful, profitable
sttho
Together with the meaning sdaro Reverential; affectionate; enthusiastic sdno
Having attachment to the world, worldly, unconverted sdikkho Similar
sdiyati
To be willing, like, acquiesce, accept, permit, agree sdissaC Resemblance
sdu Sweet, agreeable sdeti see <see>s+dati</see> sdo Taste
sddho Practicable
sddhyo

Practicable
sdhako Accomplishing
sdhanaC
Accomplishment, effecting; materials
sdhraG o
Common, joint, general
sdhim m ho
Best s sdhiyo Practicable
sdhiyyo Better
sdhu
Good, excellent, right, proper; respectable, well-born sdhukaC
Well, thoroughly
sdhukro Saying sddhu, approval, congratulation sdhutaro Better
sdheti
To accomplish, effect, prepare snu
Table-land
snucaro
Together with followers or dependents sno
A dog sntvaC
Conciliation, calmness, pacification spateyyaC Property, wealth
spadeso
Figurative of speech
spado
A beast of prey, tiger
spekkhat

Longing
spo
Oath, curse; abuse
smaC
Conciliation; name of one of the three vedas smagg+
Concord, unity, harmony
smacco
Accompanied by ministers of state smaññaC
State of being an ascetic, [ramaG ship, smaññat [ramaG ship smaññeva
Of one's own accord
smaññ o
General, universal, common smaG ako
Belonging to a monk or Buddhist priest
smaG ero
A Buddhist monk in deacon's orders, a novice, neophyte smatthiyaC Strength; ability, competence
smanto
Neighbouring, bordering smayiko Temporary
smalat
The creeper ichnocarpus
sm
see <see>smo</see> smi
Half; blamably smiko
Lord, master; husband smin+ see <see>sm+</see> smiso

Having food
sm+
Lord, master, owner; husband
sm+ci
Correctness, propriety, proper or respectful act or duty sm+piko
Proximate
smuddo Marine
smo
Black, dark smyaC Equality, equipoise syaC see <see>syo</see> syako
An arrow; a sword
syaG ho Evening
syati
To taste
syamso /Evening meal, supper syik Lying, sleeping sy+ Lying
syo Evening
sraE go
The bird cuculus melanoleucus; a deer srajjaC
Modesty, timidity, shyness
srat Reality, strength
sratto Impassioned, inflamed with desire srattho

Essential or true meaning srathi
A charioteer, coachman sradiko Autumnal
srado
Autumnal; the autumn season sraddho
su-raddho srameyyo
A dog
srambho
Clamour, angry talk
srambho
Accompanied with danger or injury
sraso
The Indian crane
srgo
Affection, passion
srG +yo
In the phrase sammodan+yaC kathaC srG +yaC v+tisretv, which Burnouf happily rend with him the compliments of friendship and civility", "that which should be reminded" sri
A piece or man at chess, draughts, etc.
srikkho Similar
sriputto
Name of a famous apostle, a contemporary of Gotama; one of the chief disciples of Buddha sriphalako
A chess-board
srib
Name of a plant
sr+ Going sr+riko Corporeal, bodily sruppo Fit, proper, suitable, in conformity with sreti

To remind sro
Essence, substance, choicest part, pith, marrow; main point, real truth; strength, vigour; wea slapaG G +
The shrub hedysarum gangeticum
sl
A house, hall, room
slkiyaC
A branch of surgery
sli
Rice, especially hill paddy
slik
The maynah bird, gracula religrosa sliko Belonging to paddy slkkaC
Root of the water-lily sleyyo Fit for rice
slo
The tree shorea robusta; a tree in general
slo
A brother-in-law
slohito
A blood or near kinsman, sapiG
a s7 uro
A dog
svako
A hearer, listener, pupil; a disciple svajjo
Censurable, faulty, wrong, sinful svaG o
Name of a month
svatth+
Name of a town in India, the capital of Kosala svaseso

Imperfect, incomplete svik
see <see>svako</see> svitth+
The vedic verse svitr+
svet
One who informs sveti see <see>suG oti</see> svo
Dark brown, bay ssaE ko Dangerous
ssati
To command
ssanaC
Order, command; message; epistle; instruction, discipline; scripture; Buddhist religion or dis ssapo
A mustard-seed sso Asthma
shacariyaC Association
shasaC
Violence; punishment, fine shasiko Violent, cruel, ferocious shassiko
Belonging to a thousand, costing a thousand shu
Good. Softened form of sdhu siC sap
The tree dalbergia sisu
sikat
Sand
sikk
A string by which a weight is suspended; the strings of a balance; the strings of a kja sikkhati

To learn, train oneself sikkhanaC Training, learning, study
sikkh
Learning, study, training sikhaG
ako
A tuft or lock of hair
sikhaG
+
A peacock sikhaG
o
A tuft or lock of hair; a peacock's tail sikharaC
and (sikharo) A peak, top; the point of a sword sikhar+
A tree; a mountain
sikh
Peak, point, summit; crest, top-knot
sikh+
Fire; a peacock; name of a Buddha siglo
A jackal
siggu
The tree hyperanthera moringa
siE gaC
A horn; a peak, summit; height, dignity, pre-eminence siE gakaC
A horn
siE gro
Love, sexual passion siE givaG G o
Gold-coloured
siE giveraC Ginger
siE g+
Horned

siE g+
A kind of gold; name of a plant
siE ghm akaC
A place where four roads meet siE ghm o
Name of a plant
siE ghG ik
Mucus of the nose
sijjhati
To be accomplished, take place, succeed siñcati
To sprinkle sitaC
A smile
sitabbho Camphor
sito
White
sito Bound
sito
Clinging, devoted to; resting upon sitthaC
and (sitthakaC) Beeswax; a lump of boiled rice sithilo
Loose, flabby, bending, yielding siddhattho
White mustard; Gautama Buddha's name when a prince siddhanto
Religious belief, dogma
siddhi
Formation, accomplishment; success, prosperity siddho
see <see>sijjhati</see> sinnaC
Bathing, washing siniddho
Oily, greasy; smooth, glossy; affectionate sineru

A name of Mount Meru sinehako
An intimate friend
sinehito
Lustful, connected with desire or covetousness sineho
Oil; friendship, affection, love; lust, desire sind+
Name of a tree, khajjur+
sinduvro
The tree vitex negundo sindkraC
Red lead
sindhavo
Belonging to sindh, sindhavo, a sindh horse sindhu
The sea, ocean; the sindh country sindhuro
An elephant
sindhk
A river
sippaC
A mechanical art; a fine art; a piece of work, a job; skill, proficiency sippiko and (sippiyo) An artisan, artificer
sipp+
An artisan, artificer
sipp+
A pearl oyster
sibbati
To sew, stitch
sibbanaC
Sewing
sibban+ Desire
simbal+
and (simbalo) The silk-cotton tree bombax heptaphyllum

sir
A nerve, tendon; a vein, artery
siriC sapo
A snake; any creeping thing, such as a centipede, chameleon, etc.
sir+
Fortune, prosperity; a name of Lakshmi; majesty, royalty; magnificence, glory
sir+so
The tree acacia sir+sa siro
 and (siraC) The head; top of a tree; acme, elevation silatthambho
A stone pillar
sil
A stone, rock silghati
To praise
silgh Praise
silbhk
A sort of snake
silmayo
Made of stone
silsanaC
A stone seat or throne
silim m ho
Adhering, connected siluccayo
A mountain
silutto
A rat snake
silesumo Phlegm sileseti
To embrace sileso Embrace; union
siloko Fame; a verse, stanza

siv
A jackal
sivik
A litter, palanquin
siv+
Name of a people
sivo
Auspicious, blest, happy, fortunate sisiro Cold
sissako
A pupil sissnusissakaC
From pupil to pupil, through a succession of pupils sisso
A pupil s+karo
Drizzling rain s+gho /Quick, swift s+talo Cold, cool
s+t
A furrow s+tlk Chilled
s+tibhkto
Cold, calm, tranquil, impassible
s+tuG haC
Cold and heat
s+to Cold, cool
s+dati
To sink, subside, settle; to be dejected, despond, yield, give way s+danaC Sinking
s+padaC Elephantiasis of the leg

s+mantini
A woman
s+manto
A boundary; a mode of parting the hair
s+m
A boundary, limit s+ro
A plough
s+laC
Nature, character; habits, customs, practice, conduct; moral practice, piety, morality; a mora
s+labbataC Religious practice or rites
s+lamayo Consisting of moral conduct, virtuous
s+lav
Observing the s+la precepts, moral, virtuous
s+l+
Having a habit or disposition
s+vathik
A charnel-house, place where dead bodies are thrown to rot away instead of being burned
s+saC
Lead
s+saC
The head; front s+sako
Heading, with the head towards s+sato
Head-ways, towards the head s+siko
One who carries something on his head; carried on the head s+handaC nadati
To roar
s+hapañjaraC Window s+halo Sinhalese
s+haseyy
Lying on the right side like a lion s+ho

A lion
su
and sudaC (1) and assu(2) A particle used generally in asking questions, but sometimes a With preceding kathaC : kathaC su tarati oghaC kathaC su tarati aG G avaC , how how does he cross the ocean ?
su
A particle used only as an inseparable prefix, and implying excellence, or facility, or excess s well spoken, well preached or uttered suC sumro
A crocodile
sukat+ Fortunate sukato
and (sukam o) Good, virtuous sukandako
An onion sukaro
Easy, feasible sukumro
see <see>sukhumlo</see>, Youthful, tender, delicate, soft, graceful suko
A parrot sukkaC
Semen
sukkaC
see <see>sukko</see> sukkavro
Friday sukko
White, bright, pure, good sukkhati see <see>sussati</see> sukkho
Dry, dried up sukhavihr+
Having a feeling of ease or serenity sukhyati

To be pleased, contented sukhvaho Bringing happiness
sukhvh+
A well-trained horse, one that carries a person comfortably sukhito
Happy, blest; pleased, contented; healthy sukh+
Happy, blest; healthy sukhuccraG aC
Facility of pronunciation, euphony sukhumlo
see <see>sukumro</see>, Youthful, tender, delicate, soft, graceful sukhumo
Small, minute; subtle; accurate; delicate, exquisite sukhkpapatti Blissful birth sukheti
To make happy sukhedhito Delicate sukhes+
Seeking pleasure or ease
sukho
Blest, happy; delightful, pleasant; easy
sugati
Happy condition, being reborn in heaven; heaven, svarga
sugati
Righteous
sugato
Who walks well, happy, blest sugandhi (sugandho) Fragrant sugahaG o
Well held, tight sugahito
see <see>suggah+to</see>, Grasped tightly suggati

see <see>sugati</see> suggah+to see <see>sugahito</see>, Grasped tightly suE kaC
 and (suE ko) Tax, tribute, revenue sucarito
Well done, right, good suci
Bright, clear, pure, clean, white sucitto
Much variegated or ornamented sucim
Pure suciraC
For a very long time
succhanno
Well covered or roofed sujano
A good man
sujampati
Husband of Suj, a name of Sakka
suj
A sacrificial ladle
suj
Name of the wife of Sakka sujti
Of high family
sujto
Of good or noble birth, well born; well grown, fine
suj+vo
Easy to live
sujjhati
To be pure suññato Empty, void
suññgraC
An empty place where there are no houses or people suñño

Empty, void, deprived of sum m hito
Well-established, firm sum m hu
Well; exceedingly suG ti
see <see>suG oti</see>, To hear suG o
A dog
suG oti
To hear
suG h and suG is(1) and hus(2) A daughter-in-law sutav
Learned in religious literature, mighty in the scriptures suti
Oozing
suti
Hearing; the ear; sound; report, rumour; tradition; the veda; in music, one of the twenty-two intervals suto
A son suto Flowing, dripping
suto Heard; renowned suttaC
A string, thread; a portion of the Buddhist scriptures; a rule, aphorism suttantiko Versed in the sutta pim aka suttanto
A sutta in the tipim aka sense suttaso Sutta by sutta
sutti
A pearl oyster
suttiko
Belonging to a thread

sutto
Sewn, stitched
sutto Asleep
sutthiro
Firm sudaC see <see>su</see> sudatto
A name of AnthapiG ika sudanto
Thoroughly subdued or tamed sudassano Beautiful
sudass+
Seeing well
sudasso Easily seen, obvious sudujjayo
Very difficult to conquer or win
suduttaro
Very difficult to cross, or to escape from sududdaso
Very difficult to see, invisible
suddo
A [kdra suddhanto
Women's apartments, harem
suddhavaC sat
Purity of lineage
suddhj+v+ Living a pure life
suddhvso
Pure abode suddhi
Purity, purification; nirvG a suddho

see <see>sujjhati</see> suddhodani
Son of Suddhodana, an epithet of Gautama Buddha suddhodano
Name of a king of Kapilavatthu, the father of Gautama the Buddha sudhamm
Name of Sakka's hall of justice
sudh Ambrosia or nectar; whitewash sudhs+
A deva or angel
sudh+ Wise
sunakho
A dog
sunisannakaC
The pot-herb marsilia quadrifolia sundaro Beautiful; good supakko Thoroughly ripe
supaG G o
A garu7 a, a kind of fairy bird
supati
To sleep
supantho
A good road
supinaC Sleep
suppagabbho
Very bold
suppam ividdho Thoroughly understood suppatim m hito Firmly established; well placed suppat+ko
Name of one of the elephants at the eight points suppat+to

Overjoyed
suppabuddho
Wide awake, vigilant suppasanno
Very joyful, or full of faith suppo
 and (suppaC)A winnowing basket subahu
Very much, a great many subbaco Compliant, meek subbato
Virtuous, pious, devout subbattaC
Good practice, piety
subbum m hi
Abundance of rain, opposed to dubbum m hi subhakiG ho
 and (subhakiG G o and subhakiG G ako) Entirely lustrous subhago Beloved, amiable, agreeable subhaddo
Name of Gautama Buddha's last convert; name of a renegade monk who tried to stir up sch immediately after Gautama's death subharo Easily supported by others, frugal subhsubho
Good and bad
subhikkho
Having abundance of food, fertile subho Radiant, lustrous; beautiful; good; auspicious, happy sumati
Wise
sumanakkm o
"Adam's Peak", a mountain in Ceylon, so called because the deva Sumana occupies it.
suman
The great-flowered jessamine

sumano Satisfied, happy sumanoharo
Very charming sumarati
see <see>sarati</see>, To remember sumnaso Joyful
sumutto Happily released sumedhaso and (sumedho) Wise sumeru
Mount Meru
sumo
The moon
surataC
Sexual intercourse suratto
Very red surabhi Fragrant
surammo
Very delightful sur Spirituous liquor
suriyo
The sun
suruE g
A mine, pit
suruciro Resplendent, brilliant surusuru
A word initative of the sound made when curry and rice is eaten hastily.
surkp+ Handsome
surkpo Handsome

suro
A deva, deity sulabho
Easy to obtain or meet with suvaco
see <see>subbaco</see>, Compliant, meek suvaG G o
Of good colour, bright, brilliant; good-looking, of good mien or complexion, comely suvatthi
see <see>sotthi</see>, Health, welfare, blessing, happiness suvnayo Easily led suvno see <see>soG o</see>
suv+ro
Name of Sakka's son
suvum m hik
Abundance of rain
suvupasanto Thoroughly calmed suve
see <see>sve</see>, Tommorrow suvo
see <see>suko</see>, A parrot susan Exquisite beauty
susar+
The plant momordica charantia susnaC
A cemetery or charnel house, an enclosed ground in which bodies are burned susnako
A caG
la employed in a susna susiro
Full of holes, perforated sus+
A hole in the ground
susu

A boy, lad
susuko
A child or youth; an alligator or crocodile; the gangetic porpoise suseno
The karamadda tree
sussati
To be dried up, waste away
sussanaC
Desiccation, drying out sussarat Melodiousness of voice sussaranaC
Good news
sussute
To be heard sussuto
Well known sussksati
To listen, attend
sussks
Desire to hear, obedience, attention, service suhajjo
A friend
suhadayo Friendly
suhado
Friendly, affectionate suhito Satiated suhuju
see <see>skju</see>, Very upright, conscientious suhum m hito
Clearly arisen
skkariko
A boar-hunter
skkaro
A hog, boar skcako

Informing, indicating skcanaC Indicating, exhibiting skci
A needle
skceti
To indicate, show; to inform against, betray skju
Very upright, conscientious skG
A slaughter-house skti Birth, childbirth
skto
A charioteer, a son of a khattiya by a brahmin woman; a bard, poet-laureate skdati
To distil, flow, exude skdanaC Destruction
skdo
A cook
sknu
A son, a child
skpo
Soup, broth, sauce, condiment, the gravy of curry and rice skyati see <see>suG oti</see> skrato Compassionate, tender skrattaC Heroism skr+ Wise
skro
A hero, valiant man; the sun sklaC
and (sklo) Any sharp pointed instrument, a pike, lance, stake; severe pain, colic, rheumatism skl+

A name of Ziva
sk7 ro Magnificent sksk
Sho! sho!, a noise made to frighten away a bird
seko Sprinkling
sekhariko
The plant achyranthes aspera sekharo
A crest, chaplet sekhiyo
Connected with training
sekho
One who is under training. This term is applied to the first seven ariyapuggalas, the eighth o asekho. It implies that they have still a remainder of human passion to eradicate, still duties still a probation to be passed through seceti
To cause to sprinkle sem m hat Superiority, eminence sem m hi
Ashes; foreman of a guild; a cashier, treasurer; a wealthy merchant sem m ho
Best, excellent, eminent, supreme seG i and (seG +) A line, row; a multitude, community; a guild of artisans setaE bo
A sort of mango setacchattaC
A white parasol or umbrella, an emblem of royalty; kingship, royalty setacchado
A goose
setam m hik
Blight or mildew
setaG go White-bodied seti

see <see>sayati</see>, to lie down set+bho
A white elephant
setu
A bridge, embankment, dike, causeway; a cause seto
White
sethillaC Looseness
sedajo
Sprung from moisture, insects, worms, etc. are sedaja sedito Steamed, heated sedo
Sweat, moisture, boiling steam senaC
see <see>sayanaC </see>, lying, sleeping; a bed, couch sen
An army
senn+
A general
senpaccaC
Post of general or commander-in-chief senpati
A general or commander-in-chief sensanaC
see <see>sayanaC </see> seniyo
Belonging to an army
seno
A hawk
sepaG G ik Names of two sorts of plants
sepaG G +
 Names of two sorts of plants
sephlik
Name of a plant
semhaC

and (semho) Phlegm, the phlegmatic humour semhiko Phlegmatic, produced by phlegm seyyath
As, just as seyy Lying, sleeping; a bed, couch
seyyo Better, excellent ser+ Self-willed sereyyako
The plant barleria cristata selanaC Noise, shouting selu
The tree cordia myxa seleyyaC Benzoin
selo Rocky
sevako
Serving, following, devoted to sevati
To serve, follow, practise; to resort to, to use, enjoy sevan and (sevanaC) Service, following, practising, devotion to sev Service sevlo
The aquatic plant vallisneria sesako
Remaining, omitted
seseti
To omit, leave seso Remaining
so

Own
so
He; this; that sokaro
Swinish, belonging to pig sokav
Sorrowful
sok+ Sorrowful
soko
Sorrow, grief, mourning
sokhiyaC Happiness
sogato Belonging to the sugata, Buddhist sogandhikaC
The white lily; one of the high numerals, 10,000,000(to the 13th power), or 1 followed by 91
socati
To mourn
socanaC
Mourning, sorrow
sociko
A tailor soceyyaC Purification, purity soceyyo
A washerman
soG itaC
Blood
soG +
The buttock
soG o skno(1) sno(2) svno(3) and suvno(4) A dog
soG o
Red, crimson
soG

A tavern; an elephant's trunk

soG
iko
A distiller and seller of spirituous liquors
soG
+
and (soG
ik) A natural tank in a rock, a rocky pool
soG
o
An elephant's trunk
soG
o Addicted to drink; intoxicated
soG G aC
see <see>svaG G aC </see>, Gold
sotaC
The ear or organ of hearing
sotaC
and (soto) Stream, flood, torrent sot
A hearer sotpatti
The state of a sotpanna, conversion, sanctification sotpanno
One who has entered the stream, one who has attained the first grade of sanctification, a co
sotthnaC Blessing, prosperity
sotthi
see <see>suvatthi</see>, Health, welfare, blessing, happiness
sotthi
That woman sotthiko
and (sotthiyo) A brahmin sotho Swelling
sodako Containing water
sodariyo

A uterine brother
sodaro
A uterine brother
sodhako
One who cleanses
sodhanaC Cleansing
sodhan+ A broom
sodheti
see <see>sujjhati</see> sonako
The tree calosanthes indica sopakro Useful, helpful
sopacraC Accompanied with civility, deferential sopnaC Stairs, staircase soppaC (soppanaC) Sleep sopho Swelling
sobbhaC
A hole; an excavation containing water, pool, pond sobbhnu
The ascending node sobhaggaC
Auspiciousness, fortune, prosperity sobhañjano
The tree hyperanthera moringa
sobhaG o Shining, resplendent, beautiful, good sobhati
To shine, to be radiant or beautiful sobh
Splendour, radiance, light; beauty somanassaC

Satisfaction, enjoyment, joy somavakko
The tree acacia catechu somavallik
Name of a plant, bkuc+
somo
The moon; soma juice
sommo Beautiful, pleasing soraccaC Tenderness, sympathy sorabbho
A name of Kuvera
sorasa
see <see>so7 asa</see> so7 asa Sixteen
so7 asakaC
A collection of sixteen
so7 asakkhattuC
Sixteen times
so7 asamo Sixteenth
so7 aso Sixteenth
sovaggiko
Connected with the devaloka, tending to heaven sovacassaC and (sovacassat) Meekness
sovaG G iko
Belonging to gold sovaG G o Golden
sovidallo
An attendant on the harem
sov+raC
Sour gruel
sosniko

Visiting a cemetery
soso
Drying up; phthisis sohajjaC Friendship
sohado
A friend
sohiccaC Satiety
sneho
see <see>sineho</see>, Oil; friendship, affection, love; lust, desire symram m haC Siam
svaG G aC
see <see>soG G aC </see>, Gold svappo
Very little or few svassa
So assa svkkhto
Well told or shown or taught svgataC
see <see>sgataC </see>, Welcome, salutation svtano Belonging to tommorrow svno
see <see>soG o</see> sve
see <see>suve</see>, Tommorrow sveva
So eva ha
An emphatic particle
haC siyati
To bristle
haC so
A goose, a swan
hajjo

Dear, beloved, pleasant ham o Seized; carried away
ham m hacitto
Joyful
ham m halomo
Astonished; overjoyed
ham m ho
Bristling; joyful, delighted ham ho
Violence, force, rapine hatattaC Destruction
hatvakso
One who has removed all occasions for good and evil, said of an Arah hato Killed, destroyed; injured, spoilt; removed, put an end to hatthakammaC Manual labour hatthagato
Passed into a person's hands, in his power or possession, secure, certain hatthago
In one's power, in one's possession, secure hatthaE gato
Passed into a person's hands, in his power or possession, secure, certain hatthatalaC
The palm of the hand
hatthapso
The side of the hand, vicinity hatthappatto
Come to hand, received, hatthassaC
Elephants and horses
hatthn+kaC
The elephants of an army, elephant-host hatthroho
One who rides on an elephant, an elephant driver, mahout hatthiko

Carried in the hand hatthinakho
A covered way covering the access to the gate of a town hatthinik
A she-elephant for riding hatthipo
An elephant's keeper or driver
hatthiliE go
A sort of vulture with a bill like an elephant's trunk hatth+
An elephant
hattho
The hand; an elephant's trunk; name of a nakkhatta; a cubit, the measure from the elbow to little finger; a quantity hadayaC
The heart; the mind; the breast hadayago
Going to the heart, vital hadayaE gato Learnt by heart
hadayaE gamo
Going to the heart, touching, affectionate, kind hadaylk
Good-hearted, kind haday+ Benevolent, kind hananaC Killing, destroying; removing hanpeti
To cause to be killed
hanu
The jaw hanuti
To conceal oneself haneti
To cause to be killed
hant
One who strikes or kills

hanti
To strike, to beat; to kill, to murder; to destroy, to put an end to, to remove handa Come! alas!
hambho
Here! sirrah!
hammiyaC
A house
hayn+kaC Cavalry
hayo
A horse
haraG aC
Removal; taking; stealing harati
To carry, to convey, to bring; to carry away, to remove; to take, to seize; to steal, to plunder; offer; to charm harpeti
To cause to be removed hari
Green, yellow, tawny
hari
The colour green or yellow; gold VishG u haricandanaC
 and (haricandano)Yellow sandal wood hariG o
A deer or antelope
haritattaC Yellowness
haritlaC
Yellow orpiment
harito
Green har+tak+
 and (har+tako)Yellow myrobolan hare Here! sirrah! Ab.
haro

Taking, seizing
haro
Shiva
halaC
This is another form of alaC ; halaC dni paksituC , no use to proclaim
halaC
A plough
halahalo
A sort of poison
halidd Turmeric
halidybho
Yellow
havanaC Sacrifice
havi
An oblation, sacrifice; clarified butter
have Indeed, certainly havo
A summons, challenge havyaC
An oblation
hasati
To laugh, to be merry hasanaC Laughter
hasamnako
Laughing, merry hasito
Smiling, laughing, merry
hasso Ridiculous
h Ah! oh! alas!
hm akaC
Gold
htabbo

That ought to be abandoned
hnaC Relinquishing, falling away from hni
Abandonment: loss, diminution, decay, deterioration hpeti
To dismiss, to forego, to forsake; to neglect; to lose; to omit hyati
see <see>jahti</see> hyanaC
Dimunition, decay
hyano
A year
hrako
One who takes hri Handsome
hriG iko
A deer-hunter
hriyo
To be taken, removed, etc.
hr+
Taking, robbing; captivating
hreti
To cause to be carried; to take away, to remove hro
Taking; a pearl necklace hliddo
Yellow
hvako
One who sacrifices
hvo Coquetry, dalliance hso Laughter; mirth, joy
hi
For, because; certainly, indeed; alas!
hiC sati

To hurt, to injure; to kill hiC sanaC Injuring, killing hiC s Hurting, killing
hiC spanaC Injury
hiE gulako Vermilion
hiE guli Vermilion
hitakaro
A benefactor
hito
Fit, suitable; beneficial
hintlo
A sort of palm himav
 and (himavanto)Cold, snowy himcalo
The Himalaya mountain himo
Cold, frost, snow, dew
hiyyo Yesterday
hirañña C
Gold, bullion, treasure hiriottappaC
Shame and fear of sinning
hirimano Modest
hiriveraC
A perfume, andropogon schoenanthus hir+
Shame, modesty; the shame which deters a man from sinning hir+m Modest
hirottappaC

Shame and fear of sinning
hildati
To be glad hildo Pleasure
h+nako
Deprived of. Used at the end of a compound, as a substitute for h+no h+najacco
Of low family, low-caste
h+nappaG +tat
Inferiority and superiority, goodness and badness
h+nas+laC
Keeping the moral precepts imperfectly, or from unworthy motives
h+no
Wasted, decayed; low, bad, inferior; poor, wretched; forsaken; deprived h+yattano
Of yesterday
h+yo Yesterday
h+rah+raC
In the phrase h+rah+raC karoti, to cut to pieces, chop up
h+7 ito
Ashamed huE kro
Making a noise, roaring hutav
That has sacrificed
hutvaho
Fire hutv+
That has sacrificed
hutso
Fire
huto Sacrificed huttaC Sacrifice
huraC

In the other world, in another birth or existence
hurhuraC
In various existences, in successive births hus
A daughter-in-law
hkti
Calling, challenge
hkhuC
Sho! sho! a noise made to frighten away a bird he Oh!
hem m hato
Below, underneath
hem m h
Under, below, low down
hem m himo
Lower, lowest; last hem heti
To injure, to harass heti
A weapon
hetu
Cause; reason, motive; origin; the reason or middle term of an inference
hetu
On account of, by reason of, by means of, for the sake of hetuko
Having a cause; causing, instrumental hetujo
Produced by a cause
hetuppabhavo
Proceeding from a cause, having its origin in a pre-existing cause hetum
Having a cause
hetuso Causally, necessarily hemaC
Gold
hemanto

The cold season, winter
hemo
A sort of elephant
heyyo
To be abandoned
heraññiko
A royal treasurer
hel
Sport, dalliance
heva
Quite, just, even hevaC
"not so," "certainly not"
hesati
To neigh
hes Neighing
hesitaC Neighing
hessati see <see>bhavati</see> hehiti
A fut. from bhavati
hotabbo
see <see>bharitabbo</see> hotabbo
That ought to be offered or sacrificed
hoti
see <see>bhavati</see>, To be; to exist; to become; to take place; to befall; to behave homo
An oblation

ÿþ
C$, (?0M.?$
$ M
  A
C$M
$ M
  A >$
C$M 5M/>*>0@ @ >$ %>
(? M &G5
*>

<!-- vvvv

<!-- vvvv

|| namo tassa bhagavato arahato sammÄ• sambuddhassa ||

paá¹-á¹-hÄ• nuddesa dÄ«panÄ«pÄ• á¹-ha

1. hetupaccayo

katamo \Be 465/ hetupaccayo. lobho hetupaccayo. doso, moho, alobho, adoso, amoho hetu

katame dhammÄ• hetupaccayassa paccayuppannÄ• . lobha sahajÄ• tÄ• cittacetasikÄ• d ca dosasaha jÄ• tÄ• mohasahajÄ• tÄ• alobhasahajÄ• tÄ• adosasaha jÄ• tÄ• amohasaha rÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• dhammÄ• ca hetupaccayato uppannÄ• hetupaccayuppannÄ• dhammÄ•

sahajÄ• tarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• nÄ• ma sahetukapaá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e kammajarÅ«pÄ• ni ca p sahetukacittajarÅ«pÄ• ni ca. tattha paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡o nÄ• ma paá¹-isandhicittassa uppÄ pavattikÄ• lo nÄ• ma paá¹-isandhicittassa á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡ato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya yÄ• va cutikÄ• la kenaá¹-á¹-hena hetu, kenaá¹-á¹-hena paccayoti. mÅ«laá¹-á¹-hena hetu, upakÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-h mÅ«layamake vuttÄ• naá¹ƒ lobhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ mÅ«ladhammÄ• naá¹ƒ mÅ«labhÄ• vo mÅ«laá mÅ«layamakadÄ«paniyaá¹ƒ amhehi rukkhopamÄ• ya dÄ«pitoyeva.

api ca eko puriso ekissaá¹ƒ itthiyaá¹ƒ paá¹-ibaddha citto hoti. so yÄ• va taá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ na jah taá¹ƒ itthiá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha tassa purisassa lobhasahajÄ• tÄ• ni kÄ• yavacÄ«manokammÄ• ni c cittajarÅ«pÄ• ni ca cirakÄ• laá¹ƒpi pavattanti. sabbÄ• ni ca tÄ• ni cittacetasikarÅ«pÄ• ni tass rajjanalobhamÅ«lakÄ• ni honti. so lobho tesaá¹ƒ mÅ«laá¹-á¹-hena hetu ca, upakÄ• rakaá¹-á tasmÄ• hetupaccayo. esa nayo sesÄ• ni rajjanÄ«yavatthÅ«ni Ä• rabbharajjanavasena uppa dussanÄ«yavatthÅ«ni Ä• rabbha dussanavasena uppannesu dosesu, muyhanÄ«yavatthÅ«n uppannesu mohesu ca.

tattha \Be 466/ yathÄ• rukkhassa mÅ«lÄ• ni sayaá¹ƒ antopathaviyaá¹ƒ suá¹-á¹-hu patiá¹-á¹ pathavirasaÃ±ca Ä• porasaÃ±ca gahetvÄ• taá¹ƒ rukkhaá¹ƒ yÄ• va aggÄ• abhiharanti, tena vaá¸• á¸• hamÄ• no tiá¹-á¹-hati. tathÄ• lobho ca tasmiá¹ƒ tasmiá¹ƒ vatthumhi rajjanavasena patiá¹-á¹-hahitvÄ• tassa tassa vatthussa piyarÅ«parasaÃ±ca sÄ• tarÅ«parasaÃ±ca gahetvÄ kÄ• yavacÄ«vÄ«tikkamÄ• abhiharati, kÄ• ya vÄ«tikkamaá¹ƒ vÄ• vacÄ«vÄ«tikkamaá¹ƒ vÄ• dussana vasena appiyarÅ«parasaÃ±ca asÄ• tarÅ«parasaÃ±ca gahetvÄ• , moho ca muyhan niratthakacittÄ• cÄ• rarasaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hetvÄ• ti vattabbaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ abhiharantÄ• tayo dh vatthÅ«su sampayuttadhamme modamÄ• ne pamodamÄ• ne karonto viya cira kÄ• laá¹ƒ pa tathÄ• pavattanti. sampayutta dhammesu ca tathÄ• pavattamÄ• nesu sahajÄ• tarÅ«pakalÄ pavattantiyeva. tattha sampayuttadhamme abhiharatÄ«ti dve piyarÅ«pa sÄ• tarÅ«parase sa santikaá¹ƒ pÄ• petÄ«ti attho.

sukkapakkhe so puriso yadÄ• kÄ• mesu Ä• dÄ«navaá¹ƒ passati, tadÄ• so taá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒjah Ä• rabbha alobho saÃ±jÄ• yati. pubbe yasmiá¹ƒ kÄ• le taá¹ƒ itthiá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha lobhamÅ«la kÄ• yavacÄ«manokammÄ• ni vattanti. idÄ• ni tasmiá¹ƒ kÄ• lepi alobhamÅ«lakÄ• ni suddhÄ vattanti. pabbajita sÄ«lasaá¹ƒvarÄ• ni vÄ• jhÄ• naparikammÄ• ni vÄ• appanÄ• jhÄ• nÄ• n tesaá¹ƒ mÅ«laá¹-á¹-hena hetu ca hoti, upakÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-hena paccayoca. tasmÄ• hetupacc lobha paá¹-ipakkhesu alobhesu, dosapaá¹-ipakkhesu adosesu, moha paá¹-ipakkhesu amoh tattha rukkhamÅ«lÄ• ni viya alobho lobhaneyyavatthÅ«su lobhaá¹ƒ pahÄ• ya lobhavivekasu tena sukhena sampayuttadhamme modamÄ• ne pamodamÄ• ne karonto viya yÄ• va jhÄ• n maggaphalasukhÄ• vÄ• vaá¸• á¸• hÄ• peti. tathÄ• adoso ca dosaneyyavatthÅ«su dosaviv vaá¸• á¸• hetvÄ• , amoho ca mohaneyyavatthÅ«su mohavivekasukharasaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hetv vaá¸• á¸• hÄ• pentÄ• tayo dhammÄ• kusalesu dhammesu sampayuttadhamme modamÄ• kÄ• laá¹ƒpi pavattenti. sampayuttadhammÄ• ca tathÄ• pavattanti. sampayutta dhammesu sahajÄ• tarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• pi tathÄ• pavattantiyeva.

tattha \Be 467/ lobhavivekasukharasanti viviccanaá¹ƒ vigamanaá¹ƒ viveko. lobhassa viveko lobhaviveke sukhaá¹ƒ lobhavivekasukhaá¹ƒ. lobhavivekaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca uppannasukhanti vut lobhavivekasukharasoti samÄ• so. ayaá¹ƒ abhidhamme paá¹-á¹-hÄ• nanayo.

hattantanayo pana avijjÄ• saá¹…khÄ• to moho ca taá¹‡hÄ• saá¹…khÄ• to lobho cÄ• ti dve vaá¹-á¹-adukkhadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ mÅ«lÄ• ni honti. doso pana lobhassa nissandabhÅ«taá¹ƒ vijjÄ• saá¹…khÄ• to amoho ca nikkhamadhÄ• tusaá¹…khÄ• to alobho cÄ• ti dve dhammÄ• honti. adoso pana alobhassa nissandabhÅ«taá¹ƒ kalyÄ• á¹‡amÅ«laá¹ƒ hoti. evaá¹ƒ chabbid sahajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒpi asahajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒpi nÄ• marÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ paccayÄ• hontÄ« hetupaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

2. Ä• rammaá¹‡apaccayo

katamo Ä• rammaá¹‡apaccayo. sabbepi cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• sabbepi rÅ«padhammÄ sabbÄ• pi paÃ±Ã±attiyo Ä• rammaá¹‡a paccayo. na hi so nÄ• ma ekopi dhammo atthi, yo c Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ na hoti. saá¹…khepato pana Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ chabbidhaá¹ƒ hoti rÅ«pÄ• saddÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ gandhÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ rasÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ phoá¹-á¹-habbÄ• ram katame dhammÄ• Ä• rammaá¹‡apaccayassa paccayuppannÄ• . sabbepi citta cetasikÄ• d paccayuppannÄ• . na hi kiÃ±ci cittaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma atthi, yaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ bhÅ«tena vÄ• abhÅ«ten vinÄ• pavattati.

tattha paccuppannaá¹ƒ rÅ«pÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ duvidhassa cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡acittassa Ä paccuppannaá¹ƒ saddÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ duvidhassa sotaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a cittassa. paccuppa duvidhassa ghÄ• naviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡acittassa. paccuppannaá¹ƒ rasÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ duvidhas paccuppannaá¹ƒ tividhaá¹ƒ phoá¹-á¹-habbÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ duvidhassa kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á tÄ• ni paÃ±cÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni tividhassa manodhÄ• tucittassa Ä• rammaá¹‡apaccayo. sab atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gatapaccuppannÄ• ni paÃ±cÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni vÄ• sabbÄ• ni tekÄ• likÄ• ni k vÄ• cha sattatividhÄ• naá¹ƒ manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡acittÄ• naá¹ƒ yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡

kenaá¹-á¹-hena Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, kenaá¹-á¹-hena paccayoti. citta cetasikehi Ä• lambitabb Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, upakÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-hena paccayoti.

Ä• lambitabbaá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti \Be 468/ cettha Ä• lambaá¹‡akiriyÄ• nÄ• ma citta cetasikÄ• n Ä• rammaá¹‡aggahaá¹‡akiriyÄ• , Ä• rammaá¹‡upÄ• dÄ• na kiriyÄ• .

yathÄ• hi loke ayodhÄ• tuá¹ƒ kÄ• meti icchatÄ«ti atthena ayokantako nÄ• ma lohadhÄ• tu ayokhandhasamÄ«paá¹ƒ sampatto taá¹ƒ ayokhandhaá¹ƒ kÄ• mento viya icchanto viya ayo sayaá¹ƒ vÄ• taá¹ƒ ayokhandhaá¹ƒ upagacchati. ayokhandhaá¹ƒ vÄ• attÄ• bhimukhaá¹ƒ Ä tadabhimukho caÃ±calati, taá¹ƒ vÄ• upagacchati. ayaá¹ƒ ayokantakassa Ä• lambaá¹‡akiri cittacetasikÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡esu Ä• lambaá¹‡akiriyÄ• daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• . na kevalaá¹ƒ mattaá¹ƒ hoti. atha kho cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• sattasantÄ• ne uppajjamÄ• nÄ• chasu d Ä• pÄ• tÄ• gamane eva khaá¹‡e khaá¹‡e uppajjanti. uppajjitvÄ• ca khaá¹‡e khaá¹‡e nirujj

yathÄ• taá¹ƒ bheritale bherisaddÄ• uppajjamÄ• nÄ• tattha tattha hatthena paharaá¹‡akÄ uppajjanti, uppajjitvÄ• ca khaá¹‡e khaá¹‡e nirujjhanti. vÄ«á¹‡Ä• saddÄ• uppajjamÄ• nÄ• v tattha vÄ«á¹‡Ä• dantakena paharaá¹‡akÄ• le eva khaá¹‡e khaá¹‡e uppajjanti, uppajjitvÄ• c nirujjhantÄ«ti. niddÄ• yantassa bhavaá¹…gacittappavatti kÄ• lepi pubbabhave maraá¹‡Ä• s Ä• pÄ• ta mÄ• gatÄ• ni kamma kammanimitta gatinimittÄ• ni eva bhavaá¹…gacittÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡apaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

3. adhipatipaccayo

duvidho adhipatipaccayo Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipaccayo saha jÄ• tÄ• dhipatipaccayo ca. t Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipaccayo. Ä• rammaá¹‡apaccaye vuttesu Ä• rammaá¹‡esu yÄ• ni Ä• honti atikantÄ• ni atimanÄ• pÄ• ni garukatÄ• ni. tÄ• ni Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• d atiiá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ«ti sabhÄ• vato iá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni vÄ• hontu aniá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni vÄ• , tena tena pugg Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni idha atiiá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni nÄ• ma.

tÄ• ni pana dhammato dve dosamÅ«lacittuppÄ• de ca dve momÅ«ha cittuppÄ• de ca dukkhasahagatakÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡acittuppÄ• de ca á¹-hapetvÄ• avasesÄ• ni sabbÄ• ni k rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«pa lokuttaracittacetasikÄ• ni ca sabbÄ• ni atiiá¹-á¹-harÅ«pÄ• ni ca honti.

tesupi \Be 469/ kÄ• mÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni garuá¹ƒ karontasseva Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipac Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipaccayo na hoti. jhÄ• nalÄ• bhino pana attanÄ• paá¹-iladdhÄ• ni ma ariyasÄ• vakÄ• ca attanÄ• paá¹-iladdhe lokuttaradhamme garuá¹ƒ akarontÄ• nÄ• ma natt katame dhammÄ• tassa paccayassa paccayuppannÄ• . aá¹-á¹-ha lobha mÅ«lacittÄ• ni aá kÄ• mÄ• vacarakusalacittÄ• ni cattÄ• ri kÄ• mÄ• vacara Ã±Ä• á¹‡asampayuttakiriyacittÄ• n tassa paccayassa paccayuppannÄ• .

tattha lokiyÄ• ni chaá¸·Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni lobhamÅ«lacittÄ• naá¹ƒ paccayo. sattarasa lokiya Ã±Ä• á¹‡avippayutta kusalÄ• naá¹ƒ. tÄ• ni kusalÄ• niceva heá¹-á¹-himamaggaphalÄ• ni ca Ã±Ä• á¹‡asampayuttakusalÄ• naá¹ƒ. arahattamaggaphalÄ• ni ca nibbÄ• naÃ±ca catunnaá¹ Ã±Ä• á¹‡asampayuttakiriyÄ• naá¹ƒ. nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hannaá¹ƒ lokuttara cittÄ• nanti.

kenaá¹-á¹-hena Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, kenaá¹-á¹-hena adhipati. Ä• lambi tabbaá¹-á¹-hena Ä• r Ä• dhipaccaá¹-á¹-hena adhipati. ko Ä• dhipaccaá¹-á¹-ho. attÄ• naá¹ƒ garuá¹ƒ katvÄ• pavatt issarabhÄ• vo Ä• dhipaccaá¹-á¹-ho. loke sÄ• mikÄ• viya Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipaccaya dh viya paccayuppannadhammÄ• daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• .

sutasomajÄ• take rÄ• jÄ• porisÄ• do manussamaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ garuá¹ƒ karonto manussamaá¹ araÃ±Ã±e vicarati. tattha manussamaá¹ƒse gandharasa dhammÄ• Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipati lobhamÅ«lacittaá¹ƒ paccayuppannadhammo. rÄ• jÄ• suta somo saccadhammaá¹ƒ garuá¹ƒ rajjasampattiÃ±ca Ã±Ä• ti saá¹…ghaÃ±ca attano jÄ«vitaÃ±ca chaá¹-á¹-etvÄ• puna raÃ±Ã±c upagato. tattha saccadhammo Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipaccayo. raÃ±Ã±o sutasomassa kusa paccayuppannadhammo. esanayo sabbesu garukatesu Ä• rammaá¹‡esu.

katamo sahajÄ• tÄ• dhipatipaccayo. adhipatibhÄ• vaá¹ƒ pattÄ• cattÄ• ro dhammÄ• adhip vÄ«riyaá¹ƒ vÄ«maá¹ƒsÄ• .

katame dhammÄ• tassa paccayassa paccayuppannÄ• . adhipati sampayuttÄ• cittacetasik adhipatisamuá¹-á¹-hitÄ• cittajarÅ«padhammÄ• ca tassa paccayassa paccayuppannÄ• .

kenaá¹-á¹-hena sahajÄ• to, kenaá¹-á¹-hena adhipati.

sahuppÄ• danaá¹-á¹-hena sahajÄ• to, sahajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ abhibhavanaá¹-á sahuppÄ• danaá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti \Be 470/ yo dhammo sayaá¹ƒ uppajjamÄ• no attanÄ• sahajÄ uppÄ• deti, tassa attanÄ• sahajÄ• tadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ sahuppÄ• danaá¹-á¹-hena.

abhibhavanaá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti ajjhottharaá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hena. yathÄ• rÄ• jÄ• cakkavatti attano pu sakaladÄ«pavÄ• sino abhibhavanto ajjhottharanto attano vase vattÄ• peti, sakaladÄ«pavÄ• vattanti. tathÄ• adhipatiá¹-á¹-hÄ• napattÄ• ime cattÄ• ro dhammÄ• attano attano visaye s abhibhavantÄ• ajjhottharantÄ• attano vase vattÄ• penti, sahajÄ• tadhammÄ• ca tesaá¹ƒ silÄ• thambhe pathavidhÄ• tu udakakkhandhe Ä• podhÄ• tu aggikkhandhe tejodhÄ• tu vÄ• sahajÄ• tÄ• tisso dhÄ• tuyo abhibhavantÄ• ajjhottharantÄ• attano gatiá¹ƒ gamÄ• penti, s tÄ• saá¹ƒ gatiá¹ƒ gacchanti, evameva adhipatiá¹-á¹-hÄ• napattÄ• ime cattÄ• ro dhammÄ• sahajÄ• tadhamme attano gatiá¹ƒ gamÄ• penti, sahajÄ• tadhammÄ• ca tesaá¹ƒ gatiá¹ƒ ga sahajÄ• tadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ abhibhavanaá¹-á¹-hena.

ettha vadeyyuá¹ƒ, yadi sahajÄ• tadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ abhibhavanaá¹-á¹-hena adhipatinÄ• ma tiá¹-á¹-hatu chando, lobho eva adhipatinÄ• ma siyÄ• , so hi chandatopi balavataro hutvÄ• s abhibhavanto pavattatÄ«ti. vuccate, bÄ• laputhujjanesu eva lobho chandato balavataro hoti chando eva lobhato balavataro hutvÄ• sahajÄ• tadhamme abhi bhavanto pavattati. sace hi balavataro siyÄ• , kathaá¹ƒ ime sattÄ• lobhassa hatthagatÄ• bhavasampatti bhogasamma nekkhammadhamme pÅ«retvÄ• vaá¹-á¹-adukkhato nissareyyuá¹ƒ. yasmÄ• pana chando e tasmÄ• ime sattÄ• lobhassa hatthagatÄ• bhavasampatti bhogasampattiyo chaá¹-á¹-etvÄ• vaá¹-á¹-adukkhato nissaranti. tasmÄ• chando eva lobhato balavataro hoti, chando eva adhi nayo dosÄ• dÄ«supÄ«ti.

tattha loke mahantesu sudukkaresu purisakammesu paccupaá¹-á¹-hitesu ime cattÄ• ro dha saá¹ƒvattanti. kathaá¹ƒ.

hÄ«nacchandÄ• bahujjanÄ• mahantÄ• ni sudukkarÄ• ni purisakammÄ• ni disvÄ• nivatta icchanti, amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ avisayoti nirapekkhÄ• á¹-hapenti. chandÄ• dhiko pana tÄ• disÄ• ni p uggatacchando hoti, ativiya \Be 471/ kÄ• tuá¹ƒ icchati, mama visayo esoti adhiá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá chandena abhikaá¸• á¸• hito yÄ• va taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ na sijjhati, tÄ• va antarÄ• taá¹ƒ kamm sakkoti. evaÃ±ca sati atimahantaá¹ƒpi taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ ekasmiá¹ƒ kÄ• le siddhaá¹ƒ bhaviss

hÄ«navÄ«riyÄ• ca bahujjanÄ• tÄ• disÄ• ni kammÄ• ni disvÄ• nivatta vÄ«riyÄ• honti, idaá bahuá¹ƒ kÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ vÄ• cetodukkhaá¹ƒ vÄ• bhavissatÄ«ti nivattanti. vÄ«riyÄ• dhiko purisakammÄ• ni disvÄ• uggatavÄ«riyo hoti, idÄ• neva uá¹-á¹-hahitvÄ• kÄ• tuá¹ƒ icchati. s kammaá¹ƒ karonto bahuá¹ƒ kÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ vÄ• cetodukkhaá¹ƒ vÄ• anubhavantopi tasm nanibbindati, mahantena kammavÄ«riyena vinÄ• bhavituá¹ƒ na sakkoti, tÄ• disena vÄ«riye cittasukhaá¹ƒ vindati. evaÃ±ca sati atimahantaá¹ƒpi taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ ekasmiá¹ƒ kÄ• le siddh hÄ«nacittÄ• ca bahujjanÄ• tÄ• disÄ• ni kammÄ• ni disvÄ• nivattacittÄ• honti. puna Ä• ra cittÄ• dhiko pana tÄ• disÄ• ni kammÄ• ni disvÄ• uggatacitto hoti, cittaá¹ƒ vinodetuá¹ƒpi na tattha nibandhacitto hoti. so cittavasiko hutvÄ• cirakÄ• laá¹ƒpi taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ karonto bah kÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒvÄ• pÄ«tiÄ• dinÄ• chandÄ• dhipatinayena vattabbaá¹ƒ.

mandapaÃ±Ã±Ä• ca bahujjanÄ• tÄ• disÄ• ni kammÄ• ni disvÄ• nivattapaÃ±Ã±Ä• honti, passanti, antapi na passanti, andhakÄ• re pavisantÄ• viya honti, tÄ• ni kammÄ• ni kÄ• tuá¹ paÃ±Ã±Ä• dhiko pana tÄ• disÄ• ni kammÄ• ni disvÄ• uggatapaÃ±Ã±o hoti, kammÄ• naá¹ƒ passati, phalaá¹ƒpi passati, Ä• nisaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒpi passati. sukhena kammasiddhiyÄ• nÄ• nÄ• cirakÄ• laá¹ƒpi taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ karontotiÄ• dinÄ• vÄ«riyÄ• dhipatinayena vattabbaá¹ƒ. idh kammavÄ«maá¹ƒsÄ• yÄ• ti ca tÄ• disiyÄ• kamma vÄ«maá¹ƒsÄ• yÄ• ti ca vattabbaá¹ƒ.

evaá¹ƒ loke mahantesu sudukkaresu purisakammesu paccupaá¹-á¹-hitesu ime cattÄ• ro dh saá¹ƒvattanti. imesaÃ±ca catunnaá¹ƒ adhipatÄ«naá¹ƒ vijjamÄ• nattÄ• loke purisavisesÄ• n sabbaÃ±Ã±ubuddhÄ• nÄ• ma dissanti, sabbaÃ±Ã±ubodhisattÄ• nÄ• ma dissanti, pacceka paccekabodhisattÄ• nÄ• ma dissanti, aggasÄ• vakÄ• nÄ• ma mahÄ• sÄ• vakÄ• nÄ• ma sÄ lokepi evarÅ«pÄ• naá¹ƒ purisavisesÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena satta lokassa atthÄ• ya hitÄ• ya sukhÄ ca paribhogavatthuvisesÄ• ca dissantÄ«ti. adhipatipaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

4. anantarapaccayo

katamo \Be 472/ anantarapaccayo. anantare khaá¹‡e niruddho citta cetasikadhammasamÅ

katamo dhammo anantarapaccayassa paccayuppanno. pacchime anantare eva khaá¹‡e up cittacetasikadhammasamÅ«ho tassa paccayassa paccayuppanno.

ekasmiá¹ƒ bhave paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamabhavaá¹…gacittassa anantara paccayo, p bhavaá¹…gacittaá¹ƒ dutiyabhavaá¹…gacittassa anantarapaccayotiÄ• dinÄ• vattabbo.

yadÄ• pana dhammayamake suddhÄ• vÄ• sÄ• naá¹ƒ dutiye akusale citte vattamÄ• neti vu attano abhinavaá¹ƒ attabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha etaá¹ƒ mama esohamasmi eso me attÄ• ti pa taá¹‡hÄ• sahagatacittaá¹ƒ uppajjati. tadÄ• paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ dvikkhattuá¹ƒ bhavaá¹…gaá¹ƒ ca manodvÄ• rÄ• vajjanacittaá¹ƒ uppajjati. tato satta bhavanikantikajavanÄ• ni uppajjanti. tato bhavaá¹…gavÄ• ro.

api ca so satto tadÄ• paccuppannabhave kiÃ±ci na jÄ• nÄ• ti, pubbabhave attanÄ• anubh anussaramÄ• no acchati. vatthussa pana atidubbalattÄ• taÃ±ca Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ apariby

Ä• rabbha uddhaccasahagatacittameva bahulaá¹ƒ pavattati.

yadÄ• gabbho thokaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hamÄ• no hoti atirekadvemÄ• saá¹ƒ gato, tadÄ• cakkhÄ paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• ni honti. evaá¹ƒ santepi mÄ• tugabbhe Ä• lokÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ paccayÄ• naá¹ƒ cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• dÄ«ni cattÄ• ri viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• ni nuppajjanti, kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a uppajjanti. so satto mÄ• tuyÄ• iriyÄ• pathaparivattanÄ• dÄ«su bahÅ«ni dukkhadomanassÄ vijÄ• yanakÄ• le pana bhusaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ nigacchatiyeva. vijÄ• yitvÄ• pi yÄ• va vatthurÅ«
paripÄ• kaá¹ƒ na gacchanti, tÄ• va so atimandarÅ«po uttÄ• naseyyako hutvÄ• acchati. na Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ sallakkheti. yebhuyyena purima bhavÄ• nusÄ• rÄ« eva tassa viÃ±Ã±Ä• á bhavato Ä• gato hoti, so virÅ«pamukhabahulo hoti. purimÄ• ni nirayÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni Ä• ra virÅ«pamukhamassa paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati. atha devalokato Ä• gato hoti, dibbÄ• ni Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä vippasannamukhabahulo hoti, khaá¹‡e khaá¹‡e mihitamukhamassa paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati.

yadÄ• pana vatthurÅ«pÄ• ni tikkhÄ• ni honti, paripÄ• kaá¹ƒ gacchanti. viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• ni pavattanti. tadÄ• amandarÅ«po hutvÄ• kÄ«á¸·anto lÄ«á¸·anto modanto \Be 473/ pamodan Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni sallakkheti. mÄ• tubhÄ• saá¹ƒ sallakkheti. idha lokÄ• nusÄ• rÄ« viÃ±Ã±Ä pavattati. purimajÄ• tiá¹ƒ pamussati.

kiá¹ƒ pana sabbopi satto imasmiá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• ne eva purimaá¹ƒ jÄ• tiá¹ƒ pamussatÄ«ti ce. na imasmiá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• ne eva pamussati. koci atirekataraá¹ƒ gambhavÄ• sadukkhena paripÄ«á¸ koci vijÄ• yanakÄ• le, koci imasmiá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• ne pamussati. koci itoparampi daharakÄ• le na vuá¸• á¸• hakÄ• le eva pamussati. koci yÄ• vajÄ«vaá¹ƒpi na pamussati. dve tayo bhave anu jÄ• tissarasattÄ• nÄ• ma honti.

tattha vijÄ• yanakÄ• lato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya chadvÄ• rikavÄ«thicittÄ• ni pavattanti. paccuppann sallakkhaá¹‡ato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya chadvÄ• rikavÄ«thi cittÄ• ni paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• ni pavattanti. sa purimaá¹ƒ anantare niruddhaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ pacchimassa pacchimassa anantare uppannassa hoti. ayaÃ±ca anantarapaccayo nÄ• ma anamatagge saá¹ƒsÄ• re ekassa sattassa ekappab arahatta maggaá¹ƒ labhitvÄ• khandhaparinibbÄ• naá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• ti, tadÄ• eva so paba kenaá¹-á¹-hena anantaro, kenaá¹-á¹-hena paccayoti. attano anantare attasadisassa dhamm uppÄ• danaá¹-á¹-hena anantaro, upakÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-hena paccayo. tattha attasadisassÄ• ti s attanÄ• sadisassa. sÄ• rammaá¹‡abhÄ• venÄ• ti ca yo dhammo Ä• rammaá¹‡ena vinÄ• n nÄ• ma, evaá¹ƒ sÄ• rammaá¹‡abhÄ• vena. dhammantarassa uppÄ• danaá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti pur cintanakiriyÄ• vego na vÅ«pasammati, pacchimaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ uppÄ• detvÄ• eva vÅ«pasam dhammantarassa uppÄ• danaá¹-á¹-hena.

tattha purimÄ• purimÄ• mÄ• tuparamparÄ• viya anantarapaccayaparamparÄ• daá¹-á¹-ha

dhÄ«tuparamparÄ• viya tassa paccayuppannaparamparÄ• daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• . evaá¹ƒ sante sabbapacchimaá¹ƒ parinibbÄ• nacittampi puna paá¹-isandhicittasaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ dhammar uppÄ• deyya. kasmÄ• , tadÄ• kammakilesavegÄ• naá¹ƒ sabbaso paá¹-ippassaddhibhÄ• ve cittassÄ• ti. anantarapaccaya dÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

5. samanantarapaccayo

paccayadhammavibhÄ• go \Be 474/ ca paccayuppannadhammavibhÄ• go ca anantapacca

kenaá¹-á¹-hena samanantaroti. suá¹-á¹-hu anantaraá¹-á¹-hena samanantaro. yathÄ• silÄ• t rÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• ekÄ• baddhÄ• samÄ• nÄ• pi rÅ«pa dhammabhÄ• vena saá¹‡á¹-hÄ• na jÄ paricchedarÅ«pasahitÄ• eva honti. dvinnaá¹ƒ rÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ majjhe antaraá¹ƒ nÄ• atthiyeva. na tathÄ• purimapacchimÄ• naá¹ƒ dvinnaá¹ƒ cittacetasika kalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ majjh arÅ«padhammabhÄ• vena asaá¹‡á¹-hÄ• na jÄ• tikattÄ• majjhe paricchedadhammassa nÄ• abhÄ• vato sabbaso antara rahitÄ• eva honti. lokassapi dvinnaá¹ƒ kalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ antaraá ime sattÄ• cittaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma niccaá¹ƒ dhuvaá¹ƒ thÄ• varaá¹ƒ avipariá¹‡Ä• madhammanti eva honti. evaá¹ƒ suá¹-á¹-hu anantaraá¹-á¹-hena samanantaro. anantaraá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti ca attano attasadisassa dhammantarassa uppÄ• danaá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti pubbe vuttameva.

evaá¹ƒ sante nirodhasamÄ• pattikÄ• le purimacittaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma neva saÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• saÃ±Ã± pacchimacittaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma ariyaphalacittaá¹ƒ, dvinnaá¹ƒ cittÄ• naá¹ƒ antare ekarattidivampi c sattarattidivÄ• nipi acittako hoti. asaÃ±Ã±asattabhÅ«miyaá¹ƒpi purime kÄ• mabhave cuticitt nÄ• ma. pacchime kÄ• mabhave paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ pacchimacittaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma, dvinnaá¹ƒ c asaÃ±Ã±asattabhave paÃ±cakappasatÄ• ni puggalo acittako tiá¹-á¹-hati. tattha dve purimac attasadisassa dhammantarassa uppÄ• danapaccayasattirahitÄ• ni hontÄ«ti. na honti. maha bhÄ• vanÄ• paá¹‡idhibalehi paá¹-ibÄ• hitattÄ• purimacittÄ• ni ca nirujjhamÄ• nÄ• ni ananta uppÄ• dana sattisahitÄ• ni eva nirujjhanti. pacchimacittÄ• ni ca uppajjamÄ• nÄ• ni tasmiá¹ƒ ekÄ• baddhabhÄ• vena anuppajjitvÄ• cirakÄ• le eva uppajjanti. na ca ettakamattena purima dhammantarassa uppÄ• dana sattinÄ• ma natthÄ«ti ca, te anantarapaccayadhammÄ• nÄ• vattuá¹ƒ. yathÄ• taá¹ƒ raÃ±Ã±o yodhÄ• nÄ• ma atthi, kadÄ• ci rÄ• jÄ• kÄ• laá¹ƒ Ã±atvÄ• yuddhakÄ• lo na hoti, asukasmiá¹ƒ kÄ• le eva yujjhathÄ• ti vadeyya. te ca tadÄ• ayujjhamÄ evaá¹ƒ santepi tesaá¹ƒ yujjhanasatti nÄ• ma natthÄ«ti ca, te yodhÄ• nÄ• ma na hontÄ«ti ca ettha vadeyyuá¹ƒ, imasmiá¹ƒ paccaye te pana arÅ«padhammabhÄ• vena asaá¹‡á¹-hÄ• na majjhepariccheda dhammassa nÄ• ma kassaci abhÄ• vato sabbaso antararahitÄ• \Be 475/sante pubbe Ä• rammaá¹‡a paccaye bherisaddavÄ«á¹‡Ä• saddopamÄ• hi yo cittÄ• naá¹ƒ k nirodho ca vutto, so amhehi kathaá¹ƒ paccetabboti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aviruddhÄ• naá¹ƒ nÄ• n khaá¹‡amattepi pubbÄ• para parivattanassa loke paÃ±Ã±Ä• yanato. ayamattho pubbe citta vitthÄ• rato vuttoyevÄ• ti. samanantarapaccaya dÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

6. sahajÄ• tapaccayo

paccayadhammavibhÄ• go ca paccayuppannadhammavibhÄ• goca vuccati. ekato uppannÄ aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ sahajÄ• ta paccayÄ• ca honti sahajÄ• tapaccayuppannÄ• ca. paá¹-is paá¹-isandhisahajÄ• taá¹ƒ hadayavatthu ca aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ sahajÄ• tapaccayÄ• ca h
ca. sabbÄ• ni mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• nipi aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ sahajÄ• tapaccayÄ• ca honti pacc paá¹-isandhicittassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e sabbÄ• ni kammajarÅ«pÄ• ni ca pavattikÄ• le tassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e tena tena cittena jÄ• tÄ• ni sabbÄ• ni cittajarÅ«pÄ• ni ca sahajÄ• tacittas nÄ• ma. sabbÄ• ni upÄ• dÄ• rÅ«pÄ• ni sahajÄ• tamahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ƒ paccayuppannÄ• kenaá¹-á¹-hena sahajÄ• to, kenaá¹-á¹-hena paccayo. saha jÄ• nanaá¹-á¹-hena sahajÄ• to, paccayo. tattha sahajÄ• nanaá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti yo dhammo jÄ• yamÄ• no attano paccayuppann jÄ• yati uppajjati, attano paccayuppanne ca dhamme attanÄ• saheva janeti uppÄ• deti, tass sahajÄ• nanaá¹-á¹-ho nÄ• ma.

yathÄ• sÅ«riyo nÄ• ma udayanto sÅ«riyÄ• tape ca sÅ«riyÄ• loke ca attanÄ• saheva jana padÄ«po nÄ• ma jalanto padÄ«pÄ• tape ca padÄ«pÄ• loke ca attanÄ• saheva janayanto ja paccayadhammo uppajjamÄ• no attano paccayuppannadhamme attanÄ• saheva uppÄ• de nÄ• ma dhammo, sÅ«riyÄ• tapÄ• viya taá¹ƒsampayuttadhammÄ• , sÅ«riyÄ• lokÄ• viya sa sÅ«riyo viya ekameko mahÄ• bhÅ«tarÅ«padhammo, sÅ«riyÄ• tapÄ• viya sahajÄ• tamahÄ•
viya sahajÄ• taupÄ• dÄ• rÅ«padhammÄ• , esa nayo padÄ«pupamÄ• yapÄ«ti. sahajÄ• tapa

7. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±apaccayo

sahajÄ• tapaccaye \Be 476/ vibhattesu dhammesu yo yo paccaya dhammoti vutto, so so ev paccayuppanna dhammo ca hoti. sabbepi cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa p aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa paccayuppannadhammÄ• . sahajÄ• tÄ• cattÄ• ro mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• aÃ honti aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa paccayuppannadhammÄ• ca. paá¹-isandhinÄ• makkhandhÄ• c hadayavatthurÅ«paÃ±ca aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa paccayadhammÄ• ca honti aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã± suviÃ±Ã±eyyoyeva.

yathÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya ussÄ• pitÄ• tayo daá¹‡á¸• Ä• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±ass
aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ nissitÄ• ca. tesu ekamekasmiá¹ƒ ussite sabbe ussitÄ• honti, ekamek patanti. evaá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±adhammÄ• ca daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• .

ettha vadeyyuá¹ƒ, sabbe cetasikÄ• dhammÄ• cittapaccayaá¹ƒ alabha mÄ• nÄ• uppajjituá

kasmÄ• . phusanÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ cetasika kiccÄ• naá¹ƒ vijÄ• nanakiccapubbaá¹…gamattÄ• , n cittaá¹ƒ pana cetasikapaccayaá¹ƒ alabhamÄ• naá¹ƒ uppajjituá¹ƒ na sakkotÄ«ti na yujjeyyÄ• cetasikadhammÄ• nÄ• ma cittassa sahÄ• yaá¹…gÄ• ni honti. tasmÄ• tehi vinÄ• cittampi u eseva nayo catÅ«su mahÄ• bhÅ«tesupÄ«ti. upÄ• dÄ• rÅ«pÄ• ni pana mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ sahÄ• yaá¹…gÄ• ni na hontÄ«ti. nanu Ä• hÄ• rarÅ«paÃ±ca jÄ«vitarÅ«paÃ±ca paccayavises vuccate, á¹-hitiyÄ• eva sahÄ• yaá¹…gaá¹ƒ hoti. na uppÄ• de. idha pana uppÄ• de sahÄ• ya aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±apaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

8. nissayapaccayo

tividho nissayapaccayo, sahajÄ• tanissayo vatthu purejÄ• tanissayo vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apur

tattha katamo sahajÄ• tanissayo. sabbo sahajÄ• ta paccayo sahajÄ• tanissayo. tasmÄ• tat paccayuppannavibhÄ• go ca sahajÄ• tapaccaye vuttanayena veditabbo.

katamo pana vatthupurejÄ• tanissayo. cha vatthÅ«ni cakkhu vatthu sotavatthu ghÄ• navatth kÄ• yavatthu hadayavatthu. imÄ• ni chavatthÅ«ni pavattikÄ• le sattÄ• naá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a jÄ• tanissayo.

vatthurÅ«pameva \Be 477/ purejÄ• taá¹ƒ hutvÄ• nissayo vatthupurejÄ• ta nissayo. tattha c nissayaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹-á¹-hena vatthu nÄ• ma. purejÄ• tanti attano attano paccayuppannass uppattikkhaá¹‡ato purime khaá¹‡e jÄ• taá¹ƒ.

tattha paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ tadÄ• purejÄ• tassa vatthurÅ«passa abhÄ• vato attanÄ• sahup hadayavatthurÅ«paá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya uppajjati. paá¹-hama bhavaá¹…gacittaá¹ƒ pana paá¹-isand sahuppannahadaya vatthurÅ«paá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya uppajjati. dutiyabhavaá¹…gacittaá¹ƒ paá¹-ha sahuppannaá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya uppajjati. evaá¹ƒ tatiyabhavaá¹…gacittaá¹ƒ dutiya bhavaá¹…gaci sahuppannantiÄ• dinÄ• yÄ• vamaraá¹‡Ä• sannakÄ• lÄ• dvinnaá¹ƒ manodhÄ• tumanoviÃ± vatthupurejÄ• tanissayo veditabbo.

yathÄ• vÄ«á¹‡Ä• saddÄ• nÄ• ma vÄ«á¹‡Ä• tantÄ«su vÄ«á¹‡Ä• daá¹‡á¸• akehi paharaá¹‡
aÃ±Ã±athÄ• . tathÄ• paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• ni nÄ• ma paÃ±cavatthusaá¹…khÄ• tesu paÃ Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ Ä• pÄ• tÄ• gamanavegena eva jÄ• yanti, no aÃ±Ã±athÄ• .

Ä• pÄ• tÄ• gamanaÃ±ca tesaá¹ƒ dvÄ• rÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ á¹-hitipattakÄ• le eva hoti. Ä dvikkhattuá¹ƒ bhavaá¹…gaá¹ƒ calati. bhavaá¹…gacalana paccayÄ• ca Ä• vajjanaá¹ƒ uppaj tÄ• ni paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• ni uppajjanti. tasmÄ• cakkhÄ• dÄ«ni paÃ±cavatthÅ«ni pure a uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e uppannÄ• ni eva paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ vatthupurejÄ• tap

maraá¹‡Ä• sannakÄ• le pana sabbÄ• ni cha vatthÅ«ni cuticittato pure sattarasamassa bhav uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e eva uppajjanti, tato paraá¹ƒ na uppajjanti. tasmÄ• maraá¹‡Ä• sannakÄ• sabbÄ• ni chadvÄ• rikavÄ«thicittÄ• ni ca cuticittaÃ±ca puretaraá¹ƒ uppannÄ• ni tÄ• niyeva a nissÄ• ya uppajjanti. ayaá¹ƒ vatthupurejÄ• ta nissayo.

katamo pana vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tanissayo. yadÄ• attano ajjhattaá¹ƒ vatthurÅ«paá nissÄ• ya mama manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ vattati, etaá¹ƒ mama eso hamasmi eso me attÄ• ti diá¹-á¹-hÄ«hi gahaá¹‡avasena vÄ• etaá¹ƒ aniccaá¹ƒ etaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ etaá¹ƒ anattÄ• ti eva Ä• vajjanÄ• dÄ«ni manodvÄ• rikavÄ«thi cittÄ• ni pavattanti. tadÄ• taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vatthurÅ«paá nissayavatthu ca hoti tesaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aÃ±ca. tasmÄ• taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ hadayarÅ«paá¹ƒ tas vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tapaccayo hoti. ayaá¹ƒ vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡a purejÄ• tanissayo. e hoti.

idha \Be 478/ suttantanissayopi vattabbo. ime manussÄ• vÄ• tiracchÄ• nagatÄ• vÄ• rukk mahÄ• pathaviyaá¹ƒ patiá¹-á¹-hitÄ• , mahÄ• pathavÄ« ca heá¹-á¹-hÄ• mahÄ• udakakkhan heá¹-á¹-hÄ• mahÄ• vÄ• takkhandhe, mahÄ• vÄ• takkhandho ca heá¹-á¹-hÄ• ajaá¹-Ä• kÄ• vihÄ• resu, devÄ• dibbavimÄ• nesÅ«tiÄ• dinÄ• sabbaá¹ƒ lokappavattiá¹ƒ Ã±atvÄ• nissaya nissayapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

9. upanissayapaccayo

tividho upanissayapaccayo, Ä• rammaá¹‡Å«panissayo anantarÅ«panissayo pakatÅ«paniss nissayo Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipaccayasadiso, anantarÅ«panissayo anantarapaccayasadis

katamo pakatÅ«panissayo. sabbepi atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gata paccuppannÄ• ajjhattabahiddhÄ• bh cittacetasikarÅ«padhammÄ• ca nibbÄ• naÃ±ca paÃ±Ã±atti ca sabbesaá¹ƒ paccuppannÄ• n dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ pakatÅ«panissayo.

tattha atÄ«to parinibbuto amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ buddho ca dhammo ca ariyasÄ• vakasaá¹…gho ca
amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ pacchima janÄ• naá¹ƒ kusaluppattiyÄ• pakatÅ«panissayapaccayo. tathÄ• lo mÄ• tÄ• pitaro ca Ä• cariyÄ• ca paá¹‡á¸• itasamaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• ca pÄ• kaá¹-Ä• nÄ• mahÄ• nubhÄ• vÄ• porÄ• á¹‡akarÄ• jÄ• no ca pacchimakÄ• naá¹ƒ janÄ• naá¹ƒ kusaluppat sukhadukkhuppattiyÄ• vÄ• pakatÅ«panissayo. tathÄ• hi te pacchimakÄ• naá¹ƒ janÄ• naá nÄ• nÄ• saddhammapaÃ±Ã±attiyo vÄ• nÄ• nÄ• asaddhammapaÃ±Ã±attiyo vÄ• nÄ• nÄ• l paá¹-á¹-hapesuá¹ƒ. pacchimajanÄ• ca tehi paá¹-á¹-hapitesu dÄ• nasÄ«lÄ• didhammesu vÄ kulagottacÄ• ritta dhammesu vÄ• nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hivÄ• desu vÄ• nÄ• nÄ• kammÄ• yatana yathÄ• paá¹-á¹-hapitesu gÄ• manigamanagarakhettavatthu taá¸·Ä• kapokkharaá¹‡iÄ• vÄ• á geharathasakaá¹-anÄ• vÄ• sampotasambandhÄ• dÄ«su vÄ• jÄ• tarÅ«parajatamaá¹‡imutt paá¹-ipajjantÄ• loke vaá¸• á¸• hanti.

anÄ• gatopi metteyyo nÄ• ma buddho ca tassa saá¹…gho ca etarahi bah pÄ• ramipuÃ±Ã±appavattiyÄ• pakatÅ«panissayapaccayo. tathÄ• imasmiá¹ƒ bhave ca pac paá¹-ilabhissamÄ• nÄ• issariyaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nadhanadhaÃ±Ã±asampattiyo purime kÄ• le á¹-hi nÄ• nÄ• bhisaá¹…khÄ• ruppattiyÄ• pakatÅ«panissaya paccayo. anÄ• gatabhave ca anubh sampattiyo \Be 479/ maggaphalanibbÄ• nasampattiyo ca etarahi paccuppannabhave á¹-hitÄ dÄ• nasÄ«lÄ• dipuÃ±Ã±akiriyuppattiyÄ• pakatÅ«panissayapaccayo. yathÄ• hi loke heman labhissÄ• mÄ• ti vassike kÄ• le kassanavappanakammÄ• ni Ä• rabhanti, kamme siddhe taá labhissÄ• mÄ• ti pubbabhÄ• ge taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vÄ«riyakammaá¹ƒ vÄ• taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• k dhaÃ±Ã±apphalappaá¹-ilÄ• bho ca taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ dhanappaá¹-i lÄ• bhoca taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ kammÄ• anÄ• gatapakatÅ«panissayapaccayo taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ kammÄ• rambho ca dhaÃ±Ã±apphalappaá dhanappaá¹-i lÄ• bhassa ca atÄ«tapakatÅ«panissayapaccayo. evameva pacchime anÄ• ga sampassantÄ• patthayantÄ• mahÄ• janÄ• purime paccuppanne kÄ• le nÄ• nÄ• puÃ±Ã±a puÃ±Ã±apphalÄ• ni puÃ±Ã±akammÄ• naá¹ƒ anÄ• gatapakatÅ«panissayapaccayo. puÃ±Ã± atÄ«tapakatÅ«panissayapaccayo. tasmÄ• anÄ• gatapakatÅ«panissayopi atÄ«tapakatÅ«pa paccayo hoti.

paccuppannÄ• buddhÄ• yo paccayÄ• paccuppannÄ• naá¹ƒ manussadevabrahmÄ• naá¹ƒ paccuppannÄ• naá¹ƒ puttadhÄ«tÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ paccuppannapakatÅ«pa nissayo nÄ• ma. so ajjhattabhÅ«tÄ• pakatÅ«panissayadhammÄ• nÄ• ma buddhÄ• dÄ«su saviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aka paccayadhammÄ• . bahiddhÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• pakatÅ«panissayadhammÄ• nÄ• ma sattÄ• naá¹ƒ pathavipabbatanadÄ« samuddÄ• dayo tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ sattÄ• naá¹ƒ bahÅ«pakÄ• rÄ• araÃ tiá¹‡apubbaá¹‡á¹‡Ä• paraá¹‡á¹‡Ä• dayo candasÅ«riyagahanakkhattÄ• dayo vassodakaagg sabbepi te sattÄ• naá¹ƒ kusaluppattiyÄ• vÄ• akusaluppattiyÄ• vÄ• sukhuppattiyÄ• vÄ• d balavapaccayÄ• honti.

ime janÄ• diá¹-á¹-heva dhamme parinibbÄ• yissÄ• mÄ• ti bodhipakkhiya dhamme vÄ• bhÄ parinibbÄ• yissÄ• mÄ• ti pÄ• ramÄ«dhamme vÄ• paripÅ«renti. tattha nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ balavapaccayo hoti.

loke nÄ• nÄ• vohÄ• rabhÅ«tÄ• nÄ• mapaÃ±Ã±attiyo ca buddha sÄ• sane tipiá¹-akapariyat nÄ• mapaÃ±Ã±attiyo ca tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ atthÄ• naá¹ƒ jÄ• nanatthÄ• ya balavapaccayo.

tattha saá¹…khatadhammÄ• nÄ• ma paccaye sati uppajjanti, asati nuppajjanti. uppajjitvÄ• tiá¹-á¹-hanti, asati na tiá¹-á¹-hanti. tasmÄ• tesaá¹ƒ uppattiyÄ• vÄ• á¹-hitiyÄ• vÄ• paccayo nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ pana paÃ±Ã±atti ca asaá¹…khatadhammÄ• honti \Be 480/ ajÄ• tidhammÄ• a dhuvadhammÄ• . tasmÄ• tesaá¹ƒ uppÄ• dÄ• ya vÄ• á¹-hitiyÄ• vÄ• paccayo nÄ• ma natth

kusalo kusalassa upanissayo. saddhaá¹ƒ upanissÄ• ya dÄ• naá¹ƒ deti, sÄ«laá¹ƒ samÄ• diy tathÄ• rÄ• gaá¹ƒ upanissÄ• ya pÄ• á¹‡aá¹ƒ hanati, adinnaá¹ƒ Ä• diyatÄ«tiÄ• dinÄ• sappÄ• bhojanaá¹ƒ upanissÄ• ya kÄ• yikaá¹ƒ sukhaá¹ƒ paccanubhotÄ«tiÄ• dinÄ• ca akusalo akusa abyÄ• katassa upanissayopi supÄ• kaá¹-o.

kusalo pana akusalassapi balavÅ«panissayo. dÄ• naá¹ƒ datvÄ• tena dÄ• nena attÄ• naá¹ƒ vambheti. tathÄ• sÄ«la sampanno hutvÄ• samÄ• dhisampanno hutvÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• sampa paraá¹ƒ vambheti.

kusalo abyÄ• katassapi balavÅ«panissayo. sabbÄ• ni catubhÅ«mikakusalakammÄ• ni vÄ•
vÄ• kÄ• lantare catubhÅ«mikÄ• naá¹ƒ vipÄ• kÄ• byÄ• katÄ• naá¹ƒ balavÅ«panissayo. dÄ• pÅ«raá¹‡akÄ• le bahuá¹ƒ kÄ• yikadukkhaá¹ƒ paccanubhavanti. tathÄ• sÄ«lapÄ• ramiá¹ƒ ni paÃ±Ã±Ä• pÄ• ramiá¹ƒ vÄ«riyapÄ• ramiá¹ƒ khantipÄ• ramiá¹ƒ saccapÄ• ramiá¹ƒ adhiá¹-á¹-mettÄ• pÄ• ramiá¹ƒ upekkhÄ• pÄ• ramiá¹ƒ. eseva nayo jhÄ• nabhÄ• vanÄ• maggabhÄ• v akusalo kusalassapi balavÅ«panissayo. idhekacco pÄ• paá¹ƒ katvÄ• pacchÄ• vippaá¹-isÄ pahÄ• nÄ• ya dÄ• nasÄ«lajhÄ• namaggakusalÄ• ni sampÄ• deti. taá¹ƒ pÄ• paá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ k

akusalo abyÄ• katassapi balavÅ«panissayo. idha bahÅ« janÄ• duccaritÄ• ni katvÄ• catÅ« apÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ paccanubhavanti. diá¹-á¹-hadhammepi keci attano vÄ• parassa vÄ• du bahuá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ paccanubhavanti. keci duccaritakammena dhanaá¹ƒ labhitvÄ• sukhaá¹ bahujjanÄ• rÄ• gamÅ«lakaá¹ƒ bahuá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ paccanubhavanti, dosamÅ«lakaá¹ƒ diá¹-mÄ• namÅ«lakanti.

abyÄ• kato kusalassapi balavÅ«panissayo. dhana sampattiyÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ deti, sÄ«laá¹ƒ p pÅ«reti, bhÄ• vanÄ• sappÄ• yaá¹ƒ Ä• vÄ• saá¹ƒ vÄ• leá¹‡aá¹ƒ vÄ• guhaá¹ƒvÄ• rukkhaá¹
vÄ• gocaragÄ• maá¹ƒ vÄ• utusappÄ• yaá¹ƒ vÄ• Ä• hÄ• rasappÄ• yaá¹ƒ vÄ• labhitvÄ• ta

abyÄ• kato akusalassapi balavÅ«panissayo. loke cakkhusampadaá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya bahÅ«ni da uppajjanti. esa nayo sotasampadÄ• dÄ«su \Be 481/. tathÄ• hatthasampadaá¹ƒ pÄ• dasam Ä• vudhasampadantiÄ• dinÄ• pi vattabbo. evaá¹ƒ upanissayo tividho hoti.

idha suttantÅ«panissayopi vattabbo. kalyÄ• á¹‡amittaá¹ƒ upa nissÄ• ya pÄ• pamittaá¹ƒ upa upanissÄ• ya araÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ upanissÄ• yÄ• tiÄ• dinÄ• bahÅ«su á¹-hÄ• nesu Ä• gato. api ca saá¹…khÄ• raloka okÄ• saloka saá¹…khÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ lokÄ• naá¹ƒ avicchinnap honti. ayaÃ±ca attho niyÄ• madÄ«paniyaá¹ƒ amhehi vitthÄ• rato dÄ«pitoti.

kenaá¹-á¹-hena Ä• rammaá¹‡Å«panissayoti. adhipatibhÅ«taá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡ameva Ä• ram balavanissayaá¹-á¹-hena Ä• rammaá¹‡Å«pa nissayo.

kenaá¹-á¹-hena anantarÅ«panissayoti. purimaá¹ƒ anantaracittameva pacchimassa anantara uppajjanatthÄ• ya balavanissayaá¹-á¹-hena anantarÅ«panissayo. mÄ• tÄ• viya purimacittaá pacchimacittaá¹ƒ. yathÄ• mÄ• tÄ• attano anantare puttassa uppajjanatthÄ• ya balavÅ«pa purimacittaá¹ƒ pacchimacittassa uppajjanatthÄ• yÄ• ti.

kenaá¹-á¹-hena pakatÅ«panissayoti. pakatiyÄ• va loke paá¹‡á¸• itÄ• naá¹ƒ pÄ• kaá¹-o upan

ettha ca anantarÅ«panissayÄ• nubhÄ• vo anantaracitte eva pharati. pakatÅ«panissayÄ• nu pharatiyeva. tathÄ• hi imasmiá¹ƒ bhave purimesu divasesu vÄ• mÄ• sesu vÄ• saá¹ƒvacch diá¹-á¹-hasutaghÄ• yitasÄ• yitaphusitaviÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• ni Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni pacchÄ• tathÄ• rÅ manodvÄ• re Ä• pÄ• taá¹ƒ Ä• gacchanti. idaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma pubbe mayÄ• diá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ sutant opapÄ• tikasattÄ• pana purimabhavaá¹ƒpi anussaranti. tathÄ• manussesupi appekacce jÄ tathÄ• pubbe anekasatasahassesu diá¹-á¹-hÄ• dÄ«su vatthÅ«su pacchÄ• ekasmiá¹ƒ khaá vÄ• sutvÄ• vÄ• tasmiá¹ƒ eva khaá¹‡e bahÅ«supi tesu manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡asantÄ• naá¹ƒ p upanissayapaccaya dÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

10. purejÄ• tapaccayo

tividho purejÄ• tapaccayo. vatthupurejÄ• tapaccayo ca Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tapaccayo ca vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tapaccayo ca.

tattha \Be 482/ vatthupurejÄ• to ca vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• to ca pubbe nissayapaccaye eva.

Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• to nÄ• ma paccuppannÄ• ni aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasanipphannarÅ«pÄ• ni eva rÅ«pasaddÄ• dÄ«ni paÃ±cÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni paÃ±cannaá¹ƒ paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a vÄ«thic Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tapaccayÄ• honti. yathÄ• hi vÄ«á¹‡Ä• saddÄ• nÄ• ma vÄ«á¹‡Ä• ta paharaá¹‡a paccayÄ• eva uppajjanti. evaÃ±ca sati te saddÄ• purejÄ• tÄ• hi vÄ«á¹‡Ä• tant vinÄ• uppajjituá¹ƒ na sakkonti. evamevaá¹ƒ paÃ±ca viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a vÄ«thicittÄ• nipi paÃ±c paÃ±cannaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ Ä• pÄ• tÄ• gamana paccayÄ• eva uppajjanti. Ä• pÄ• á¹-hitipattakÄ• le eva hoti. na kevalaÃ±ca tasmiá¹ƒ kÄ• le tÄ• ni paÃ±cÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni te Ä• pÄ• tamÄ• gacchanti. atha kho bhavaá¹…gamanodvÄ• repi Ä• pÄ• taá¹ƒ Ä• gacchantiye eva taá¹ƒ bhavaá¹…gampi dvikkhattuá¹ƒ calitvÄ• upacchijjati, bhavaá¹…gupacchede eva tÄ

uppajjanti. evaÃ±ca sati tÄ• ni vÄ«thicittÄ• ni purejÄ• tehi vatthu dvÄ• rÄ• rammaá¹‡ehi vinÄ sakkontÄ«ti. tÄ• ni pana sabbÄ• nipi aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasanipphannarÅ«pÄ• ni niruddhÄ• ni hutvÄ anuppannÄ• ni hutvÄ• anÄ• gatÄ• nipi honti. uppannÄ• ni hutvÄ• paccuppannÄ• nipi hont manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡avÄ«thicittÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni honti. tesu paccuppannÄ• ni eva Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tapaccayÄ• honti. yadÄ• dÅ«re vÄ• paá¹-icchanne vÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡avatthuá¹ƒ manasÄ• eva Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ karoti, tadÄ• taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vatthu s vijjamÄ• naá¹ƒ hoti, paccuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma hoti. purejÄ• tapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ

11. pacchÄ• jÄ• tapaccayo

pacchimaá¹ƒ pacchimaá¹ƒ paccuppannaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ purejÄ• tassa paccuppannassa catu sa rÅ«pakÄ• yassa vuá¸• á¸• hiviruá¸·hiyÄ• pacchÄ• jÄ• tapaccayo. yathÄ• taá¹ƒ pacchimava vassamÄ• nÄ• ni vassodakÄ• ni purimavassesu jÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ rukkhapotakÄ• naá¹ƒ vuá¸• á paccayÄ• hontÄ«ti.

tattha pacchimaá¹ƒ pacchimaá¹ƒ cittanti paá¹-hamabhavaá¹…gato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya yÄ• va c cittaá¹ƒ vuccati. purejÄ• tassÄ• ti paá¹-isandhicittena sahuppannaá¹ƒ kammajarÅ«pakÄ• ya ajjhattasantÄ• napariyÄ• panno sabbo catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikarÅ«pakÄ• yo vuccati.

paá¹-isandhicittena sahuppannassa kammajarÅ«pakÄ• yassa paá¹-hama bhavaá¹…gÄ• dÄ pacchÄ• jÄ• tapaccayÄ• honti. paá¹-isandhi cittaá¹ƒ pana tena kÄ• yena sahuppannattÄ• V hoti. soá¸·asamabhavaá¹…gacittaÃ±ca tassa kÄ• yassa bhijjanakkhette uppannattÄ• pacca pannarasabhavaá¹…gacittÄ• nÄ«ti vuttaá¹ƒ.

paá¹-isandhicittassa á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e pana dve rÅ«pakÄ• yÄ• uppajjanti kammajarÅ«pakÄ• tathÄ• bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡epi. paá¹-hamabhavaá¹…gassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e pana tayo rÅ« kammajarÅ«pakÄ• yo ca utujarÅ«pakÄ• yo ca cittajarÅ«pakÄ• yo ca. yadÄ• bahiddhÄ• hÄ• ajjhattÄ• hÄ• ro Ä• hÄ• rajarÅ«pakÄ• yaá¹ƒ janeti, tato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• n dÄ«pa jÄ• lÄ• viya pavattanti. te uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ atikkamma yÄ• va á¹-hitibhÄ• vena pannarasacittÄ• ni tesaá¹ƒ kÄ• yÄ• naá¹ƒ pacchÄ• jÄ• tapaccayÄ• hontiyeva.

vuá¸• á¸• hiviruá¸·hiyÄ• ti catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikarÅ«pasantatiyÄ• uparÅ«pari vuá¸• á¸• hi tathÄ• hi purimÄ• purimÄ• cattÄ• ro rÅ«pakÄ• yÄ• sace pacchÄ• jÄ• ta paccayaá¹ƒ puna te nirujjhantÄ• pi pacchÄ• rÅ«pasantatiparamparÄ• naá¹ƒ vuá¸• á¸• hiyÄ• ca viruá¸·hiyÄ• c paccayÄ• hutvÄ• nirujjhantÄ«ti. pacchÄ• jÄ• tapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

12. Ä• sevanapaccayo

dvÄ• dasa akusalacittÄ• ni sattarasa lokiyakusala cittÄ• ni Ä• vajjanadvayavajjitÄ• ni aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasakiriyacittÄ• nÄ«ti satta cattÄ• lÄ«saá¹ƒ lokiyajavanacittÄ• ni Ä• sevanapacca nirantarappavattaá¹ƒ javanasantatiá¹ƒ patvÄ• purimaá¹ƒ purimaá¹ƒ javanacittaá¹ƒ Ä• sevan maggacittehi pacchimaá¹ƒ pacchimaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ Ä• sevanapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ.

kenaá¹-á¹-hena Ä• sevananti. uparÅ«paripaguá¹‡abhÄ• vavaá¸• á¸• hanatthaá¹ƒthÄ• ma b parivÄ• saggÄ• hÄ• panaá¹-á¹-hena.

tattha paguá¹‡abhÄ• voti punappunaá¹ƒ sajjhÄ• yitassa pÄ• á¸·ipÄ• á¹-hassa sukhena pav javanaá¹-á¹-hÄ• najavanakiccasaá¹…khÄ• te á¹-hÄ• nakiccavisese pacchima pacchimacitta parivÄ• so nÄ• ma koseyyavatthaá¹ƒ punappunaá¹ƒ sugandhena parivÄ• sanaá¹ƒ viya citta rajjanadussanÄ• dinÄ• vÄ• arajjana adussanÄ• dinÄ• vÄ• parivÄ• sanaá¹ƒ. purimasmiá¹ javanavego na nirujjhati, pacchimaá¹ƒ cittasantÄ• naá¹ƒ pharamÄ• no pavattatiyeva. tasmÄ pacchimaá¹ƒ javanacittaá¹ƒ uppajjamÄ• naá¹ƒ tena vegena paggahitaá¹ƒ balavataraá¹ƒ hut 484/ purimacittaá¹ƒ attano parivÄ• saá¹ƒ pacchimacittaá¹ƒ gaá¹‡hÄ• peti. pacchimaÃ±ca cit cittassa parivÄ• saá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• pavattati. evaá¹ƒ santepi so Ä• sevanavego pakatiyÄ• sat parikkhayaá¹ƒ gacchati, tato paraá¹ƒ tadÄ• rammaá¹‡avipÄ• ka cittaá¹ƒ vÄ• uppajjati, bhav pavattati.

idha suttantÄ• sevanapaccayopi vattabbo. satipaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ bhÄ• veti, sammappadhÄ satisambojjhaá¹…gaá¹ƒ bhÄ• veti, dhamma vicayasambojjhaá¹…gaá¹ƒ bhÄ• veti, sammÄ• sammÄ• saá¹…kappaá¹ƒ bhÄ• vetÄ«tiÄ• dinÄ• bahÅ«su á¹-hÄ• nesu vutto. tattha bhÄ• ve bhÄ• veti, sattapi divasÄ• ni bhÄ• veti, ekaá¹ƒpi mÄ• saá¹ƒ bhÄ• veti, sattapi mÄ• sÄ• ni bh saá¹ƒvaccharaá¹ƒ bhÄ• veti, sattapi saá¹ƒvaccharÄ• ni bhÄ• vetÄ«ti attho.

purimapurimesu bhavesu Ä• sevitÄ• ni bhÄ• vitÄ• ni bahulÄ« katÄ• ni kusalÄ• ni vÄ• akus pacchimapacchimesu bhavesu balavatarÄ• naá¹ƒ kusalÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ• akusalÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ•

kÄ• lantare vÄ• bhavantare vÄ• tÄ• disÄ• naá¹ƒ kusalÄ• kusalÄ• naá¹ƒ uppattiyÄ• pacca tesaá¹ƒyeva balavataratthÄ• ya paccayo Ä• sevanapaccayo nÄ• ma.

lokepi mahantesu cittabhÄ• vanÄ• kammesu vÄ• cÄ• bhÄ• vanÄ• kammesu kÄ• yabhÄ• v aá¹…gapaccaá¹…gabhÄ• vanÄ• kammesu kammÄ• yatanasippÄ• yatanavijjÄ• á¹-hÄ• nesu bahulÄ«kammÄ• naá¹ƒ nissandaguá¹‡Ä• nÄ• ma sandissantiyeva.

sabbesaá¹ƒ khaá¹‡ikadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ majjhe evarÅ«passa Ä• sevana paccayassa vijjamÄ purisabalapurisathÄ• mÄ• naá¹ƒ uparÅ«pari vaá¸• á¸• hana vasena cirakÄ• laá¹ƒ pavattitÄ• nipphattiá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡anti, sabbaÃ±Ã±ubuddhabhÄ• vaá¹ƒpi gacchanti. Ä• sevanapaccaya

13. kammapaccayo

duvidho kammapaccayo sahajÄ• takammapaccayo nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ika kammapaccayo.

tattha khaá¹‡attayasamaá¹…gi bhÅ«tÄ• sabbÄ• pi kusalÄ• kusalÄ• byÄ• katacetanÄ• sa cetanÄ• sampayuttÄ• sabbepi cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• ca paá¹-isandhicittena sahuppann pavattikÄ• le sabbepi cittajarÅ«padhammÄ• ca tassa paccayassa paccayuppannÄ• .

atÄ«tÄ• \Be 485/ kusalÄ• kusalacetanÄ• nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikakamma paccayo. bÄ• ttiá¹ƒs cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• ca sabbe kammajarÅ«padhammÄ• ca tassa paccayassa paccay kenaá¹-á¹-hena kammanti. kiriyÄ• visesaá¹-á¹-hena kammaá¹ƒ. cetanÄ• hi kiriyÄ• viseso jeá¹-á¹-hakattÄ• . tÄ• hi sabbesu kÄ• yavacÄ«manokammesu paccupaá¹-á¹-hitesu tassa ta nipphattatthÄ• ya sampayuttadhamme ceteti kappeti saá¹ƒvidahati, ekato uá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti, ta jeá¹-á¹-hakÄ• hoti. iti kiriyÄ• visesaá¹-á¹-hena kammaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. karonti etenÄ• ti vÄ• kar kÄ• yikakiriyaá¹ƒpi karonti, vÄ• casikakiriyaá¹ƒpi karonti, mÄ• nasikakiriyaá¹ƒpi karonti. tatth nÄ• ma gamanaá¹-hÄ• na nisajjÄ• dayo abhikkamanapaá¹-ikkamanÄ• dayo antamaso akkh ukkhipananikkhipanÄ• nipi. vÄ• casikakiriyÄ• nÄ• ma vÄ• cÄ• pavattanakiriyÄ• . mÄ• nasik ducintitakiriyÄ• , antamaso paÃ±ca viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ dassanakiccasavanakiccÄ• dÄ«r etÄ• ya cetanÄ• ya sattÄ• karonti, saá¹ƒvidahanti, tasmÄ• sÄ• cetanÄ• kammaá¹ƒ nÄ• m attano paccayuppannena saha jÄ• yatÄ«ti sahajÄ• taá¹ƒ. sahajÄ• taÃ±ca taá¹ƒ kammaÃ±c sahajÄ• takammaá¹ƒ hutvÄ• paccayo sahajÄ• takamma paccayo. sahajÄ• takammabhÄ• v

aÃ±Ã±o kammassa uppattikkhaá¹‡o aÃ±Ã±o vipÄ• kassa uppattikkhaá¹‡oti evaá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ etassÄ• ti nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikaá¹ƒ. nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikaÃ±ca taá¹ƒ kammaÃ±cÄ• ti nÄ• nÄ• k nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikakammaá¹ƒ hutvÄ• paccayo nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikakammapaccayo. nÄ• nÄ paccayoti vuttaá¹ƒ hoti. ariyamaggasampayuttÄ• cetanÄ• attano niruddhÄ• nantare eva ar janeti, sÄ• pi nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikÄ• eva hoti.

ettha ca ekÄ• dÄ• nakusalacetanÄ• attanÄ• sahajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ cittacetasikÄ• naÃ±ca kÄ• yikavÄ• casikakiriyÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ƒ cittajarÅ«pÄ• naÃ±ca sahajÄ• takammapaccayo.
kÄ• lantare uppajjamÄ• nassa vipÄ• kakkhandhassa ca kammajarÅ«pakkhandhassa ca nÄ• evaá¹ƒ ekÄ• kammapathapattÄ• sucaritaduccaritacetanÄ• dvÄ«su kÄ• lesudvinnaá¹ƒ pac paccayasattÄ«hi paccayo hotÄ«ti.

ettha ca nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikakammapaccaye kammanti kiriyÄ• viseso. so pana cetanÄ• ya taá¹ƒ cittasantÄ• naá¹ƒ anugacchatiyeva. yadÄ• \Be 486/ vipaccituá¹ƒ okÄ• saá¹ƒ labhati, t cutinantare eko attabhÄ• vo hutvÄ• vipaccati pÄ• tubhavati. okÄ• saá¹ƒ pana alabhamÄ• n bhavasahassaá¹ƒpi bhavasatasahassaá¹ƒpi taá¹ƒ santÄ• naá¹ƒ anugacchatiyeva. mahagga sati dutiyabhave brahmaloke eko brahmattabhÄ• vo hutvÄ• vipaccati pÄ• tubhavati. supari dutiyabhaveyeva khÄ«yati, tato paraá¹ƒ nÄ• nugacchatÄ«ti. kammapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹

14. vipÄ• kapaccayo

chattiá¹ƒsavidhÄ• vipÄ• kabhÅ«tÄ• sahajÄ• tacittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• vipÄ• ka paccayo paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e kammajarÅ«pÄ• ni ca pavattikkhaá¹‡e vipÄ• ka cittajÄ• tÄ• ni cittajar vipÄ• kapaccayuppannÄ• .

kenaá¹-á¹-hena vipÄ• koti. vipaccanaá¹-á¹-hena vipÄ• ko. vipaccanaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma mudutaruá vipakkabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjanaá¹ƒ. kassa pana dhammassa mudutaruá¹‡abhÄ• vo, kassa vi nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikakammapaccaya saá¹…khÄ• tassa atÄ«takammassa mudutaruá¹‡abhÄ•

tattha ekassa kammassa catasso avatthÄ• yo honti cetanÄ• vatthÄ• kammÄ• vatthÄ• nin vipÄ• kÄ• vatthÄ• ti.

tattha tÄ• ya cetanÄ• ya niruddhÄ• yapi tassÄ• kiriyÄ• viseso na nirujjhati, taá¹ƒ cittasantÄ anugacchatiyeva. ayaá¹ƒ kammÄ• vatthÄ• nÄ• ma.

nimittÄ• vatthÄ• ti taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ yadÄ• vipaccituá¹ƒ okÄ• saá¹ƒ labhati, tadÄ• maraá¹‡ puggalassa tameva kammaá¹ƒ vÄ• paccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti, so puggalo tadÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ dent viya pÄ• á¹‡aghÄ• taá¹ƒ vÄ• karonto viya hoti. kammanimittaá¹ƒ vÄ• paccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti, satthÄ• dikaá¹ƒ vÄ• aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ vÄ• pi pubbe tassa kammassa upakaraá¹‡abhÅ«taá¹ƒ Ä• n puggalassa hatthagataá¹ƒ viya hoti. gatinimittaá¹ƒ vÄ• paccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti, dibbavimÄ• nÄ nirayaggijÄ• lÄ• dikaá¹ƒ vÄ• uppajjamÄ• nabhave upalabhitabbaá¹ƒ vÄ• anubhavitabbaá¹ dissamÄ• naá¹ƒ hoti. ayaá¹ƒ nimittÄ• vatthÄ• nÄ• ma.

vipÄ• kÄ• vatthÄ• ti sace so puggalo tathÄ• paccupaá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ vÄ• ka gatinimittaá¹ƒ vÄ• ekaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ amuÃ±camÄ• no marati, tadÄ• taá¹ƒ kammaá taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ tasmiá¹ƒbhave eko attabhÄ• vo hutvÄ• pÄ• tubhavati \Be 487/. tattha puri taá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ mudutaruá¹‡abhÅ«taá¹ƒ hoti, pacchimaá¹ƒ pana vipÄ• kÄ• vatthaá¹ƒ patvÄ tena vuttaá¹ƒ vipaccanaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma mudutaruá¹‡abhÄ• vaá¹ƒ atikkamma vipakkabhÄ• vaá¹ vipakkabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ Ä• panno citta cetasikadhammasamÅ«ho vipÄ• ko nÄ• ma.

tattha yathÄ• ambapphalÄ• ni nÄ• ma yadÄ• vipakkabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjanti, tadÄ• sabba evamevaá¹ƒ vipÄ• kadhammÄ• nÄ• ma nirussÄ• hÄ• nibyÄ• pÄ• rÄ• hutvÄ• sabbaso sa santarÅ«pattÄ• yeva bhavaá¹…gacittÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ avibhÅ«taá¹ƒ hoti, bhavaá taá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ na jÄ• nÄ• ti. tathÄ• hi rattiyaá¹ƒ niddÄ• yantassa purimabhave ma yathÄ• gahitaá¹ƒ kammÄ• dikaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha bhavaá¹…gasotaá¹ƒ pavatt bhavaá¹…gasotassa taá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha idaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma me purimabhave Ä• kassaci jÄ• nanavÄ«thicittassa uppattiyÄ• paccayo na hoti. so puggalo niddÄ• yanakÄ• lep purimabhavasiddhaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ nimittaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nÄ• ti. evaá¹ƒ nirussÄ• hanibyÄ• pÄ• rasanta upakÄ• rakatÄ• vipÄ• kapaccayatÄ• nÄ• mÄ• ti. vipÄ• ka paccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ•

15. Ä• hÄ• rapaccayo

duvidho Ä• hÄ• rapaccayo rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• rapaccayo arÅ«pÄ• hÄ• ra paccayo.

tattha rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• rapaccayo nÄ• ma kabaá¸·Ä«kÄ• rÄ• hÄ• rasaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ oja rÅ«pa bahiddhÄ• hÄ• roti duvidho. kabaá¸·Ä«kÄ• rÄ• hÄ• rabhakkhÄ• naá¹ƒ sattÄ• naá¹ƒ sabbep catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikarÅ«padhammÄ• tassa duvidhassa rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• rassa paccayuppan

arÅ«pÄ• hÄ• ro pana tividho phassÄ• hÄ• ro manosaÃ±cetanÄ• hÄ• ro viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• h sahajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ nÄ• marÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• hÄ• rapaccayo honti. sahajÄ• tÄ• ca n paccayuppannÄ• .

kenaá¹-á¹-hena Ä• hÄ• roti. bhusaá¹ƒ haraá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hena Ä• hÄ• ro. bhusaá¹ƒ haraá¹‡aá¹-pavattÄ• panaá¹-á¹-hena, cirakÄ• laá¹ƒ á¹-hitiyÄ• vuá¸• á¸• hiyÄ• viruá¸·hiyÄ• vepullÄ• ya upatthambhanaá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti vuttaá¹ƒ hoti. jananakiccayuttopi Ä• hÄ• ro upatthambhanakic

tattha duvidho rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• ro ajjhattasantÄ• ne catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikaá¹ƒ rÅ«pakÄ• yaá¹ƒ harati, daá¸·haá¹ƒ pavatteti, ciraá¹ƒ addhÄ• naá¹ƒ gameti, taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ Ä• yukappapariyosÄ• Ä• hÄ• ro.

phassÄ• hÄ• ro \Be 488/ Ä• rammaá¹‡esu iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-harasaá¹ƒ nÄ«haranto sampa manosaÃ±cetanÄ• hÄ• ro kÄ• yavacÄ« manokammesu ussÄ• haá¹ƒ janento sampayuttadh viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• hÄ• ro Ä• rammaá¹‡avijÄ• nanaá¹-á¹-hena pubbaá¹…gamakiccaá¹ƒ vahan harati, daá¸·haá¹ƒ pavatteti, ciraá¹ƒ addhÄ• naá¹ƒ gametÄ«ti Ä• hÄ• ro. sampayuttadhamm sahajÄ• tarÅ«padhammepi bhusaá¹ƒ haratiyeva.

idha suttantanayopi vattabbo. yathÄ• sakuá¹‡Ä• nÄ• ma cakkhÅ«hi disÄ• vidisaá¹ƒ vibhÄ rukkhaá¹ƒ vanato vanaá¹ƒ Ä• kÄ• sena pakkhanditvÄ• tuá¹‡á¸• akehi phalÄ• phalÄ• ni tudi

attÄ• naá¹ƒ yÄ• penti. tathÄ• ime sattÄ• chahi viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ehi Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni vibhÄ• manosaÃ±cetanÄ• hÄ• rehi Ä• rammaá¹‡avatthuppaá¹-ilÄ• bhatthÄ• ya ussukkanaá¹ƒ katv Ä• rammaá¹‡esu rasaá¹ƒ pÄ• tubhavantaá¹ƒ katvÄ• sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ anubhavanti. viÃ±Ã± vibhÄ• vetvÄ• nÄ• marÅ«pa sampattiá¹ƒ sÄ• dhenti. phassehi Ä• rammaá¹‡esu rasaá¹ƒ pÄ Ä• rammaá¹‡arasÄ• nubhavanaá¹ƒ vedanaá¹ƒ sampÄ• detvÄ• taá¹‡hÄ• vepullaá¹ƒ Ä• pajj taá¹‡hÄ• mÅ«lakÄ• ni nÄ• nÄ• kammÄ• ni pasavetvÄ• bhavato bhavaá¹ƒ saá¹ƒsaranti. eva mahantaá¹ƒ Ä• hÄ• rakiccaá¹ƒ veditabbanti. Ä• hÄ• rapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

16. indriyapaccayo

tividho indriyapaccayo sahajÄ• tindriyapaccayo pure jÄ• tindriyapaccayo rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriya

tattha pannarasindriyadhammÄ• sahajÄ• tindriyapaccayo nÄ• ma, jÄ«vitindriyaá¹ƒ manind dukkhindriyaá¹ƒ somanassindriyaá¹ƒ domanassindriyaá¹ƒ upekkhindriyaá¹ƒ saddhindriyaá¹ satindriyaá¹ƒ samÄ• dhindriyaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±indriyaá¹ƒ anaÃ±Ã±Ä• taÃ±Ã±assÄ• mÄ«tindriya aÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vindriyanti. tehi sahajÄ• tÄ• cittacetasikadhammÄ• ca rÅ«padhammÄ• ca ta paÃ±cindriyarÅ«pÄ• ni purejÄ• tindriyapaccayo, cakkhundriyaá¹ƒ sotindriyaá¹ƒ ghÄ• nindri kÄ• yindriyaá¹ƒ. paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡acitta cetasika dhammÄ• tassa paccayuppannÄ• .

ekaá¹ƒ rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriyaá¹ƒ rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriyapaccayo. sabbÄ• ni kammaja rÅ«pÄ• ni jÄ« tassa paccayuppannÄ• ni.

kenaá¹-á¹-hena indriyanti. issariyaá¹-á¹-hena indriyaá¹ƒ. tattha kattha issariyanti. attano atta paccayuppannesu dhammesu issariyaá¹ƒ. kasmiá¹ƒ kasmiá¹ƒ kicce issariyanti \Be 489/. atta issariyaá¹ƒ. nÄ• majÄ«vitaá¹ƒ sampayuttadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ jÄ«vanakicce issariyaá¹ƒ. jÄ«var Ä• yuvaá¸• á¸• hanakicce, santatiá¹-hitiyÄ• cirakÄ• laá¹-hitikicceti attho. manindriyaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aggahaá¹‡akicce sampayuttadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ issariyaá¹ƒ. avaseso indriyaá¹-á indriyayamakadÄ«paniyaá¹ƒ vuttoyeva.

ettha vadeyya, dve itthindriyapurisindriyadhammÄ• indriyabhÅ«tÄ• samÄ• nÄ• pi kasmÄ• gahitÄ• ti. paccayakiccassa abhÄ• vato. tividhaÃ±hi paccayakiccaá¹ƒ jananakiccaÃ±ca upat anupÄ• lanakiccaÃ±ca. tattha yo paccayo paccayuppannadhammassa uppÄ• dÄ• ya pacca paccayuppanno dhammo na uppajjati, tassa paccayakiccaá¹ƒ jananakiccaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. yath paccayo paccayuppannadhammassa á¹-hitiyÄ• ca vuá¸• á¸• hiyÄ• ca viruá¸·hiyÄ• ca pacc paccayuppanno dhammo na tiá¹-á¹-hati na vaá¸• á¸• hati na virÅ«hati, tassa paccayakiccaá¹ nÄ• ma. yathÄ• pacchÄ• jÄ• tapaccayo. yo paccayo paccayuppannassa dhammassa pava paccayuppanno dhammo cirakÄ• laá¹ƒ na pavattati, santati gamanaá¹ƒ chijjati, tassa pacca

anupÄ• lanakiccaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. yathÄ• rÅ«pa jÄ«vitindriyapaccayo. ete pana dve indriyadhar kiccesu ekakiccaá¹ƒpi nasÄ• dhenti, tasmÄ• ete dve dhammÄ• indriya paccaye visuá¹ƒ na etaá¹ƒ sante ete dve dhammÄ• indriyÄ• tipi na vattabbÄ• ti. no na vattabbÄ• . kasmÄ• . in kiá¹ƒ pana etesaá¹ƒ indriyakiccanti. liá¹…ganimittakuttaÄ• kappesu issaratÄ• indriya kiccaá puggalassa paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e itthindriyarÅ«paá¹ƒ uppajjati, tassa santÄ• ne catÅ«hi kar uppannÄ• paÃ±cakkhandha dhammÄ• itthibhÄ• vÄ• ya pariá¹‡amanti, so attabhÄ• vo eka itthikutta itthÄ• kappayutto hoti, no aÃ±Ã±athÄ• . na ca itthindriyarÅ«paá¹ƒ te paÃ±cakkhan

ca upatthambhati, nÄ• pi anupÄ• leti, atha kho te dhammÄ• attano attano paccayehi uppajj uppajjantÅ«ti Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ á¹-hapentaá¹ƒ viya tesu attano anubhÄ• vaá¹ƒ pavatteti. te ca dha uppajjanti, no aÃ±Ã±athÄ• ti. ayaá¹ƒ itthindriyarÅ«passa itthiliá¹…gÄ• dÄ«su issaratÄ• . esa purisindriyarÅ«passa purisaliá¹…gÄ• dÄ«su issaratÄ• yaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ ete dve dhammÄ• liá¹ sabbhÄ• vato indriyÄ• nÄ• ma hontÄ«ti.

hadayavatthurÅ«paá¹ƒ pana dvinnaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ nissayavatthukiccaá¹ indriyakiccaá¹ƒ na sÄ• dheti. na hi bhÄ• vita cittassa puggalassa hadayarÅ«pe pasannevÄ• jÄ• tepi manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuyo tadanuvattikÄ• hontÄ«ti. indriya paccayadÄ«panÄ•

17. jhÄ• napaccayo

satta jhÄ• naá¹…gÄ• ni jhÄ• napaccayo, vitakko vicÄ• ro pÄ«ti somanassaá¹ƒ domanassa sahajÄ• tÄ• paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡avajjitÄ• cittacetasikadhammÄ• ca rÅ«padhammÄ• ca t

kenaá¹-á¹-hena jhÄ• nanti. upanijjhÄ• yanaá¹-á¹-hena jhÄ• naá¹ƒ. upanijjhÄ• ya naá¹-á¹-he Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ upagantvÄ• nijjhÄ• yanaá¹-á¹-hena pekkhanaá¹-á¹-hena. yathÄ• hi issÄ lakkhamaá¹‡á¸• ale saraá¹ƒ pavesento hatthehi saraá¹ƒ ujukaÃ±ca niccalaÃ±ca katvÄ• ma
katvÄ• cakkhunÄ• nijjhÄ• yanto paveseti. evameva imehi aá¹…gehi cittaá¹ƒ ujukaÃ±ca nic Ä• rammaá¹‡aÃ±ca vibhÅ«taá¹ƒ katvÄ• nijjhÄ• yanto puggalo upanijjhÄ• yatÄ«ti vuccati. e yaá¹ƒkiÃ±ci kÄ• yakammaá¹ƒ vÄ• vacÄ«kammaá¹ƒ vÄ• manokammaá¹ƒ vÄ• karonto avir tattha kÄ• yakammaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma abhikkamappaá¹-ikkamÄ• dikaá¹ƒ vuccati. vacÄ«kammaá¹ akkharavaá¹‡á¹‡aparipuá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ vacÄ«bhedakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ vuccati. manokammaá¹ƒ nÄ• m Ä• rammaá¹‡avibhÄ• vanaá¹ƒ vuccati. dÄ• nakammaá¹ƒ vÄ• pÄ• á¹‡Ä• tipÄ• ta kammaá¹ƒ vinÄ• dubbalena cittena kÄ• tuá¹ƒ na sakkÄ• hoti. esa nayo sesesu kusalÄ• kusala kamme ayaÃ±ca attho vitakkÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ jhÄ• naá¹…gadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ sabhÄ• v sampayuttadhamme Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• bhiniropana lakkhaá¹‡o vitakko, so cittaá¹ƒ Ä• ramma Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• numajjanalakkhaá¹‡o vicÄ• ro, so cittaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡e daá¸·haá¹ƒ saá¹ƒ

Ä• rammaá¹‡asampiyÄ• yanalakkhaá¹‡Ä• pÄ«ti, sÄ• cittaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡e parituá¹-á¹-ha Ä• rammaá¹‡arasÄ• nu bhavanalakkhaá¹‡Ä• , tÄ• pi cittaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡e iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-kiccena daá¸·happaá¹-ibaddhaá¹ƒ karonti. samÄ• dhÄ• nalakkhaá¹‡Ä• ekaggatÄ• , sÄ• pi c niccalaá¹ƒ katvÄ• á¹-hapetÄ«ti. jhÄ• napaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

18. maggapaccayo

dvÄ• dasa maggaá¹…gÄ• ni maggapaccayo sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi sammÄ• saá¹…kappo sam sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vo sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo sammÄ• sati sammÄ• samÄ• dhi micchÄ• diá¹-á¹-h micchÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo micchÄ• samÄ• dhi. sesÄ• micchÄ• vÄ• cÄ• micchÄ• kammanto mic cetasikadhammÄ• na honti. musÄ• vÄ• dÄ• divasena pavattÄ• naá¹ƒ catunnaá¹ƒ akusalak te maggapaccaye visuá¹ƒ na gahitÄ• ti. sabbe sahetukÄ• citta cetasikadhammÄ• ca sahet rÅ«padhammÄ• ca tassa paccayuppannÄ• .

kenaá¹-á¹-hena maggoti. sugatiduggatinibbÄ• na disÄ• desasampÄ• panaá¹-á¹-hena magg
hi aá¹-á¹-ha sammÄ• maggaá¹…gÄ• ni sugati disÄ• desaÃ±ca nibbÄ• nadisÄ• desaÃ±ca sa cattÄ• ri micchÄ• maggaá¹…gÄ• ni duggatidisÄ• desaá¹ƒ sampÄ• panatthÄ• ya saá¹ƒvattan tattha jhÄ• napaccayo Ä• rammaá¹‡e cittaá¹ƒ ujuá¹ƒ karoti, thiraá¹ƒ karoti, appanÄ• pattaá¹ appanÄ• pattaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma gambhÄ«re udake pakkhitto macchoviya kasiá¹‡animittÄ• dike ni anupaviá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ pavuccati. maggapaccayo vaá¹-á¹-apathe cetanÄ• kammaá¹ƒ vi bhÄ• vanÄ• kammaá¹ƒ ujuá¹ƒ karoti, thiraá¹ƒ karoti, kammapathapattaá¹ƒ karoti, vuddhiá¹ƒ karoti, bhÅ«mantarapattaá¹ƒ karoti. aya metesaá¹ƒ dvinnaá¹ƒ paccayÄ• naá¹ƒ viseso.

tattha kammapathapattaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma pÄ• á¹‡Ä• tipÄ• tÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ kusalÄ• kusala kammÄ• paá¹-isandhijanane samatthabhÄ• vasaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ kammagatiá¹ƒ pattaá¹ƒ cetanÄ• kam nÄ• ma bhÄ• vanÄ• nukkamena kÄ• ma bhÅ«mito paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya yÄ• va lokuttarabhÅ«miy uparÅ«paribhÅ«miá¹ƒ pattaá¹ƒ bhÄ• vanÄ• kammaá¹ƒ. ayaÃ±ca attho jhÄ• napaccaye vutta sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hiÄ• dikÄ• naá¹ƒ maggaá¹…gadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ sabhÄ• va maggapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

19. sampayuttapaccayo

sampayuttapaccayo vippayuttapaccayoti ekaá¹ƒ dukkaá¹ƒ. atthi paccayo natthi paccayoti e vigatapaccayo avigata paccayoti ekaá¹ƒ dukkaá¹ƒ. imÄ• ni tÄ«á¹‡i paccayadukkÄ• ni visuá¹ honti. pubbe Ä• gatesu paccayesu keci paccayÄ• attano paccayuppannehi sampayuttÄ• h gacchanti, keci vippayuttÄ• hutvÄ• , keci vijjamÄ• nÄ• hutvÄ• , keci avijjamÄ• nÄ• hutvÄ• keci avigatÄ• hutvÄ• paccayattaá¹ƒ gacchantÄ«ti dassanatthaá¹ƒ imÄ• ni tÄ«á¹‡i paccaya ettha \Be 492/ ca atthÄ«ti kho kaccÄ• na ayameko anto, natthÄ«ti kho dutiyo antoti evarÅ«p atthinatthisaddÄ• sassatucchedesupavattanti, tasmÄ• evarÅ«pÄ• naá¹ƒ atthÄ• naá¹ƒ nivat vigatadukkaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ.

sabbepi sahajÄ• tÄ• cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa paccayÄ• ceva hont

kenaá¹-á¹-hena sampayutto. ekuppÄ• datÄ• ekanirodhatÄ• ekavatthukatÄ• ekÄ• rammaá sampayogaá¹…gehi samannÄ• gato hutvÄ• saá¹ƒyutto ekÄ«bhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatoti sampayutto tattha ekÄ«bhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatoti cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ phassÄ• dÄ«hi sattahi cetasikehi sa hoti, dassananti ekaá¹ƒ vohÄ• raá¹ƒ gacchati. aá¹-á¹-ha dhammÄ• visuá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ vohÄ• ra vinibbhujjitvÄ• viÃ±Ã±Ä• tuá¹ƒ na sakkoti. esa nayo sesesu sabbacittuppÄ• desÅ«ti. sampa niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

20. vippayuttapaccayo

catubbidho vippayuttapaccayo, sahajÄ• to vatthupure jÄ• to vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• to tattha sahajÄ• tavippayutto nÄ• ma dvisu sahajÄ• tapaccaya paccayuppannesu nÄ• marÅ« rÅ«paá¹ƒ vÄ• nÄ• massa vippayuttaá¹ƒ hutvÄ• paccayo. tattha nÄ• manti pavattikÄ• le cat rÅ«passÄ• ti cittajarÅ«passa, rÅ«panti paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e hadayavatthurÅ«paá¹ƒ, nÄ• m paá¹-isandhicatukkhandhanÄ• massa. sesÄ• tayopi vippayuttapaccayÄ• pubbe vibhattÄ• vippayuttapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

21. atthipaccayo

sattavidho atthipaccayo, sahajÄ• tatthipaccayo vatthupure jÄ• tatthi paccayo Ä• rammaá¹‡a vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apure jÄ• tatthipaccayo pacchÄ• jÄ• tatthipaccayo rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• ratthipacc jÄ«vitindriyatthipaccayoti.

tattha sahajÄ• tapaccayo eva sahajÄ• tatthipaccayo nÄ• ma. esa nayo sesesu chasu. pacc heá¹-á¹-hÄ• tattha tattha vuttoyeva.

kenaá¹-á¹-hena \Be 493/ atthipaccayo. sayaá¹ƒ khaá¹‡ikapaccuppannatÄ• saá¹…khÄ• ten paccuppannassa dhammassa paccayo atthipaccayo. atthipaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

22. natthipaccayo

23. vigatapaccayo

24. avigatapaccayo

sabbo anantarapaccayo natthi paccayo nÄ• ma. tathÄ• vigata paccayo. avigatapaccayopi sabbasadiso. atthÄ«tica avigatoti ca atthato ekameva. tathÄ• natthÄ«ti ca vigatotica.
natthivigataavigatapaccayadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

paccayatthadÄ«panÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

paccayasabhÄ• go

paccayasabhÄ• go vuccate. paÃ±cadasa sahajÄ• tajÄ• tikÄ• honti, cattÄ• ro mahÄ• sahaj majjhimasahajÄ• tÄ• satta khuddakasahajÄ• tÄ• . tattha cattÄ• ro mahÄ• sahajÄ• tÄ• nÄ• sahajÄ• tatthi sahajÄ• ta avigato. cattÄ• ro majjhimasahajÄ• tÄ• nÄ• ma aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±o sahajÄ• tavippayutto. satta khuddakasaha jÄ• tÄ• nÄ• ma hetu sahajÄ• tÄ• dhipati sahajÄ• sahajÄ• tindriyaá¹ƒ jhÄ• naá¹ƒ maggo.

tayo rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• rÄ• , rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• ro rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• ratthi rÅ«pÄ• hÄ• rÄ• vigato.

tÄ«á¹‡i rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriyÄ• ni, rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriyaá¹ƒ rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriyatthi rÅ«pajÄ«vitindri

sattarasa purejÄ• tajÄ• tikÄ• honti, cha vatthupurejÄ• tÄ• cha Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tÄ• vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tÄ• . tattha cha vatthupurejÄ• tÄ• nÄ• ma vatthupurejÄ• to vatth vatthupurejÄ• tindriyaá¹ƒ vatthupurejÄ• tavippayuttaá¹ƒ vatthupurejÄ• tatthi vatthu purejÄ• t Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tÄ• nÄ• ma Ä• rammaá¹‡a purejÄ• to kiÃ±ciÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ koci
Ä• rammaá¹‡Å«panissaso Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tatthi \Be 494/ Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• ta a Ä• rammaá¹‡antiÄ• dÄ«su kiÃ±cikocivacanehi paccuppannaá¹ƒ nipphannarÅ«paá¹ƒ gayhat vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tÄ• nÄ• ma vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡a purejÄ• to vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡a vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apure jÄ• ta vippayutto vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tatthi vatthÄ• rammaá cattÄ• ro pacchÄ• jÄ• tajÄ• tikÄ• honti, pacchÄ• jÄ• to pacchÄ• jÄ• tavippayutto pacchÄ• j pacchÄ• jÄ• taavigato.

satta anantarÄ• honti, anantaro samanantaro anantarÅ«pa nissayo Ä• sevanaá¹ƒ anantara ettha ca anantara kammaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma ariyamaggacetanÄ• , sÄ• attano anantare ariyaphala paÃ±ca visuá¹ƒ paccayÄ• honti, avasesaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ avaseso Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• c nissayo sabbo pakatÅ«panissayo avasesaá¹ƒ nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ika kammaá¹ƒ. iti vitthÄ• rat catupaÃ±Ã±Ä• sappabhedÄ• hontÄ«ti.

tattha sabbe sahajÄ• tajÄ• tikÄ• ca sabbe purejÄ• ta jÄ• tikÄ• sabbe pacchÄ• jÄ• tajÄ• tik rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriyanti ime paccuppannapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma. sabbe anantarajÄ• tikÄ• sabbaá ime atÄ«tapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma. Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ pakatÅ«panissayoti ime tekÄ• likÄ• ca nib kÄ• lavimuttÄ• ca honti.

nibbÄ• naÃ±ca paÃ±Ã±atti cÄ• ti ime dve dhammÄ• appaccayÄ• nÄ• ma asaá¹…khatÄ• yesaÃ±hi jÄ• ti nÄ• ma atthi, uppÄ• do nÄ• ma atthi. te sappaccayÄ• nÄ• ma saá¹…khatÄ• nÄ• ma. ime dve dhammÄ• ajÄ• tikattÄ• anuppÄ• dattÄ• ajÄ• tipaccayattÄ• ca appaccay

sappaccayesu ca dhammesu saá¹…khatesu ekopi dhammo nicco dhuvo sassato aviparÄ«t kho sabbe te khayaá¹-á¹-hena aniccÄ• eva honti. kasmÄ• . sayaÃ±ca paccayÄ• yattavutti k aniccadhammattÄ• . nanu nibbÄ• naÃ±ca paÃ±Ã±atti ca paccayÄ• honti. te ca niccÄ• dhu pana nibbÄ• napaccayena vÄ• paÃ±Ã±attipaccayena vÄ• uppanno nÄ• ma natthi, bahÅ«h pana paccayÄ• aniccÄ• eva adhuvÄ• ti.

ye \Be 495/ ca dhammÄ• aniccÄ• honti, te niccakÄ• laá¹ƒ satte tividhehi dukkhadaá¹‡á¸• c bÄ• dhenti, tasmÄ• te dhammÄ• bhayaá¹-á¹-hena dukkhÄ• eva honti. tattha tividhÄ• dukk dukkhadukkhatÄ• saá¹…khÄ• ra dukkhatÄ• vipariá¹‡Ä• madukkhatÄ• .

ye keci aniccÄ• eva honti, ekasmiá¹ƒ iriyÄ• pathepi punappunaá¹ƒ bhijjanti, te kathaá¹ƒ yÄ niccasaÃ±Ã±itÄ• naá¹ƒ sattapuggalÄ• naá¹ƒ attÄ• nÄ• ma bhaveyyuá¹ƒ, sÄ• rÄ• nÄ• ma b honti, te kathaá¹ƒ dukkhappaá¹-ikulÄ• naá¹ƒ sukhakÄ• mÄ• naá¹ƒ sattÄ• naá¹ƒ attÄ• nÄ• m bhaveyyuá¹ƒ. tasmÄ• te dhammÄ• asÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-hena anattÄ• eva honti.

api ca yasmÄ• imÄ• ya catuvÄ«satiyÄ• paccayadesanÄ• ya imamatthaá¹ƒ dasseti. sabbe paccayÄ• yattavuttikÄ• eva honti, sattÄ• naá¹ƒ vasÄ• yattavuttikÄ• na honti. paccayÄ• yat ekopi dhammo appakena paccayena uppajjati. atha kho bahÅ«hi eva paccayehi uppajjatÄ«t dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ anattalakkhaá¹‡adÄ«pane matthakapattÄ• hotÄ«ti.

paccayasabhÄ• gasaá¹…gaho niá¹-á¹-hito.

paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo

paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡esu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo

paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo vuccate. ekekasmiá¹ƒ paccayuppanne bahunnaá¹ƒ paccayÄ• na paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nÄ• ma. yena pana dhammÄ• sappaccayÄ• saá¹…khatÄ• paá¹-icca dhammÄ• uppÄ• de ca á¹-hitiyaÃ±ca imehi catuvÄ«satiyÄ• paccayehi sahitattÄ• sappacc saá¹…khatÄ• nÄ• ma, saá¹…khatattÄ• paá¹-iccasamuppannÄ• nÄ• ma. katame pana te ca dvipaÃ±Ã±Ä• sacetasikÄ• ni ca aá¹-á¹-havÄ«sati rÅ«pÄ• ni ca.

tattha ekavÄ«sasatacittÄ• ni dhÄ• tuvasena sattavidhÄ• ni bhavanti, cakkhu viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a sotaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu ghÄ• naviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu jitha viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu kÄ• y manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a dhÄ• tÅ«ti. tattha cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡advayaá¹ƒ cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ sotaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡advayaá¹ƒ sotaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu nÄ• ma. ghÄ• naviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adva nÄ• ma. jithaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡advayaá¹ƒ jithaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu nÄ• ma. kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu \Be 496/ nÄ• ma. paÃ±cadvÄ• rÄ• vajjana cittaÃ±ca sampaá¹ manodhÄ• tu nÄ• ma. sesÄ• ni aá¹-á¹-hasataá¹ƒ cittÄ• ni manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu nÄ• m dvipaÃ±Ã±Ä• sacetasikÄ• ni ca rÄ• sivasena catubbidhÄ• ni bhavanti, satta sabbacittikÄ• m ca cuddasa pÄ• pÄ• nica paÃ±cavÄ«sati kalyÄ• á¹‡Ä• ni ca.

catuvÄ«satipaccayesu ca pannarasapaccayÄ• sabbacittuppÄ• da sÄ• dhÄ• raá¹‡Ä• honti samanantaraÃ±ca saha jÄ• to ca aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aÃ±ca nissayo ca upanissayo ca kamma sampayutto ca atthi ca natthi ca vigato ca avigato ca. na hi kiÃ±ci cittaá¹ƒ vÄ• cetasikaá¹ƒ vinÄ• uppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma atthi. tathÄ• anantarÄ• dÄ«hi ca. aá¹-á¹-hapaccayÄ• kesaÃ±ci sÄ• dhÄ• raá¹‡Ä• honti, hetu ca adhipati ca pure jÄ• to ca Ä• sevanaÃ±ca vipÄ• ko ca jhÄ•
ca. tattha hetu sahetukacittuppÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ eva sÄ• dhÄ• raá¹‡Ä• , adhipati ca sÄ• dhipati purejÄ• to ca kesaÃ±ci cittuppÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ eva, Ä• sevanaÃ±ca kusalÄ• kusalakiriyajavan vipÄ• kacittuppÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ eva, jhÄ• naÃ±ca manodhÄ• tu manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu ci sahetukacittuppÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ eva, vippayutto ca arÅ«paloke cittuppÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ natthi, eko rÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ eva visuá¹ƒbhÅ«to hoti.

tatrÄ• yaá¹ƒ dÄ«panÄ• . satta sabbacittikÄ• ni cetasikÄ• ni nÄ• ma, phasso vedanÄ• saÃ±
jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ manasikÄ• ro. tattha cittaá¹ƒ adhipatijÄ• tikaÃ±ca Ä• hÄ• rapaccayo ca indriyapa Ä• hÄ• rapaccayo. vedanÄ• indriyapaccayo ca jhÄ• na paccayo ca. cetanÄ• kammapacca ekaggatÄ• indriyapaccayo ca jhÄ• na paccayo ca maggapaccayo ca. jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ indriyapac visesapaccayÄ• na honti.

cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡e satta sabbacittikÄ• ni cetasikÄ• ni labbhanti, viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ena saddh nÄ• madhammÄ• honti. sabbe te dhammÄ• sattahi paccayehi aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa pacca mahÄ• sahajÄ• tehi ca vippayuttavajjitehi tÄ«hi majjhimasahajÄ• tehi ca. tesveva aá¹-á¹-has

viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ sesÄ• naá¹ƒ sattannaá¹ƒ dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• hÄ• rapaccayena ca indriya phasso Ä• hÄ• rapaccayena, vedanÄ• indriyapaccayamattena, cetanÄ• kammapaccayena ekaggatÄ• indriyapaccayamattena \Be 497/, jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ sesÄ• naá¹ƒ sattannaá¹ƒ dhammÄ• paccayo hoti. cakkhuvatthurÅ«paá¹ƒ pana tesaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hannaá¹ƒ dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ chahi v cakkhuvatthumhi Ä• pÄ• tamÄ• gatÄ• ni paccuppannÄ• ni rÅ«pÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni tesaá¹ƒ c anantaraniruddhaá¹ƒ paÃ±cadvÄ• rÄ• vajjanacittaÃ±ca paÃ±cahi anantarehi, pubbe kataá¹ƒ akusalakammaá¹ƒ vÄ• kusalavipÄ• kÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ• akusalavipÄ• kÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ• tesaá¹ƒ n kamma sahÄ• yabhÅ«tÄ• ni purimabhave avijjÄ• taá¹‡hÅ«pÄ• dÄ• nÄ• ni ca imasmiá¹ƒ bha ca tesaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hannaá¹ƒ dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ pakatÅ«panissayapaccayena paccayÄ• honti.
adhipati ca pacchÄ• jÄ• to ca Ä• sevanaÃ±ca jhÄ• naÃ±ca maggocÄ• ti chapaccayÄ• na la aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasapaccayÄ• labbhanti. yathÄ• ca imasmiá¹ƒ citte, tathÄ• sotaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä labbhanti, aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasapaccayÄ• labbhantÄ«ti.

paÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡esu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo niá¹-á¹-hito.

ahetuka cittuppÄ• desu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo cha pakiá¹‡á¹‡akÄ• ni cetasikÄ• ni nÄ• ma, vitakko vicÄ• ro adhimokkho vÄ«riyaá¹ƒ pÄ«ti jhÄ• napaccayo ca maggapaccayo ca. vicÄ• ro jhÄ• napaccayo. vÄ«riyaá¹ƒ adhipatijÄ• tika maggapaccayo ca. pÄ«ti jhÄ• napaccayo. chando adhipatijÄ• tiko. adhimokkho pana visesa paÃ±cadvÄ• rÄ• vajjanacittaÃ±ca sampaá¹-icchanacittadvayaÃ±ca upekkhÄ• santÄ«raá¹‡a cittesu dasa cetasikÄ• ni labbhanti, satta sabba cittikÄ• ni ca pakiá¹‡á¹‡akesu vitakko ca vic

ca. viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ena saddhiá¹ƒ paccekaá¹ƒ ekÄ• dasa nÄ• madhammÄ• honti. imesu citte vedanÄ• ca ekaggatÄ• ca vitakko ca vicÄ• ro ca jhÄ• napaccayaá¹ƒ sÄ• dhenti. paÃ±cadv kiriyacittaá¹ƒ hoti, vipÄ• kapaccayo natthi. nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡ikakammaÃ±ca upanissayaá¹-á¹
vipÄ• kapaccayena saddhiá¹ƒ cha paccayÄ• na labbhanti. jhÄ• napaccayena saddhiá¹ƒ aá labbhanti. sesesu catÅ«su vipÄ• kacittesu paÃ±ca paccayÄ• na labbhanti. vipÄ• kapaccaye saddhiá¹ƒ ekÅ«navÄ«sati paccayÄ• labbhanti.

somanassasantÄ«raá¹‡e pÄ«tiyÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ ekÄ• dasacetasikÄ• yujjanti, manodvÄ• rÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ ekÄ• dasÄ• ti viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ena saddhiá¹ƒ dvÄ• dasa \Be 498/ nÄ• madhammÄ• pÄ«tiyÄ• ca vÄ«riyena ca saddhiá¹ƒ dvÄ• dasa cetasikÄ• ni yujjanti. viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ena sadd honti. tattha somanassasantÄ«raá¹‡e jhÄ• naá¹…gesu pÄ«timattaá¹ƒ adhikaá¹ƒ hoti, pubbe upekkhÄ• santÄ«raá¹‡advaye viya paÃ±capaccayÄ• na labbhanti. ekÅ«navÄ«satipaccayÄ vajjanacitte ca vÄ«riyamattaá¹ƒ adhikaá¹ƒ hoti, taÃ±ca indriyakicca jhÄ• na kiccÄ• nisÄ• dh maggakiccaÃ±ca na sÄ• dheti. kiriya cittattÄ• vipÄ• kapaccayo ca natthi. pubbe paÃ±cadvÄ
vipÄ• ka paccayena saddhiá¹ƒ cha paccayÄ• na labbhanti. jhÄ• napaccayena saddhiá¹ƒ aá

labbhanti. hasituppÄ• dacittepi kiriyacittattÄ• vipÄ• kapaccayo natthi, javanacittattÄ• pana vipÄ• kapaccayena saddhiá¹ƒ paÃ±ca paccayÄ• na labbhanti. Ä• sevanapaccayena saddh labbhanti.

ahetukacittuppÄ• desu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo niá¹-á¹-hito.

akusalacittuppÄ• desu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo

dvÄ• dasa akusalacittÄ• ni, dve mohamÅ«likÄ• ni aá¹-á¹-ha lobha mÅ«likÄ• ni dve dosamÅ pÄ• pacetasikÄ• ni nÄ• ma moho ahirikaá¹ƒ anottappaá¹ƒ uddhaccanti idaá¹ƒ mohacatukka mÄ• noti idaá¹ƒ lobhatikkaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. doso issÄ• macchariyaá¹ƒ kukkuccanti idaá¹ƒ dosac middhaá¹ƒ vicikicchÄ• ti idaá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ tikkaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma.

tattha lobho doso mohoti tayo mÅ«ladhammÄ• hetupaccayÄ• , diá¹-á¹-hi maggapaccayo, s visesapaccayÄ• na honti.

tattha dve mohamÅ«likÄ• ni nÄ• ma vicikicchÄ• sampayuttacittaá¹ƒ uddhacca sampayuttac vicikicchÄ• sampayuttacitte pannarasa cetasikÄ• ni uppajjanti satta sabbacittikÄ• ni ca vitak vÄ«riyanti tÄ«á¹‡i pakiá¹‡á¹‡akÄ• ni ca pÄ• pacetasikesu mohacatukkaÃ±ca vicikicchÄ• cÄ soá¸·asa nÄ• madhammÄ• honti. imasmiá¹ƒ citte hetu paccayopi maggapaccayopi labbhan vitakko ca vÄ«riyaÃ±ca maggapaccayo, ekaggatÄ• pana vicikicchÄ• ya duá¹-á¹-hattÄ• ima indriyakiccaÃ±ca maggakiccaÃ±ca na sÄ• dheti, jhÄ• nakiccamattaá¹ƒ sÄ• dheti. adhipati ca cÄ• ti tayo paccayÄ• na labbhanti, sesÄ• ekavÄ«satipaccayÄ• labbhanti. uddhaccasampay pahÄ• ya adhimokkhena saddhiá¹ƒ pannaraseva cetasikÄ• ni, soá¸·aseva nÄ• madhammÄ• citte ekaggatÄ• indriya kiccaÃ±ca jhÄ• nakiccaÃ±ca maggakiccaÃ±ca sÄ• dheti, tayo pacca ekavÄ«sati paccayÄ• labbhanti.

aá¹-á¹-hasu lobhamÅ«likacittesu pana satta sabbacittikÄ• ni ca cha pakiá¹‡á¹‡akÄ• ni ca pA lobhatikkaÃ±ca thinamiddhaÃ±cÄ• ti dvÄ• vÄ«sati cetasikÄ• ni uppajjanti. tesu lobho ca mo hetupaccayo. chando ca cittaÃ±ca vÄ«riyaÃ±cÄ• ti tayo adhipatijÄ• tikÄ• kadÄ• ci adhipatik Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• dhipatipi ettha labbhati. cetanÄ• kammapaccayo. tayo Ä• hÄ• rÄ• Ä• hÄ• ekaggatÄ• ca jÄ«vitaÃ±ca vÄ«riyaÃ±cÄ• ti paÃ±ca indriyadhammÄ• indriyapaccayo. vitakk vedanÄ• ca ekaggatÄ• cÄ• ti paÃ±ca jhÄ• naá¹…gÄ• ni jhÄ• napaccayo. vitakko ca ekagga vÄ«riyaÃ±cÄ• ti cattÄ• ri maggaá¹…gÄ• ni maggapaccayo. pacchÄ• jÄ• to ca vipÄ• ko cÄ• sesÄ• dvÄ• vÄ«sati paccayÄ• labbhanti.

dvÄ«su dosamÅ«likacittesu pÄ«tiÃ±ca lobhatikkaÃ±ca pahÄ• ya dosacatukkena saddhiá¹ƒ cetasikÄ• ni, doso ca moho ca dve mÅ«lÄ• ni, tayo adhipati jÄ• tikÄ• , tayo Ä• hÄ• rÄ• , paÃ

jhÄ• naá¹…gÄ• ni, tÄ«á¹‡i maggaá¹…gÄ• ni. etthÄ• pi dve paccayÄ• na labbhanti, dvÄ• vÄ akusalacittuppÄ• desu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo niá¹-á¹-hito.

cittuppÄ• desu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo

ekanavuti sobhaá¹‡acittÄ• ni nÄ• ma, catuvÄ«sati kÄ• ma sobhaá¹‡acittÄ• ni pannarasa rÅ arÅ«pacittÄ• ni cattÄ• lÄ«sa lokuttaracittÄ• ni. tattha catuvÄ«sati kÄ• masobhaá¹‡a cittÄ• n kÄ• makusalacittÄ• ni aá¹-á¹-ha kÄ• masobhaá¹‡avipÄ• ka cittÄ• ni aá¹-á¹-ha kÄ• masobha

paÃ±ca vÄ«sati kalyÄ• á¹‡acetasikÄ• ni nÄ• ma, alobho adoso amohoceti tÄ«á¹‡i kalyÄ• á sati ca hirÄ« ca ottappaÃ±ca tatramajjhattatÄ• ca kÄ• yapassaddhi ca citta passaddhi ca k cittalahutÄ• ca kÄ• yamudutÄ• ca citta mudutÄ• ca kÄ• yakammaÃ±Ã±atÄ• ca citta kam kÄ• yapÄ• guÃ±Ã±atÄ• ca cittapÄ• guÃ±Ã±atÄ• ca kÄ• yujukatÄ• ca cittujukatÄ• \Be 50
sammÄ• kammanto sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«voti tisso viratiyo ca karuá¹‡Ä• muditÄ• ti dve appama tattha tÄ«á¹‡i kalyÄ• á¹‡amÅ«lÄ• ni hetupaccayo, amoho pana adhipatipaccaye vÄ«maá¹ƒ indriyapaccaye paÃ±Ã±indriyaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma, maggapaccaye sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi nÄ• ma. sadd saddhindriyaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. sati indriyapaccaye satindriyaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma, maggapaccaye sammÄ maggapaccayo, sesÄ• sattarasa dhammÄ• visesapaccayÄ• na honti.

aá¹-á¹-hasu kÄ• makusalacittesu aá¹-á¹-hatiá¹ƒsa cetasikÄ• ni saá¹…gayhanti, satta sabba pakiá¹‡á¹‡akÄ• ni paÃ±cavÄ«sati kalyÄ• á¹‡Ä• ni. tesu ca pÄ«ti catÅ«su somanassikesu ev Ã±Ä• á¹‡asampayuttesu eva, tisso viratiyo sikkhÄ• padasÄ«lapÅ«raá¹‡a kÄ• le eva, dve ap kÄ• ruÃ±Ã±amodanÄ• kÄ• resu evÄ• ti. imesupi aá¹-á¹-hasu cittesu dve vÄ• tÄ«á¹‡i vÄ• k hetupaccayo, chando ca cittaÃ±ca vÄ«riyaÃ±ca vÄ«maá¹ƒsÄ• cÄ• ti catÅ«su adhipatijÄ• tik adhipatipaccayo. cetanÄ• kammapaccayo. tayo Ä• hÄ• rÄ• Ä• hÄ• rapaccayo. cittaÃ±ca v jÄ«vitaÃ±ca saddhÄ• ca sati ca vÄ«riyaÃ±ca paÃ±Ã±Ä• cÄ• ti aá¹-á¹-ha indriyÄ• ni indriyap vicÄ• ro ca pÄ«ti ca vedanÄ• ca ekaggatÄ• cÄ• ti paÃ±cajhÄ• naá¹…gÄ• ni jhÄ• napaccay viratiyo ca sati ca vÄ«riyaÃ±ca ekaggatÄ• cÄ• ti aá¹-á¹-ha maggaá¹…gÄ• ni maggapaccayo cittesu pacchÄ• jÄ• to ca vipÄ• kocÄ• ti dve paccayÄ• na labbhanti, sesÄ• dvÄ• vÄ«satipa

aá¹-á¹-hasu kÄ• masobhaá¹‡akiriyacittesu tisso viratiyo na labbhanti, kusalesu viya dve pa dvÄ• vÄ«sati paccayÄ• labbhanti.

aá¹-á¹-hasu kÄ• masobhaá¹‡avipÄ• kesu tisso viratiyo ca dve appamaÃ±Ã±Ä• yo ca na lab pacchÄ• jÄ• to ca Ä• sevanaÃ±cÄ• ti tayo paccayÄ• na labbhanti, ekavÄ«sati paccayÄ• la

upari rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«palokuttaracittesupi dvÄ• vÄ«satipaccayato atirekaá¹ƒ natthi. tasmÄ• catÄ Ã±Ä• á¹‡asampayuttakÄ• makusala cittesu viya imesu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• veditabbÄ• .

evaá¹ƒ sante kasmÄ• tÄ• ni cittÄ• ni kÄ• macittato mahanta tarÄ• ni ca paá¹‡Ä«tatarÄ• ni
Ä• sevanamahantattÄ• . tÄ• ni hi cittÄ• ni bhÄ• vanÄ• kammavisesehi \Be 501/ siddhÄ• ni h Ä• sevanapaccayo mahanto hoti. Ä• sevana mahantattÄ• ca indriyapaccayopi jhÄ• napacc vÄ• tesaá¹ƒ paccayÄ• mahantÄ• honti. paccayÄ• naá¹ƒ uparÅ«pari mahantattÄ• tÄ• ni ci kÄ• macittato mahantatarÄ• ni ca paá¹‡Ä«tatarÄ• ni ca hontÄ«ti.

cittuppÄ• desu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo niá¹-á¹-hito.

rÅ«pakalÄ• pesu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo

rÅ«pakalÄ• pesu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo vuccate. aá¹-á¹-havÄ«sati rÅ«pÄ• ni nÄ• ma, ca pathavÄ« Ä• po tejo vÄ• yo. paÃ±ca pasÄ• darÅ«pÄ• ni cakkhu sotaá¹ƒ ghÄ• naá¹ƒ jitha kÄ rÅ«paá¹ƒ saddo gandho raso phoá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ. tattha phoá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ tividhaá¹ƒ patha tejophoá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ vÄ• yophoá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ. dve bhÄ• varÅ«pÄ• ni itthibhÄ• varÅ«paá jÄ«vitarÅ«paá¹ƒ, ekaá¹ƒ hadayarÅ«paá¹ƒ. ekaá¹ƒ Ä• hÄ• rarÅ«paá¹ƒ. ekaá¹ƒ Ä• kÄ• sadhÄ viÃ±Ã±attirÅ«pÄ• ni kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±attirÅ«paá¹ƒ vacÄ«viÃ±Ã±atti rÅ«paá¹ƒ. tÄ«á¹‡i vikÄ• rar kammaÃ±Ã±atÄ• . cattÄ• ri lakkhaá¹‡arÅ«pÄ• ni upacayo santati jaratÄ• aniccatÄ• .

tattha cha rÅ«padhammÄ• rÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ paccayÄ• honti cattÄ• ri mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ Ä• hÄ• rarÅ«paÃ±ca. tattha cattÄ• ri mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• ni aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa paÃ±cahi pa sahajÄ• tena ca aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±ena ca nissayena ca atthiyÄ• ca avigatenaca. sahajÄ• tÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±avajjitehi catÅ«hi paccayehi paccayÄ• honti. jÄ«vitarÅ«paá¹ƒ sahajÄ• tÄ• n indriyapaccayena paccayo. Ä• hÄ• rarÅ«paá¹ƒ sahajÄ• tÄ• naÃ±ca asahajÄ• tÄ• naÃ±ca sa ajjhattarÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• hÄ• rapaccayena paccayo.

tattheva terasa rÅ«padhammÄ• nÄ• madhammÄ• naá¹ƒ visesapaccayÄ• honti, paÃ±capa gocararÅ«pÄ• ni ca hadayavatthurÅ«paÃ±ca. tattha paÃ±ca pasÄ• darÅ«pÄ• ni paÃ±canna mÄ• taro viya puttakÄ• naá¹ƒ vatthupurejÄ• tena ca vatthupurejÄ• tindriyena ca vatthu pure paccayÄ• honti. satta gocararÅ«pÄ• ni paÃ±cannaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ tissan pitaro viya puttakÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡apurejÄ• tena paccayÄ• honti. hadayavatthurÅ«pa manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ rukkho viya rukkhadevatÄ• naá¹ƒ yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ \Be 50
sahajÄ• tanissayena pavattikÄ• le vatthupurejÄ• tena ca vatthupurejÄ• tavippayuttena ca pa

tevÄ«sati rÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• . tattha ekÄ• ya rajjuyÄ• bandhitÄ• naá¹ƒ kesÄ• naá¹ƒ kesakalÄ tiá¹‡akalÄ• po viya ekena jÄ• tirÅ«pena bandhitÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ kalÄ• po pa nÄ• ma.

tattha cattÄ• ri mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• ni vaá¹‡á¹‡o gandho raso ojÄ• ti ime aá¹-á¹-ha dhammÄ• e nÄ• ma, sabbamÅ«laá¹-á¹-hakanti ca vuccati.

nava kammajarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• , --- jÄ«vitanavakaá¹ƒ vatthudasakaá¹ƒ kÄ• ya dasakaá¹ƒ itt pumbhÄ• vadasakaá¹ƒ cakkhudasakaá¹ƒ sotadasakaá¹ƒ ghÄ• nadasakaá¹ƒ jithadasakaá¹ƒ sabbamÅ«laá¹-á¹-hakamevajÄ«vitarÅ«pena saha jÄ«vitanavakaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. etadeva kamm hoti. mÅ«lanavakameva yathÄ• kkamaá¹ƒ hadayavatthurÅ«pÄ• dÄ«hi aá¹-á¹-harÅ«pehi sah aá¹-á¹-hadasakÄ• ni bhavati. tattha jÄ«vitanavakaÃ±ca kÄ• yadasakaÃ±ca bhÄ• vadasakÄ• sakala kÄ• ye pavattanti. tattha jÄ«vitanavakanti pÄ• cakaggi ca kÄ• yaggi ca vuccati. pÄ• c pÄ• cakatejo koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so, so Ä• mÄ• saye pavattitvÄ• asitapÄ«takhÄ• yitasÄ• yitÄ• ni p sakalakÄ• yabyÄ• pako usmÄ• tejo koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so, so sakala kÄ• ye pavattitvÄ• pittasemh vippasannÄ• ni karoti. tesaá¹ƒ dvinnaá¹ƒ visamavuttiyÄ• sati sattÄ• bahvÄ• bÄ• dhÄ• hon appÄ• bÄ• dhÄ• . tadubhayaá¹ƒ jÄ«vitanavakaá¹ƒ sattÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• yuá¹ƒ sampÄ• deti. vaá¹ kÄ• yadasakaá¹ƒ sakalakÄ• ye sukhasamphassa dukkhasamphassÄ• ni sampÄ• deti. bhÄ• itthÄ• kÄ• re sampÄ• deti. purisÄ• naá¹ƒ sabbe purisÄ• kÄ• re sampÄ• dehi. sesÄ• ni vatth padesadasakÄ• ni nÄ• ma. tattha vatthudasakaá¹ƒ hadayakosabbhantare pavattitvÄ• sattÄ sucintitaducintitÄ• ni sampÄ• deti. cakkhudasakÄ• dÄ«ni cattÄ• ri dasakÄ• ni cakkhuguá¸·a jithatalesu pavattitvÄ• dassana savana ghÄ• yana sÄ• yanÄ• ni sampÄ• deti.

aá¹-á¹-ha cittajarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• , sabbamÅ«laá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ saddanavakaá¹ƒ kÄ• ya viÃ±Ã saddavacÄ«viÃ±Ã±attidasakanti cattÄ• ro mÅ«lakalÄ• pÄ• ca teyeva lahutÄ• mudutÄ• ka tÄ«hi vikÄ• ra rÅ«pehi saha cattÄ• ro savikÄ• rakalÄ• pÄ• ca.

tattha \Be 503/ sarÄ«radhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ visamappavattikÄ• le gilÄ• nassa mÅ«la kalÄ• pÄ• n tassa sarÄ«rarÅ«pÄ• ni garÅ«ni vÄ• thaddhÄ• ni vÄ• akammaÃ±Ã±Ä• ni vÄ• honti, yathÄ pavattetuá¹ƒ aá¹…ga paccaá¹…gÄ• nipi cÄ• letuá¹ƒ vacanaá¹ƒpi kathetuá¹ƒ dukkho hoti. sa samappavattikÄ• le pana agilÄ• nassa garuthaddhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ sarÄ«radosÄ• naá¹ƒ abhÄ• tesu ca cittaá¹…gavasena kÄ• yaá¹…ga calane dve kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±attikalÄ• pÄ• pavattanti.
vacanasaddappavattikÄ• le dve vacÄ«viÃ±Ã±attikalÄ• pÄ• , cittavaseneva akkharavaá¹‡á¹‡ hasanarodanÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ avacanasaddÄ• naá¹ƒ mukhato pavattikÄ• le dve saddakalÄ• pÄ pavattanti.

cattÄ• ro utujarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• , sabbamÅ«laá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ saddanavakanti dve mÅ«lakalÄ• savikÄ• rakalÄ• pÄ• ca. tattha ayaá¹ƒ kÄ• yo yÄ• vajÄ«vaá¹ƒ iriyÄ• pathasotaá¹ƒ anugacch iriyÄ• pathanÄ• nattaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca imasmiá¹ƒ kÄ• ye khaá¹‡e khaá¹‡e dhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ sama paÃ±Ã±Ä• yanti. tathÄ• utunÄ• nattaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca Ä• hÄ• ranÄ• nattaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca vÄ• tÄ•

paá¹-icca kÄ• yaá¹…ga parihÄ• ranÄ• nattaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca attÅ«pakkamaparÅ«pakkamanÄ• visamappavattikÄ• le dve mÅ«lakalÄ• pÄ• eva pavattanti, samappavattikÄ• le dve savikÄ• saddakalÄ• pÄ• cittajasaddato paramparasaddesu ca aÃ±Ã±esu loke nÄ• nappakÄ• rasad

dve Ä• hÄ• rajarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• , --- sabbamÅ«laá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ savikÄ• ranti. ime dve kalÄ• asappÄ• yena vÄ• Ä• hÄ• rena jÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ samarÅ«pavisamarÅ«pÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena vedi

Ä• kÄ• sadhÄ• tu ca lakkhaá¹‡arÅ«pÄ• nicÄ• ti paÃ±carÅ«pÄ• ni kalÄ• pa muttÄ• ni honti. kalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ antarÄ• pariccheda mattattÄ• kalÄ• pamuttÄ• hoti. lakkhaá¹‡arÅ«pÄ• ni kalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ saá¹…khatabhÄ• vajÄ• nanatthÄ• ya lakkhaá¹‡amattattÄ• kalÄ• pa muttÄ

ime tevÄ«sati kalÄ• pÄ• ajjhattasantÄ• ne labbhanti. bahiddhÄ• santÄ• ne pana dve utuja labbhanti. tattha dve rÅ«pa santÄ• nÄ• ni ajjhattasantÄ• naÃ±ca bahiddhÄ• santÄ• naÃ±ca nÄ• ma sattasantÄ• naá¹ƒ vuccati. bahiddhÄ• santÄ• naá¹ƒ nÄ• ma pathavÄ«pabbatanadÄ vuccati. tattha ajjhattasantÄ• ne aá¹-á¹-havÄ«sati rÅ«pÄ• ni tevÄ«sati rÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• ni lab tattha \Be 504/ paá¹-isandhinÄ• madhammÄ• paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e kammajarÅ«pakalÄ• p honti catÅ«hi mahÄ• sahajÄ• tehi ca vipÄ• kena ca vippayuttena ca. hadayavatthurÅ«passa sattadhÄ• paccayÄ• honti. tesveva nÄ• madhammesu hetudhammÄ• hetubhÄ• vena, ceta Ä• hÄ• radhammÄ• Ä• hÄ• rabhÄ• vena, indriya dhammÄ• indriyabhÄ• vena, jhÄ• nadhar magga bhÄ• venÄ• ti yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ chadhÄ• paccayÄ• honti. atÄ«tÄ• ni pana kusalÄ• ku paccayÄ• honti kammapaccayena, paá¹-hamabhavaá¹…gÄ• dikÄ• pacchÄ• jÄ• tÄ• pavat kammajarÅ«pa kalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ ekadhÄ• paccayÄ• honti pacchÄ• jÄ• tena. ettha ca pacch pacchÄ• jÄ• tajÄ• tikÄ• paccayÄ• gahitÄ• honti. atÄ«tÄ• ni ca kammÄ• ni ekadhÄ• va pac nÄ• madhammÄ• kammajarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ cuddasahi paccayehi pac labbhanti Ä• rammaá¹‡aÃ±ca adhipati ca anantaraÃ±ca samanantaraÃ±ca upanissayo ca p sampayutto ca natthi ca vigato ca.

pavattikÄ• le rÅ«pajanakÄ• nÄ• madhammÄ• attanÄ• sahajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ cittajarÅ«pakalÄ honti catÅ«hi mahÄ• saha jÄ• tehi ca vippayuttena ca. tesveva nÄ• madhammesu hetudhar adhipatidhammÄ• adhipatibhÄ• vena, cetanÄ• kammabhÄ• vena, vipÄ• kadhammÄ• vipÄ Ä• hÄ• ra bhÄ• vena, indriyadhammÄ• indriyabhÄ• vena, jhÄ• nadhammÄ• jhÄ• nabhÄ• v yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hadhÄ• paccayÄ• honti. pacchÄ• jÄ• tÄ• sabbe nÄ• madhammÄ• cittajarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ ekadhÄ• paccayÄ• honti pacchÄ• jÄ• tena. evaá¹ƒ nÄ• madh kalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ cuddasahi paccayehi paccayÄ• honti. idhapi dasa paccay Ä• rammaá¹‡aÃ±ca anantaraÃ±ca samanantaraÃ±ca aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aÃ±ca upanissayo ca sampayutto ca natthi ca vigato ca.

paá¹-isandhicittassa á¹-hitikÄ• lato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya pavattikÄ• le sabbepi nÄ• madhammÄ• utujarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• naÃ±ca Ä• hÄ• rajarÅ«pa kalÄ• pÄ• naÃ±ca ekadhÄ• paccayÄ• hon pacchÄ• jÄ• tavacanena cattÄ• ro pacchÄ• jÄ• tajÄ• tikÄ• gahitÄ• honti, sesÄ• vÄ«sati pa sabbesu pana tevÄ«satiyÄ• rÅ«pakalÄ• pesucattÄ• romahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±a catÅ«hi mahÄ• saha jÄ• tehi ca aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±ena ca, sahajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• rÅ«pÄ catÅ«hi mahÄ• sahajÄ• tehi \Be 505/. Ä• hÄ• rarÅ«paá¹ƒ sahajÄ• tÄ• naÃ±ca asahajÄ• tÄ• ajjhattarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• hÄ• ra paccayena paccayo hoti. navasu kammajarÅ«paka sahajÄ• tÄ• nameva rÅ«pÄ• naá¹ƒ indriyapaccayena paccayo hoti. evaá¹ƒ ajjhattarÅ«padha ajjhattarÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ sattadhÄ• paccayÄ• honti. bahiddhÄ• rÅ«padhammÄ• pan dvinnaá¹ƒ utujarÅ«pakalÄ• pÄ• naá¹ƒ paÃ±cadhÄ• paccayÄ• hontÄ«ti.

rÅ«pakalÄ• pesu paccayaghaá¹-anÄ• nayo niá¹-á¹-hito.

ettha ca paá¹-á¹-hÄ• nasaddassa attho vattabbo. padhÄ• naá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• nanti paá¹-á¹-hÄ• na pamukhaá¹ƒ, á¹-hÄ• nanti paccayo, pamukhapaccayo mukhyapaccayo ekantapaccayoti vut paccayo ekantapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca vattabbo.

duvidhaÃ±hi paccayuppannaá¹ƒ mukhyapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ nissandapaccayuppannanti. ta nÄ• ma mÅ«lapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ, nissandapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma parampara paccayu mÅ«lapaccayuppannameva ekantapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. taÃ±hi attano paccaye sati e nuppajjati. paramparapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ pana anekantapaccayuppannaá¹ƒnÄ• ma, taÃ±hi uppajjati vÄ• , na vÄ• uppajjati. tattha ekantapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca so paccayo ekan eva imasmiá¹ƒ mahÄ• pakaraá¹‡e vutto. tato eva ayaá¹ƒ catuvÄ«satipaccayagaá¹‡o ca ima paá¹-á¹-hÄ• nanti vuccati.

tattha ekassa purisassa dhanadhaÃ±Ã±atthÄ• ya lobho uppajjati. so lobhavasena uá¹-á¹-hÄ ekasmiá¹ƒ padese khettÄ• ni karoti, vatthÅ«ni karoti, uyyÄ• nÄ• ni karoti. tesu sampajjamÄ• dhanadhaÃ±Ã±Ä• ni labhitvÄ• attanÄ• ca paribhuÃ±jati, puttadÄ• re ca poseti, puÃ±Ã±Ä• puÃ±Ã±aphalÄ• ni ca Ä• yatiá¹ƒ paccanubhavissati. tattha lobhasaha jÄ• tÄ• ni nÄ• marÅ«p nÄ• ma. tato paraá¹ƒ yÄ• va Ä• yatiá¹ƒ bhavesu puÃ±Ã±aphalÄ• ni paccanubhoti, tÄ• va up tassa lobhassa nissandapaccayuppannÄ• ni nÄ• ma. tesu dvÄ«su paccayuppannesu mukh paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne vuttaá¹ƒ. nissandapaccayuppannaá¹ƒ pana suttantanayena kathetabbaá¹ƒ.
imasmiá¹ƒ sati idaá¹ƒ hoti, imassa uppÄ• dÄ• idaá¹ƒ uppajjatÄ«ti evarÅ«po paccayanayo. a tayo dhammÄ• sakalassa sattalokassapi saá¹…khÄ• ralokassapi okÄ• sa lokassapi vipattiy nÄ• ma. alobho adoso amohoti \Be 506/ tayo dhammÄ• sampattiyÄ• mÅ«laá¹-á¹-hena hetu nayo sabbesu paá¹-á¹-hÄ• napaccayesu yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ veditabbo. evaÃ±ca sati loke sabb catuvÄ«satiyÄ• paccayÄ• naá¹ƒ mukhya paccayuppannena saddhiá¹ƒ nissandapaccayupp

ettÄ• vatÄ• paccayÄ• naá¹ƒ atthadÄ«panÄ• paccayÄ• naá¹ƒ sabhÄ• gasaá¹…gaho pacca kaá¹‡á¸• ehi paricchinnÄ• paá¹-á¹-hÄ• nuddesa dÄ«panÄ« niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• hoti.

mrammaraá¹-á¹-he mauá¹ƒjvÄ• nagare leá¸• Ä«tÄ«araÃ±Ã±avihÄ• ravÄ• sinÄ• mahÄ• th paccayuddesadÄ«panÄ«.

<!-- vvvv

ÉÍÍÍ

will guide and free one's life And the whole world, from suffering.If both virtues are in co righteous harmony in the mind of any person, They will be the "Virtues of Enlightenmen THOUGHTSMan is a creative being,Yet, man is tied and enfoldedBy his own thoughts.But n imagination,Contemplation and obsrvationTo enable his mind to be one-pointed.When thoug will appearAnd truth is not thoughts.----------Let us not be heedlessLet not time and lif away uselessly Try to always contemplate one's self.If we diligently train ourselves,We can l refugeTo both ourselves and to others.---------- end of f

Etext Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms
by Fa-Hien translated and annotated by James Legge

A RECORD OF BUDDHISTIC KINGDOMS

Being an Account by the Chinese Monk Fa-Hien of his Travels in India and Ceylon (A.D. 399-414) in Search of the Buddhist Books of Discipline

Translated and annotated with a Corean recension of the Chinese text

BY

JAMES LEGGE

PREFACE

Several times during my long residence in Hong Kong I endeavoured to read through the "Narrative of Fa-hien;" but though interested with the graphic details of much of the work, its columns bristled so constantly--now with his phonetic representations of Sanskrit words, and now with his substitution for them of their meanings in Chinese characters, and I was, moreover, so much occupied with my own special labours on the Confucian Classics, that my success was far from satisfactory. When Dr. Eitel's "Handbook for the Student of Chinese Buddhism" appeared in 1870, the difficulty occasioned by the Sanskrit words and names was removed, but the other difficulty remained; and I was not able to look into the book again for several years. Nor had I much inducement to do so in the two copies of it which I had been able to procure, on poor paper, and printed from blocks badly cut at first, and so worn with use as to yield books the reverse of attractive in their appearance to the student.

In the meantime I kept studying the subject of Buddhism from various sources; and in 1878 began to lecture, here in Oxford, on the Travels with my Davis Chinese scholar, who was at the same time Boden Sanskrit scholar. As we went on, I wrote out a translation in English for my own satisfaction of nearly half the narrative. In the beginning of last year I made Fa-hien again the subject of lecture, wrote out a second translation, independent of the former, and pushed on till I had completed the whole.

The want of a good and clear text had been supplied by my friend, Mr. Bunyiu Nanjio, who sent to me from Japan a copy, the text of which is appended to the translation and notes, and of the nature of which some account is given in the Introduction, and towards the end of this Preface.

The present work consists of three parts: the Translation of Fa-hien's Narrative of his Travels; copious Notes; and the Chinese Text of my copy from Japan.

It is for the Translation that I hold myself more especially responsible. Portions of it were written out three times, and the whole of it twice. While preparing my own version I made frequent reference to previous translations:--those of M. Abel Remusat, "Revu, complete, et augmente d'eclaircissements nouveaux par MM. Klaproth et Landress" (Paris, 1836); of the Rev. Samuel Beal (London, 1869), and his revision of it, prefixed to his "Buddhist Records of the Western World" (Trubner's Oriental Series, 1884); and of Mr. Herbert A. Giles, of H.M.'s Consular Service in China (1877). To these I have to add a series of articles on "Fa-hsien and his English Translators," by Mr. T. Watters, British Consul at I-Chang (China Review, 1879, 1880). Those articles are of the highest value, displaying accuracy of Chinese scholarship and an extensive knowledge of Buddhism. I have regretted that Mr. Watters, while reviewing others, did not himself write out and publish a version of the whole of Fa-hien's narrative. If he had done so, I should probably have thought that, on the whole, nothing more remained to be done for the distinguished Chinese pilgrim in the way of translation. Mr. Watters had to judge of the comparative merits of the versions of Beal and Giles, and pronounce on the many points of contention between them. I have endeavoured to eschew those matters, and have seldom made remarks of a critical nature in defence of renderings of my own.

The Chinese narrative runs on without any break. It was Klaproth who divided Remusat's translation into forty chapters. The division is helpful to the reader, and I have followed it excepting in three or four instances. In the reprinted Chinese text the chapters are separated by a circle in the column.

In transliterating the names of Chinese characters I have generally followed the spelling of Morrison rather than the Pekinese, which is now in vogue. We cannot tell exactly what the pronunciation of them was, about fifteen hundred years ago, in the time of Fa-hien; but the southern mandarin must be a shade nearer to it than that of Peking at the present day. In transliterating the Indian names I have for the most part followed Dr. Eitel, with such modification as seemed good and in harmony with growing usage.

For the Notes I can do little more than claim the merit of selection and condensation. My first object in them was to explain what in the text required explanation to an English reader. All Chinese texts, and Buddhist texts especially, are new to foreign students. One has to do for them what many hundreds of the ablest scholars in Europe have done for the Greek and Latin Classics during several hundred years, and what the thousands of critics and commentators have been doing of our Sacred Scriptures for nearly eighteen centuries. There are few predecessors in the field of Chinese literature into whose labours translators of the present century can enter. This will be received, I hope, as a sufficient apology for the minuteness and length of some of the notes. A second object in them was to teach myself first, and then others, something of the history and doctrines of Buddhism. I have thought that they might be learned better in connexion with a lively narrative like that of Fa-hien than by reading didactic descriptions and argumentative books. Such has been my own experience. The books which I have consulted for these notes have been many, besides Chinese works. My principal help has been the full and masterly handbook of Eitel, mentioned already, and often referred to as E.H. Spence Hardy's "Eastern Monachism" (E.M.) and "Manual of Buddhism" (M.B.) have been constantly in hand, as well as Rhys Davids' Buddhism, published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, his Hibbert Lectures, and his Buddhist Suttas in the Sacred Books of the East, and other writings. I need not mention other authorities, having endeavoured always to specify them where I make use of them. My proximity and access to the Bodleian Library and the Indian Institute have been of great advantage.

I may be allowed to say that, so far as my own study of it has gone, I think there are many things in the vast field of Buddhist literature which still require to be carefully handled. How far, for instance, are we entitled to regard the present Sutras as genuine and sufficiently accurate copies of those which were accepted by the Councils before our Christian era? Can anything be done to trace the rise of the legends and marvels of Sakyamuni's history, which were current so early (as it seems to us) as the time of Fa-hien, and which startle us so frequently by similarities between them and narratives in our Gospels? Dr. Hermann Oldenberg, certainly a great authority on Buddhistic subjects, says that "a biography of Buddha has not come down to us from ancient times, from the age of the Pali texts; and, we can safely say, no such biography existed then" ("Buddha--His Life, His Doctrine, His Order," as translated by Hoey, p. 78). He has also (in the same work, pp. 99, 416, 417) come to the conclusion that the hitherto unchallenged tradition that the Buddha was "a king's son" must be given up. The name "king's son" (in Chinese {...}), always used of the Buddha, certainly requires to be understood in the highest sense. I am content myself to wait for further information on these and other points, as the result of prolonged and careful research.

Dr. Rhys Davids has kindly read the proofs of the Translation and Notes, and I most certainly thank him for doing so, for his many valuable corrections in the Notes, and for other suggestions which I have received from him. I may not always think on various points exactly as he does, but I am not more forward than he is to say with Horace,--

"Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri."

I have referred above, and also in the Introduction, to the Corean text of Fa-hien's narrative, which I received from Mr. Nanjio. It is on the whole so much superior to the better-known texts, that I determined to attempt to reproduce it at the end of the little volume, so far as our resources here in Oxford would permit. To do so has not been an easy task. The two fonts of Chinese types in the Clarendon Press were prepared primarily for printing the translation of our Sacred Scriptures, and then extended so as to be available for printing also the Confucian Classics; but the Buddhist work necessarily requires many types not found in them, while many other characters in the Corean recension are peculiar in their forms, and some are what Chinese dictionaries denominate "vulgar." That we have succeeded so well as we have done is owing chiefly to the intelligence, ingenuity, and untiring attention of Mr. J. C. Pembrey, the Oriental Reader.

The pictures that have been introduced were taken from a superb edition of a History of Buddha, republished recently at Hang-chau in Cheh-kiang, and profusely illustrated in the best style of Chinese art. I am indebted for the use of it to the Rev. J. H. Sedgwick, University Chinese Scholar.

James Legge.

Oxford:
June, 1886.

[PICTURE: SKETCH MAP OF FA-HIEN'S TRAVELS]

The accompanying Sketch-Map, taken in connexion with the notes on the different places in the Narrative, will give the reader a sufficiently accurate knowledge of Fa-hien's route.

There is no difficulty in laying it down after he crossed the Indus from east to west into the Punjab, all the principal places, at which he touched or rested, having been determined by Cunningham and other Indian geographers and archaeologists. Most of the places from Ch'ang-an to Bannu have also been identified. Woo-e has been put down as near Kutcha, or Kuldja, in 43d 25s N., 81d 15s E. The country of K'ieh-ch'a was probably Ladak, but I am inclined to think that the place where the traveller crossed the Indus and entered it must have been further east than Skardo. A doubt is intimated on page 24 as to the identification of T'o-leih with Darada, but Greenough's "Physical and Geological Sketch-Map of British India" shows "Dardu Proper," all lying on the east of the Indus, exactly in the position where the Narrative would lead us to place it. The point at which Fa-hien recrossed the Indus into Udyana on the west of it is unknown. Takshasila, which he visited, was no doubt on the west of the river, and has been incorrectly accepted as the Taxila of Arrian in the Punjab. It should be written Takshasira, of which the Chinese phonetisation will allow;--see a note of Beal in his "Buddhist Records of the Western World," i. 138.

We must suppose that Fa-hien went on from Nan-king to Ch'ang-an, but the Narrative does not record the fact of his doing so.

INTRODUCTION

Life of Fa-Hien; Genuineness and Integrity of the Text of his Narrative; Number of the Adherents of Buddhism.

1. Nothing of great importance is known about Fa-hien in addition to what may be gathered from his own record of his travels. I have read the accounts of him in the "Memoirs of Eminent Monks," compiled in A.D. 519, and a later work, the "Memoirs of Marvellous Monks," by the third emperor of the Ming dynasty (A.D. 1403-1424), which, however, is nearly all borrowed from the other; and all in them that has an appearance of verisimilitude can be brought within brief compass.

His surname, they tell us, was Kung, and he was a native of Wu-yang in P'ing-Yang, which is still the name of a large department in Shan-hsi. He had three brothers older than himself; but when they all died before shedding their first teeth, his father devoted him to the service of the Buddhist society, and had him entered as a Sramanera, still keeping him at home in the family. The little fellow fell dangerously ill, and the father sent him to the monastery, where he soon got well and refused to return to his parents.

When he was ten years old, his father died; and an uncle, considering the widowed solitariness and helplessness of the mother, urged him to renounce the monastic life, and return to her, but the boy replied, "I did not quit the family in compliance with my father's wishes, but because I wished to be far from the dust and vulgar ways of life. This is why I chose monkhood." The uncle approved of his words and gave over urging him. When his mother also died, it appeared how great had been the affection for her of his fine nature; but after her burial he returned to the monastery.

On one occasion he was cutting rice with a score or two of his fellow-disciples, when some hungry thieves came upon them to take away their grain by force. The other Sramaneras all fled, but our young hero stood his ground, and said to the thieves, "If you must have the grain, take what you please. But, Sirs, it was your former neglect of charity which brought you to your present state of destitution; and now, again, you wish to rob others. I am afraid that in the coming ages you will have still greater poverty and distress;--I am sorry for you beforehand." With these words he followed his companions into the monastery, while the thieves left the grain and went away, all the monks, of whom there were several hundred, doing homage to his conduct and courage.

When he had finished his noviciate and taken on him the obligations of the full Buddhist orders, his earnest courage, clear intelligence, and strict regulation of his demeanour were conspicuous; and soon after, he undertook his journey to India in search of complete copies of the Vinaya-pitaka. What follows this is merely an account of his travels in India and return to China by sea, condensed from his own narrative, with the addition of some marvellous incidents that happened to him, on his visit to the Vulture Peak near Rajagriha.

It is said in the end that after his return to China, he went to the capital (evidently Nanking), and there, along with the Indian Sramana Buddha-bhadra, executed translations of some of the works which he had obtained in India; and that before he had done all that he wished to do in this way, he removed to King-chow (in the present Hoo-pih), and died in the monastery of Sin, at the age of eighty-eight, to the great sorrow of all who knew him. It is added that there is another larger work giving an account of his travels in various countries.

Such is all the information given about our author, beyond what he himself has told us. Fa-hien was his clerical name, and means "Illustrious in the Law," or "Illustrious master of the Law." The Shih which often precedes it is an abbreviation of the name of Buddha as Sakyamuni, "the Sakya, mighty in Love, dwelling in Seclusion and Silence," and may be taken as equivalent to Buddhist. It is sometimes said to have belonged to "the eastern Tsin dynasty" (A.D. 317-419), and sometimes to "the Sung," that is, the Sung dynasty of the House of Liu (A.D. 420-478). If he became a full monk at the age of twenty, and went to India when he was twenty-five, his long life may have been divided pretty equally between the two dynasties.

2. If there were ever another and larger account of Fa-hien's travels than the narrative of which a translation is now given, it has long ceased to be in existence.

In the Catalogue of the imperial library of the Suy dynasty (A.D. 589-618), the name Fa-hien occurs four times. Towards the end of the last section of it (page 22), after a reference to his travels, his labours in translation at Kin-ling (another name for Nanking), in conjunction with Buddha-bhadra, are described. In the second section, page 15, we find "A Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms;"--with a note, saying that it was the work of the "Sramana, Fa-hien;" and again, on page 13, we have "Narrative of Fa-hien in two Books," and "Narrative of Fa-hien's Travels in one Book." But all these three entries may possibly belong to different copies of the same work, the first and the other two being in separate subdivisions of the Catalogue.

In the two Chinese copies of the narrative in my possession the title is "Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms." In the Japanese or Corean recension subjoined to this translation, the title is twofold; first, "Narrative of the Distinguished Monk, Fa-hien;" and then, more at large, "Incidents of Travels in India, by the Sramana of the Eastern Tsin, Fa-hien, recorded by himself."

There is still earlier attestation of the existence of our little work than the Suy Catalogue. The Catalogue Raisonne of the imperial library of the present dynasty (chap. 71) mentions two quotations from it by Le Tao-yuen, a geographical writer of the dynasty of the Northern Wei (A.D. 386-584), one of them containing 89 characters, and the other 276; both of them given as from the "Narrative of Fa-hien."

In all catalogues subsequent to that of Suy our work appears. The evidence for its authenticity and genuineness is all that could be required. It is clear to myself that the "Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms" and the "Narrative of his Travels by Fa-hien" were designations of one and the same work, and that it is doubtful whether any larger work on the same subject was ever current. With regard to the text subjoined to my translation, it was published in Japan in 1779. The editor had before him four recensions of the narrative; those of the Sung and Ming dynasties, with appendixes on the names of certain characters in them; that of Japan; and that of Corea. He wisely adopted the Corean text, published in accordance with a royal rescript in 1726, so far as I can make out; but the different readings of the other texts are all given in top-notes, instead of foot-notes as with us, this being one of the points in which customs in the east and west go by contraries. Very occasionally, the editor indicates by a single character, equivalent to "right" or "wrong," which reading in his opinion is to be preferred. In the notes to the present republication of the Corean text, S stands for Sung, M for Ming, and J for Japanese; R for right, and W for wrong. I have taken the trouble to give all the various readings (amounting to more than 300), partly as a curiosity and to make my text complete, and partly to show how, in the transcription of writings in whatever language, such variations are sure to occur,

"maculae, quas aut incuria fudit,

Aut humana parum cavit nature,"

while on the whole they very slightly affect the meaning of the document.

The editors of the Catalogue Raisonne intimate their doubts of the good taste and reliability of all Fa-hien's statements. It offends them that he should call central India the "Middle Kingdom," and China, which to them was the true and only Middle Kingdom, but "a Border land;"--it offends them as the vaunting language of a Buddhist writer, whereas the reader will see in the expressions only an instance of what Fa-hien calls his "simple straightforwardness."

As an instance of his unreliability they refer to his account of the Buddhism of Khoten, whereas it is well known, they say, that the Khoteners from ancient times till now have been Mohammedans;--as if they could have been so 170 years before Mohammed was born, and 222 years before the year of the Hegira! And this is criticism in China. The Catalogue was ordered by the K'ien-lung emperor in 1722. Between three and four hundred of the "Great Scholars" of the empire were engaged on it in various departments, and thus egregiously ignorant did they show themselves of all beyond the limits of their own country, and even of the literature of that country itself.

Much of what Fa-hien tells his readers of Buddhist miracles and legends is indeed unreliable and grotesque; but we have from him the truth as to what he saw and heard.

3. In concluding this introduction I wish to call attention to some estimates of the number of Buddhists in the world which have become current, believing, as I do, that the smallest of them is much above what is correct.

i. In a note on the first page of his work on the Bhilsa Topes (1854), General Cunningham says: "The Christians number about 270 millions; the Buddhists about 222 millions, who are distributed as follows:-- China 170 millions, Japan 25, Anam 14, Siam 3, Ava 8, Nepal 1, and Ceylon 1; total, 222 millions."

ii. In his article on M. J. Barthelemy Saint Hilaire's "Le Bouddha et sa Religion," republished in his "Chips from a German Workshop," vol. i. (1868), Professor Max Muller (p. 215) says, "The young prince became the founder of a religion which, after more than two thousand years, is still professed by 455 millions of human beings," and he appends the following note: "Though truth is not settled by majorities, it would be interesting to know which religion counts at the present moment the largest numbers of believers. Berghaus, in his 'Physical Atlas,' gives the following division of the human race according to religion:--'Buddhists 31.2 per cent, Christians 30.7, Mohammedans 15.7, Brahmanists 13.4, Heathens 8.7, and Jews 0.3.' As Berghaus does not distinguish the Buddhists in China from the followers of Confucius and Laotse, the first place on the scale really belongs to Christianity. It is difficult to say to what religion a man belongs, as the same person may profess two or three. The emperor himself, after sacrificing according to the ritual of Confucius, visits a Tao-sse temple, and afterwards bows before an image of Fo in a Buddhist chapel. ('Melanges Asiatiques de St. Petersbourg,' vol. ii. p. 374.)"

iii. Both these estimates are exceeded by Dr. T. W. Rhys Davids (intimating also the uncertainty of the statements, and that numbers are no evidence of truth) in the introduction to his "Manual of Buddhism." The Buddhists there appear as amounting in all to 500 millions:--30 millions of Southern Buddhists, in Ceylon, Burma, Siam, Anam, and India (Jains); and 470 millions of North Buddhists, of whom nearly 33 millions are assigned to Japan, and 414,686,974 to the eighteen provinces of China proper. According to him, Christians amount to about 26 per cent of mankind, Hindus to about 13, Mohammedans to about 12 1/2, Buddhists to about 40, and Jews to about 1/2.

In regard to all these estimates, it will be observed that the immense numbers assigned to Buddhism are made out by the multitude of Chinese with which it is credited. Subtract Cunningham's 170 millions of Chinese from his total of 222, and there remains only 52 millions of Buddhists. Subtract Davids' (say) 414 1/2 millions of Chinese from his total of 500, and there remain only 85 1/2 millions for Buddhism. Of the numbers assigned to other countries, as well as of their whole populations, I am in considerable doubt, excepting in the cases of Ceylon and India; but the greatness of the estimates turns upon the immense multitudes said to be in China. I do not know what total population Cunningham allowed for that country, nor on what principal he allotted 170 millions of it to Buddhism;--perhaps he halved his estimate of the whole, whereas Berghaus and Davids allotted to it the highest estimates that have been given of the people.

But we have no certain information of the population of China. At an interview with the former Chinese ambassador, Kwo Sung-tao, in Paris, in 1878, I begged him to write out for me the amount, with the authority for it, and he assured me that it could not be done. I have read probably almost everything that has been published on the subject, and endeavoured by methods of my own to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion;--without reaching a result which I can venture to lay before the public. My impression has been that 400 millions is hardly an exaggeration.

But supposing that we had reliable returns of the whole population, how shall we proceed to apportion that among Confucianists, Taoists, and Buddhists? Confucianism is the orthodoxy of China. The common name for it is Ju Chiao, "the Doctrines held by the Learned Class," entrance into the circle of which is, with a few insignificant exceptions, open to all the people. The mass of them and the masses under their influence are preponderatingly Confucian; and in the observance of ancestral worship, the most remarkable feature of the religion proper of China from the earliest times, of which Confucius was not the author but the prophet, an overwhelming majority are regular and assiduous.

Among "the strange principles" which the emperor of the K'ang-hsi period, in one of his famous Sixteen Precepts, exhorted his people to "discountenance and put away, in order to exalt the correct doctrine," Buddhism and Taoism were both included. If, as stated in the note quoted from Professor Muller, the emperor countenances both the Taoist worship and the Buddhist, he does so for reasons of state;--to please especially his Buddhist subjects in Thibet and Mongolia, and not to offend the many whose superstitious fancies incline to Taoism.

When I went out and in as a missionary among the Chinese people for about thirty years, it sometimes occurred to me that only the inmates of their monasteries and the recluses of both systems should be enumerated as Buddhists and Taoists; but I was in the end constrained to widen that judgment, and to admit a considerable following of both among the people, who have neither received the tonsure nor assumed the yellow top. Dr. Eitel, in concluding his discussion of this point in his "Lecture on Buddhism, an Event in History," says: "It is not too much to say that most Chinese are theoretically Confucianists, but emotionally Buddhists or Taoists. But fairness requires us to add that, though the mass of the people are more or less influenced by Buddhist doctrines, yet the people, as a whole, have no respect for the Buddhist church, and habitually sneer at Buddhist priests." For the "most" in the former of these two sentences I would substitute "nearly all;" and between my friend's "but" and "emotionally" I would introduce "many are," and would not care to contest his conclusion farther. It does seem to me preposterous to credit Buddhism with the whole of the vast population of China, the great majority of whom are Confucianists. My own opinion is, that its adherents are not so many as those even of Mohammedanism, and that instead of being the most numerous of the religions (so called) of the world, it is only entitled to occupy the fifth place, ranking below Christianity, Confucianism, Brahmanism, and Mohammedanism, and followed, some distance off, by Taoism. To make a table of per-centages of mankind, and assign to each system its proportion, is to seem to be wise where we are deplorably ignorant; and, moreover, if our means of information were much better than they are, our figures would merely show the outward adherence. A fractional per-centage might tell more for one system than a very large integral one for another.

THE

TRAVELS OF FA-HIEN

or

RECORD OF BUDDHISTIC KINGDOMS

CHAPTER I

FROM CH'ANG-GAN TO THE SANDY DESERT

Fa-hien had been living in Ch'ang-gan.[1] Deploring the mutilated and imperfect state of the collection of the Books of Discipline, in the second year of the period Hwang-che, being the Ke-hae year of the cycle,[2] he entered into an engagement with Kwuy-king, Tao-ching, Hwuy-ying, and Hwuy-wei,[3] that they should go to India and seek for the Disciplinary Rules.[4]

After starting from Ch'ang-gan, they passed through Lung,[5] and came to the kingdom of K'een-kwei,[6] where they stopped for the summer retreat.[7] When that was over, they went forward to the kingdom of Now-t'an,[8] crossed the mountain of Yang-low, and reached the emporium of Chang-yih.[9] There they found the country so much disturbed that travelling on the roads was impossible for them. Its king, however, was very attentive to them, kept them (in his capital), and acted the part of their danapati.[10]

Here they met with Che-yen, Hwuy-keen, Sang-shao, Pao-yun, and Sang-king;[11] and in pleasant association with them, as bound on the same journey with themselves, they passed the summer retreat (of that year)[12] together, resuming after it their travelling, and going on to T'un-hwang,[13] (the chief town) in the frontier territory of defence extending for about 80 le from east to west, and about 40 from north to south. Their company, increased as it had been, halted there for some days more than a month, after which Fa-hien and his four friends started first in the suite of an envoy,[14] having separated

(for a time) from Pao-yun and his associates.

Le Hao,[15] the prefect of T'un-hwang, had supplied them with the means of crossing the desert (before them), in which there are many evil demons and hot winds. (Travellers) who encounter them perish all to a man. There is not a bird to be seen in the air above, nor an animal on the ground below. Though you look all round most earnestly to find where you can cross, you know not where to make your choice, the only mark and indication being the dry bones of the dead (left upon the sand).[16]

NOTES

[1] Ch'ang-gan is still the name of the principal district (and its city) in the department of Se-gan, Shen-se. It had been the capital of the first empire of Han (B.C. 202-A.D. 24), as it subsequently was that of Suy (A.D. 589-618). The empire of the eastern Tsin, towards the close of which Fa-hien lived, had its capital at or near Nan-king, and Ch'ang-gan was the capital of the principal of the three Ts'in kingdoms, which, with many other minor ones, maintained a semi-independence of Tsin, their rulers sometimes even assuming the title of emperor.

[2] The period Hwang-che embraced from A.D. 399 to 414, being the greater portion of the reign of Yao Hing of the After Ts'in, a powerful prince. He adopted Hwang-che for the style of his reign in 399, and the cyclical name of that year was Kang-tsze. It is not possible at this distance of time to explain, if it could be explained, how Fa-hien came to say that Ke-hae was the second year of the period. It seems most reasonable to suppose that he set out on his pilgrimage in A.D. 399, the cycle name of which was Ke-hae, as {.}, the second year, instead of {.}, the first, might easily creep into the text. In the "Memoirs of Eminent Monks" it is said that our author started in the third year of the period Lung-gan of the eastern Tsin, which was A.D. 399.

[3] These, like Fa-hien itself, are all what we might call "clerical" names, appellations given to the parties as monks or sramanas.

[4] The Buddhist tripitaka or canon consists of three collections, containing, according to Eitel (p. 150), "doctrinal aphorisms (or statements, purporting to be from Buddha himself); works on discipline; and works on metaphysics:"--called sutra, vinaya, and abhidharma; in Chinese, king {.}, leuh {.}, and lun {.}, or texts, laws or rules, and discussions. Dr. Rhys Davids objects to the designation of "metaphysics" as used of the abhidharma works, saying that "they bear much more the relation to 'dharma' which 'by-law' bears to 'law' than that which 'metaphysics' bears to 'physics'" (Hibbert Lectures, p. 49). However this be, it was about the vinaya works that Fa-hien was chiefly concerned. He wanted a good code of the rules for the government of "the Order" in all its internal and external relations.

[5] Lung embraced the western part of Shen-se and the eastern part of Kan-suh. The name remains in Lung Chow, in the extreme west of Shen-se.

[6] K'een-kwei was the second king of "the Western Ts'in." His family was of northern or barbarous origin, from the tribe of the Seen-pe, with the surname of K'eih-fuh. The first king was Kwo-kin, and received his appointment from the sovereign of the chief Ts'in kingdom in 385. He was succeeded in 388 by his brother, the K'een-kwei of the text, who was very prosperous in 398, and took the title of king of Ts'in. Fa-hien would find him at his capital, somewhere in the present department of Lan-chow, Kan-suh.

[7] Under varshas or vashavasana (Pali, vassa; Spence Hardy, vass), Eitel (p. 163) says:--"One of the most ancient institutions of Buddhist discipline, requiring all ecclesiastics to spend the rainy season in a monastery in devotional exercises. Chinese Buddhists naturally substituted the hot season for the rainy (from the 16th day of the 5th to the 15th of the 9th Chinese month)."

[8] During the troubled period of the Tsin dynasty, there were five (usurping) Leang sovereignties in the western part of the empire ({.} {.}). The name Leang remains in the department of Leang-chow in the northern part of Kan-suh. The "southern Leang" arose in 397 under a Tuh-fah Wu-ku, who was succeeded in 399 by a brother, Le-luh-koo; and he again by his brother, the Now-t'an of the text, in 402, who was not yet king therefore when Fa-hien and his friends reached his capital. How he is represented as being so may be accounted for in various ways, of which it is not necessary to write.

[9] Chang-yih is still the name of a district in Kan-chow department, Kan-suh. It is a long way north and west from Lan-chow, and not far from the Great Wall. Its king at this time was, probably, Twan-yeh of "the northern Leang."

[10] Dana is the name for religious charity, the first of the six paramitas, or means of attaining to nirvana; and a danapati is "one who practises dana and thereby crosses {.} the sea of misery." It is given as "a title of honour to all who support the cause of Buddhism by acts of charity, especially to founders and patrons of monasteries;"--see Eitel, p. 29.

[11] Of these pilgrims with their clerical names, the most distinguished was Pao-yun, who translated various Sanskrit works on his return from India, of which only one seems to be now existing. He died in 449. See Nanjio's Catalogue of the Tripitaka, col. 417.

[12] This was the second summer since the pilgrims left Ch'ang-gan. We are now therefore, probably, in A.D. 400.

[13] T'un-hwang (lat. 39d 40s N.; lon. 94d 50s E.) is still the name of one of the two districts constituting the department of Gan-se, the most western of the prefectures of Kan-suh; beyond the termination of the Great Wall.

[14] Who this envoy was, and where he was going, we do not know. The text will not admit of any other translation.

[15] Le Hao was a native of Lung-se, a man of learning, able and kindly in his government. He was appointed governor or prefect of T'un-hwang by the king of "the northern Leang," in 400; and there he sustained himself, becoming by and by "duke of western Leang," till he died in 417.

[16] "The river of sand;" the great desert of Kobi or Gobi; having various other names. It was a great task which the pilgrims had now before them,--to cross this desert. The name of "river" in the Chinese misleads the reader, and he thinks of crossing it as of crossing a stream; but they had to traverse it from east to west. In his "Vocabulary of Proper Names," p. 23, Dr. Porter Smith says:--"It extends from the eastern frontier of Mongolia, south-westward to the further frontier of Turkestan, to within six miles of Ilchi, the chief town of Khoten. It thus comprises some twenty-three degrees of longitude in length, and from three to ten degrees of latitude in breadth, being about 2,100 miles in its greatest length. In some places it is arable. Some idea may be formed of the terror with which this 'Sea of Sand,' with its vast billows of shifting sands, is regarded, from the legend that in one of the storms 360 cities were all buried within the space of twenty-four hours." So also Gilmour's "Among the Mongols," chap. 5.

CHAPTER II

ON TO SHEN-SHEN AND THENCE TO KHOTEN

After travelling for seventeen days, a distance we may calculate of about 1500 le, (the pilgrims) reached the kingdom of Shen-shen,[1] a country rugged and hilly, with a thin and barren soil. The clothes of the common people are coarse, and like those worn in our land of Han,[2] some wearing felt and others coarse serge or cloth of hair;--this was the only difference seen among them. The king professed (our) Law, and there might be in the country more than four thousand monks,[3] who were all students of the hinayana.[4] The common people of this and other kingdoms (in that region), as well as the sramans,[5] all practise the rules of India,[6] only that the latter do so more exactly, and the former more loosely. So (the travellers) found it in all the kingdoms through which they went on their way from this to the west, only that each had its own peculiar barbarous speech.[7] (The monks), however, who had (given up the worldly life) and quitted their families, were all students of Indian books and the Indian language. Here they stayed for about a month, and then proceeded on their journey, fifteen days walking to the north-west bringing them to the country of Woo-e.[8] In this also there were more than four thousand monks, all students of the hinayana. They were very strict in their rules, so that sramans from the territory of Ts'in[9] were all unprepared for their regulations. Fa-hien, through the management of Foo Kung-sun, /maitre d'hotellerie/,[10] was able to remain (with his company in the monastery where they were received) for more than two months, and here they were rejoined by Pao-yun and his friends.[11] (At the end of that time) the people of Woo-e neglected the duties of propriety and righteousness, and treated the strangers in so niggardly a manner that Che-yen, Hwuy-keen, and Hwuy-wei went back towards Kao-ch'ang,[12] hoping to obtain there the means of continuing their journey. Fa-hien and the rest, however, through the liberality of Foo Kung-sun, managed to go straight forward in a south-west direction. They found the country uninhabited as they went along. The difficulties which they encountered in crossing the streams and on their route, and the sufferings which they endured, were unparalleled in human experience, but in the course of a month and five days they succeeded in reaching Yu-teen.[13]

NOTES

[1] An account is given of the kingdom of Shen-shen in the 96th of the Books of the first Han dynasty, down to its becoming a dependency of China, about B.C. 80. The greater portion of that is now accessible to the English reader in a translation by Mr. Wylie in the "Journal of the Anthropological Institute," August, 1880. Mr. Wylie says:-- "Although we may not be able to identify Shen-shen with certainty, yet we have sufficient indications to give an appropriate idea of its position, as being south of and not far from lake Lob." He then goes into an exhibition of those indications, which I need not transcribe. It is sufficient for us to know that the capital city was not far from Lob or Lop Nor, into which in lon. 38d E. the Tarim flows. Fa-hien estimated its distance to be 1500 le from T'un-hwang. He and his companions must have gone more than twenty-five miles a day to accomplish the journey in seventeen days.

[2] This is the name which Fa-hien always uses when he would speak of China, his native country, as a whole, calling it from the great dynasty which had ruled it, first and last, for between four and five centuries. Occasionally, as we shall immediately see, he speaks of "the territory of Ts'in or Ch'in," but intending thereby only the kingdom or Ts'in, having its capital, as described in the first note on the last chapter, in Ch'ang-gan.

[3] So I prefer to translate the character {.} (sang) rather than by "priests." Even in Christianity, beyond the priestly privilege which belongs to all believers, I object to the ministers of any denomination or church calling themselves or being called "priests;" and much more is the name inapplicable to the sramanas or bhikshus of Buddhism which acknowledges no God in the universe, no soul in man, and has no services of sacrifice or prayer in its worship. The only difficulty in the use of "monks" is caused by the members of the sect in Japan which, since the middle of the fifteenth century, has abolished the prohibition against marrying on the part of its ministers, and other prohibitions in diet and dress. Sang and sang-kea represent the Sanskrit sangha, constituted by at least four members, and empowered to hear confession, to grant absolution, to admit persons to holy orders, &c.; secondly, the third constituent of the Buddhistic Trinity, a deification of the /communio sanctorum/, or the Buddhist order. The name is used by our author of the monks collectively or individually as belonging to the class, and may be considered as synonymous with the name sramana, which will immediately claim our attention.

[4] Meaning the "small vehicle, or conveyance." There are in Buddhism the triyana, or "three different means of salvation, i.e. of conveyance across the samsara, or sea of transmigration, to the shores of nirvana. Afterwards the term was used to designate the different phases of development through which the Buddhist dogma passed, known as the mahayana, hinayana, and madhyamayana." "The hinayana is the simplest vehicle of salvation, corresponding to the first of the three degrees of saintship. Characteristics of it are the preponderance of active moral asceticism, and the absence of speculative mysticism and quietism." E. H., pp. 151-2, 45, and 117.

[5] The name for India is here the same as in the former chapter and throughout the book,--T'een-chuh ({.} {.}), the chuh being pronounced, probably, in Fa-hien's time as tuk. How the earliest name for India, Shin-tuk or duk=Scinde, came to be changed into Thien-tuk, it would take too much space to explain. I believe it was done by the Buddhists, wishing to give a good auspicious name to the fatherland of their Law, and calling it "the Heavenly Tuk," just as the Mohammedans call Arabia "the Heavenly region" ({.} {.}), and the court of China itself is called "the Celestial" ({.} {.}).

[6] Sraman may in English take the place of Sramana (Pali, Samana; in Chinese, Sha-man), the name for Buddhist monks, as those who have separated themselves from (left) their families, and quieted their hearts from all intrusion of desire and lust. "It is employed, first, as a general name for ascetics of all demoninations, and, secondly, as a general designation of Buddhistic monks." E. H., pp. 130, 131.

[7] Tartar or Mongolian.

[8] Woo-e has not been identified. Watters ("China Review," viii. 115) says:--"We cannot be far wrong if we place it in Kharaschar, or between that and Kutscha." It must have been a country of considerable size to have so many monks in it.

[9] This means in one sense China, but Fa-hien, in his use of the name, was only thinking of the three Ts'in states of which I have spoken in a previous note; perhaps only of that from the capital of which he had himself set out.

[10] This sentence altogether is difficult to construe, and Mr. Watters, in the "China Review," was the first to disentangle more than one knot in it. I am obliged to adopt the reading of {.} {.} in the Chinese editions, instead of the {.} {.} in the Corean text. It seems clear that only one person is spoken of as assisting the travellers, and his name, as appears a few sentences farther on, was Foo Kung-sun. The {.} {.} which immediately follows the surname Foo {.}, must be taken as the name of his office, corresponding, as the {.} shows, to that of /le maitre d'hotellerie/ in a Roman Catholic abbey. I was once indebted myself to the kind help of such an officer at a monastery in Canton province. The Buddhistic name for him is uddesika=overseer. The Kung-sun that follows his surname indicates that he was descended from some feudal lord in the old times of the Chow dynasty. We know indeed of no ruling house which had the surname of Foo, but its adoption by the grandson of a ruler can be satisfactorily accounted for; and his posterity continued to call themselves Kung-sun, duke or lord's grandson, and so retain the memory of the rank of their ancestor.

[11] Whom they had left behind them at T'un-hwang.

[12] The country of the Ouighurs, the district around the modern Turfan or Tangut.

[13] Yu-teen is better known as Khoten. Dr. P. Smith gives (p. 11) the following description of it:--"A large district on the south-west of the desert of Gobi, embracing all the country south of Oksu and Yarkand, along the northern base of the Kwun-lun mountains, for more than 300 miles from east to west. The town of the same name, now called Ilchi, is in an extensive plain on the Khoten river, in lat. 37d N., and lon. 80d 35s E. After the Tungani insurrection against Chinese rule in 1862, the Mufti Haji Habeeboolla was made governor of Khoten, and held the office till he was murdered by Yakoob Beg, who became for a time the conqueror of all Chinese Turkestan. Khoten produces fine linen and cotton stuffs, jade ornaments, copper, grain, and fruits." The name in Sanskrit is Kustana. (E. H., p. 60).

CHAPTER III

KHOTEN. PROCESSIONS OF IMAGES. THE KING'S NEW MONASTERY.

Yu-teen is a pleasant and prosperous kingdom, with a numerous and flourishing population. The inhabitants all profess our Law, and join together in its religious music for their enjoyment.[1] The monks amount to several myriads, most of whom are students of the mahayana.[2] They all receive their food from the common store.[3] Throughout the country the houses of the people stand apart like (separate) stars, and each family has a small tope[4] reared in front of its door. The smallest of these may be twenty cubits high, or rather more.[5] They make (in the monasteries) rooms for monks from all quarters,[5] the use of which is given to travelling monks who may arrive, and who are provided with whatever else they require.

The lord of the country lodged Fa-hien and the others comfortably, and supplied their wants, in a monastery[6] called Gomati,[6] of the mahayana school. Attached to it there are three thousand monks, who are called to their meals by the sound of a bell. When they enter the refectory, their demeanour is marked by a reverent gravity, and they take their seats in regular order, all maintaining a perfect silence. No sound is heard from their alms-bowls and other utensils. When any of these pure men[7] require food, they are not allowed to call out (to the attendants) for it, but only make signs with their hands.

Hwuy-king, Tao-ching, and Hwuy-tah set out in advance towards the country of K'eeh-ch'a;[8] but Fa-hien and the others, wishing to see the procession of images, remained behind for three months. There are in this country four[9] great monasteries, not counting the smaller ones. Beginning on the first day of the fourth month, they sweep and water the streets inside the city, making a grand display in the lanes and byways. Over the city gate they pitch a large tent, grandly adorned in all possible ways, in which the king and queen, with their ladies brilliantly arrayed,[10] take up their residence (for the time).

The monks of the Gomati monastery, being mahayana students, and held in great reverence by the king, took precedence of all others in the procession. At a distance of three or four le from the city, they made a four-wheeled image car, more than thirty cubits high, which looked like the great hall (of a monastery) moving along. The seven precious substances[11] were grandly displayed about it, with silken streamers and canopies hanging all around. The (chief) image[12] stood in the middle of the car, with two Bodhisattvas[13] in attendance upon it, while devas[14] were made to follow in waiting, all brilliantly carved in gold and silver, and hanging in the air. When (the car) was a hundred paces from the gate, the king put off his crown of state, changed his dress for a fresh suit, and with bare feet, carrying in his hands flowers and incense, and with two rows of attending followers, went out at the gate to meet the image; and, with his head and face (bowed to the ground), he did homage at its feet, and then scattered the flowers and burnt the incense. When the image was entering the gate, the queen and the brilliant ladies with her in the gallery above scattered far and wide all kinds of flowers, which floated about and fell promiscuously to the ground. In this way everything was done to promote the dignity of the occasion. The carriages of the monasteries were all different, and each one had its own day for the procession. (The ceremony) began on the first day of the fourth month, and ended on the fourteenth, after which the king and queen returned to the palace.

Seven or eight le to the west of the city there is what is called the King's New Monastery, the building of which took eighty years, and extended over three reigns. It may be 250 cubits in height, rich in elegant carving and inlaid work, covered above with gold and silver, and finished throughout with a combination of all the precious substances. Behind the tope there has been built a Hall of Buddha,[15] of the utmost magnificence and beauty, the beams, pillars, venetianed doors, and windows being all overlaid with gold-leaf. Besides this, the apartments for the monks are imposingly and elegantly decorated, beyond the power of words to express. Of whatever things of highest value and preciousness the kings in the six countries on the east of the (Ts'ung) range of mountains[16] are possessed, they contribute the greater portion (to this monastery), using but a small portion of them themselves.[17]

NOTES

[1] This fondness for music among the Khoteners is mentioned by Hsuan and Ch'wang and others.

[2] Mahayana. It is a later form of the Buddhist doctrine, the second phase of its development corresponding to the state of a Bodhisattva, who, being able to transport himself and all mankind to nirvana, may be compared to a huge vehicle. See Davids on the "Key-note of the 'Great Vehicle,'" Hibbert Lectures, p. 254.

[3] Fa-hien supplies sufficient information of how the common store or funds of the monasteries were provided, farther on in chapters xvi and xxxix, as well as in other passages. As the point is important, I will give here, from Davids' fifth Hibbert Lecture (p. 178), some of the words of the dying Buddha, taken from "The Book of the Great Decease," as illustrating the statement in this text:--"So long as the brethren shall persevere in kindness of action, speech, and thought among the saints, both in public and private; so long as they shall divide without partiality, and share in common with the upright and holy, all such things as they receive in accordance with the just provisions of the order, down even to the mere contents of a begging bowl; . . . so long may the brethren be expected not to decline, but to prosper."

[4] The Chinese {.} (t'ah; in Cantonese, t'ap), as used by Fa-hien, is, no doubt, a phonetisation of the Sanskrit stupa or Pali thupa; and it is well in translating to use for the structures described by him the name of topes,--made familiar by Cunningham and other Indian antiquarians. In the thirteenth chapter there is an account of one built under the superintendence of Buddha himself, "as a model for all topes in future." They were usually in the form of bell-shaped domes, and were solid, surmounted by a long tapering pinnacle formed with a series of rings, varying in number. But their form, I suppose, was often varied; just as we have in China pagodas of different shapes. There are several topes now in the Indian Institute at Oxford, brought from Buddha Gaya, but the largest of them is much smaller than "the smallest" of those of Khoten. They were intended chiefly to contain the relics of Buddha and famous masters of his Law; but what relics could there be in the Tiratna topes of chapter xvi?

[5] The meaning here is much disputed. The author does not mean to say that the monk's apartments were made "square," but that the monasteries were made with many guest-chambers or spare rooms.

[6] The Sanskrit term for a monastery is used here,--Sangharama, "gardens of the assembly," originally denoting only "the surrounding park, but afterwards transferred to the whole of the premises" (E. H., p. 118). Gomati, the name of this monastery, means "rich in cows."

[7] A denomination for the monks as vimala, "undefiled" or "pure." Giles makes it "the menials that attend on the monks," but I have not met with it in that application.

[8] K'eeh-ch'a has not been clearly identified. Remusat made it Cashmere; Klaproth, Iskardu; Beal makes it Kartchou; and Eitel, Khas'a, "an ancient tribe on the Paropamisus, the Kasioi of Ptolemy." I think it was Ladak, or some well-known place in it. Hwuy-tah, unless that name be an alias, appears here for the first time.

[9] Instead of "four," the Chinese copies of the text have "fourteen;" but the Corean reading is, probably, more correct.

[10] There may have been, as Giles says, "maids of honour;" but the character does not say so.

[11] The Sapta-ratna, gold, silver, lapis lazuli, rock crystal, rubies, diamonds or emeralds, and agate. See Sacred Books of the East (Davids' Buddhist Suttas), vol. xi., p. 249.

[12] No doubt that of Sakyamuni himself.

[13] A Bodhisattva is one whose essence has become intelligence; a Being who will in some future birth as a man (not necessarily or usually the next) attain to Buddhahood. The name does not include those Buddhas who have not yet attained to pari-nirvana. The symbol of the state is an elephant fording a river. Popularly, its abbreviated form P'u-sa is used in China for any idol or image; here the name has its proper signification.

[14] {.} {.}, "all the thien," or simply "the thien" taken as plural.

But in Chinese the character called thien {.} denotes heaven, or Heaven, and is interchanged with Ti and Shang Ti, meaning God. With the Buddhists it denotes the devas or Brahmanic gods, or all the inhabitants of the six devalokas. The usage shows the antagonism between Buddhism and Brahmanism, and still more that between it and Confucianism.

[15] Giles and Williams call this "the oratory of Buddha." But "oratory" gives the idea of a small apartment, whereas the name here leads the mind to think of a large "hall." I once accompanied the monks of a large monastery from their refectory to the Hall of Buddha, which was a lofty and spacious apartment splendidly fitted up.

[16] The Ts'ung, or "Onion" range, called also the Belurtagh mountains, including the Karakorum, and forming together the connecting links between the more northern T'een-shan and the Kwun-lun mountains on the north of Thibet. It would be difficult to name the six countries which Fa-hien had in mind.

[17] This seems to be the meaning here. My first impression of it was that the author meant to say that the contributions which they received were spent by the monks mainly on the buildings, and only to a small extent for themselves; and I still hesitate between that view and the one in the version.

There occurs here the binomial phrase kung-yang {.} {.}, which is one of the most common throughout the narrative, and is used not only of support in the way of substantial contributions given to monks, monasteries, and Buddhism, but generally of all Buddhistic worship, if I may use that term in the connexion. Let me here quote two or three sentences from Davids' Manual (pp. 168-170):--"The members of the order are secured from want. There is no place in the Buddhist scheme for churches; the offering of flowers before the sacred tree or image of the Buddha takes the place of worship. Buddhism does not acknowledge the efficacy of prayers; and in the warm countries where Buddhists live, the occasional reading of the law, or preaching of the word, in public, can take place best in the open air, by moonlight, under a simple roof of trees or palms. There are five principal kinds of meditation, which in Buddhism takes the place of prayer."

CHAPTER IV

THROUGH THE TS'UNG OR "ONION" MOUNTAINS TO K'EEH-CH'A;--PROBABLY SKARDO, OR SOME CITY MORE TO THE EAST IN LADAK

When the processions of images in the fourth month were over, Sang-shao, by himself alone, followed a Tartar who was an earnest follower of the Law,[1] and proceeded towards Kophene.[2] Fa-hien and the others went forward to the kingdom of Tsze-hoh, which it took them twenty-five days to reach.[3] Its king was a strenuous follower of our Law,[4] and had (around him) more than a thousand monks, mostly students of the mahayana. Here (the travellers) abode fifteen days, and then went south for four days, when they found themselves among the Ts'ung-ling mountains, and reached the country of Yu-hwuy,[5] where they halted and kept their retreat.[6] When this was over, they went on among the hills[7] for twenty-five days, and got to K'eeh-ch'a,[8] there rejoining Hwuy-king[9] and his two companions.

NOTES

[1] This Tartar is called a {.} {.}, "a man of the Tao," or faith of Buddha. It occurs several times in the sequel, and denotes the man who is not a Buddhist outwardly only, but inwardly as well, whose faith is always making itself manifest in his ways. The name may be used of followers of other systems of faith besides Buddhism.

[2] See the account of the kingdom of Kophene, in the 96th Book of the first Han Records, p. 78, where its capital is said to be 12,200 le from Ch'ang-gan. It was the whole or part of the present Cabulistan. The name of Cophene is connected with the river Kophes, supposed to be the same as the present Cabul river, which falls into the Indus, from the west, at Attock, after passing Peshawar. The city of Cabul, the capital of Afghanistan, may be the Kophene of the text; but we do not know that Sang-shao and his guide got so far west. The text only says that they set out from Khoten "towards it."

[3] Tsze-hoh has not been identified. Beal thinks it was Yarkand, which, however, was north-west from Khoten. Watters ("China Review," p. 135) rather approves the suggestion of "Tashkurgan in Sirikul" for it. As it took Fa-hien twenty-five days to reach it, it must have been at least 150 miles from Khoten.

[4] The king is described here by a Buddhistic phrase, denoting the possession of viryabala, "the power of energy; persevering exertion--one of the five moral powers" (E. H., p. 170).

[5] Nor has Yu-hwuy been clearly identified. Evidently it was directly south from Tsze-hoh, and among the "Onion" mountains. Watters hazards the conjecture that it was the Aktasch of our present maps.

[6] This was the retreat already twice mentioned as kept by the pilgrims in the summer, the different phraseology, "quiet rest," without any mention of the season, indicating their approach to India, E. H., p. 168. Two, if not three, years had elapsed since they left Ch'ang-gan. Are we now with them in 402?

[7] This is the Corean reading {.}, much preferable to the {.} of the Chinese editions.

[8] Watters approves of Klaproth's determination of K'eeh-ch'a to be Iskardu or Skardo. There are difficulties in connexion with the view, but it has the advantage, to my mind very great, of bringing the pilgrims across the Indus. The passage might be accomplished with ease at this point of the river's course, and therefore is not particularly mentioned.

[9] Who had preceded them from Khoten.

CHAPTER V

GREAT QUINQUENNIAL ASSEMBLY OF MONKS. RELICS OF BUDDHA. PRODUCTIONS OF THE COUNTRY.

It happened that the king of the country was then holding the pancha parishad, that is, in Chinese, the great quinquennial assembly.[1] When this is to be held, the king requests the presence of the Sramans from all quarters (of his kingdom). They come (as if) in clouds; and when they are all assembled, their place of session is grandly decorated. Silken streamers and canopies are hung out in, and water-lilies in gold and silver are made and fixed up behind the places where (the chief of them) are to sit. When clean mats have been spread, and they are all seated, the king and his ministers present their offerings according to rule and law. (The assembly takes place), in the first, second, or third month, for the most part in the spring.

After the king has held the assembly, he further exhorts the ministers to make other and special offerings. The doing of this extends over one, two, three, five, or even seven days; and when all is finished, he takes his own riding-horse, saddles, bridles, and waits on him himself,[2] while he makes the noblest and most important minister of the kingdom mount him. Then, taking fine white woollen cloth, all sorts of precious things, and articles which the Sramans require, he distributes them among them, uttering vows at the same time along with all his ministers; and when this distribution has taken place, he again redeems (whatever he wishes) from the monks.[3]

The country, being among the hills and cold, does not produce the other cereals, and only the wheat gets ripe. After the monks have received their annual (portion of this), the mornings suddenly show the hoar-frost, and on this account the king always begs the monks to make the wheat ripen[4] before they receive their portion. There is in the country a spitoon which belonged to Buddha, made of stone, and in colour like his alms-bowl. There is also a tooth of Buddha, for which the people have reared a tope, connected with which there are more than a thousand monks and their disciples,[5] all students of the hinayana. To the east of these hills the dress of the common people is of coarse materials, as in our country of Ts'in, but here also[6] there were among them the differences of fine woollen cloth and of serge or haircloth. The rules observed by the Sramans are remarkable, and too numerous to be mentioned in detail. The country is in the midst of the Onion range. As you go forward from these mountains, the plants, trees, and fruits are all different from those of the land of Han, excepting only the bamboo, pomegranate,[7] and sugar-cane.

NOTES

[1] See Eitel, p. 89. He describes the assembly as "an ecclesiastical conference, first instituted by king Asoka for general confession of sins and inculcation of morality."

[2] The text of this sentence is perplexing; and all translators, including myself, have been puzzled by it.

[3] See what we are told of king Asoka's grant of all the Jambudvipa to the monks in chapter xxvii. There are several other instances of similar gifts in the Mahavansa.

[4] Watters calls attention to this as showing that the monks of K'eeh-ch'a had the credit of possessing weather-controlling powers.

[5] The text here has {.} {.}, not {.} alone. I often found in monasteries boys and lads who looked up to certain of the monks as their preceptors.

[6] Compare what is said in chapter ii of the dress of the people of Shen-shen.

[7] Giles thinks the fruit here was the guava, because the ordinary name for "pomegranate" is preceded by gan {.}; but the pomegranate was called at first Gan Shih-lau, as having been introduced into China from Gan-seih by Chang-k'een, who is referred to in chapter vii.

CHAPTER VI

ON TOWARDS NORTH INDIA. DARADA. IMAGE OF MAITREYA BODHISATTVA.

From this (the travellers) went westwards towards North India, and after being on the way for a month, they succeeded in getting across and through the range of the Onion mountains. The snow rests on them both winter and summer. There are also among them venomous dragons, which, when provoked, spit forth poisonous winds, and cause showers of snow and storms of sand and gravel. Not one in ten thousand of those who encounter these dangers escapes with his life. The people of the country call the range by the name of "The Snow mountains." When (the travellers) had got through them, they were in North India, and immediately on entering its borders, found themselves in a small kingdom called T'o-leih,[1] where also there were many monks, all students of the hinayana.

In this kingdom there was formerly an Arhan,[2] who by his supernatural power[3] took a clever artificer up to the Tushita heaven, to see the height, complexion, and appearance of Maitreya Bodhisattva,[4] and then return and make an image of him in wood. First and last, this was done three times, and then the image was completed, eighty cubits in height, and eight cubits at the base from knee to knee of the crossed legs. On fast-days it emits an effulgent light. The kings of the (surrounding) countries vie with one another in presenting offerings to it. Here it is,--to be seen now as of old.[5] [1] Eitel and others identify this with Darada, the country of the ancient Dardae, the region near Dardus; lat. 30d 11s N., lon. 73d 54s E. See E. H. p. 30. I am myself in more than doubt on the point. Cunningham ("Ancient Geography of India," p. 82) says "Darel is a valley on the right or western bank of the Indus, now occupied by Dardus or Dards, from whom it received its name." But as I read our narrative, Fa-hien is here on the eastern bank of the Indus, and only crosses to the western bank as described in the next chapter.

NOTES

[2] Lo-han, Arhat, Arahat, are all designations of the perfected Arya, the disciple who has passed the different stages of the Noble Path, or eightfold excellent way, who has conquered all passions, and is not to be reborn again. Arhatship implies possession of certain supernatural powers, and is not to be succeeded by Buddhaship, but implies the fact of the saint having already attained nirvana. Popularly, the Chinese designate by this name the wider circle of Buddha's disciples, as well as the smaller ones of 500 and 18. No temple in Canton is better worth a visit than that of the 500 Lo-han.

[3] Riddhi-sakshatkriya, "the power of supernatural footsteps,"="a body flexible at pleasure," or unlimited power over the body. E. H., p. 104.

[4] Tushita is the fourth Devaloka, where all Bodhisattvas are reborn before finally appearing on earth as Buddha. Life lasts in Tushita 4000 years, but twenty-four hours there are equal to 400 years on earth. E. H., p. 152.

[5] Maitreya (Spence Hardy, Maitri), often styled Ajita, "the Invincible," was a Bodhisattva, the principal one, indeed, of Sakyamuni's retinue, but is not counted among the ordinary (historical) disciples, nor is anything told of his antecedents. It was in the Tushita heaven that Sakyamuni met him and appointed him as his successor, to appear as Buddha after the lapse of 5000 years. Maitreya is therefore the expected Messiah of the Buddhists, residing at present in Tushita, and, according to the account of him in Eitel (H., p. 70), "already controlling the propagation of the Buddhistic faith." The name means "gentleness" or "kindness;" and this will be the character of his dispensation.

[6] The combination of {.} {.} in the text of this concluding sentence, and so frequently occurring throughout the narrative, has occasioned no little dispute among previous translators. In the imperial thesaurus of phraseology (P'ei-wan Yun-foo), under {.}, an example of it is given from Chwang-tsze, and a note subjoined that {.} {.} is equivalent to {.} {.}, "anciently and now."

CHAPTER VII

CROSSING OF THE INDUS. WHEN BUDDHISM FIRST CROSSED THE RIVER FOR THE EAST

The travellers went on to the south-west for fifteen days (at the foot of the mountains, and) following the course of their range. The way was difficult and rugged, (running along) a bank exceedingly precipitous, which rose up there, a hill-like wall of rock, 10,000 cubits from the base. When one approaches the edge of it, his eyes become unsteady; and if he wished to go forward in the same direction, there was no place on which he could place his foot; and beneath where the waters of the river called the Indus.[1] In former times men had chiselled paths along the rocks, and distributed ladders on the face of them, to the number altogether of 700, at the bottom of which there was a suspension bridge of ropes, by which the river was crossed, its banks being there eighty paces apart.[2] The (place and arrangements) are to be found in the Records of the Nine Interpreters,[3] but neither Chang K'een[4] nor Kan Ying[5] had reached the spot.

The monks[6] asked Fa-hien if it could be known when the Law of Buddha first went to the east. He replied, "When I asked the people of those countries about it, they all said that it had been handed down by their fathers from of old that, after the setting up of the image of Maitreya Bodhisattva, there were Sramans of India who crossed this river, carrying with them Sutras and Books of Discipline. Now the image was set up rather more than 300 years after the nirvana[7] of Buddha, which may be referred to the reign of king P'ing of the Chow dynasty.[8] According to this account we may say that the diffusion of our great doctrines (in the east) began from (the setting up of) this image. If it had not been through that Maitreya,[9] the great spiritual master[10] (who is to be) the successor of the Sakya, who could have caused the 'Three Precious Ones'[11] to be proclaimed so far, and the people of those border lands to know our Law? We know of a truth that the opening of (the way for such) a mysterious propagation is not the work of man; and so the dream of the emperor Ming of Han[12] had its proper cause."

NOTES

[1] The Sindhu. We saw in a former note that the earliest name in China for India was Shin-tuh. So, here, the river Indus is called by a name approaching that in sound.

[2] Both Beal and Watters quote from Cunningham (Ladak, pp. 88, 89) the following description of the course of the Indus in these parts, in striking accordance with our author's account:--"From Skardo to Rongdo, and from Rongdo to Makpou-i-shang-rong, for upwards of 100 miles, the Indus sweeps sullen and dark through a mighty gorge in the mountains, which for wild sublimity is perhaps unequalled. Rongdo means the country of defiles. . . . Between these points the Indus raves from side to side of the gloomy chasm, foaming and chafing with ungovernable fury. Yet even in these inaccessible places has daring and ingenious man triumphed over opposing nature. The yawning abyss is spanned by frail rope bridges, and the narrow ledges of rocks are connected by ladders to form a giddy pathway overhanging the seething cauldron below."

[3] The Japanese edition has a different reading here from the Chinese copies,--one which Remusat (with true critical instinct) conjectured should take the place of the more difficult text with which alone he was acquainted. The "Nine Interpreters" would be a general name for the official interpreters attached to the invading armies of Han in their attempts to penetrate and subdue the regions of the west. The phrase occurs in the memoir of Chang K'een, referred to in the next note.

[4] Chang K'een, a minister of the emperor Woo of Han (B.C. 140-87), is celebrated as the first Chinese who "pierced the void," and penetrated to "the regions of the west," corresponding very much to the present Turkestan. Through him, by B.C. 115, a regular intercourse was established between China and the thirty-six kingdoms or states of that quarter;--see Mayers' Chinese Reader's Manual, p. 5. The memoir of Chang K'een, translated by Mr. Wylie from the Books of the first Han dynasty, appears in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, referred to already.

[5] Less is known of Kan Ying than of Chang K'een. Being sent in A.D. 88 by his patron Pan Chao on an embassy to the Roman empire, he only got as far as the Caspian sea, and returned to China. He extended, however, the knowledge of his countrymen with regard to the western regions;--see the memoir of Pan Chao in the Books of the second Han, and Mayers' Manual, pp. 167, 168.

[6] Where and when? Probably at his first resting-place after crossing the Indus.

[7] This may refer to Sakyamuni's becoming Buddha on attaining to nirvana, or more probably to his pari-nirvana and death.

[8] As king P'ing's reign lasted from B.C. 750 to 719, this would place the death of Buddha in the eleventh century B.C., whereas recent inquirers place it between B.C. 480 and 470, a year or two, or a few years, after that of Confucius, so that the two great "Masters" of the east were really contemporaries. But if Rhys Davids be correct, as I think he is, in fixing the date of Buddha's death within a few years of 412 B.C. (see Manual, p. 213), not to speak of Westergaard's still lower date, then the Buddha was very considerably the junior of Confucius.

[9] This confirms the words of Eitel, that Maitreya is already controlling the propagation of the faith.

[10] The Chinese characters for this simply mean "the great scholar or officer;" but see Eitel's Handbook, p. 99, on the term purusha.

[11] "The precious Buddha," "the precious Law," and "the precious Monkhood;" Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha; the whole being equivalent to Buddhism.

[12] Fa-hien thus endorses the view that Buddhism was introduced into China in this reign, A.D. 58-75. The emperor had his dream in A.D. 61.

CHAPTER VIII

WOO-CHANG, OR UDYANA. MONASTERIES, AND THEIR WAYS. TRACES OF BUDDHA

After crossing the river, (the travellers) immediately came to the kingdom of Woo-chang,[1] which is indeed (a part) of North India. The people all use the language of Central India, "Central India" being what we should call the "Middle Kingdom." The food and clothes of the common people are the same as in that Central Kingdom. The Law of Buddha is very (flourishing in Woo-chang). They call the places where the monks stay (for a time) or reside permanently Sangharamas; and of these there are in all 500, the monks being all students of the hinayana. When stranger bhikshus[2] arrive at one of them, their wants are supplied for three days, after which they are told to find a resting-place for themselves.

There is a tradition that when Buddha came to North India, he came at once to this country, and that here he left a print of his foot, which is long or short according to the ideas of the beholder (on the subject). It exists, and the same thing is true about it, at the present day. Here also are still to be seen the rock on which he dried his clothes, and the place where he converted the wicked dragon.[3] The rock is fourteen cubits high, and more than twenty broad, with one side of it smooth.

Hwuy-king, Hwuy-tah, and Tao-ching went on ahead towards (the place of) Buddha's shadow in the country of Nagara;[4] but Fa-hien and the others remained in Woo-chang, and kept the summer retreat.[5] That over, they descended south, and arrived in the country of Soo-ho-to.[6]

NOTES

[1] Udyana, meaning "the Park;" just north of the Punjab, the country along the Subhavastu, now called the Swat; noted for its forests, flowers, and fruits (E. H., p. 153).

[2] Bhikshu is the name for a monk as "living by alms," a mendicant. All bhikshus call themselves Sramans. Sometimes the two names are used together by our author.

[3] Naga is the Sanskrit name for the Chinese lung or dragon; often meaning a snake, especially the boa. "Chinese Buddhists," says Eitel, p. 79, "when speaking of nagas as boa spirits, always represent them as enemies of mankind, but when viewing them as deities of rivers, lakes, or oceans, they describe them as piously inclined." The dragon, however, is in China the symbol of the Sovereign and Sage, a use of it unknown in Buddhism, according to which all nagas need to be converted in order to obtain a higher phase of being. The use of the character too {.}, as here, in the sense of "to convert," is entirely Buddhistic. The six paramitas are the six virtues which carry men across {.} the great sea of life and death, as the sphere of transmigration to nirvana. With regard to the particular conversion here, Eitel (p. 11) says the Naga's name was Apatala, the guardian deity of the Subhavastu river, and that he was converted by Sakyamuni shortly before the death of the latter.

[4] In Chinese Na-k'eeh, an ancient kingdom and city on the southern bank of the Cabul river, about thirty miles west of Jellalabad.

[5] We would seem now to be in 403.

[6] Soo-ho-to has not been clearly identified. Beal says that later Buddhist writers include it in Udyana. It must have been between the Indus and the Swat. I suppose it was what we now call Swastene.

CHAPTER IX

SOO-HO-TO. LEGEND OF BUDDHA.

In that country also Buddhism[1] is flourishing. There is in it the place where Sakra,[2] Ruler of Devas, in a former age,[3] tried the Bodhisattva, by producing[4] a hawk (in pursuit of a) dove, when (the Bodhisattva) cut off a piece of his own flesh, and (with it) ransomed the dove. After Buddha had attained to perfect wisdom,[5] and in travelling about with his disciples (arrived at this spot), he informed them that this was the place where he ransomed the dove with a piece of his own flesh. In this way the people of the country became aware of the fact, and on the spot reared a tope, adorned with layers[6] of gold and silver plates.

NOTES

[1] Buddhism stands for the two Chinese characters {.} {.}, "the Law of Buddha," and to that rendering of the phrase, which is of frequent occurrence, I will in general adhere. Buddhism is not an adequate rendering of them any more than Christianity would be of {to euaggelion Xristou}. The Fa or Law is the equivalent of dharma comprehending all in the first Basket of the Buddhist teaching,--as Dr. Davids says (Hibbert Lectures, p. 44), "its ethics and philosophy, and its system of self-culture;" with the theory of karma, it seems to me, especially underlying it. It has been pointed out (Cunningham's "Bhilsa Topes," p. 102) that dharma is the keystone of all king Priyadarsi or Asoka's edicts. The whole of them are dedicated to the attainment of one object, "the advancement of dharma, or of the Law of Buddha." His native Chinese afforded no better character than {.} or Law, by which our author could express concisely his idea of the Buddhistic system, as "a law of life," a directory or system of Rules, by which men could attain to the consummation of their being.

[2] Sakra is a common name for the Brahmanic Indra, adopted by Buddhism into the circle of its own great adherents;--it has been said, "because of his popularity." He is generally styled, as here, T'een Ti, "God or Ruler of Devas." He is now the representative of the secular power, the valiant protector of the Buddhist body, but is looked upon as inferior to Sakyamuni, and every Buddhist saint. He appears several times in Fa-hien's narrative. E. H., pp. 108 and 46.

[3] The Chinese character is {.}, "formerly," and is often, as in the first sentence of the narrative, simply equivalent to that adverb. At other times it means, as here, "in a former age," some pre-existent state in the time of a former birth. The incident related is "a Jataka story."

[4] It occurs at once to the translator to render the characters {.} {.} by "changed himself to." Such is often their meaning in the sequel, but their use in chapter xxiv may be considered as a crucial test of the meaning which I have given them here.

[5] That is, had become Buddha, or completed his course {.} {.}.

[6] This seems to be the contribution of {.} (or {.}), to the force of the binomial {.} {.}, which is continually occurring.

CHAPTER X

GANDHARA. LEGENDS OF BUDDHA.

The travellers, going downwards from this towards the east, in five days came to the country of Gandhara,[1] the place where Dharma-vivardhana,[2] the son of Asoka,[3] ruled. When Buddha was a Bodhisattva, he gave his eyes also for another man here;[4] and at the spot they have also reared a large tope, adorned with layers of gold and silver plates. The people of the country were mostly students of the hinayana.

NOTES

[1] Eitel says "an ancient kingdom, corresponding to the region about Dheri and Banjour." But see note 5.

[2] Dharma-vivardhana is the name in Sanskrit, represented by the Fa Yi {.} {.} of the text.

[3] Asoka is here mentioned for the first time;--the Constantine of the Buddhist society, and famous for the number of viharas and topes which he erected. He was the grandson of Chandragupta (i.q. Sandracottus), a rude adventurer, who at one time was a refugee in the camp of Alexander the Great; and within about twenty years afterwards drove the Greeks out of India, having defeated Seleucus, the Greek ruler of the Indus provinces. He had by that time made himself king of Magadha. His grandson was converted to Buddhism by the bold and patient demeanour of an Arhat whom he had ordered to be buried alive, and became a most zealous supporter of the new faith. Dr. Rhys Davids (Sacred Books of the East, vol. xi, p. xlvi) says that "Asoka's coronation can be fixed with absolute certainty within a year or two either way of 267 B.C."

[4] This also is a Jataka story; but Eitel thinks it may be a myth, constructed from the story of the blinding of Dharma-vivardhana.

CHAPTER XI

TAKSHASILA. LEGENDS. THE FOUR GREAT TOPES.

Seven days' journey from this to the east brought the travellers to the kingdom of Takshasila,[1] which means "the severed head" in the language of China. Here, when Buddha was a Bodhisattva, he gave away his head to a man;[2] and from this circumstance the kingdom got its name.

Going on further for two days to the east, they came to the place where the Bodhisattva threw down his body to feed a starving tigress.[2] In these two places also large topes have been built, both adorned with layers of all the precious substances. The kings, ministers, and peoples of the kingdoms around vie with one another in making offerings at them. The trains of those who come to scatter flowers and light lamps at them never cease. The nations of those quarters all those (and the other two mentioned before) "the four great topes."

NOTES

[1] See Julien's "Methode pour dechiffrer et transcrire les Nomes Sanscrits," p. 206. Eitel says, "The Taxila of the Greeks, the region near Hoosun Abdaul in lat. 35d 48s N., lon. 72d 44s E. But this identification, I am satisfied, is wrong. Cunningham, indeed, takes credit ("Ancient Geography of India," pp. 108, 109) for determining this to be the site of Arrian's Taxila,--in the upper Punjab, still existing in the ruins of Shahdheri, between the Indus and Hydaspes (the modern Jhelum). So far he may be correct; but the Takshasila of Fa-hien was on the other, or western side of the Indus; and between the river and Gandhara. It took him, indeed, seven days travelling eastwards to reach it; but we do not know what stoppages he may have made on the way. We must be wary in reckoning distances from his specifications of days.

[2] Two Jataka stories. See the account of the latter in Spence Hardy's "Manual of Buddhism," pp. 91, 92. It took place when Buddha had been born as a Brahman in the village of Daliddi; and from the merit of the act, he was next born in a devaloka.

CHAPTER XII

PURUSHAPURA, OR PESHAWUR. PROPHECY ABOUT KING KANISHKA AND HIS TOPE. BUDDHA'S ALMS-BOWL. DEATH OF HWUY-YING.

Going southwards from Gandhara, (the travellers) in four days arrived at the kingdom of Purushapura.[1] Formerly, when Buddha was travelling in this country with his disciples, he said to Ananda,[2] "After my pari-nirvana,[3] there will be a king named Kanishka,[4] who shall on this spot build a tope." This Kanishka was afterwards born into the world; and (once), when he had gone forth to look about him, Sakra, Ruler of Devas, wishing to excite the idea in his mind, assumed the appearance of a little herd-boy, and was making a tope right in the way (of the king), who asked what sort of thing he was making. The boy said, "I am making a tope for Buddha." The king said, "Very good;" and immediately, right over the boy's tope, he (proceeded to) rear another, which was more than four hundred cubits high, and adorned with layers of all the precious substances. Of all the topes and temples which (the travellers) saw in their journeyings, there was not one comparable to this in solemn beauty and majestic grandeur. There is a current saying that this is the finest tope in Jambudvipa.[5] When the king's tope was completed, the little tope (of the boy) came out from its side on the south, rather more than three cubits in height.

Buddha's alms-bowl is in this country. Formerly, a king of Yueh-she[6] raised a large force and invaded this country, wishing to carry the bowl away. Having subdued the kingdom, as he and his captains were sincere believers in the Law of Buddha, and wished to carry off the bowl, they proceeded to present their offerings on a great scale. When they had done so to the Three Precious Ones, he made a large elephant be grandly caparisoned, and placed the bowl upon it. But the elephant knelt down on the ground, and was unable to go forward. Again he caused a four-wheeled waggon to be prepared in which the bowl was put to be conveyed away. Eight elephants were then yoked to it, and dragged it with their united strength; but neither were they able to go forward. The king knew that the time for an association between himself and the bowl had not yet arrived,[7] and was sad and deeply ashamed of himself. Forthwith he built a tope at the place and a monastery, and left a guard to watch (the bowl), making all sorts of contributions.

There may be there more than seven hundred monks. When it is near midday, they bring out the bowl, and, along with the common people,[8] make their various offerings to it, after which they take their midday meal. In the evening, at the time of incense, they bring the bowl out again.[9] It may contain rather more than two pecks, and is of various colours, black predominating, with the seams that show its fourfold composition distinctly marked.[10] Its thickness is about the fifth of an inch, and it has a bright and glossy lustre. When poor people throw into it a few flowers, it becomes immediately full, while some very rich people, wishing to make offering of many flowers, might not stop till they had thrown in hundreds, thousands, and myriads of bushels, and yet would not be able to fill it.[11]

Pao-yun and Sang-king here merely made their offerings to the alms-bowl, and (then resolved to) go back. Hwuy-king, Hwuy-tah, and Tao-ching had gone on before the rest to Negara,[12] to make their offerings at (the places of) Buddha's shadow, tooth, and the flat-bone of his skull. (There) Hwuy-king fell ill, and Tao-ching remained to look after him, while Hwuy-tah came alone to Purushapura, and saw the others, and (then) he with Pao-yun and Sang-king took their way back to the land of Ts'in. Hwuy-king[13] came to his end[14] in the monastery of Buddha's alms-bowl, and on this Fa-hien went forward alone towards the place of the flat-bone of Buddha's skull.

NOTES

[1] The modern Peshawur, lat. 34d 8s N., lon. 71d 30s E.

[2] A first cousin of Sakyamuni, and born at the moment when he attained to Buddhaship. Under Buddha's teaching, Ananda became an Arhat, and is famous for his strong and accurate memory; and he played an important part at the first council for the formation of the Buddhist canon. The friendship between Sakyamuni and Ananda was very close and tender; and it is impossible to read much of what the dying Buddha said to him and of him, as related in the Maha-pari-nirvana Sutra, without being moved almost to tears. Ananda is to reappear on earth as Buddha in another Kalpa. See E. H., p. 9, and the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xi.

[3] On his attaining to nirvana, Sakyamuni became the Buddha, and had no longer to mourn his being within the circle of transmigration, and could rejoice in an absolute freedom from passion, and a perfect purity. Still he continued to live on for forty-five years, till he attained to pari-nirvana, and had done with all the life of sense and society, and had no more exercise of thought. He died; but whether he absolutely and entirely /ceased/ to be, in any sense of the word /being/, it would be difficult to say. Probably he himself would not and could not have spoken definitely on the point. So far as our use of language is concerned, apart from any assured faith in and hope of immortality, his pari-nirvana was his death.

[4] Kanishka appeared, and began to reign, early in our first century, about A.D. 10. He was the last of three brothers, whose original seat was in Yueh-she, immediately mentioned, or Tukhara. Converted by the sudden appearance of a saint, he became a zealous Buddhist, and patronised the system as liberally as Asoka had done. The finest topes in the north-west of India are ascribed to him; he was certainly a great man and a magnificent sovereign.

[5] Jambudvipa is one of the four great continents of the universe, representing the inhabited world as fancied by the Buddhists, and so called because it resembles in shape the leaves of the jambu tree. It is south of mount Meru, and divided among four fabulous kings (E. H., p. 36). It is often used, as here perhaps, merely as the Buddhist name for India.

[6] This king was perhaps Kanishka himself, Fa-hien mixing up, in an inartistic way, different legends about him. Eitel suggests that a relic of the old name of the country may still exist in that of the Jats or Juts of the present day. A more common name for it is Tukhara, and he observes that the people were the Indo-Scythians of the Greeks, and the Tartars of Chinese writers, who, driven on by the Huns (180 B.C.), conquered Transoxiana, destroyed the Bactrian kingdom (126 B.C.), and finally conquered the Punjab, Cashmere, and great part of India, their greatest king being Kanishak (E. H., p. 152).

[7] Watters, clearly understanding the thought of the author in this sentence, renders--"his destiny did not extend to a connexion with the bowl;" but the term "destiny" suggests a controlling or directing power without. The king thought that his virtue in the past was not yet sufficient to give him possession of the bowl.

[8] The text is simply "those in white clothes." This may mean "the laity," or the "upasakas;" but it is better to take the characters in their common Chinese acceptation, as meaning "commoners," "men who have no rank." See in Williams' Dictionary under {.}.

[9] I do not wonder that Remusat should give for this--"et s'en retournent apres." But Fa-hien's use of {.} in the sense of "in the same way" is uniform throughout the narrative.

[10] Hardy's M. B., p. 183, says:--"The alms-bowl, given by Mahabrahma, having vanished (about the time that Gotama became Buddha), each of the four guardian deities brought him an alms-bowl of emerald, but he did not accept them. They then brought four bowls made of stone, of the colour of the mung fruit; and when each entreated that his own bowl might be accepted, Buddha caused them to appear as if formed into a single bowl, appearing at the upper rim as if placed one within the other." See the account more correctly given in the "Buddhist Birth Stories," p. 110.

[11] Compare the narrative in Luke's Gospel, xxi. 1-4.

[12] See chapter viii.

[13] This, no doubt, should be Hwuy-ying. King was at this time ill in Nagara, and indeed afterwards he dies in crossing the Little Snowy Mountains; but all the texts make him die twice. The confounding of the two names has been pointed out by Chinese critics.

[14] "Came to his end;" i.e., according to the text, "proved the impermanence and uncertainty," namely, of human life. See Williams' Dictionary under {.}. The phraseology is wholly Buddhistic.

CHAPTER XIII

NAGARA. FESTIVAL OF BUDDHA'S SKULL-BONE. OTHER RELICS, AND HIS SHADOW.

Going west for sixteen yojanas,[1] he came to the city He-lo[2] in the borders of the country of Nagara, where there is the flat-bone of Buddha's skull, deposited in a vihara[3] adorned all over with gold-leaf and the seven sacred substances. The king of the country, revering and honouring the bone, and anxious lest it should be stolen away, has selected eight individuals, representing the great families in the kingdom, and committing to each a seal, with which he should seal (its shrine) and guard (the relic). At early dawn these eight men come, and after each has inspected his seal, they open the door. This done, they wash their hands with scented water and bring out the bone, which they place outside the vihara, on a lofty platform, where it is supported on a round pedestal of the seven precious substances, and covered with a bell of /lapis lazuli/, both adorned with rows of pearls. Its colour is of a yellowish white, and it forms an imperfect circle twelve inches round,[4] curving upwards to the centre. Every day, after it has been brought forth, the keepers of the vihara ascend a high gallery, where they beat great drums, blow conchs, and clash their copper cymbals. When the king hears them, he goes to the vihara, and makes his offerings of flowers and incense. When he has done this, he (and his attendants) in order, one after another, (raise the bone), place it (for a moment) on the top of their heads,[5] and then depart, going out by the door on the west as they entered by that on the east. The king every morning makes his offerings and performs his worship, and afterwards gives audience on the business of his government. The chiefs of the Vaisyas[6] also make their offerings before they attend to their family affairs. Every day it is so, and there is no remissness in the observance of the custom. When all the offerings are over, they replace the bone in the vihara, where there is a vimoksha tope,[7] of the seven precious substances, and rather more than five cubits high, sometimes open, sometimes shut, to contain it. In front of the door of the vihara, there are parties who every morning sell flowers and incense,[8] and those who wish to make offerings buy some of all kinds. The kings of various countries are also constantly sending messengers with offerings. The vihara stands in a square of thirty paces, and though heaven should shake and earth be rent, this place would not move.

Going on, north from this, for a yojana, (Fa-hien) arrived at the capital of Nagara, the place where the Bodhisattva once purchased with money five stalks of flowers, as an offering to the Dipankara Buddha.[9] In the midst of the city there is also the tope of Buddha's tooth, where offerings are made in the same way as to the flat-bone of his skull.

A yojana to the north-east of the city brought him to the mouth of a valley, where there is Buddha's pewter staff;[10] and a vihara also has been built at which offerings aremade. The staff is made of Gosirsha Chandana, and is quite sixteen or seventeen cubits long. It is contained in a wooden tube, and though a hundred or a thousand men ere to (try to) lift it, they could not move it.

Entering the mouth of the valley, and going west, he found Buddha's Sanghali,[11] where also there is reared a vihara, and offerings are made. It is a custom of the country when there is a great drought, for the people to collect in crowds, bring out the robe, pay worship to it, and make offerings, on which there is immediately a great rain from the sky.

South of the city, half a yojana, there is a rock-cavern, in a great hill fronting the south-west; and here it was that Buddha left his shadow. Looking at it from a distance of more than ten paces, you seem to see Buddha's real form, with his complexion of gold, and his characteristic marks[12] in their nicety clearly and brightly displayed. The nearer you approach, however, the fainter it becomes, as if it were only in your fancy. When the kings from the regions all around have sent skilful artists to take a copy, none of them have been able to do so. Among the people of the country there is a saying current that "the thousand Buddhas[13] must all leave their shadows here."

Rather more than four hundred paces west from the shadow, when Buddha was at the spot, he shaved his hair and clipt his nails, and proceeded, along with his disciples, to build a tope seventy or eighty cubits high, to be a model for all future topes; and it is still existing. By the side of it there is a monastery, with more than seven hundred monks in it. At this place there are as many as a thousand topes[14] of Arhans and Pratyeka Buddhas.[15]

NOTES

[1] Now in India, Fa-hien used the Indian measure of distance; but it is not possible to determine exactly what its length then was. The estimates of it are very different, and vary from four and a half or five miles to seven, and sometimes more. See the subject exhaustively treated in Davids' "Ceylon Coins and Measures," pp. 15-17.

[2] The present Hilda, west of Peshawur, and five miles south of Jellalabad.

[3] "The vihara," says Hardy, "is the residence of a recluse or priest;" and so Davids:--'the clean little hut where the mendicant lives." Our author, however, does not use the Indian name here, but the Chinese characters which express its meaning--tsing shay, "a pure dwelling." He uses the term occasionally, and evidently, in this sense; more frequently it occurs in his narrative in connexion with the Buddhist relic worship; and at first I translated it by "shrine" and "shrine-house;" but I came to the conclusion, at last, to employ always the Indian name. The first time I saw a shrine-house was, I think, in a monastery near Foo-chow;--a small pyramidical structure, about ten feet high, glittering as if with the precious substances, but all, it seemed to me, of tinsel. It was in a large apartment of the building, having many images in it. The monks said it was the most precious thing in their possession, and that if they opened it, as I begged them to do, there would be a convulsion that would destroy the whole establishment. See E. H., p. 166. The name of the province of Behar was given to it in consequence of its many viharas.

[4] According to the characters, "square, round, four inches." Hsuan-chwang says it was twelve inches round.

[5] In Williams' Dictionary, under {.}, the characters, used here, are employed in the phrase for "to degrade an officer," that is, "to remove the token of his rank worn on the crown of his head;" but to place a thing on the crown is a Buddhistic form of religious homage.

[6] The Vaisyas, or bourgeois caste of Hindu society, are described here as "resident scholars."

[7] See Eitel's Handbook under the name vimoksha, which is explained as "the act of self-liberation," and "the dwelling or state of liberty." There are eight acts of liberating one's self from all subjective and objective trammels, and as many states of liberty (vimukti) resulting therefrom. They are eight degrees of self-inanition, and apparently eight stages on the way to nirvana. The tope in the text would be emblematic in some way of the general idea of the mental progress conducting to the Buddhistic consummation of existence.

[8] This incense would be in long "sticks," small and large, such as are sold to-day throughout China, as you enter the temples.

[9] "The illuminating Buddha," the twenty-fourth predecessor of Sakyamuni, and who, so long before, gave him the assurance that he would by-and-by be Buddha. See Jataka Tales, p. 23.

[10] The staff was, as immediately appears, of Gosirsha Chandana, or "sandal-wood from the Cow's-head mountain," a species of copper-brown sandal-wood, said to be produced most abundantly on a mountain of (the fabulous continent) Ullarakuru, north of mount Meru, which resembles in shape the head of a cow (E. H., pp. 42, 43). It is called a "pewter staff" from having on it a head and rings and pewter. See Watters, "China Review," viii, pp. 227, 228, and Williams' Dictionary, under {.}.

[11] Or Sanghati, the double or composite robe, part of a monk's attire, reaching from the shoulders to the knees, and fastened round the waist (E. H., p. 118).

[12] These were the "marks and beauties" on the person of a supreme Buddha. The rishi Kala Devala saw them on the body of the infant Sakya prince to the number of 328, those on the teeth, which had not yet come out, being visible to his spirit-like eyes (M. B., pp. 148, 149).

[13] Probably="all Buddhas."

[14] The number may appear too great. But see what is said on the size of topes in chapter iii, note 4.

[15] In Singhalese, Pase Buddhas; called also Nidana Buddhas, and Pratyeka Jinas, and explained by "individually intelligent," "completely intelligent," "intelligent as regards the nidanas." This, says Eitel (pp. 96, 97), is "a degree of saintship unknown to primitive Buddhism, denoting automats in ascetic life who attain to Buddhaship 'individually,' that is, without a teacher, and without being able to save others. As the ideal hermit, the Pratyeka Buddha is compared with the rhinoceros khadga that lives lonely in the wilderness. He is also called Nidana Buddha, as having mastered the twelve nidanas (the twelve links in the everlasting chain of cause and effect in the whole range of existence, the understanding of which solves the riddle of life, revealing the inanity of all forms of existence, and preparing the mind for nirvana). He is also compared to a horse, which, crossing a river, almost buries its body under the water, without, however, touching the bottom of the river. Thus in crossing samsara he 'suppresses the errors of life and thought, and the effects of habit and passion, without attaining to absolute perfection.'" Whether these Buddhas were unknown, as Eitel says, to primitive Buddhism, may be doubted. See Davids' Hibbert Lectures, p. 146.

CHAPTER XIV

DEATH OF HWUY-KING IN THE LITTLE SNOWY MOUNTAINS. LO-E. POHNA. CROSSING THE INDUS TO THE EAST.

Having stayed there till the third month of winter, Fa-hien and the two others,[1] proceeding southwards, crossed the Little Snowy mountains.[2] On them the snow lies accumulated both winter and summer. On the north (side) of the mountains, in the shade, they suddenly encountered a cold wind which made them shiver and become unable to speak. Hwuy-king could not go any farther. A white froth came from his mouth, and he said to Fa-hien, "I cannot live any longer. Do you immediately go away, that we do not all die here;" and with these words he died.[3] Fa-hien stroked the corpse, and cried out piteously, "Our original plan has failed;--it is fate.[4] What can we do?" He then again exerted himself, and they succeeded in crossing to the south of the range, and arrived in the kingdom of Lo-e,[5] where there were nearly three thousand monks, students of both the mahayana and hinayana. Here they stayed for the summer retreat,[6] and when that was over, they went on to the south, and ten days' journey brought them to the kingdom of Poh-na,[7] where there are also more than three thousand monks, all students of the hinayana. Proceeding from this place for three days, they again crossed the Indus, where the country on each side was low and level.[8]

NOTES

[1] These must have been Tao-ching and Hwuy-king.

[2] Probably the Safeid Koh, and on the way to the Kohat pass.

[3] All the texts have Kwuy-king. See chapter xii, note 13.

[4] A very natural exclamation, but out of place and inconsistent from the lips of Fa-hien. The Chinese character {.}, which he employed, may be rendered rightly by "fate" or "destiny;" but the fate is not unintelligent. The term implies a factor, or fa-tor, and supposes the ordination of Heaven or God. A Confucian idea for the moment overcame his Buddhism.

[5] Lo-e, or Rohi, is a name for Afghanistan; but only a portion of it can be here intended.

[6] We are now therefore in 404.

[7] No doubt the present district of Bannu, in the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab, between 32d 10s and 33d 15s N. lat., and 70d 26s and 72d E. lon. See Hunter's Gazetteer of India, i, p. 393.

[8] They had then crossed the Indus before. They had done so, indeed, twice; first, from north to south, at Skardo or east of it; and second, as described in chapter vii.

CHAPTER XV

BHIDA. SYMPATHY OF MONKS WITH THE PILGRIMS.

After they had crossed the river, there was a country named Pe-t'oo,[1] where Buddhism was very flourishing, and (the monks) studied both the mahayana and hinayana. When they saw their fellow-disciples from Ts'in passing along, they were moved with great pity and sympathy, and expressed themselves thus: "How is it that these men from a border-land should have learned to become monks,[2] and come for the sake of our doctrines from such a distance in search of the Law of Buddha?" They supplied them with what they needed, and treated them in accordance with the rules of the Law.

NOTES

[1] Bhida. Eitel says, "The present Punjab;" i.e. it was a portion of that.

[2] "To come forth from their families;" that is, to become celibates, and adopt the tonsure.

CHAPTER XVI

ON TO MATHURA OR MUTTRA. CONDITION AND CUSTOMS OF CENTRAL INDIA; OF THE MONKS, VIHARAS, AND MONASTERIES.

From this place they travelled south-east, passing by a succession of very many monasteries, with a multitude of monks, who might be counted by myriads. After passing all these places, they came to a country named Ma-t'aou-lo.[1] They still followed the course of the P'oo-na[2] river, on the banks of which, left and right, there were twenty monasteries, which might contain three thousand monks; and (here) the Law of Buddha was still more flourishing. Everywhere, from the Sandy Desert, in all the countries of India, the kings had been firm believers in that Law. When they make their offerings to a community of monks, they take off their royal caps, and along with their relatives and ministers, supply them with food with their own hands. That done, (the king) has a carpet spread for himself on the ground, and sits down in front of the chairman;--they dare not presume to sit on couches in front of the community. The laws and ways, according to which the kings presented their offerings when Buddha was in the world, have been handed down to the present day.

All south from this is named the Middle Kingdom.[3] In it the cold and heat are finely tempered, and there is neither hoarfrost nor snow. The people are numerous and happy; they have not to register their households, or attend to any magistrates and their rules; only those who cultivate the royal land have to pay (a portion of) the grain from it. If they want to go, they go; if they want to stay on, they stay. The king governs without decapitation or (other) corporal punishments. Criminals are simply fined, lightly or heavily, according to the circumstances (of each case). Even in cases of repeated attempts at wicked rebellion, they only have their right hands cut off. The king's body-guards and attendants all have salaries. Throughout the whole country the people do not kill any living creature, nor drink intoxicating liquor, nor eat onions or garlic. The only exception is that of the Chandalas.[4] That is the name for those who are (held to be) wicked men, and live apart from others. When they enter the gate of a city or a market-place, they strike a piece of wood to make themselves known, so that men know and avoid them, and do not come into contact with them. In that country they do not keep pigs and fowls, and do not sell live cattle; in the markets there are no butchers' shops and no dealers in intoxicating drink. In buying and selling commodities they use cowries.[5] Only the Chandalas are fishermen and hunters, and sell flesh meat.

After Buddha attained to pari-nirvana,[6] the kings of the various countries and the heads of the Vaisyas[7] built viharas for the priests, and endowed them with fields, houses, gardens, and orchards, along with the resident populations and their cattle, the grants being engraved on plates of metal,[8] so that afterwards they were handed down from king to king, without any daring to annul them, and they remain even to the present time.

The regular business of the monks is to perform acts of meritorious virtue, and to recite their Sutras and sit wrapt in meditation. When stranger monks arrive (at any monastery), the old residents meet and receive them, carry for them their clothes and alms-bowl, give them water to wash their feet, oil with which to anoint them, and the liquid food permitted out of the regular hours.[9] When (the stranger) has enjoyed a very brief rest, they further ask the number of years that he has been a monk, after which he receives a sleeping apartment with its appurtenances, according to his regular order, and everything is done for him which the rules prescribe.[10]

Where a community of monks resides, they erect topes to Sariputtra,[11] to Maha-maudgalyayana,[12] and to Ananda,[13] and also topes (in honour) of the Abhidharma, the Vinaya, and the Sutras. A month after the (annual season of) rest, the families which are looking out for blessing stimulate one another[14] to make offerings to the monks, and send round to them the liquid food which may be taken out of the ordinary hours. All the monks come together in a great assembly, and preach the Law;[15] after which offerings are presented at the tope of Sariputtra, with all kinds of flowers and incense. All through the night lamps are kept burning, and skilful musicians are employed to perform.[16]

When Sariputtra was a great Brahman, he went to Buddha, and begged (to be permitted) to quit his family (and become a monk). The great Mugalan and the great Kasyapa[17] also did the same. The bhikshunis[18] for the most part make their offerings at the tope of Ananda, because it was he who requested the World-honoured one to allow females to quit their families (and become nuns). The Sramaneras[19] mostly make their offerings to Rahula.[20] The professors of the Abhidharma make their offerings to it; those of the Vinaya to it. Every year there is one such offering, and each class has its own day for it. Students of the mahayana present offerings to the Prajna-paramita,[21] to Manjusri,[22] and to Kwan-she-yin.[23]

When the monks have done receiving their annual tribute (from the harvests),[24] the Heads of the Vaisyas and all the Brahmans bring clothes and other such articles as the monks require for use, and distribute among them. The monks, having received them, also proceed to give portions to one another. From the nirvana of Buddha,[25] the forms of ceremony, laws, and rules, practised by the sacred communities, have been handed down from one generation to another without interruption.

From the place where (the travellers) crossed the Indus to Southern India, and on to the Southern Sea, a distance of forty or fifty thousand le, all is level plain. There are no large hills with streams (among them); there are simply the waters of the rivers.

NOTES

[1] Muttra, "the peacock city;" lat. 27d 30s N., lon. 77d 43s E. (Hunter); the birthplace of Krishna, whose emblem is the peacock.

[2] This must be the Jumna, or Yamuna. Why it is called, as here, the P'oo-na has yet to be explained.

[3] In Pali, Majjhima-desa, "the Middle Country." See Davids' "Buddhist Birth Stories," page 61, note.

[4] Eitel (pp. 145, 6) says, "The name Chandalas is explained by 'butchers,' 'wicked men,' and those who carry 'the awful flag,' to warn off their betters;--the lowest and most despised caste of India, members of which, however, when converted, were admitted even into the ranks of the priesthood."

[5] "Cowries;" {.} {.}, not "shells and ivory," as one might suppose; but cowries alone, the second term entering into the name from the marks inside the edge of the shell, resembling "the teeth of fishes."

[6] See chapter xii, note 3, Buddha's pari-nirvana is equivalent to Buddha's death.

[7] See chapter xiii, note 6. The order of the characters is different here, but with the same meaning.

[8] See the preparation of such a deed of grant in a special case, as related in chapter xxxix. No doubt in Fa-hien's time, and long before and after it, it was the custom to engrave such deeds on plates of metal.

[9] "No monk can eat solid food except between sunrise and noon," and total abstinence from intoxicating drinks is obligatory (Davids' Manual, p. 163). Food eaten at any other part of the day is called vikala, and forbidden; but a weary traveller might receive unseasonable refreshment, consisting, as Watters has shown (Ch. Rev. viii. 282), of honey, butter, treacle, and sesamum oil.

[10] The expression here is somewhat perplexing; but it occurs again in chapter xxxviii; and the meaning is clear. See Watters, Ch. Rev. viii. 282, 3. The rules are given at length in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xx, p. 272 and foll., and p. 279 and foll.

[11] Sariputtra (Singh. Seriyut) was one of the principal disciples of Buddha, and indeed the most learned and ingenious of them all, so that he obtained the title of {.} {.}, "knowledge and wisdom." He is also called Buddha's "right-hand attendant." His name is derived from that of his mother Sarika, the wife of Tishya, a native of Nalanda. In Spence Hardy, he often appears under the name of Upatissa (Upa-tishya), derived from his father. Several Sastras are ascribed to him, and indeed the followers of the Abhidharma look on him as their founder. He died before Sakyamuni; but is to reappear as a future Buddha. Eitel, pp. 123, 124.

[12] Mugalan, the Singhalese name of this disciple, is more pronounceable. He also was one of the principal disciples, called Buddha's "left-hand attendant." He was distinguished for his power of vision, and his magical powers. The name in the text is derived from the former attribute, and it was by the latter that he took up an artist to Tushita to get a view of Sakyamuni, and so make a statue of him. (Compare the similar story in chap. vi.) He went to hell, and released his mother. He also died before Sakyamuni, and is to reappear as Buddha. Eitel, p. 65.

[13] See chapter xii, note 2.

[14] A passage rather difficult to construe. The "families" would be those more devout than their neighbours.

[15] One rarely hears this preaching in China. It struck me most as I once heard it at Osaka in Japan. There was a pulpit in a large hall of the temple, and the audience sat around on the matted floor. One priest took the pulpit after another; and the hearers nodded their heads occasionally, and indicated their sympathy now and then by an audible "h'm," which reminded me of Carlyle's description of meetings of "The Ironsides" of Cromwell.

[16] This last statement is wanting in the Chinese editions.

[17] There was a Kasyapa Buddha, anterior to Sakyamuni. But this Maha-kasyapa was a Brahman of Magadha, who was converted by Buddha, and became one of his disciples. He took the lead after Sakyamuni's death, convoked and directed the first synod, from which his title of Arya-sthavira is derived. As the first compiler of the Canon, he is considered the fountain of Chinese orthodoxy, and counted as the first patriarch. He also is to be reborn as Buddha. Eitel, p. 64.

[18] The bhikshunis are the female monks or nuns, subject to the same rules as the bhikshus, and also to special ordinances of restraint. See Hardy's E. M., chap. 17. See also Sacred Books of the East, vol. xx, p. 321.

[19] The Sramaneras are the novices, male or female, who have vowed to observe the Shikshapada, or ten commandments. Fa-hien was himself one of them from his childhood. Having heard the Trisharana, or threefold formula of Refuge,--"I take refuge in Buddha; the Law; the Church,--the novice undertakes to observe the ten precepts that forbid --(1) destroying life; (2) stealing; (3) impurity; (4) lying; (5) intoxicating drinks; (6) eating after midday; (7) dancing, singing, music, and stage-plays; (8) garlands, scents, unguents, and ornaments; (9) high or broad couches; (10) receiving gold or silver." Davids' Manual, p. 160; Hardy's E. M., pp. 23, 24.

[20] The eldest son of Sakyamuni by Yasodhara. Converted to Buddhism, he followed his father as an attendant; and after Buddha's death became the founder of a philosophical realistic school (vaibhashika). He is now revered as the patron saint of all novices, and is to be reborn as the eldest son of every future Buddha. Eitel, p. 101. His mother also is to be reborn as Buddha.

[21] There are six (sometimes increased to ten) paramitas, "means of passing to nirvana:--Charity; morality; patience; energy; tranquil contemplation; wisdom (prajna); made up to ten by use of the proper means; science; pious vows; and force of purpose. But it is only prajna which carries men across the samsara to the shores of nirvana." Eitel, p. 90.

[22] According to Eitel (pp. 71, 72), "A famous Bodhisattva, now specially worshipped in Shan-se, whose antecedents are a hopeless jumble of history and fable. Fa-hien found him here worshipped by followers of the mahayana school; but Hsuan-chwang connects his worship with the yogachara or tantra-magic school. The mahayana school regard him as the apotheosis of perfect wisdom. His most common titles are Mahamati, "Great wisdom," and Kumara-raja, "King of teaching, with a thousand arms and a hundred alms-bowls."

[23] Kwan-she-yin and the dogmas about him or her are as great a mystery as Manjusri. The Chinese name is a mistranslation of the Sanskrit name Avalokitesvra, "On-looking Sovereign," or even "On-looking Self-Existent," and means "Regarding or Looking on the sounds of the world,"="Hearer of Prayer." Originally, and still in Thibet, Avalokitesvara had only male attributes, but in China and Japan (Kwannon), this deity (such popularly she is) is represented as a woman, "Kwan-yin, the greatly gentle, with a thousand arms and a thousand eyes;" and has her principal seat in the island of P'oo-t'oo, on the China coast, which is a regular place of pilgrimage. To the worshippers of whom Fa-hien speaks, Kwan-she-yin would only be Avalokitesvara. How he was converted into the "goddess of mercy," and her worship took the place which it now has in China, is a difficult inquiry, which would take much time and space, and not be brought after all, so far as I see, to a satisfactory conclusion. See Eitel's Handbook, pp. 18-20, and his Three Lectures on Buddhism (third edition), pp. 124-131. I was talking on the subject once with an intelligent Chinese gentleman, when he remarked, "Have you not much the same thing in Europe in the worship of Mary?"

[24] Compare what is said in chap. v.

[25] This nirvana of Buddha must be--not his death, but his attaining to Buddhaship.

CHAPTER XVII

SANKASYA. BUDDHA'S ASCENT TO AND DESCENT FROM THE TRAYASTRIMSAS HEAVEN, AND OTHER LEGENDS.

From this they proceeded south-east for eighteen yojanas, and found themselves in a kingdom called Sankasya,[1] at the place where Buddha came down, after ascending to the Trayastrimsas heaven,[2] and there preaching for three months his Law for the benefit of his mother.[3] Buddha had gone up to this heaven by his supernatural power,[4] without letting his disciples know; but seven days before the completion (of the three months) he laid aside his invisibility,[4] and Anuruddha,[5] with his heavenly eyes,[5] saw the World-honoured one, and immediately said to the honoured one, the great Mugalan, "Do you go and salute the World-honoured one." Mugalan forthwith went, and with head and face did homage at (Buddha's) feet. They then saluted and questioned each other, and when this was over, Buddha said to Mugalan, "Seven days after this I will go down to Jambudvipa;" and thereupon Mugalan returned. At this time the great kings of eight countries with their ministers and people, not having seen Buddha for a long time, were all thirstily looking up for him, and had collected in clouds in this kingdom to wait for the World-honoured one.

Then the bhikshuni Utpala[6] thought in her heart, "To-day the kings, with their ministers and people, will all be meeting (and welcoming) Buddha. I am (but) a woman; how shall I succeed in being the first to see him?"[7] Buddha immediately, by his spirit-like power, changed her into the appearance of a holy Chakravartti[8] king, and she was the foremost of all in doing reverence to him.

As Buddha descended from his position aloft in the Trayastrimsas heaven, when he was coming down, there were made to appear three flights of precious steps. Buddha was on the middle flight, the steps of which were composed of the seven precious substances. The king of Brahma-loka[9] also made a flight of silver steps appear on the right side, (where he was seen) attending with a white chowry in his hand. Sakra, Ruler of Devas, made (a flight of) steps of purple gold on the left side, (where he was seen) attending and holding an umbrella of the seven precious substances. An innumerable multitude of the devas followed Buddha in his descent. When he was come down, the three flights all disappeared in the ground, excepting seven steps, which continued to be visible. Afterwards king Asoka, wishing to know where their ends rested, sent men to dig and see. They went down to the yellow springs[10] without reaching the bottom of the steps, and from this the king received an increase to his reverence and faith, and built a vihara over the steps, with a standing image, sixteen cubits in height, right over the middle flight. Behind the vihara he erected a stone pillar, about fifty cubits high,[11] with a lion on the top of it.[12] Let into the pillar, on each of its four sides,[13] there is an image of Buddha, inside and out[14] shining and transparent, and pure as it were of /lapis lazuli/. Some teachers of another doctrine[15] once disputed with the Sramanas about (the right to) this as a place of residence, and the latter were having the worst of the argument, when they took an oath on both sides on the condition that, if the place did indeed belong to the Sramanas, there should be some marvellous attestation of it. When these words had been spoken, the lion on the top gave a great roar, thus giving the proof; on which their opponents were frightened, bowed to the decision, and withdrew.

Through Buddha having for three months partaken of the food of heaven, his body emitted a heavenly fragrance, unlike that of an ordinary man. He went immediately and bathed; and afterwards, at the spot where he did so, a bathing-house was built, which is still existing. At the place where the bhikshuni Utpala was the first to do reverence to Buddha, a tope has now been built.

At the places where Buddha, when he was in the world, cut his hair and nails, topes are erected; and where the three Buddhas[16] that preceded Sakyamuni Buddha and he himself sat; where they walked,[17] and where images of their persons were made. At all these places topes were made, and are still existing. At the place where Sakra, Ruler of the Devas, and the king of the Brahma-loka followed Buddha down (from the Trayastrimsas heaven) they have also raised a tope.

At this place the monks and nuns may be a thousand, who all receive their food from the common store, and pursue their studies, some of the mahayana and some of the hinayana. Where they live, there is a white-eared dragon, which acts the part of danapati to the community of these monks, causing abundant harvests in the country, and the enriching rains to come in season, without the occurrence of any calamities, so that the monks enjoy their repose and ease. In gratitude for its kindness, they have made for it a dragon-house, with a carpet for it to sit on, and appointed for it a diet of blessing, which they present for its nourishment. Every day they set apart three of their number to go to its house, and eat there. Whenever the summer retreat is ended, the dragon straightway changes its form, and appears as a small snake,[18] with white spots at the side of its ears. As soon as the monks recognise it, they fill a copper vessel with cream, into which they put the creature, and then carry it round from the one who has the highest seat (at their tables) to him who has the lowest, when it appears as if saluting them. When it has been taken round, immediately it disappeared; and every year it thus comes forth once. The country is very productive, and the people are prosperous, and happy beyond comparison. When people of other countries come to it, they are exceedingly attentive to them all, and supply them with what they need.

Fifty yojanas north-west from the monastery there is another, called "The Great Heap."[19] Great Heap was the name of a wicked demon, who was converted by Buddha, and men subsequently at this place reared a vihara. When it was being made over to an Arhat by pouring water on his hands,[20] some drops fell on the ground. They are still on the spot, and however they may be brushed away and removed, they continue to be visible, and cannot be made to disappear.

At this place there is also a tope to Buddha, where a good spirit constantly keeps (all about it) swept and watered, without any labour of man being required. A king of corrupt views once said, "Since you are able to do this, I will lead a multitude of troops and reside there till the dirt and filth has increased and accumulated, and (see) whether you can cleanse it away or not." The spirit thereupon raised a great wind, which blew (the filth away), and made the place pure.

At this place there are a hundred small topes, at which a man may keep counting a whole day without being able to know (their exact number). If he be firmly bent on knowing it, he will place a man by the side of each tope. When this is done, proceeding to count the number of men, whether they be many or few, he will not get to know (the number).[21]

There is a monastery, containing perhaps 600 or 700 monks, in which there is a place where a Pratyeka Buddha used to take his food. The nirvana ground (where he was burned[22] after death) is as large as a carriage wheel; and while grass grows all around, on this spot there is none. The ground also where he dried his clothes produces no grass, but the impression of them, where they lay on it, continues to the present day.

NOTES

[1] The name is still remaining in Samkassam, a village forty-five miles northwest of Canouge, lat. 27d 3s N., lon. 79d 50s E.

[2] The heaven of Indra or Sakya, meaning "the heaven of thirty-three classes," a name which has been explained both historically and mythologically. "The description of it," says Eitel, p. 148, "tallies in all respects with the Svarga of Brahmanic mythology. It is situated between the four peaks of the Meru, and consists of thirty-two cities of devas, eight one each of the four corners of the mountain. Indra's capital of Bellevue is in the centre. There he is enthroned, with a thousand heads and a thousand eyes, and four arms grasping the vajra, with his wife and 119,000 concubines. There he receives the monthly reports of the four Maharajas, concerning the progress of good and evil in the world," &c. &c.

[3] Buddha's mother, Maya and Mahamaya, the /mater immaculata/ of the Buddhists, died seven days after his birth. Eitel says, "Reborn in Tushita, she was visited there by her son and converted." The Tushita heaven was a more likely place to find her than the Trayastrimsas; but was the former a part of the latter? Hardy gives a long account of Buddha's visit to the Trayastrimsas (M. B., pp. 298-302), which he calls Tawutisa, and speaks of his mother (Matru) in it, who had now become a deva by the changing of her sex.

[4] Compare the account of the Arhat's conveyance of the artist to the Tushita heaven in chap. v. The first expression here is more comprehensive.

[5] Anuruddha was a first cousin of Sakyamuni, being the son of his uncle Amritodana. He is often mentioned in the account we have of Buddha's last moments. His special gift was the divyachakshus or "heavenly eye," the first of the six abhijnas or "supernatural talents," the faculty of comprehending in one instantaneous view, or by intuition, all beings in all worlds. "He could see," says Hardy, M. B., p. 232, "all things in 100,000 sakvalas as plainly as a mustard seed held in the hand."

[6] Eitel gives the name Utpala with the same Chinese phonetisation as in the text, but not as the name of any bhikshuni. The Sanskrit word, however, is explained by "blue lotus flowers;" and Hsuan-chwang calls her the nun "Lotus-flower colour ({.} {.} {.});"--the same as Hardy's Upulwan and Uppalawarna.

[7] Perhaps we should read here "to see Buddha," and then ascribe the transformation to the nun herself. It depends on the punctuation which view we adopt; and in the structure of the passage, there is nothing to indicate that the stop should be made before or after "Buddha." And the one view is as reasonable, or rather as unreasonable, as the other.

[8] "A holy king who turns the wheel;" that is, the military conqueror and monarch of the whole or part of a universe. "The symbol," says Eitel (p. 142) "of such a king is the chakra or wheel, for when he ascends the throne, a chakra falls from heaven, indicating by its material (gold, silver, copper, or iron) the extent and character of his reign. The office, however, of the highest Chakravartti, who hurls his wheel among his enemies, is inferior to the peaceful mission of a Buddha, who meekly turns the wheel of the Law, and conquers every universe by his teaching."

[9] This was Brahma, the first person of the Brahmanical Trimurti, adopted by Buddhism, but placed in an inferior position, and surpassed by every Buddhist saint who attains to bodhi.

[10] A common name for the earth below, where, on digging, water is found.

[11] The height is given as thirty chow, the chow being the distance from the elbow to the finger-tip, which is variously estimated.

[12] A note of Mr. Beal says on this:--"General Cunningham, who visited the spot (1862), found a pillar, evidently of the age of Asoka, with a well-carved elephant on the top, which, however, was minus trunk and tail. He supposes this to be the pillar seen by Fa-hien, who mistook the top of it for a lion. It is possible such a mistake may have been made, as in the account of one of the pillars at Sravasti, Fa-hien says an ox formed the capital, whilst Hsuan-chwang calls it an elephant (P. 19, Arch. Survey)."

[13] That is, in niches on the sides. The pillar or column must have been square.

[14] Equivalent to "all through."

[15] Has always been translated "heretical teachers;" but I eschew the terms /heresy/ and /heretical/. The parties would not be Buddhists of any creed or school, but Brahmans or of some other false doctrine, as Fa-hien deemed it. The Chinese term means "outside" or "foreign;"--in Pali, anna-titthiya,="those belonging to another school."

[16] These three predecessors of Sakyamuni were the three Buddhas of the present or Maha-bhadra Kalpa, of which he was the fourth, and Maitreya is to be the fifth and last. They were: (1) Krakuchanda (Pali, Kakusanda), "he who readily solves all doubts;" a scion of the Kasyapa family. Human life reached in his time 40,000 years, and so many persons were converted by him. (2) Kanakamuni (Pali, Konagamana), "body radiant with the colour of pure gold;" of the same family. Human life reached in his time 30,000 years, and so many persons were converted by him. (3) Kasyapa (Pali, Kassapa), "swallower of light." Human life reached in his time 20,000 years, and so many persons were converted by him. See Eitel, under the several names; Hardy's M. B., pp. 95-97; and Davids' "Buddhist Birth Stories," p. 51.

[17] That is, walked in meditation. Such places are called Chankramana (Pali, Chankama); promenades or corridors connected with a monastery, made sometimes with costly stones, for the purpose of peripatetic meditation. The "sitting" would be not because of weariness or for rest, but for meditation. E. H., p. 144.

[18] The character in my Corean copy is {.}, which must be a mistake for the {.} of the Chinese editions. Otherwise, the meaning would be "a small medusa."

[19] The reading here seems to me a great improvement on that of the Chinese editions, which means "Fire Limit." Buddha, it is said, {.} converted this demon, which Chinese character Beal rendered at first by "in one of his incarnations;" and in his revised version he has "himself." The difference between Fa-hien's usage of {.} and {.} throughout his narrative is quite marked. {.} always refers to the doings of Sakyamuni; {.}, "formerly," is often used of him and others in the sense of "in a former age or birth."

[20] See Hardy, M. B., p. 194:--"As a token of the giving over of the garden, the king poured water upon the hands of Buddha; and from this time it became one of the principal residences of the sage."

[21] This would seem to be absurd; but the writer evidently intended to convey the idea that there was something mysterious about the number of the topes.

[22] This seems to be the meaning. The bodies of the monks are all burned. Hardy's E. M., pp. 322-324.

CHAPTER XVIII

KANYAKUBJA, OR CANOUGE. BUDDHA'S PREACHING.

Fa-hien stayed at the Dragon vihara till after the summer retreat,[1] and then, travelling to the south-east for seven yojanas, he arrived at the city of Kanyakubja,[2] lying along the Ganges.[3] There are two monasteries in it, the inmates of which are students of the hinayana. At a distance from the city of six or seven le, on the west, on the northern bank of the Ganges, is a place where Buddha preached the Law to his disciples. It has been handed down that his subjects of discourse were such as "The bitterness and vanity (of life) as impermanent and uncertain," and that "The body is as a bubble or foam on the water." At this spot a tope was erected, and still exists.

Having crossed the Ganges, and gone south for three yojanas, (the travellers) arrived at a village named A-le,[4] containing places where Buddha preached the Law, where he sat, and where he walked, at all of which topes have been built.

NOTES

[1] We are now, probably, in 405.

[2] Canouge, the latitude and longitude of which have been given in a previous note. The Sanskrit name means "the city of humpbacked maidens;" with reference to the legend of the hundred daughters of king Brahma-datta, who were made deformed by the curse of the rishi Maha-vriksha, whose overtures they had refused. E. H., p. 51.

[3] Ganga, explained by "Blessed water," and "Come from heaven to earth."

[4] This village (the Chinese editions read "forest") has hardly been clearly identified.

CHAPTER XIX

SHA-CHE. LEGEND OF BUDDHA'S DANTA-KASHTHA.

Going on from this to the south-east for three yojanas, they came to the great kingdom of Sha-che.[1] As you go out of the city of Sha-che by the southern gate, on the east of the road (is the place) where Buddha, after he had chewed his willow branch,[2] stuck it in the ground, when it forthwith grew up seven cubits, (at which height it remained) neither increasing nor diminishing. The Brahmans with their contrary doctrines[3] became angry and jealous. Sometimes they cut the tree down, sometimes they plucked it up, and cast it to a distance, but it grew again on the same spot as at first. Here also is the place where the four Buddhas walked and sat, and at which a tope was built that is still existing.

NOTES

[1] Sha-che should probably be Sha-khe, making Cunningham's identification of the name with the present Saket still more likely. The change of {.} into {.} is slight; and, indeed, the Khang-hsi dictionary thinks the two characters should be but one and the same.

[2] This was, no doubt, what was called the danta-kashtha, or "dental wood," mostly a bit of the /ficus Indicus/ or banyan tree, which the monk chews every morning to cleanse his teeth, and for the purpose of health generally. The Chinese, not having the banyan, have used, or at least Fa-hien used, Yang ({.}, the general name for the willow) instead of it.

[3] Are two classes of opponents, or only one, intended here, so that we should read "all the unbelievers and Brahmans," or "heretics and Brahmans?" I think the Brahmans were also "the unbelievers" and "heretics," having {.} {.}, views and ways outside of, and opposed to, Buddha's.

CHAPTER XX

KOSALA AND SRAVASTI. THE JETAVANA VIHARA AND OTHER MEMORIALS AND LEGENDS OF BUDDHA. SYMPATHY OF THE MONKS WITH THE PILGRIMS.

Going on from this to the south, for eight yojanas, (the travellers) came to the city of Sravasti[1] in the kingdom of Kosala,[2] in which the inhabitants were few and far between, amounting in all (only) to a few more than two hundred families; the city where king Prasenajit[3] ruled, and the place of the old vihara of Maha-prajapti;[4] of the well and walls of (the house of) the (Vaisya) head Sudatta;[5] and where the Angulimalya[6] became an Arhat, and his body was (afterwards) burned on his attaining to pari-nirvana. At all these places topes were subsequently erected, which are still existing in the city. The Brahmans, with their contrary doctrine, became full of hatred and envy in their hearts, and wished to destroy them, but there came from the heavens such a storm of crashing thunder and flashing lightning that they were not able in the end to effect their purpose.

As you go out from the city by the south gate, and 1,200 paces from it, the (Vaisya) head Sudatta built a vihara, facing the south; and when the door was open, on each side of it there was a stone pillar, with the figure of a wheel on the top of that on the left, and the figure of an ox on the top of that on the right. On the left and right of the building the ponds of water clear and pure, the thickets of trees always luxuriant, and the numerous flowers of various hues, constituted a lovely scene, the whole forming what is called the Jetavana vihara.[7]

When Buddha went up to the Trayastrimsas heaven,[8] and preached the Law for the benefit of his mother, (after he had been absent for) ninety days, Prasenajit, longing to see him, caused an image of him to be carved in Gosirsha Chandana wood,[9] and put in the place where he usually sat. When Buddha on his return entered the vihara, Buddha said to it, "Return to your seat. After I have attained to pari-nirvana, you will serve as a pattern to the four classes of my disciples,"[10] and on this the image returned to its seat. This was the very first of all the images (of Buddha), and that which men subsequently copied. Buddha then removed, and dwelt in a small vihara on the south side (of the other), a different place from that containing the image, and twenty paces distant from it.

The Jetavana vihara was originally of seven storeys. The kings and people of the countries around vied with one another in their offerings, hanging up about it silken streamers and canopies, scattering flowers, burning incense, and lighting lamps, so as to make the night as bright as the day. This they did day after day without ceasing. (It happened that) a rat, carrying in its mouth the wick of a lamp, set one of the streamers or canopies on fire, which caught the vihara, and the seven storeys were all consumed. The kings, with their officers and people, were all very sad and distressed, supposing that the sandal-wood image had been burned; but lo! after four or five days, when the door of a small vihara on the east was opened, there was immediately seen the original image. They were all greatly rejoiced, and co-operated in restoring the vihara. When they had succeeded in completing two storeys, they removed the image back to its former place.

When Fa-hien and Tao-ching first arrived at the Jetavana monastery, and thought how the World-honoured one had formerly resided there for twenty-five years, painful reflections arose in their minds. Born in a border-land, along with their like-minded friends, they had travelled through so many kingdoms; some of those friends had returned (to their own land), and some had (died), proving the impermanence and uncertainty of life; and to-day they saw the place where Buddha had lived now unoccupied by him. They were melancholy through their pain of heart, and the crowd of monks came out, and asked them from what kingdom they were come. "We are come," they replied, "from the land of Han." "Strange," said the monks with a sigh, "that men of a border country should be able to come here in search of our Law!" Then they said to one another, "During all the time that we, preceptors and monks,[11] have succeeded to one another, we have never seen men of Han, followers of our system, arrive here."

Four le to the north-west of the vihara there is a grove called "The Getting of Eyes." Formerly there were five hundred blind men, who lived here in order that they might be near the vihara.[12] Buddha preached his Law to them, and they all got back their eyesight. Full of joy, they stuck their staves in the earth, and with their heads and faces on the ground, did reverence. The staves immediately began to grow, and they grew to be great. People made much of them, and no one dared to cut them down, so that they came to form a grove. It was in this way that it got its name, and most of the Jetavana monks, after they had taken their midday meal, went to the grove, and sat there in meditation.

Six or seven le north-east from the Jetavana, mother Vaisakha[13] built another vihara, to which she invited Buddha and his monks, and which is still existing.

To each of the great residences for monks at the Jetavana vihara there were two gates, one facing the east and the other facing the north. The park (containing the whole) was the space of ground which the (Vaisya) head Sudatta purchased by covering it with gold coins. The vihara was exactly in the centre. Here Buddha lived for a longer time than at any other place, preaching his Law and converting men. At the places where he walked and sat they also (subsequently) reared topes, each having its particular name; and here was the place where Sundari[14] murdered a person and then falsely charged Buddha (with the crime). Outside the east gate of the Jetavana, at a distance of seventy paces to the north, on the west of the road, Buddha held a discussion with the (advocates of the) ninety-six schemes of erroneous doctrine, when the king and his great officers, the householders, and people were all assembled in crowds to hear it. Then a woman belonging to one of the erroneous systems, by name Chanchamana,[15] prompted by the envious hatred in her heart, and having put on (extra) clothes in front of her person, so as to give her the appearance of being with child, falsely accused Buddha before all the assembly of having acted unlawfully (towards her). On this, Sakra, Ruler of Devas, changed himself and some devas into white mice, which bit through the strings about her waist; and when this was done, the (extra) clothes which she wore dropt down on the ground. The earth at the same time was rent, and she went (down) alive into hell.[16] (This) also is the place where Devadatta,[17] trying with empoisoned claws to injure Buddha, went down alive into hell. Men subsequently set up marks to distinguish where both these events took place.

Further, at the place where the discussion took place, they reared a vihara rather more than sixty cubits high, having in it an image of Buddha in a sitting posture. On the east of the road there was a devalaya[18] of (one of) the contrary systems, called "The Shadow Covered," right opposite the vihara on the place of discussion, with (only) the road between them, and also rather more than sixty cubits high. The reason why it was called "The Shadow Covered" was this:-- When the sun was in the west, the shadow of the vihara of the World-honoured one fell on the devalaya of a contrary system; but when the sun was in the east, the shadow of that devalaya was diverted to the north, and never fell on the vihara of Buddha. The mal-believers regularly employed men to watch their devalaya, to sweep and water (all about it), to burn incense, light the lamps, and present offerings; but in the morning the lamps were found to have been suddenly removed, and in the vihara of Buddha. The Brahmans were indignant, and said, "Those Sramanas take out lamps and use them for their own service of Buddha, but we will not stop our service for you!"[19] On that night the Brahmans themselves kept watch, when they saw the deva spirits which they served take the lamps and go three times round the vihara of Buddha and present offerings. After this ministration to Buddha they suddenly disappeared. The Brahmans thereupon knowing how great was the spiritual power of Buddha, forthwith left their families, and became monks.[20] It has been handed down, that, near the time when these things occurred, around the Jetavana vihara there were ninety-eight monasteries, in all of which there were monks residing, excepting only in one place which was vacant. In this Middle Kingdom[21] there are ninety-six[21] sorts of views, erroneous and different from our system, all of which recognise this world and the future world[22] (and the connexion between them). Each had its multitude of followers, and they all beg their food: only they do not carry the alms-bowl. They also, moreover, seek (to acquire) the blessing (of good deeds) on unfrequented ways, setting up on the road-side houses of charity, where rooms, couches, beds, and food and drink are supplied to travellers, and also to monks, coming and going as guests, the only difference being in the time (for which those parties remain).

There are also companies of the followers of Devadatta still existing. They regularly make offerings to the three previous Buddhas, but not to Sakyamuni Buddha.

Four le south-east from the city of Sravasti, a tope has been erected at the place where the World-honoured one encountered king Virudhaha,[23] when he wished to attack the kingdom of Shay-e,[23] and took his stand before him at the side of the road.[24]

NOTES

[1] In Singhalese, Sewet; here evidently the capital of Kosala. It is placed by Cunningham (Archaeological Survey) on the south bank of the Rapti, about fifty-eight miles north of Ayodya or Oude. There are still the ruins of a great town, the name being Sahet Mahat. It was in this town, or in its neighbourhood, that Sakyamuni spent many years of his life after he became Buddha.

[2] There were two Indian kingdoms of this name, a southern and a northern. This was the northern, a part of the present Oudh.

[3] In Singhalese, Pase-nadi, meaning "leader of the victorious army." He was one of the earliest converts and chief patrons of Sakyamuni. Eitel calls him (p. 95) one of the originators of Buddhist idolatory, because of the statue which is mentioned in this chapter. See Hardy's M. B., pp. 283, 284, et al.

[4] Explained by "Path of Love," and "Lord of Life." Prajapati was aunt and nurse of Sakyamuni, the first woman admitted to the monkhood, and the first superior of the first Buddhistic convent. She is yet to become a Buddha.

[5] Sudatta, meaning "almsgiver," was the original name of Anatha-pindika (or Pindada), a wealthy householder, or Vaisya head, of Sravasti, famous for his liberality (Hardy, Anepidu). Of his old house, only the well and walls remained at the time of Fa-hien's visit to Sravasti.

[6] The Angulimalya were a sect or set of Sivaitic fanatics, who made assassination a religious act. The one of them here mentioned had joined them by the force of circumstances. Being converted by Buddha, he became a monk; but when it is said in the text that he "got the Tao," or doctrine, I think that expression implies more than his conversion, and is equivalent to his becoming an Arhat. His name in Pali is Angulimala. That he did become an Arhat is clear from his autobiographical poem in the "Songs of the Theras."

[7] Eitel (p. 37) says:--"A noted vihara in the suburbs of Sravasti, erected in a park which Anatha-pindika bought of prince Jeta, the son of Prasenajit. Sakyamuni made this place his favourite residence for many years. Most of the Sutras (authentic and supposititious) date from this spot."

[8] See chapter xvii.

[9] See chapter xiii.

[10] Arya, meaning "honourable," "venerable," is a title given only to those who have mastered the four spiritual truths:--(1) that "misery"

is a necessary condition of all sentient existence; this is duhkha: (2) that the "accumulation" of misery is caused by the passions; this is samudaya: (3) that the "extinction" of passion is possible; this is nirodha: and (4) that the "path" leads to the extinction of passion; which is marga. According to their attainment of these truths, the Aryas, or followers of Buddha, are distinguished into four classes,--Srotapannas, Sakridagamins, Anagamins, and Arhats. E. H., p. 14.

[11] This is the first time that Fa-hien employs the name Ho-shang {.} {.}, which is now popularly used in China for all Buddhist monks without distinction of rank or office. It is the representative of the Sanskrit term Upadhyaya, "explained," says Eitel (p. 155) by "a self-taught teacher," or by "he who knows what is sinful and what is not sinful," with the note, "In India the vernacular of this term is {.} {.} (? munshee [? Bronze]); in Kustana and Kashgar they say {.} {.} (hwa-shay); and from the latter term are derived the Chinese synonyms, {.} {.} (ho-shay) and {.} {.} (ho-shang)." The Indian term was originally a designation for those who teach only a part of the Vedas, the Vedangas. Adopted by Buddhists of Central Asia, it was made to signify the priests of the older ritual, in distinction from the Lamas. In China it has been used first as a synonym for {.} {.}, monks engaged in popular teaching (teachers of the Law), in distinction from {.} {.}, disciplinists, and {.} {.}, contemplative philosophers (meditationists); then it was used to designate the abbots of monasteries. But it is now popularly applied to all Buddhist monks. In the text there seems to be implied some distinction between the "teachers" and the "ho-shang;"--probably, the Pali Akariya and Upagghaya; see Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiii, Vinaya Texts, pp. 178, 179.

[12] It might be added, "as depending on it," in order to bring out the full meaning of the {.} in the text. If I recollect aright, the help of the police had to be called in at Hong Kong in its early years, to keep the approaches to the Cathedral free from the number of beggars, who squatted down there during service, hoping that the hearers would come out with softened hearts, and disposed to be charitable. I found the popular tutelary temples in Peking and other places, and the path up Mount T'ai in Shan-lung similarly frequented.

[13] The wife of Anatha-pindika, and who became "mother superior" of many nunneries. See her history in M. B., pp. 220-227. I am surprised it does not end with the statement that she is to become a Buddha.

[14] See E. H., p. 136. Hsuan-chwang does not give the name of this murderer; see in Julien's "Vie et Voyages de Hiouen-thsang," p. 125,--"a heretical Brahman killed a woman and calumniated Buddha." See also the fuller account in Beal's "Records of Western Countries," pp. 7, 8, where the murder is committed by several Brahmacharins. In this passage Beal makes Sundari to be the name of the murdered person (a harlot). But the text cannot be so construed.

[15] Eitel (p. 144) calls her Chancha; in Singhalese, Chinchi. See the story about her, M. B., pp. 275-277.

[16] "Earth's prison," or "one of Earth's prisons." It was the Avichi naraka to which she went, the last of the eight hot prisons, where the culprits die, and are born again in uninterrupted succession (such being the meaning of Avichi), though not without hope of final redemption. E. H. p. 21.

[17] Devadatta was brother of Ananda, and a near relative therefore of Sakyamuni. He was the deadly enemy, however, of the latter. He had become so in an earlier state of existence, and the hatred continued in every successive birth, through which they reappeared in the world. See the accounts of him, and of his various devices against Buddha, and his own destruction at the last, in M. B., pp. 315-321, 326-330; and still better, in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xx, Vinaya Texts, pp. 233-265. For the particular attempt referred to in the text, see "The Life of the Buddha," p. 107. When he was engulphed, and the flames were around him, he cried out to Buddha to save him, and we are told that he is expected yet to appear as a Buddha under the name of Devaraja, in a universe called Deva-soppana. E. H., p. 39.

[18] "A devalaya ({.} {.} or {.} {.}), a place in which a deva is worshipped,--a general name for all Brahmanical temples" (Eitel, p. 30). We read in the Khang-hsi dictionary under {.}, that when Kasyapa

Matanga came to the Western Regions, with his Classics or Sutras, he was lodged in the Court of State-Ceremonial, and that afterwards there was built for him "The Court of the White-horse" ({.} {.} {.}), and in consequence the name of Sze {.} came to be given to all Buddhistic temples. Fa-hien, however, applies this term only to Brahmanical temples.

[19] Their speech was somewhat unconnected, but natural enough in the circumstances. Compare the whole account with the narrative in I Samuel v. about the Ark and Dagon, that "twice-battered god of Palestine."

[20] "Entered the doctrine or path." Three stages in the Buddhistic life are indicated by Fa-hien:--"entering it," as here, by becoming monks ({.} {.}); "getting it," by becoming Arhats ({.} {.}); and "completing it," by becoming Buddha ({.} {.}).

[21] It is not quite clear whether the author had in mind here Central India as a whole, which I think he had, or only Kosala, the part of it where he then was. In the older teaching, there were only thirty-two sects, but there may have been three subdivisions of each. See Rhys Davids' "Buddhism," pp. 98, 99.

[22] This mention of "the future world" is an important difference between the Corean and Chinese texts. The want of it in the latter has been a stumbling-block in the way of all previous translators. Remusat says in a note that "the heretics limited themselves to speak of the duties of man in his actual life without connecting it by the notion that the metempsychosis with the anterior periods of existence through which he had passed." But this is just the opposite of what Fa-hien's meaning was, according to our Corean text. The notion of "the metempsychosis" was just that in which all the ninety-six erroneous systems agreed among themselves and with Buddhism. If he had wished to say what the French sinologue thinks he does say, moreover, he would probably have written {.} {.} {.} {.} {.}. Let me add, however, that the connexion which Buddhism holds between the past world (including the present) and the future is not that of a metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls, for it does not appear to admit any separate existence of the soul. Adhering to its own phraseology of "the wheel," I would call its doctrine that of "The Transrotation of Births." See Rhys Davids' third Hibbert Lecture.

[23] Or, more according to the phonetisation of the text, Vaidurya. He was king of Kosala, the son and successor of Prasenajit, and the destroyer of Kapilavastu, the city of the Sakya family. His hostility to the Sakyas is sufficiently established, and it may be considered as certain that the name Shay-e, which, according to Julien's "Methode," p. 89, may be read Chia-e, is the same as Kia-e ({.} {.}), one of the phonetisations of Kapilavastu, as given by Eitel.

[24] This would be the interview in the "Life of the Buddha" in Trubner's Oriental Series, p. 116, when Virudhaha on his march found Buddha under an old sakotato tree. It afforded him no shade; but he told the king that the thought of the danger of "his relatives and kindred made it shady." The king was moved to sympathy for the time, and went back to Sravasti; but the destruction of Kapilavastu was only postponed for a short space, and Buddha himself acknowledged it to be inevitable in the connexion of cause and effect.

CHAPTER XXI

THE THREE PREDECESSORS OF SAKYAMUNI IN THE BUDDHASHIP.

Fifty le to the west of the city bring (the traveller) to a town named Too-wei,[1] the birthplace of Kasyapa Buddha.[1] At the place where he and his father met,[2] and at that where he attained to pari-nirvana, topes were erected. Over the entire relic of the whole body of him, the Kasyapa Tathagata,[3] a great tope was also erected.

Going on south-east from the city of Sravasti for twelve yojanas, (the travellers) came to a town named Na-pei-kea,[4] the birthplace of Krakuchanda Buddha. At the place where he and his father met, and at that where he attained to pari-nirvana, topes were erected. Going north from here less than a yojana, they came to a town which had been the birthplace of Kanakamuni Buddha. At the place where he and his father met, and where he attained to pari-nirvana, topes were erected.

NOTES

[1] Identified, as Beal says, by Cunningham with Tadwa, a village nine miles to the west of Sahara-mahat. The birthplace of Kasyapa Buddha is generally thought to have been Benares. According to a calculation of Remusat, from his birth to A.D. 1832 there were 1,992,859 years!

[2] It seems to be necessary to have a meeting between every Buddha and his father. One at least is ascribed to Sakyamuni and his father (real or supposed) Suddhodana.

[3] This is the highest epithet given to every supreme Buddha; in Chinese {.} {.}, meaning, as Eitel, p. 147 says, "/Sic profectus sum/." It is equivalent to "Rightful Buddha, the true successor in the Supreme Buddha Line." Hardy concludes his account of the Kasyapa Buddha (M. B., p. 97) with the following sentence:--"After his body was burnt, the bones still remained in their usual position, presenting the appearance of a perfect skeleton; and the whole of the inhabitants of Jambudvipa, assembling together, erected a dagoba over his relics one yojana in height!"

[4] Na-pei-kea or Nabhiga is not mentioned elsewhere. Eitel says this Buddha was born at the city of Gan-ho ({.} {.} {.}) and Hardy gives his birthplace as Mekhala. It may be possible, by means of Sanskrit, to reconcile these statements.

CHAPTER XXII

KAPILAVASTU. ITS DESOLATION. LEGENDS OF BUDDHA'S BIRTH, AND OTHER INCIDENTS IN CONNEXION WITH IT.

Less than a yojana to the east from this brought them to the city of Kapilavastu;[1] but in it there was neither king nor people. All was mound and desolation. Of inhabitants there were only some monks and a score or two of families of the common people. At the spot where stood the old palace of king Suddhodana[2] there have been made images of the prince (his eldest son) and his mother;[3] and at the places where that son appeared mounted on a white elephant when he entered his mother's womb,[4] and where he turned his carriage round on seeing the sick man after he had gone out of the city by the eastern gate,[5] topes have been erected. The places (were also pointed out)[6] where (the rishi) A-e[7] inspected the marks (of Buddhaship on the body) of the heir-apparent (when an infant); where, when he was in company with Nanda and others, on the elephant being struck down and drawn to one side, he tossed it away;[8] where he shot an arrow to the south-east, and it went a distance of thirty le, then entering the ground and making a spring to come forth, which men subsequently fashioned into a well from which travellers might drink;[9] where, after he had attained to Wisdom, Buddha returned and saw the king, his father;[10] where five hundred Sakyas quitted their families and did reverence to Upali[11] while the earth shook and moved in six different ways; where Buddha preached his Law to the devas, and the four deva kings and others kept the four doors (of the hall), so that (even) the king, his father, could not enter;[12] where Buddha sat under a nyagrodha tree, which is still standing,[13] with his face to the east, and (his aunt) Maja-prajapati presented him with a Sanghali;[14] and (where) king Vaidurya slew the seed of Sakya, and they all in dying became Srotapannas.[15] A tope was erected at this last place, which is still existing.

Several le north-east from the city was the king's field, where the heir-apparent sat under a tree, and looked at the ploughers.[16]

Fifty le east from the city was a garden, named Lumbini,[17] where the queen entered the pond and bathed. Having come forth from the pond on the northern bank, after (walking) twenty paces, she lifted up her hand, laid hold of a branch of a tree, and, with her face to the east, gave birth to the heir-apparent.[18] When he fell to the ground, he (immediately) walked seven paces. Two dragon-kings (appeared) and washed his body. At the place where they did so, there was immediately formed a well, and from it, as well as from the above pond, where (the queen) bathed,[19] the monks (even) now constantly take the water, and drink it.

There are four places of regular and fixed occurrence (in the history of) all Buddhas:--first, the place where they attained to perfect Wisdom (and became Buddha); second, the place where they turned the wheel of the Law;[20] third, the place where they preached the Law, discoursed of righteousness, and discomfited (the advocates of) erroneous doctrines; and fourth, the place where they came down, after going up to the Trayatrimsas heaven to preach the Law for the benefit of their mothers. Other places in connexion with them became remarkable, according to the manifestations which were made at them at particular times.

The country of Kapilavastu is a great scene of empty desolation. The inhabitants are few and far between. On the roads people have to be on their guard against white elephants[21] and lions, and should not travel incautiously.

NOTES

[1] Kapilavastu, "the city of beautiful virtue," was the birthplace of Sakyamuni, but was destroyed, as intimated in the notes on last chapter, during his lifetime. It was situated a short distance north-west of the present Goruckpoor, lat. 26d 46s N., lon. 83d 19s E. Davids says (Manual, p. 25), "It was on the banks of the river Rohini, the modern Kohana, about 100 miles north-west of the city of Benares."

[2] The father, or supposed father, of Sakyamuni. He is here called "the king white and pure" ({.} {.} {.}). A more common appellation is "the king of pure rice" ({.} {.} {.});" but the character {.}, or "rice," must be a mistake for {.}, "Brahman," and the appellation= "Pure Brahman king."

[3] The "eldest son," or "prince" was Sakyamuni, and his mother had no other son. For "his mother," see chap. xvii, note 3. She was a daughter of Anjana or Anusakya, king of the neighbouring country of Koli, and Yasodhara, an aunt of Suddhodana. There appear to have been various intermarriages between the royal houses of Kapila and Koli.

[4] In "The Life of the Buddha," p. 15, we read that "Buddha was now in the Tushita heaven, and knowing that his time was come (the time for his last rebirth in the course of which he would become Buddha), he made the necessary examinations; and having decided that Maha-maya was the right mother, in the midnight watch he entered her womb under the appearance of an elephant." See M. B., pp. 140-143, and, still better, Rhys Davids' "Birth Stories," pp. 58-63.

[5] In Hardy's M. B., pp. 154, 155, we read, "As the prince (Siddhartha, the first name given to Sakyamuni; see Eitel, under Sarvarthasiddha) was one day passing along, he saw a deva under the appearance of a leper, full of sores, with a body like a water-vessel, and legs like the pestle for pounding rice; and when he learned from his charioteer what it was that he saw, be became agitated, and returned at once to the palace." See also Rhys Davids' "Buddhism," p. 29.

[6] This is an addition of my own, instead of "There are also topes erected at the following spots," of former translators. Fa-hien does not say that there were memorial topes at all these places.

[7] Asita; see Eitel, p. 15. He is called in Pali Kala Devala, and had been a minister of Suddhodana's father.

[8] In "The Life of Buddha" we read that the Lichchhavis of Vaisali had sent to the young prince a very fine elephant; but when it was near Kapilavastu, Devadatta, out of envy, killed it with a blow of his fist. Nanda (not Ananda, but a half-brother of Siddhartha), coming that way, saw the carcase lying on the road, and pulled it on one side; but the Bodhisattva, seeing it there, took it by the tail, and tossed it over seven fences and ditches, when the force of its fall made a great ditch. I suspect that the characters in the column have been disarranged, and that we should read {.} {.} {.} {.}, {.} {.}, {.} {.}. Buddha, that is Siddhartha, was at this time only ten years old.

[9] The young Sakyas were shooting when the prince thus surpassed them all. He was then seventeen.

[10] This was not the night when he finally fled from Kapilavastu, and as he was leaving the palace, perceiving his sleeping father, and said, "Father, though I love thee, yet a fear possesses me, and I may not stay;"--The Life of the Buddha, p. 25. Most probably it was that related in M. B., pp. 199-204. See "Buddhist Birth Stories," pp. 120-127.

[11] They did this, I suppose, to show their humility, for Upali was only a Sudra by birth, and had been a barber; so from the first did Buddhism assert its superiority to the conditions of rank and caste. Upali was distinguished by his knowledge of the rules of discipline, and praised on that account by Buddha. He was one of the three leaders of the first synod, and the principal compiler of the original Vinaya books.

[12] I have not met with the particulars of this preaching.

[13] Meaning, as explained in Chinese, "a tree without knots;" the /ficus Indica/. See Rhys Davids' note, Manual, p. 39, where he says that a branch of one of these trees was taken from Buddha Gaya to Anuradhapura in Ceylon in the middle of the third century B.C, and is still growing there, the oldest historical tree in the world.

[14] See chap. xiii, note 11. I have not met with the account of this presentation. See the long account of Prajapati in M. B., pp. 306-315.

[15] See chap. xx, note 10. The Srotapannas are the first class of saints, who are not to be reborn in a lower sphere, but attain to nirvana after having been reborn seven times consecutively as men or devas. The Chinese editions state there were "1000" of the Sakya seed. The general account is that they were 500, all maidens, who refused to take their place in king Vaidurya's harem, and were in consequence taken to a pond, and had their hands and feet cut off. There Buddha came to them, had their wounds dressed, and preached to them the Law. They died in the faith, and were reborn in the region of the four Great Kings. Thence they came back and visited Buddha at Jetavana in the night, and there they obtained the reward of Srotapanna. "The Life of the Buddha," p. 121.

[16] See the account of this event in M. B., p. 150. The account of it reminds me of the ploughing by the sovereign, which has been an institution in China from the earliest times. But there we have no magic and no extravagance.

[17] "The place of Liberation;" see chap. xiii, note 7.

[18] See the accounts of this event in M. B., pp. 145, 146; "The Life of the Buddha," pp. 15, 16; and "Buddhist Birth Stories," p. 66.

[19] There is difficulty in construing the text of this last statement. Mr. Beal had, no doubt inadvertently, omitted it in his first translation. In his revised version he gives for it, I cannot say happily, "As well as at the pool, the water of which came down from above for washing (the child)."

[20] See chap. xvii, note 8. See also Davids' Manual, p. 45. The latter says, that "to turn the wheel of the Law" means "to set rolling the royal chariot wheel of a universal empire of truth and righteousness;" but he admits that this is more grandiloquent than the phraseology was in the ears of Buddhists. I prefer the words quoted from Eitel in the note referred to. "They turned" is probably equivalent to "They began to turn."

[21] Fa-hien does not say that he himself saw any of these white elephants, nor does he speak of the lions as of any particular colour. We shall find by-and-by, in a note further on, that, to make them appear more terrible, they are spoken of as "black."

CHAPTER XXIII

RAMA, AND ITS TOPE.

East from Buddha's birthplace, and at a distance of five yojanas, there is a kingdom called Rama.[1] The king of this country, having obtained one portion of the relics of Buddha's body,[2] returned with it and built over it a tope, named the Rama tope. By the side of it there was a pool, and in the pool a dragon, which constantly kept watch over (the tope), and presented offerings to it day and night. When king Asoka came forth into the world, he wished to destroy the eight topes (over the relics), and to build (instead of them) 84,000 topes.[3] After he had thrown down the seven (others), he wished next to destroy this tope. But then the dragon showed itself, took the king into its palace;[4] and when he had seen all the things provided for offerings, it said to him, "If you are able with your offerings to exceed these, you can destroy the tope, and take it all away. I will not contend with you." The king, however, knew that such appliances for offerings were not to be had anywhere in the world, and thereupon returned (without carrying out his purpose).

(Afterwards), the ground all about became overgrown with vegetation, and there was nobody to sprinkle and sweep (about the tope); but a herd of elephants came regularly, which brought water with their trunks to water the ground, and various kinds of flowers and incense, which they presented at the tope. (Once) there came from one of the kingdoms a devotee[5] to worship at the tope. When he encountered the elephants he was greatly alarmed, and screened himself among the trees; but when he saw them go through with the offerings in the most proper manner, the thought filled him with great sadness--that there should be no monastery here, (the inmates of which) might serve the tope, but the elephants have to do the watering and sweeping. Forthwith he gave up the great prohibitions (by which he was bound),[6] and resumed the status of a Sramanera.[7] With his own hands he cleared away the grass and trees, put the place in good order, and made it pure and clean. By the power of his exhortations, he prevailed on the king of the country to form a residence for monks; and when that was done, he became head of the monastery. At the present day there are monks residing in it. This event is of recent occurrence; but in all the succession from that time till now, there has always been a Sramanera head of the establishment.

NOTES

[1] Rama or Ramagrama, between Kapilavastu and Kusanagara.

[2] See the account of the eightfold division of the relics of Buddha's body in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xi, Buddhist Suttas, pp. 133-136.

[3] The bones of the human body are supposed to consist of 84,000 atoms, and hence the legend of Asoka's wish to build 84,000 topes, one over each atom of Sakyamuni's skeleton.

[4] Fa-hien, it appears to me, intended his readers to understand that the naga-guardian had a palace of his own, inside or underneath the pool or tank.

[5] It stands out on the narrative as a whole that we have not here "some pilgrims," but one devotee.

[6] What the "great prohibitions" which the devotee now gave up were we cannot tell. Being what he was, a monk of more than ordinary ascetical habits, he may have undertaken peculiar and difficult vows.

[7] The Sramanera, or in Chinese Shamei. See chap. xvi, note 19.

CHAPTER XXIV

WHERE BUDDHA FINALLY RENOUNCED THE WORLD, AND WHERE HE DIED.

East from here four yojanas, there is the place where the heir-apparent sent back Chandaka, with his white horse;[1] and there also a tope was erected.

Four yojanas to the east from this, (the travellers) came to the Charcoal tope,[2] where there is also a monastery.

Going on twelve yojanas, still to the east, they came to the city of Kusanagara,[3] on the north of which, between two trees,[4] on the bank of the Nairanjana[5] river, is the place where the World-honoured one, with his head to the north, attained to pari-nirvana (and died). There also are the places where Subhadra,[6] the last (of his converts), attained to Wisdom (and became an Arhat); where in his coffin of gold they made offerings to the World-honoured one for seven days,[7] where the Vajrapani laid aside his golden club,[8] and where the eight kings[9] divided the relics (of the burnt body):--at all these places were built topes and monasteries, all of which are now existing.

In the city the inhabitants are few and far between, comprising only the families belonging to the (different) societies of monks.

Going from this to the south-east for twelve yojanas, they came to the place where the Lichchhavis[10] wished to follow Buddha to (the place of) his pari-nirvana, and where, when he would not listen to them and they kept cleaving to him, unwilling to go away, he made to appear a large and deep ditch which they could not cross over, and gave them his alms-bowl, as a pledge of his regard, (thus) sending them back to their families. There a stone pillar was erected with an account of this event engraved upon it.

NOTES

[1] This was on the night when Sakyamuni finally left his palace and family to fulfil the course to which he felt that he was called. Chandaka, in Pali Channa, was the prince's charioteer, and in sympathy with him. So also was the white horse Kanthaka (Kanthakanam Asvaraja), which neighed his delight till the devas heard him. See M. B., pp. 158-161, and Davids' Manual, pp. 32, 33. According to "Buddhist Birth Stories," p. 87, the noble horse never returned to the city, but died of grief at being left by his master, to be reborn immediately in the Trayastrimsas heaven as the deva Kanthaka!

[2] Beal and Giles call this the "Ashes" tope. I also would have preferred to call it so; but the Chinese character is {.}, not {.}. Remusat has "la tour des charbons." It was over the place of Buddha's cremation.

[3] In Pali Kusinara. It got its name from the Kusa grass (the /poa cynosuroides/); and its ruins are still extant, near Kusiah, 180 N.W. from Patna; "about," says Davids, "120 miles N.N.E. of Benares, and 80 miles due east of Kapilavastu."

[4] The Sala tree, the /Shorea robusta/, which yields the famous teak wood.

[5] Confounded, according to Eitel, even by Hsuan-chwang, with the Hiranyavati, which flows past the city on the south.

[6] A Brahman of Benares, said to have been 120 years old, who came to learn from Buddha the very night he died. Ananda would have repulsed him; but Buddha ordered him to be introduced; and then putting aside the ingenious but unimportant question which he propounded, preached to him the Law. The Brahman was converted and attained at once to Arhatship. Eitel says that he attained to nirvana a few moments before Sakyamuni; but see the full account of him and his conversion in "Buddhist Suttas," p. 103-110.

[7] Thus treating the dead Buddha as if he had been a Chakravartti king. Hardy's M. B., p. 347, says:--"For the place of cremation, the princes (of Kusinara) offered their own coronation-hall, which was decorated with the utmost magnificence, and the body was deposited in a golden sarcophagus." See the account of a cremation which Fa-hien witnessed in Ceylon, chap. xxxix.

[8] The name Vajrapani is explained as "he who holds in his hand the diamond club (or pestle=sceptre)," which is one of the many names of Indra or Sakra. He therefore, that great protector of Buddhism, would seem to be intended here; but the difficulty with me is that neither in Hardy nor Rockhill, nor any other writer, have I met with any manifestation of himself made by Indra on this occasion. The princes of Kusanagara were called mallas, "strong or mighty heroes;" so also were those of Pava and Vaisali; and a question arises whether the language may not refer to some story which Fa-hien had heard,--something which they did on this great occasion. Vajrapani is also explained as meaning "the diamond mighty hero;" but the epithet of "diamond" is not so applicable to them as to Indra. The clause may hereafter obtain more elucidation.

[9] Of Kusanagara, Pava, Vaisali, and other kingdoms. Kings, princes, brahmans,--each wanted the whole relic; but they agreed to an eightfold division at the suggestion of the brahman Drona.

[10] These "strong heroes" were the chiefs of Vaisali, a kingdom and city, with an oligarchical constitution. They embraced Buddhism early, and were noted for their peculiar attachment to Buddha. The second synod was held at Vaisali, as related in the next chapter. The ruins of the city still exist at Bassahar, north of Patna, the same, I suppose, as Besarh, twenty miles north of Hajipur. See Beal's Revised Version, p. lii.

CHAPTER XXV

VAISALI. THE TOPE CALLED "WEAPONS LAID DOWN." THE COUNCIL OF VAISALI.

East from this city ten yojanas, (the travellers) came to the kingdom of Vaisali. North of the city so named is a large forest, having in it the double-galleried vihara[1] where Buddha dwelt, and the tope over half the body of Ananda.[2] Inside the city the woman Ambapali[3] built a vihara in honour of Buddha, which is now standing as it was at first. Three le south of the city, on the west of the road, (is the) garden (which) the same Ambapali presented to Buddha, in which he might reside. When Buddha was about to attain to his pari-nirvana, as he was quitting the city by the west gate, he turned round, and, beholding the city on his right, said to them, "Here I have taken my last walk."[4] Men subsequently built a tope at this spot.

Three le north-west of the city there is a tope called, "Bows and weapons laid down." The reason why it got that name was this:--The inferior wife of a king, whose country lay along the river Ganges, brought forth from her womb a ball of flesh. The superior wife, jealous of the other, said, "You have brought forth a thing of evil omen," and immediately it was put into a box of wood and thrown into the river. Farther down the stream another king was walking and looking about, when he saw the wooden box (floating) in the water. (He had it brought to him), opened it, and found a thousand little boys, upright and complete, and each one different from the others. He took them and had them brought up. They grew tall and large, and very daring, and strong, crushing all opposition in every expedition which they undertook. By and by they attacked the kingdom of their real father, who became in consequence greatly distressed and sad. His inferior wife asked what it was that made him so, and he replied, "That king has a thousand sons, daring and strong beyond compare, and he wishes with them to attack my kingdom; this is what makes me sad." The wife said, "You need not be sad and sorrowful. Only make a high gallery on the wall of the city on the east; and when the thieves come, I shall be able to make them retire." The king did as she said; and when the enemies came, she said to them from the tower, "You are my sons; why are you acting so unnaturally and rebelliously?" They replied, "If you do not believe me," she said, "look, all of you, towards me, and open your mouths." She then pressed her breasts with her two hands, and each sent forth 500 jets of milk, which fell into the mouths of the thousand sons. The thieves (thus) knew that she was their mother, and laid down their bows and weapons.[5] The two kings, the fathers, thereupon fell into reflection, and both got to be Pratyeka Buddhas.[6] The tope of the two Pratyeka Buddhas is still existing.

In a subsequent age, when the World-honoured one had attained to perfect Wisdom (and become Buddha), he said to is disciples, "This is the place where I in a former age laid down my bow and weapons."[7] It was thus that subsequently men got to know (the fact), and raised the tope on this spot, which in this way received its name. The thousand little boys were the thousand Buddhas of this Bhadra-kalpa.[8]

It was by the side of the "Weapons-laid-down" tope that Buddha, having given up the idea of living longer, said to Ananda, "In three months from this I will attain to pavi-nirvana;" and king Mara[9] had so fascinated and stupefied Ananda, that he was not able to ask Buddha to remain longer in this world.

Three or four le east from this place there is a tope (commemorating the following occurrence):--A hundred years after the pari-nirvana of Buddha, some Bhikshus of Vaisali went wrong in the matter of the disciplinary rules in ten particulars, and appealed for their justification to what they said were the words of Buddha. Hereupon the Arhats and Bhikshus observant of the rules, to the number in all of 700 monks, examined afresh and collated the collection of disciplinary books.[10] Subsequently men built at this place the tope (in question), which is still existing.

NOTES

[1] It is difficult to tell what was the peculiar form of this vihara from which it gets its name; something about the construction of its door, or cupboards, or galleries.

[2] See the explanation of this in the next chapter.

[3] Ambapali, Amrapali, or Amradarika, "the guardian of the Amra (probably the mango) tree," is famous in Buddhist annals. See the account of her in M. B., pp. 456-8. She was a courtesan. She had been in many narakas or hells, was 100,000 times a female beggar, and 10,000 times a prostitute; but maintaining perfect continence during the period of Kasyapa Buddha, Sakyamuni's predecessor, she had been born a devi, and finally appeared in earth under an Amra tree in Vaisali. There again she fell into her old ways, and had a son by king Bimbisara; but she was won over by Buddha to virtue and chastity, renounced the world, and attained to the state of an Arhat. See the earliest account of Ambapali's presentation of the garden in "Buddhist Suttas," pp. 30-33, and the note there from Bishop Bigandet on pp. 33, 34.

[4] Beal gives, "In this place I have performed the last religious act of my earthly career;" Giles, "This is the last place I shall visit;" Remusat, "C'est un lieu ou je reviendrai bien longtemps apres ceci." Perhaps the "walk" to which Buddha referred had been for meditation.

[5] See the account of this legend in the note in M. B., pp. 235, 236, different, but not less absurd. The first part of Fa-hien's narrative will have sent the thoughts of some of my readers to the exposure of the infant Moses, as related in Exodus. [Certainly did.--JB.]

[6] See chap. xiii, note 14.

[7] Thus Sakyamuni had been one of the thousand little boys who floated in the box in the Ganges. How long back the former age was we cannot tell. I suppose the tope of the two fathers who became Pratyeka Buddhas had been built like the one commemorating the laying down of weapons after Buddha had told his disciples of the strange events in the past.

[8] Bhadra-kalpa, "the Kalpa of worthies or sages." "This," says Eitel, p. 22, "is a designation for a Kalpa of stability, so called because 1000 Buddhas appear in the course of it. Our present period is a Bhadra-kalpa, and four Buddhas have already appeared. It is to last 236 million years, but over 151 millions have already elapsed."

[9] "The king of demons." The name Mara is explained by "the murderer," "the destroyer of virtue," and similar appellations. "He is," says Eitel, "the personification of lust, the god of love, sin, and death, the arch-enemy of goodness, residing in the heaven Paranirmita Vasavartin on the top of the Kamadhatu. He assumes different forms, especially monstrous ones, to tempt or frighten the saints, or sends his daughters, or inspires wicked men like Devadatta or the Nirgranthas to do his work. He is often represented with 100 arms, and riding on an elephant." The oldest form of the legend in this paragraph is in "Buddhist Suttas," Sacred Books of the East, vol. xi, pp. 41-55, where Buddha says that, if Ananda had asked him thrice, he would have postponed his death.

[10] Or the Vinaya-pitaka. The meeting referred to was an important one, and is generally spoken of as the second Great Council of the Buddhist Church. See, on the formation of the Buddhist Canon, Hardy's E. M., chap. xviii, and the last chapter of Davids' Manual, on the History of the Order. The first Council was that held at Rajagriha, shortly after Buddha's death, under the presidency of Kasyapa;--say about B.C. 410. The second was that spoken of here;--say about B.C. 300. In Davids' Manual (p. 216) we find the ten points of discipline, in which the heretics (I can use that term here) claimed at least indulgence. Two meetings were held to consider and discuss them. At the former the orthodox party barely succeeded in carrying their condemnation of the laxer monks; and a second and larger meeting, of which Fa-hien speaks, was held in consequence, and a more emphatic condemnation passed. At the same time all the books and subjects of discipline seem to have undergone a careful revision.

The Corean text is clearer than the Chinese as to those who composed the Council,--the Arhats and orthodox monks. The leader among them was a Yasas, or Yasada, or Yedsaputtra, who had been a disciple of Ananda, and must therefore have been a very old man.

CHAPTER XXVI

REMARKABLE DEATH OF ANANDA.

Four yojanas on from this place to the east brought the travellers to the confluence of the five rivers.[1] When Ananda was going from Magadha[2] to Vaisali, wishing his pari-nirvana to take place (there), the devas informed king Ajatasatru[3] of it, and the king immediately pursued him, in his own grand carriage, with a body of soldiers, and had reached the river. (On the other hand), the Lichchhavis of Vaisali had heard that Amanda was coming (to their city), and they on their part came to meet him. (In this way), they all arrived together at the river, and Ananda considered that, if he went forward, king Ajatasatru would be very angry, while, if he went back, the Lichchhavis would resent his conduct. He thereupon in the very middle of the river burnt his body in a fiery ecstasy of Samadhi,[4] and his pari-nirvana was attained. He divided his body (also) into two, (leaving) the half of it on each bank; so that each of the two kings got one half as a (sacred) relic, and took it back (to his own capital), and there raised a tope over it.

NOTES

[1] This spot does not appear to have been identified. It could not be far from Patna.

[2] Magadha was for some time the headquarters of Buddhism; the holy land, covered with viharas; a fact perpetuated, as has been observed in a previous note, in the name of the present Behar, the southern portion of which corresponds to the ancient kingdom of Magadha.

[3] In Singhalese, Ajasat. See the account of his conversion in M. B., pp. 321-326. He was the son of king Bimbisara, who was one of the first royal converts to Buddhism. Ajasat murdered his father, or at least wrought his death; and was at first opposed to Sakyamuni, and a favourer of Devadatta. When converted, he became famous for his liberality in almsgiving.

[4] Eitel has a long article (pp. 114, 115) on the meaning of Samadhi, which is one of the seven sections of wisdom (bodhyanga). Hardy defines it as meaning "perfect tranquillity;" Turnour, as "meditative abstraction;" Burnouf, as "self-control;" and Edkins, as "ecstatic reverie." "Samadhi," says Eitel, "signifies the highest pitch of abstract, ecstatic meditation; a state of absolute indifference to all influences from within or without; a state of torpor of both the material and spiritual forces of vitality; a sort of terrestrial nirvana, consistently culminating in total destruction of life." He then quotes apparently the language of the text, "He consumed his body by Agni (the fire of) Samadhi," and says it is "a common expression for the effects of such ecstatic, ultra-mystic self-annihilation." All this is simply "a darkening of counsel by words without knowledge." Some facts concerning the death of Ananda are hidden beneath the darkness of the phraseology, which it is impossible for us to ascertain. By or in Samadhi he burns his body in the very middle of the river, and then he divides the relic of the burnt body into two parts (for so evidently Fa-hien intended his narration to be taken), and leaves one half on each bank. The account of Ananda's death in Nien-ch'ang's "History of Buddha and the Patriarchs" is much more extravagant. Crowds of men and devas are brought together to witness it. The body is divided into four parts. One is conveyed to the Tushita heaven; a second, to the palace of a certain Naga king; a third is given to Ajatasatru; and the fourth to the Lichchhavis. What it all really means I cannot tell.

CHAPTER XXVII

PATALIPUTTRA OR PATNA, IN MAGADHA. KING ASOKA'S SPIRIT-BUILT PALACE AND HALLS. THE BUDDHIST BRAHMAN, RADHA-SAMI. DISPENSARIES AND HOSPITALS.

Having crossed the river, and descended south for a yojana, (the travellers) came to the town of Pataliputtra,[1] in the kingdom of Magadha, the city where king Asoka[2] ruled. The royal palace and halls in the midst of the city, which exist now as of old, were all made by spirits which he employed, and which piled up the stones, reared the walls and gates, and executed the elegant carving and inlaid sculpture-work,--in a way which no human hands of this world could accomplish.

King Asoka had a younger brother who had attained to be an Arhat, and resided on Gridhra-kuta[3] hill, finding his delight in solitude and quiet. The king, who sincerely reverenced him, wished and begged him (to come and live) in his family, where he could supply all his wants. The other, however, through his delight in the stillness of the mountain, was unwilling to accept the invitation, on which the king said to him, "Only accept my invitation, and I will make a hill for you inside the city." Accordingly, he provided the materials of a feast, called to him the spirits, and announced to them, "To-morrow you will all receive my invitation; but as there are no mats for you to sit on, let each one bring (his own seat)." Next day the spirits came, each one bringing with him a great rock, (like) a wall, four or five paces square, (for a seat). When their sitting was over, the king made them form a hill with the large stones piled on one another, and also at the foot of the hill, with five large square stones, to make an apartment, which might be more than thirty cubits long, twenty cubits wide, and more than ten cubits high.

In this city there had resided a great Brahman,[4] named Radha-sami,[5] a professor of the mahayana, of clear discernment and much wisdom, who understood everything, living by himself in spotless purity. The king of the country honoured and reverenced him, and served him as his teacher. If he went to inquire for and greet him, the king did not presume to sit down alongside of him; and if, in his love and reverence, he took hold of his hand, as soon as he let it go, the Brahman made haste to pour water on it and wash it. He might be more than fifty years old, and all the kingdom looked up to him. By means of this one man, the Law of Buddha was widely made known, and the followers of other doctrines did not find it in their power to persecute the body of monks in any way.

By the side of the tope of Asoka, there has been made a mahayana monastery, very grand and beautiful; there is also a hinayana one; the two together containing six or seven hundred monks. The rules of demeanour and the scholastic arrangements[6] in them are worthy of observation.

Shamans of the highest virtue from all quarters, and students, inquirers wishing to find out truth and the grounds of it, all resort to these monasteries. There also resides in this monastery a Brahman teacher, whose name also is Manjusri,[7] whom the Shamans of greatest virtue in the kingdom, and the mahayana Bhikshus honour and look up to.

The cities and towns of this country are the greatest of all in the Middle Kingdom. The inhabitants are rich and prosperous, and vie with one another in the practice of benevolence and righteousness. Every year on the eighth day of the second month they celebrate a procession of images. They make a four-wheeled car, and on it erect a structure of four storeys by means of bamboos tied together. This is supported by a king-post, with poles and lances slanting from it, and is rather more than twenty cubits high, having the shape of a tope. White and silk-like cloth of hair[8] is wrapped all round it, which is then painted in various colours. They make figures of devas, with gold, silver, and lapis lazuli grandly blended and having silken streamers and canopies hung out over them. On the four sides are niches, with a Buddha seated in each, and a Bodhisattva standing in attendance on him. There may be twenty cars, all grand and imposing, but each one different from the others. On the day mentioned, the monks and laity within the borders all come together; they have singers and skilful musicians; they pay their devotion with flowers and incense. The Brahmans come and invite the Buddhas to enter the city. These do so in order, and remain two nights in it. All through the night they keep lamps burning, have skilful music, and present offerings. This is the practice in all the other kingdoms as well. The Heads of the Vaisya families in them establish in the cities houses for dispensing charity and medicines. All the poor and destitute in the country, orphans, widowers, and childless men, maimed people and cripples, and all who are diseased, go to those houses, and are provided with every kind of help, and doctors examine their diseases. They get the food and medicines which their cases require, and are made to feel at ease; and when they are better, they go away of themselves.

When king Asoka destroyed the seven topes, (intending) to make eighty-four thousand,[9] the first which he made was the great tope, more than three le to the south of this city. In front of this there is a footprint of Buddha, where a vihara has been built. The door of it faces the north, and on the south of it there is a stone pillar, fourteen or fifteen cubits in circumference, and more than thirty cubits high, on which there is an inscription, saying, "Asoka gave the jambudvipa to the general body of all the monks, and then redeemed it from them with money. This he did three times."[10] North from the tope 300 or 400 paces, king Asoka built the city of Ne-le.[11] In it there is a stone pillar, which also is more than thirty feet high, with a lion on the top of it. On the pillar there is an inscription recording the things which led to the building of Ne-le, with the number of the year, the day, and the month.

NOTES

[1] The modern Patna, lat. 25d 28s N., lon. 85d 15s E. The Sanskrit name means "The city of flowers." It is the Indian Florence.

[2] See chap. x, note 3. Asoka transferred his court from Rajagriha to Pataliputtra, and there, in the eighteenth year of his reign, he convoked the third Great Synod,--according, at least, to southern Buddhism. It must have been held a few years before B.C. 250; Eitel says in 246.

[3] "The Vulture-hill;" so called because Mara, according to Buddhist tradition, once assumed the form of a vulture on it to interrupt the meditation of Ananda; or, more probably, because it was a resort of vultures. It was near Rajagriha, the earlier capital of Asoka, so that Fa-hien connects a legend of it with his account of Patna. It abounded in caverns, and was famous as a resort of ascetics.

[4] A Brahman by cast, but a Buddhist in faith.

[5] So, by the help of Julien's "Methode," I transliterate the Chinese characters {.} {.} {.} {.}. Beal gives Radhasvami, his Chinese text having a {.} between {.} and {.}. I suppose the name was Radhasvami or Radhasami.

[6] {.} {.}, the names of two kinds of schools, often occurring in the Li Ki and Mencius. Why should there not have been schools in those monasteries in India as there were in China? Fa-hien himself grew up with other boys in a monastery, and no doubt had to "go to school." And the next sentence shows us there might be schools for more advanced students as well as for the Sramaneras.

[7] See chap. xvi, note 22. It is perhaps with reference to the famous Bodhisattva that the Brahman here is said to be "also" named Manjusri.

[8] ? Cashmere cloth.

[9] See chap. xxiii, note 3.

[10] We wish that we had more particulars of this great transaction, and that we knew what value in money Asoka set on the whole world. It is to be observed that he gave it to the monks, and did not receive it from them. Their right was from him, and he bought it back. He was the only "Power" that was.

[11] We know nothing more of Ne-le. It could only have been a small place; an outpost for the defence of Pataliputtra.

CHAPTER XXVIII

RAJAGRIHA, NEW AND OLD. LEGENDS AND INCIDENTS CONNECTED WITH IT.

(The travellers) went on from this to the south-east for nine yojanas, and came to a small solitary rocky hill,[1] at the head or end of which[2] was an apartment of stone, facing the south,--the place where Buddha sat, when Sakra, Ruler of Devas, brought the deva-musician, Pancha-(sikha),[3] to give pleasure to him by playing on his lute. Sakra then asked Buddha about forty-two subjects, tracing (the questions) out with his finger one by one on the rock.[4] The prints of his tracing are still there; and here also there is a monastery.

A yojana south-west from this place brought them to the village of Nala,[5] where Sariputtra[6] was born, and to which also he returned, and attained here his pari-nirvana. Over the spot (where his body was burned) there was built a tope, which is still in existence.

Another yojana to the west brought them to New Rajagriha,[7]--the new city which was built by king Ajatasatru. There were two monasteries in it. Three hundred paces outside the west gate, king Ajatasatru, having obtained one portion of the relics of Buddha, built (over them) a tope, high, large, grand, and beautiful. Leaving the city by the south gate, and proceeding south four le, one enters a valley, and comes to a circular space formed by five hills, which stand all round it, and have the appearance of the suburban wall of a city. Here was the old city of king Bimbisara; from east to west about five or six le, and from north to south seven or eight. It was here that Sariputtra and Maudgalyayana first saw Upasena;[8] that the Nirgrantha[9] made a pit of fire and poisoned the rice, and then invited Buddha (to eat with him); that king Ajatasatru made a black elephant intoxicated with liquor, wishing him to injure Buddha;[10] and that at the north-east corner of the city in a (large) curving (space) Jivaka built a vihara in the garden of Ambapali,[11] and invited Buddha with his 1250 disciples to it, that he might there make his offerings to support them. (These places) are still there as of old, but inside the city all is emptiness and desolation; no man dwells in it.

NOTES

[1] Called by Hsuan-chwang Indra-sila-guha, or "The cavern of Indra." It has been identified with a hill near the village of Giryek, on the bank of the Panchana river, about thirty-six miles from Gaya. The hill terminates in two peaks overhanging the river, and it is the more northern and higher of these which Fa-hien had in mind. It bears an oblong terrace covered with the ruins of several buildings, especially of a vihara.

[2] This does not mean the top or summit of the hill, but its "headland," where it ended at the river.

[3] See the account of this visit of Sakra in M. B., pp. 288-290. It is from Hardy that we are able to complete here the name of the musician, which appears in Fa-hien as only Pancha, or "Five." His harp or lute, we are told, was "twelve miles long."

[4] Hardy (M. B., pp. 288, 289) makes the subjects only thirteen, which are still to be found in one of the Sutras ("the Dik-Sanga, in the Sakra-prasna Sutra"). Whether it was Sakra who wrote his questions, or Buddha who wrote the answers, depends on the punctuation. It seems better to make Sakra the writer.

[5] Or Nalanda; identified with the present Baragong. A grand monastery was subsequently built at it, famous by the residence for five years of Hsuan-chwang.

[6] See chap. xvi, note 11. There is some doubt as to the statement that Nala was his birthplace.

[7] The city of "Royal Palaces;" "the residence of the Magadha kings from Bimbisara to Asoka, the first metropolis of Buddhism, at the foot of the Gridhrakuta mountains. Here the first synod assembled within a year after Sakyamuni's death. Its ruins are still extant at the village of Rajghir, sixteen miles S.W. of Behar, and form an object of pilgrimage to the Jains (E. H., p. 100)." It is called New Rajagriha to distinguish it from Kusagarapura, a few miles from it, the old residence of the kings. Eitel says it was built by Bimbisara, while Fa-hien ascribes it to Ajatasatru. I suppose the son finished what the father had begun.

[8] One of the five first followers of Sakyamuni. He is also called Asvajit; in Pali Assaji; but Asvajit seems to be a military title= "Master or trainer of horses." The two more famous disciples met him, not to lead him, but to be directed by him, to Buddha. See Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiii, Vinaya Texts, pp. 144-147.

[9] One of the six Tirthyas (Tirthakas="erroneous teachers;" M. B., pp. 290-292, but I have not found the particulars of the attempts on Buddha's life referred to by Fa-hien), or Brahmanical opponents of Buddha. He was an ascetic, one of the Jnati clan, and is therefore called Nirgranthajnati. He taught a system of fatalism, condemned the use of clothes, and thought he could subdue all passions by fasting. He had a body of followers, who called themselves by his name (Eitel, pp. 84, 85), and were the forerunners of the Jains.

[10] The king was moved to this by Devadatta. Of course the elephant disappointed them, and did homage to Sakyamuni. See Sacred Books of the East, vol. xx, Vinaya Texts, p. 247.

[11] See chap. xxv, note 3. Jivaka was Ambapali's son by king

Bimbisara, and devoted himself to the practice of medicine. See the account of him in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xvii, Vinaya Texts, pp. 171-194.

CHAPTER XXIX

GRIDHRA-KUTA HILL, AND LEGENDS. FA-HIEN PASSES A NIGHT ON IT. HIS REFLECTIONS.

Entering the valley, and keeping along the mountains on the south-east, after ascending fifteen le, (the travellers) came to mount Gridhra-kuta.[1] Three le before you reach the top, there is a cavern in the rocks, facing the south, in which Buddha sat in meditation. Thirty paces to the north-west there is another, where Ananda was sitting in meditation, when the deva Mara Pisuna,[2] having assumed the form of a large vulture, took his place in front of the cavern, and frightened the disciple. Then Buddha, by his mysterious, supernatural power, made a cleft in the rock, introduced his hand, and stroked Ananda's shoulder, so that his fear immediately passed away. The footprints of the bird and the cleft for (Buddha's) hand are still there, and hence comes the name of "The Hill of the Vulture Cavern."

In front of the cavern there are the places where the four Buddhas sat. There are caverns also of the Arhats, one where each sat and meditated, amounting to several hundred in all. At the place where in front of his rocky apartment Buddha was walking from east to west (in meditation), and Devadatta, from among the beetling cliffs on the north of the mountain, threw a rock across, and hurt Buddha's toes,[3] the rock is still there.[4]

The hall where Buddha preached his Law has been destroyed, and only the foundations of the brick walls remain. On this hill the peak is beautifully green, and rises grandly up; it is the highest of all the five hills. In the New City Fa-hien bought incense-(sticks), flowers, oil and lamps, and hired two bhikshus, long resident (at the place), to carry them (to the peak). When he himself got to it, he made his offerings with the flowers and incense, and lighted the lamps when the darkness began to come on. He felt melancholy, but restrained his tears and said, "Here Buddha delivered the Surangama (Sutra).[5] I, Fa-hien, was born when I could not meet with Buddha; and now I only see the footprints which he has left, and the place where he lived, and nothing more." With this, in front of the rock cavern, he chanted the Surangama Sutra, remained there over the night, and then returned towards the New City.[6]

NOTES

[1] See chap. xxviii, note 1.

[2] See chap. xxv, note 9. Pisuna is a name given to Mara, and signifies "sinful lust."

[3] See M. B., p. 320. Hardy says that Devadatta's attempt was "by the help of a machine;" but the oldest account in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xx, Vinaya Texts, p. 245, agrees with what Fa-hien implies that he threw the rock with his own arm.

[4] And, as described by Hsuan-chwang, fourteen or fifteen cubits high, and thirty paces round.

[5] See Mr. Bunyiu Nanjio's "Catalogue of the Chinese Translation of the Buddhist Tripitaka," Sutra Pitaka, Nos. 399, 446. It was the former of these that came on this occasion to the thoughts and memory of Fa-hien.

[6] In a note (p. lx) to his revised version of our author, Mr. Beal says, "There is a full account of this perilous visit of Fa-hien, and how he was attacked by tigers, in the 'History of the High Priests.'" But "the high priests" merely means distinguished monks, "eminent monks," as Mr. Nanjio exactly renders the adjectival character. Nor was Fa-hien "attacked by tigers" on the peak. No "tigers" appear in the Memoir. "Two black lions" indeed crouched before him for a time this night, "licking their lips and waving their tails;" but their appearance was to "try," and not to attack him; and when they saw him resolute, they "drooped their heads, put down their tails, and prostrated themselves before him." This of course is not an historical account, but a legendary tribute to his bold perseverance.

CHAPTER XXX

THE SRATAPARNA CAVE, OR CAVE OF THE FIRST COUNCIL. LEGENDS. SUICIDE OF A BHIKSHU.

Out from the old city, after walking over 300 paces, on the west of the road, (the travellers) found the Karanda Bamboo garden,[1] where the (old) vihara is still in existence, with a company of monks, who keep (the ground about it) swept and watered.

North of the vihara two or three le there was the Smasanam, which name means in Chinese "the field of graves into which the dead are thrown."[2]

As they kept along the mountain on the south, and went west for 300 paces, they found a dwelling among the rocks, named the Pippala cave,[3] in which Buddha regularly sat in meditation after taking his (midday) meal.

Going on still to the west for five or six le, on the north of the hill, in the shade, they found the cavern called Srataparna,[4] the place where, after the nirvana[5] of Buddha, 500 Arhats collected the Sutras. When they brought the Sutras forth, three lofty seats[6] had been prepared and grandly ornamented. Sariputtra occupied the one on the left, and Maudgalyayana that on the right. Of the number of five hundred one was wanting. Mahakasyapa was president (on the middle seat). Amanda was then outside the door, and could not get in.[7] At the place there was (subsequently) raised a tope, which is still existing.

Along (the sides of) the hill, there are also a very great many cells among the rocks, where the various Arhans sat and meditated. As you leave the old city on the north, and go down east for three le, there is the rock dwelling of Devadatta, and at a distance of fifty paces from it there is a large, square, black rock. Formerly there was a bhikshu, who, as he walked backwards and forwards upon it, thought with himself:--"This body[8] is impermanent, a thing of bitterness and vanity,[9] and which cannot be looked on as pure.[10] I am weary of this body, and troubled by it as an evil." With this he grasped a knife, and was about to kill himself. But he thought again:--"The World-honoured one laid down a prohibition against one's killing himself."[11] Further it occurred to him:--"Yes, he did; but I now only wish to kill three poisonous thieves."[12] Immediately with the knife he cut his throat. With the first gash into the flesh he attained the state of a Srotapanna;[13] when he had gone half through, he attained to be an Anagamin;[14] and when he had cut right through, he was an Arhat, and attained to pari-nirvana;[15] (and died).

NOTES

[1] Karanda Venuvana; a park presented to Buddha by king Bimbisara, who also built a vihara in it. See the account of the transaction in M. B., p. 194. The place was called Karanda, from a creature so named, which awoke the king just as a snake was about to bite him, and thus saved his life. In Hardy the creature appears as a squirrel, but Eitel says that the Karanda is a bird of sweet voice, resembling a magpie, but herding in flocks; the /cuculus melanoleucus/. See "Buddhist Birth Stories," p. 118.

[2] The language here is rather contemptuous, as if our author had no sympathy with any other mode of disposing of the dead, but by his own Buddhistic method of cremation.

[3] The Chinese characters used for the name of this cavern serve also to name the pippala (peepul) tree, the /ficus religiosa/. They make us think that there was such a tree overshadowing the cave; but Fa-hien would hardly have neglected to mention such a circumstance.

[4] A very great place in the annals of Buddhism. The Council in the Srataparna cave did not come together fortuitously, but appears to have been convoked by the older members to settle the rules and doctrines of the order. The cave was prepared for the occasion by king Ajatasatru. From the expression about the "bringing forth of the King," it would seem that the Sutras or some of them had been already committed to writing. May not the meaning of King {.} here be extended to the Vinaya rules, as well as the Sutras, and mean "the standards" of the system generally? See Davids' Manual, chapter ix, and Sacred Books of the East, vol. xx, Vinaya Texts, pp. 370-385.

[5] So in the text, evidently for pari-nirvana.

[6] Instead of "high" seats, the Chinese texts have "vacant." The character for "prepared" denotes "spread;"--they were carpeted; perhaps, both cushioned and carpeted, being rugs spread on the ground, raised higher than the other places for seats.

[7] Did they not contrive to let him in, with some cachinnation, even in so august an assembly, that so important a member should have been shut out?

[8] "The life of this body" would, I think, fairly express the idea of the bhikshu.

[9] See the account of Buddha's preaching in chapter xviii.

[10] The sentiment of this clause is not easily caught.

[11] See E. M., p. 152:--"Buddha made a law forbidding the monks to commit suicide. He prohibited any one from discoursing on the miseries of life in such a manner as to cause desperation." See also M. B., pp. 464, 465.

[12] Beal says:--"Evil desire; hatred; ignorance."

[13] See chap. xx, note 10.

[14] The Anagamin belong to the third degree of Buddhistic saintship, the third class of Aryas, who are no more liable to be reborn as men, but are to be born once more as devas, when they will forthwith become Arhats, and attain to nirvana. E. H., pp. 8, 9.

[15] Our author expresses no opinion of his own on the act of this bhikshu. Must it not have been a good act, when it was attended, in the very act of performance, by such blessed consequences? But if Buddhism had not something better to show than what appears here, it would not attract the interest which it now does. The bhikshu was evidently rather out of his mind; and the verdict of a coroner's inquest of this nineteenth century would have pronounced that he killed himself "in a fit of insanity."

CHAPTER XXXI

GAYA. SAKYAMUNI'S ATTAINING TO THE BUDDHASHIP; AND OTHER LEGENDS.

From this place, after travelling to the west for four yojanas, (the pilgrims) came to the city of Gaya;[1] but inside the city all was emptiness and desolation. Going on again to the south for twenty le, they arrived at the place where the Bodhisattva for six years practised with himself painful austerities. All around was forest.

Three le west from here they came to the place where, when Buddha had gone into the water to bathe, a deva bent down the branch of a tree, by means of which he succeeded in getting out of the pool.[2]

Two le north from this was the place where the Gramika girls presented to Buddha the rice-gruel made with milk;[3] and two le north from this (again) was the place where, seated on a rock under a great tree, and facing the east, he ate (the gruel). The tree and the rock are there at the present day. The rock may be six cubits in breadth and length, and rather more than two cubits in height. In Central India the cold and heat are so equally tempered that trees will live in it for several thousand and even for ten thousand years.

Half a yojana from this place to the north-east there was a cavern in the rocks, into which the Bodhisattva entered, and sat cross-legged with his face to the west. (As he did so), he said to himself, "If I am to attain to perfect wisdom (and become Buddha), let there be a supernatural attestation of it." On the wall of the rock there appeared immediately the shadow of a Buddha, rather more than three feet in length, which is still bright at the present day. At this moment heaven and earth were greatly moved, and devas in the air spoke plainly, "This is not the place where any Buddha of the past, or he that is to come, has attained, or will attain, to perfect Wisdom. Less than half a yojana from this to the south-west will bring you to the patra[4] tree, where all past Buddhas have attained, and all to come must attain, to perfect Wisdom." When they had spoken these words, they immediately led the way forwards to the place, singing as they did so. As they thus went away, the Bodhisattva arose and walked (after them). At a distance of thirty paces from the tree, a deva gave him the grass of lucky omen,[5] which he received and went on. After (he had proceeded) fifteen paces, 500 green birds came flying towards him, went round him thrice, and disappeared. The Bodhisattva went forward to the patra tree, placed the kusa grass at the foot of it, and sat down with his face to the east. Then king Mara sent three beautiful young ladies, who came from the north, to tempt him, while he himself came from the south to do the same. The Bodhisattva put his toes down on the ground, and the demon soldiers retired and dispersed, and the three young ladies were changed into old (grand-)mothers.[6]

At the place mentioned above of the six years' painful austerities, and at all these other places, men subsequently reared topes and set up images, which all exist at the present day.

Where Buddha, after attaining to perfect wisdom, for seven days contemplated the tree, and experienced the joy of vimukti;[7] where, under the patra tree, he walked backwards and forwards from west to east for seven days; where the devas made a hall appear, composed of the seven precious substances, and presented offerings to him for seven days; where the blind dragon Muchilinda[8] encircled him for seven days; where he sat under the nyagrodha tree, on a square rock, with his face to the east, and Brahma-deva[9] came and made his request to him; where the four deva kings brought to him their alms-bowls;[10] where the 500 merchants[11] presented to him the roasted flour and honey; and where he converted the brothers Kasyapa and their thousand disciples;[12]--at all these places topes were reared.

At the place where Buddha attained to perfect Wisdom, there are three monasteries, in all of which there are monks residing. The families of their people around supply the societies of these monks with an abundant sufficiency of what they require, so that there is no lack or stint.[13] The disciplinary rules are strictly observed by them. The laws regulating their demeanour in sitting, rising, and entering when the others are assembled, are those which have been practised by all the saints since Buddha was in the world down to the present day. The places of the four great topes have been fixed, and handed down without break, since Buddha attained to nirvana. Those four great topes are those at the places where Buddha was born; where he attained to Wisdom; where he (began to) move the wheel of his Law; and where he attained to pari-nirvana.

NOTES

[1] Gaya, a city of Magadha, was north-west of the present Gayah (lat. 24d 47s N., lon. 85d 1s E). It was here that Sakyamuni lived for seven years, after quitting his family, until he attained to Buddhaship. The place is still frequented by pilgrims. E. H., p. 41.

[2] This is told so as to make us think that he was in danger of being drowned; but this does not appear in the only other account of the incident I have met with,--in "The Life of the Buddha," p. 31. And he was not yet Buddha, though he is here called so; unless indeed the narrative is confused, and the incidents do not follow in the order of time.

[3] An incident similar to this is told, with many additions, in Hardy's M. B., pp. 166-168; "The Life of the Buddha," p. 30; and the "Buddhist Birth Stories," pp. 91, 92; but the name of the ministering girl or girls is different. I take Gramika from a note in Beal's revised version; it seems to me a happy solution of the difficulty caused by the {.} {.} of Fa-hien.

[4] Called "the tree of leaves," and "the tree of reflection;" a palm tree, the /borassus flabellifera/, described as a tree which never loses its leaves. It is often confounded with the pippala. E. H., p. 92.

[5] The kusa grass, mentioned in a previous note.

[6] See the account of this contest with Mara in M. B., pp. 171-179, and "Buddhist Birth Stories," pp. 96-101.

[7] See chap. xiii, note 7.

[8] Called also Maha, or the Great Muchilinda. Eitel says: "A naga king, the tutelary deity of a lake near which Sakyamuni once sat for seven days absorbed in meditation, whilst the king guarded him." The account (p. 35) in "The Life of the Buddha" is:--"Buddha went to where lived the naga king Muchilinda, and he, wishing to preserve him from the sun and rain, wrapped his body seven times round him, and spread out his hood over his head; and there he remained seven days in thought." So also the Nidana Katha, in "Buddhist Birth Stories," p. 109.

[9] This was Brahma himself, though "king" is omitted. What he requested of the Buddha was that he would begin the preaching of his Law. Nidana Katha, p. 111.

[10] See chap. xii, note 10.

[11] The other accounts mention only two; but in M. B., p. 182, and the Nidana Katha, p. 110, these two have 500 well-laden waggons with them.

[12] These must not be confounded with Mahakasyapa of chap. xvi, note 17. They were three brothers, Uruvilva, Gaya, and Nadi-Kasyapa, up to this time holders of "erroneous" views, having 500, 300, and 200 disciples respectively. They became distinguished followers of Sakyamuni; and are--each of them--to become Buddha by-and-by. See the Nidana Katha, pp. 114, 115.

[13] This seems to be the meaning; but I do not wonder that some understand the sentence of the benevolence of the monkish population to the travellers.

CHAPTER XXXII

LEGEND OF KING ASOKA IN A FORMER BIRTH, AND HIS NARAKA.

When king Asoka, in a former birth,[1] was a little boy and played on the road, he met Kasyapa Buddha walking. (The stranger) begged food, and the boy pleasantly took a handful of earth and gave it to him. The Buddha took the earth, and returned it to the ground on which he was walking; but because of this (the boy) received the recompense of becoming a king of the iron wheel,[2] to rule over Jambudvipa. (Once) when he was making a judicial tour of inspection through Jambudvipa, he saw, between the iron circuit of the two hills, a naraka[3] for the punishment of wicked men. Having thereupon asked his ministers what sort of a thing it was, they replied, "It belongs to Yama,[4] king of demons, for punishing wicked people." The king thought within himself: --"(Even) the king of demons is able to make a naraka in which to deal with wicked men; why should not I, who am the lord of men, make a naraka in which to deal with wicked men?" He forthwith asked his ministers who could make for him a naraka and preside over the punishment of wicked people in it. They replied that it was only a man of extreme wickedness who could make it; and the king thereupon sent officers to seek everywhere for (such) a bad man; and they saw by the side of a pond a man tall and strong, with a black countenance, yellow hair, and green eyes, hooking up the fish with his feet, while he called to him birds and beasts, and, when they came, then shot and killed them, so that not one escaped. Having got this man, they took him to the king, who secretly charged him, "You must make a square enclosure with high walls. Plant in it all kinds of flowers and fruits; make good ponds in it for bathing; make it grand and imposing in every way, so that men shall look to it with thirsting desire; make its gates strong and sure; and when any one enters, instantly seize him and punish him as a sinner, not allowing him to get out. Even if I should enter, punish me as a sinner in the same way, and do not let me go. I now appoint you master of that naraka."

Soon after this a bhikshu, pursuing his regular course of begging his food, entered the gate (of the place). When the lictors of the naraka saw him, they were about to subject him to their tortures; but he, frightened, begged them to allow him a moment in which to eat his midday meal. Immediately after, there came in another man, whom they thrust into a mortar and pounded till a red froth overflowed. As the bhikshu looked on, there came to him the thought of the impermanence, the painful suffering and insanity of this body, and how it is but as a bubble and as foam; and instantly he attained to Arhatship. Immediately after, the lictors seized him, and threw him into a caldron of boiling water. There was a look of joyful satisfaction, however, in the bhikshu's countenance. The fire was extinguished, and the water became cold. In the middle (of the caldron) there rose up a lotus flower, with the bhikshu seated on it. The lictors at once went and reported to the king that there was a marvellous occurrence in the naraka, and wished him to go and see it; but the king said, "I formerly made such an agreement that now I dare not go (to the place)." The lictors said, "This is not a small matter. Your majesty ought to go quickly. Let your former agreement be altered." The king thereupon followed them, and entered (the naraka), when the bhikshu preached the Law to him, and he believed, and was made free.[5] Forthwith he demolished the naraka, and repented of all the evil which he had formerly done. From this time he believed in and honoured the Three Precious Ones, and constantly went to a patra tree, repenting under it, with self-reproach, of his errors, and accepting the eight rules of abstinence.[6]

The queen asked where the king was constantly going to, and the ministers replied that he was constantly to be seen under (such and such) a patra tree. She watched for a time when the king was not there, and then sent men to cut the tree down. When the king came, and saw what had been done, he swooned away with sorrow, and fell to the ground. His ministers sprinkled water on his face, and after a considerable time he revived. He then built all round (the stump) with bricks, and poured a hundred pitchers of cows' milk on the roots; and as he lay with his four limbs spread out on the ground, he took this oath, "If the tree do not live, I will never rise from this." When he had uttered this oath, the tree immediately began to grow from the roots, and it has continued to grow till now, when it is nearly 100 cubits in height.

NOTES

[1] Here is an instance of {.} used, as was pointed out in chap. ix, note 3, for a former age; and not merely a former time. Perhaps "a former birth" is the best translation. The Corean reading of Kasyapa Buddha is certainly preferable to the Chinese "Sakya Buddha."

[2] See chap. xvii, note 8.

[3] I prefer to retain the Sanskrit term here, instead of translating the Chinese text by "Earth's prison {.} {.}," or "a prison in the earth;" the name for which has been adopted generally by Christian missionaries in China for gehenna and hell.

[4] Eitel (p. 173) says:--"Yama was originally the Aryan god of the dead, living in a heaven above the world, the regent of the south; but Brahmanism transferred his abode to hell. Both views have been retained by Buddhism." The Yama of the text is the "regent of the narakas, residing south of Jambudvipa, outside the Chakravalas (the double circuit of mountains above), in a palace built of brass and iron. He has a sister who controls all the female culprits, as he exclusively deals with the male sex. Three times, however, in every twenty-four hours, a demon pours boiling copper into Yama's mouth, and squeezes it down his throat, causing him unspeakable pain." Such, however, is the wonderful "transrotation of births," that when Yama's sins have been expiated, he is to be reborn as Buddha, under the name of "The Universal King."

[5] Or, "was loosed;" from the bonds, I suppose, of his various illusions.

[6] I have not met with this particular numerical category.

CHAPTER XXXIII

MOUNT GURUPADA, WHERE KASYAPA BUDDHA'S ENTIRE SKELETON IS.

(The travellers), going on from this three le to the south, came to a mountain named Gurupada,[1] inside which Mahakasyapa even now is. He made a cleft, and went down into it, though the place where he entered would not (now) admit a man. Having gone down very far, there was a hole on one side, and there the complete body of Kasyapa (still) abides. Outside the hole (at which he entered) is the earth with which he had washed his hands.[2] If the people living thereabouts have a sore on their heads, they plaster on it some of the earth from this, and feel immediately easier.[3] On this mountain, now as of old, there are Arhats abiding. Devotees of our Law from the various countries in that quarter go year by year to the mountain, and present offerings to Kasyapa; and to those whose hearts are strong in faith there come Arhats at night, and talk with them, discussing and explaining their doubts, and disappearing suddenly afterwards.

On this hill hazels grow luxuriously; and there are many lions, tigers, and wolves, so that people should not travel incautiously.

NOTES

[1] "Fowl's-foot hill," "with three peaks, resembling the foot of a chicken. It lies seven miles south-east of Gaya, and was the residence of Mahakasyapa, who is said to be still living inside this mountain." So Eitel says, p. 58; but this chapter does not say that Kasyapa is in the mountain alive, but that his body entire is in a recess or hole in it. Hardy (M. B., p. 97) says that after Kasyapa Buddha's body was burnt, the bones still remained in their usual position, presenting the appearance of a perfect skeleton. It is of him that the chapter speaks, and not of the famous disciple of Sakyamuni, who also is called Mahakasyapa. This will appear also on a comparison of Eitel's articles on "Mahakasyapa" and "Kasyapa Buddha."

[2] Was it a custom to wash the hands with "earth," as is often done with sand?

[3] This I conceive to be the meaning here.

CHAPTER XXXIV

ON THE WAY BACK TO PATNA. VARANASI, OR BENARES. SAKYAMUNI'S FIRST DOINGS AFTER BECOMING BUDDHA.

Fa-hien[1] returned (from here) towards Pataliputtra,[2] keeping along the course of the Ganges and descending in the direction of the west. After going ten yojanas he found a vihara, named "The Wilderness,"--a place where Buddha had dwelt, and where there are monks now.

Pursuing the same course, and going still to the west, he arrived, after twelve yojanas, at the city of Varanasi[3] in the kingdom of Kasi. Rather more than ten le to the north-east of the city, he found the vihara in the park of "The rishi's Deer-wild."[4] In this park there formerly resided a Pratyeka Buddha,[5] with whom the deer were regularly in the habit of stopping for the night. When the World-honoured one was about to attain to perfect Wisdom, the devas sang in the sky, "The son of king Suddhodana, having quitted his family and studied the Path (of Wisdom),[6] will now in seven days become Buddha." The Pratyeka Buddha heard their words, and immediately attained to nirvana; and hence this place was named "The Park of the rishi's Deer-wild."[7] After the World-honoured one had attained to perfect Wisdom, men build the vihara in it.

Buddha wished to convert Kaundinya[8] and his four companions; but they, (being aware of his intention), said to one another, "This Sramana Gotama[9] for six years continued in the practice of painful austerities, eating daily (only) a single hemp-seed, and one grain of rice, without attaining to the Path (of Wisdom); how much less will he do so now that he has entered (again) among men, and is giving the reins to (the indulgence of) his body, his speech, and his thoughts! What has he to do with the Path (of Wisdom)? To-day, when he comes to us, let us be on our guard not to speak with him." At the places where the five men all rose up, and respectfully saluted (Buddha), when he came to them; where, sixty paces north from this, he sat with his face to the east, and first turned the wheel of the Law, converting Kaundinya and the four others; where, twenty paces further to the north, he delivered his prophecy concerning Maitreya;[10] and where, at a distance of fifty paces to the south, the dragon Elapattra[11] asked him, "When shall I get free from this naga body?"--at all these places topes were reared, and are still existing. In (the park) there are two monasteries, in both of which there are monks residing.

When you go north-west from the vihara of the Deer-wild park for thirteen yojanas, there is a kingdom named Kausambi.[12] Its vihara is named Ghochiravana[13]--a place where Buddha formerly resided. Now, as of old, there is a company of monks there, most of whom are students of the hinayana.

East from (this), when you have travelled eight yojanas, is the place where Buddha converted[14] the evil demon. There, and where he walked (in meditation) and sat at the place which was his regular abode, there have been topes erected. There is also a monastery, which may contain more than a hundred monks.

NOTES

[1] Fa-hien is here mentioned singly, as in the account of his visit to the cave on Gridhra-kuta. I think that Tao-ching may have remained at Patna after their first visit to it.

[2] See chap. xxvii, note 1.

[3] "The city surrounded by rivers;" the modern Benares, lat. 25d 23s N., lon. 83d 5s E.

[4] "The rishi," says Eitel, "is a man whose bodily frame has undergone a certain transformation by dint of meditation and ascetism, so that he is, for an indefinite period, exempt from decrepitude, age, and death. As this period is believed to extend far beyond the usual duration of human life, such persons are called, and popularly believed to be, immortals." Rishis are divided into various classes; and rishi-ism is spoken of as a seventh part of transrotation, and rishis are referred to as the seventh class of sentient beings. Taoism, as well as Buddhism, has its Seen jin.

[5] See chap. xiii, note 15.

[6] See chap. xxii, note 2.

[7] For another legend about this park, and the identification of "a fine wood" still existing, see note in Beal's first version, p. 135.

[8] A prince of Magadha and a maternal uncle of Sakyamuni, who gave him the name of Ajnata, meaning automat; and hence he often appears as Ajnata Kaundinya. He and his four friends had followed Sakyamuni into the Uruvilva desert, sympathising with him in the austerities he endured, and hoping that they would issue in his Buddhaship. They were not aware that that issue had come; which may show us that all the accounts in the thirty-first chapter are merely descriptions, by means of external imagery, of what had taken place internally. The kingdom of nirvana had come without observation. These friends knew it not; and they were offended by what they considered Sakyamuni's failure, and the course he was now pursuing. See the account of their conversion in M. B., p. 186.

[9] This is the only instance in Fa-hien's text where the Bodhisattva or Buddha is called by the surname "Gotama." For the most part our traveller uses Buddha as a proper name, though it properly means "The Enlightened." He uses also the combinations "Sakya Buddha,"="The Buddha of the Sakya tribe," and "Sakyamuni,"="The Sakya sage." This last is the most common designation of the Buddha in China, and to my mind best combines the characteristics of a descriptive and a proper name. Among other Buddhistic peoples "Gotama" and "Gotama Buddha" are the more frequent designations. It is not easy to account for the rise of the surname Gotama in the Sakya family, as Oldenberg acknowledges. He says that "the Sakyas, in accordance with the custom of Indian noble families, had borrowed it from one of the ancient Vedic bard families." Dr. Davids ("Buddhism," p. 27) says: "The family name was certainly Gautama," adding in a note, "It is a curious fact that Gautama is still the family name of the Rajput chiefs of Nagara, the village which has been identified with Kapilavastu." Dr. Eitel says that "Gautama was the sacerdotal name of the Sakya family, which counted the ancient rishi Gautama among its ancestors." When we proceed, however, to endeavour to trace the connexion of that Brahmanical rishi with the Sakya house, by means of 1323, 1468, 1469, and other historical works in Nanjio's Catalogue, we soon find that Indian histories have no surer foundation than the shifting sand;--see E. H., on the name Sakya, pp. 108, 109. We must be content for the present simply to accept Gotama as one of the surnames of the Buddha with whom we have to do.

[10] See chap. vi, note 5. It is there said that the prediction of Maitreya's succession to the Buddhaship was made to him in the Tushita heaven. Was there a repetition of it here in the Deer-park, or was a prediction now given concerning something else?

[11] Nothing seems to be known of this naga but what we read here.

[12] Identified by some with Kusia, near Kurrah (lat. 25d 41s N., lon. 81d 27s E.); by others with Kosam on the Jumna, thirty miles above Allahabad. See E. H., p. 55.

[13] Ghochira was the name of a Vaisya elder, or head, who presented a garden and vihara to Buddha. Hardy (M. B., p. 356) quotes a statement from a Singhalese authority that Sakyamuni resided here during the ninth year of his Buddhaship.

[14] Dr. Davids thinks this may refer to the striking and beautiful story of the conversion of the Yakkha Alavaka, as related in the Uragavagga, Alavakasutta, pp. 29-31 (Sacred Books of the East, vol. x, part ii).

CHAPTER XXXV

DAKSHINA, AND THE PIGEON MONASTERY.

South from this 200 yojanas, there is a country named Dakshina,[1] where there is a monastery (dedicated to) the bygone Kasyapa Buddha, and which has been hewn out from a large hill of rock. It consists in all of five storeys;--the lowest, having the form of an elephant, with 500 apartments in the rock; the second, having the form of a lion, with 400 apartments; the third, having the form of a horse, with 300 apartments; the fourth, having the form of an ox, with 200 apartments; and the fifth, having the form of a pigeon, with 100 apartments. At the very top there is a spring, the water of which, always in front of the apartments in the rock, goes round among the rooms, now circling, now curving, till in this way it arrives at the lowest storey, having followed the shape of the structure, and flows out there at the door. Everywhere in the apartments of the monks, the rock has been pierced so as to form windows for the admission of light, so that they are all bright, without any being left in darkness. At the four corners of the (tiers of) apartments, the rock has been hewn so as to form steps for ascending to the top (of each). The men of the present day, being of small size, and going up step by step, manage to get to the top; but in a former age, they did so at one step.[2] Because of this, the monastery is called Paravata, that being the Indian name for a pigeon. There are always Arhats residing in it.

The country about is (a tract of) uncultivated hillocks,[3] without inhabitants. At a very long distance from the hill there are villages, where the people all have bad and erroneous views, and do not know the Sramanas of the Law of Buddha, Brahmanas, or (devotees of) any of the other and different schools. The people of that country are constantly seeing men on the wing, who come and enter this monastery. On one occasion, when devotees of various countries came to perform their worship at it, the people of those villages said to them, "Why do you not fly? The devotees whom we have seen hereabouts all fly;" and the strangers answered, on the spur of the moment, "Our wings are not yet fully formed."

The kingdom of Dakshina is out of the way, and perilous to traverse. There are difficulties in connexion with the roads; but those who know how to manage such difficulties and wish to proceed should bring with them money and various articles, and give them to the king. He will then send men to escort them. These will (at different stages) pass them over to others, who will show them the shortest routes. Fa-hien, however, was after all unable to go there; but having received the (above) accounts from men of the country, he has narrated them.

NOTES

[1] Said to be the ancient name of the Deccan. As to the various marvels in the chapter, it must be borne in mind that our author, as he tells us at the end, only gives them from hearsay. See "Buddhist Records of the Western World," vol. ii, pp. 214, 215, where the description, however, is very different.

[2] Compare the account of Buddha's great stride of fifteen yojanas in Ceylon, as related in chapter xxxviii.

[3] See the same phrase in the Books of the Later Han dynasty, the twenty-fourth Book of Biographies, p. 9b.

CHAPTER XXXVI

IN PATNA. FA-HIEN'S LABOURS IN TRANSCRIPTION OF MANUSCRIPTS, AND INDIAN STUDIES FOR THREE YEARS.

From Varanasi (the travellers) went back east to Pataliputtra. Fa-hien's original object had been to search for (copies of) the Vinaya. In the various kingdoms of North India, however, he had found one master transmitting orally (the rules) to another, but no written copies which he could transcribe. He had therefore travelled far and come on to Central India. Here, in the mahayana monastery,[1] he found a copy of the Vinaya, containing the Mahasanghika[2] rules,--those which were observed in the first Great Council, while Buddha was still in the world. The original copy was handed down in the Jetavana vihara. As to the other eighteen schools,[3] each one has the views and decisions of its own masters. Those agree (with this) in the general meaning, but they have small and trivial differences, as when one opens and another shuts.[4] This copy (of the rules), however, is the most complete, with the fullest explanations.[5]

He further got a transcript of the rules in six or seven thousand gathas,[6] being the sarvastivadah[7] rules,--those which are observed by the communities of monks in the land of Ts'in; which also have all been handed down orally from master to master without being committed to writing. In the community here, moreover, we got the Samyuktabhi-dharma-hridaya-(sastra),[8] containing about six or seven thousand gathas; he also got a Sutra of 2500 gathas; one chapter of the Parinir-vana-vaipulya Sutra,[9] of about 5000 gathas; and the Mahasan-ghikah Abhidharma.

In consequence (of this success in his quest) Fa-hien stayed here for three years, learning Sanskrit books and the Sanskrit speech, and writing out the Vinaya rules. When Tao-ching arrived in the Central Kingdom, and saw the rules observed by the Sramanas, and the dignified demeanour in their societies which he remarked under all occurring circumstances, he sadly called to mind in what a mutilated and imperfect condition the rules were among the monkish communities in the land of Ts'in, and made the following aspiration:--"From this time forth till I come to the state of Buddha, let me not be born in a frontier land."[10] He remained accordingly (in India), and did not return (to the land of Han). Fa-hien, however, whose original purpose had been to secure the introduction of the complete Vinaya rules into the land of Han, returned there alone.

NOTES

[1] Mentioned before in chapter xxvii.

[2] Mahasanghikah simply means "the Great Assembly," that is, of monks. When was this first assembly in the time of Sakyamuni held? It does not appear that the rules observed at it were written down at the time. The document found by Fa-hien would be a record of those rules; or rather a copy of that record. We must suppose that the original record had disappeared from the Jetavana vihara, or Fa-hien would probably have spoken of it when he was there, and copied it, if he had been allowed to do so.

[3] The eighteen pu {.}. Four times in this chapter the character called pu occurs, and in the first and two last instances it can only have the meaning, often belonging to it, of "copy." The second instance, however, is different. How should there be eighteen copies, all different from the original, and from one another, in minor matters? We are compelled to translate--"the eighteen schools," an expression well known in all Buddhist writings. See Rhys Davids' Manual, p. 218, and the authorities there quoted.

[4] This is equivalent to the "binding" and "loosing," "opening" and "shutting," which found their way into the New Testament, and the Christian Church, from the schools of the Jewish Rabbins.

[5] It was afterwards translated by Fa-hien into Chinese. See Nanjio's Catalogue of the Chinese Tripitaka, columns 400 and 401, and Nos. 1119 and 1150, columns 247 and 253.

[6] A gatha is a stanza, generally consisting, it has seemed to me, of a few, commonly of two, lines somewhat metrically arranged; but I do not know that its length is strictly defined.

[7] "A branch," says Eitel, "of the great vaibhashika school, asserting the reality of all visible phenomena, and claiming the authority of Rahula."

[8] See Nanjio's Catalogue, No. 1287. He does not mention it in his account of Fa-hien, who, he says, translated the Samyukta-pitaka Sutra.

[9] Probably Nanjio's Catalogue, No. 120; at any rate, connected with it.

[10] This then would be the consummation of the Sramana's being,--to get to be Buddha, the Buddha of his time in his Kalpa; and Tao-ching thought that he could attain to this consummation by a succession of births; and was likely to attain to it sooner by living only in India. If all this was not in his mind, he yet felt that each of his successive lives would be happier, if lived in India.

CHAPTER XXXVII

TO CHAMPA AND TAMALIPTI. STAY AND LABOURS THERE FOR THREE YEARS. TAKES SHIP TO SINGHALA, OR CEYLON.

Following the course of the Ganges, and descending eastwards for eighteen yojanas, he found on the southern bank the great kingdom of Champa,[1] with topes reared at the places where Buddha walked in meditation by his vihara, and where he and the three Buddhas, his predecessors, sat. There were monks residing at them all. Continuing his journey east for nearly fifty yojanas, he came to the country of Tamalipti,[2] (the capital of which is) a seaport. In the country there are twenty-two monasteries, at all of which there are monks residing. The Law of Buddha is also flourishing in it. Here Fa-hien stayed two years, writing out his Sutras,[3] and drawing pictures of images.

After this he embarked in a large merchant-vessel, and went floating over the sea to the south-west. It was the beginning of winter, and the wind was favourable; and, after fourteen days, sailing day and night, they came to the country of Singhala.[4] The people said that it was distant (from Tamalipti) about 700 yojanas.

The kingdom is on a large island, extending from east to west fifty yojanas, and from north to south thirty. Left and right from it there are as many as 100 small islands, distant from one another ten, twenty, or even 200 le; but all subject to the large island. Most of them produce pearls and precious stones of various kinds; there is one which produces the pure and brilliant pearl,[5]--an island which would form a square of about ten le. The king employs men to watch and protect it, and requires three out of every ten such pearls, which the collectors find.

NOTES

[1] Probably the modern Champanagur, three miles west of Baglipoor, lat. 25d 14s N., lon. 56d 55s E.

[2] Then the principal emporium for the trade with Ceylon and China; the modern Tam-look, lat. 22d 17s N., lon. 88d 2s E.; near the mouth of the Hoogly.

[3] Perhaps Ching {.} is used here for any portions of the Tripitaka which he had obtained.

[4] "The Kingdom of the Lion," Ceylon. Singhala was the name of a merchant adventurer from India, to whom the founding of the kingdom was ascribed. His father was named Singha, "the Lion," which became the name of the country;--Singhala, or Singha-Kingdom, "the Country of the Lion."

[5] Called the mani pearl or bead. Mani is explained as meaning "free from stain," "bright and growing purer." It is a symbol of Buddha and of his Law. The most valuable rosaries are made of manis.

CHAPTER XXXVIII

AT CEYLON. RISE OF THE KINGDOM. FEATS OF BUDDHA. TOPES AND MONASTERIES. STATUE OF BUDDHA IN JADE. BO TREE. FESTIVAL OF BUDDHA'S TOOTH.

The country originally had no human inhabitants,[1] but was occupied only by spirits and nagas, with which merchants of various countries carried on a trade. When the trafficking was taking place, the spirits did not show themselves. They simply set forth their precious commodities, with labels of the price attached to them; while the merchants made their purchases according to the price; and took the things away.

Through the coming and going of the merchants (in this way), when they went away, the people of (their) various countries heard how pleasant the land was, and flocked to it in numbers till it became a great nation. The (climate) is temperate and attractive, without any difference of summer and winter. The vegetation is always luxuriant. Cultivation proceeds whenever men think fit: there are no fixed seasons for it.

When Buddha came to this country,[2] wishing to transform the wicked nagas, by his supernatural power he planted one foot at the north of the royal city, and the other on the top of a mountain,[3] the two being fifteen yojanas apart. Over the footprint at the north of the city the king built a large tope, 400 cubits high, grandly adorned with gold and silver, and finished with a combination of all the precious substances. By the side of the top he further built a monastery, called the Abhayagiri,[4] where there are (now) five thousand monks. There is in it a hall of Buddha, adorned with carved and inlaid works of gold and silver, and rich in the seven precious substances, in which there is an image (of Buddha) in green jade, more than twenty cubits in height, glittering all over with those substances, and having an appearance of solemn dignity which words cannot express. In the palm of the right hand there is a priceless pearl. Several years had now elapsed since Fa-hien left the land of Han; the men with whom he had been in intercourse had all been of regions strange to him; his eyes had not rested on an old and familiar hill or river, plant or tree; his fellow-travellers, moreover, had been separated from him, some by death, and others flowing off in different directions; no face or shadow was now with him but his own, and a constant sadness was in his heart. Suddenly (one day), when by the side of this image of jade, he saw a merchant presenting as his offering a fan of white silk;[5] and the tears of sorrow involuntarily filled his eyes and fell down.

A former king of the country had sent to Central India and got a slip of the patra tree,[6] which he planted by the side of the hall of Buddha, where a tree grew up to the height of about 200 cubits. As it bent on one side towards the south-east, the king, fearing it would fall, propped it with a post eight or nine spans round. The tree began to grow at the very heart of the prop, where it met (the trunk); (a shoot) pierced through the post, and went down to the ground, where it entered and formed roots, that rose (to the surface) and were about four spans round. Although the post was split in the middle, the outer portions kept hold (of the shoot), and people did not remove them. Beneath the tree there has been built a vihara, in which there is an image (of Buddha) seated, which the monks and commonalty reverence and look up to without ever becoming wearied. In the city there has been reared also the vihara of Buddha's tooth, on which, as well as on the other, the seven precious substances have been employed.

The king practises the Brahmanical purifications, and the sincerity of the faith and reverence of the population inside the city are also great. Since the establishment of government in the kingdom there has been no famine or scarcity, no revolution or disorder. In the treasuries of the monkish communities there are many precious stones, and the priceless manis. One of the kings (once) entered one of those treasuries, and when he looked all round and saw the priceless pearls, his covetous greed was excited, and he wished to take them to himself by force. In three days, however, he came to himself, and immediately went and bowed his head to the ground in the midst of the monks, to show his repentance of the evil thought. As a sequel to this, he informed the monks (of what had been in his mind), and desired them to make a regulation that from that day forth the king should not be allowed to enter the treasury and see (what it contained), and that no bhikshu should enter it till after he had been in orders for a period of full forty years.[7]

In the city there are many Vaisya elders and Sabaean[8] merchants, whose houses are stately and beautiful. The lanes and passages are kept in good order. At the heads of the four principal streets there have been built preaching halls, where, on the eighth, fourteenth, and fifteenth days of the month, they spread carpets, and set forth a pulpit, while the monks and commonalty from all quarters come together to hear the Law. The people say that in the kingdom there may be altogether sixty thousand monks, who get their food from their common stores. The king, besides, prepares elsewhere in the city a common supply of food for five or six thousand more. When any want, they take their great bowls, and go (to the place of distribution), and take as much as the vessels will hold, all returning with them full.

The tooth of Buddha is always brought forth in the middle of the third month. Ten days beforehand the king grandly caparisons a large elephant, on which he mounts a man who can speak distinctly, and is dressed in royal robes, to beat a large drum, and make the following proclamation:--"The Bodhisattva, during three Asankhyeya-kalpas,[9] manifested his activity, and did not spare his own life. He gave up kingdom, city, wife, and son; he plucked out his eyes and gave them to another;[10] he cut off a piece of his own flesh to ransom the life of a dove;[10] he cut off his head and gave it as an alms;[11] he gave his body to feed a starving tigress;[11] he grudged not his marrow and his brains. In many such ways as these did he undergo pain for the sake of all living. And so it was, that, having become Buddha, he continued in the world for forty-five years, preaching his Law, teaching and transforming, so that those who had no rest found rest, and the unconverted were converted. When his connexion with the living was completed,[12] he attained to pari-nirvana (and died). Since that event, for 1497 years, the light of the world has gone out,[13] and all living beings have had long-continued sadness. Behold! ten days after this, Buddha's tooth will be brought forth, and taken to the Abhayagiri-vihara. Let all and each, whether monks or laics, who wish to amass merit for themselves, make the roads smooth and in good condition, grandly adorn the lanes and by-ways, and provide abundant store of flowers and incense to be used as offerings to it."

When this proclamation is over, the king exhibits, so as to line both sides of the road, the five hundred different bodily forms in which the Bodhisattva has in the course of his history appeared:--here as Sudana,[14] there as Sama;[15] now as the king of elephants;[16] and then as a stag or a horse.[16] All these figures are brightly coloured and grandly executed, looking as if they were alive. After this the tooth of Buddha is brought forth, and is carried along in the middle of the road. Everywhere on the way offerings are presented to it, and thus it arrives at the hall of Buddha in the Abhayagiri-vihara. There monks and laics are collected in crowds. They burn incense, light lamps, and perform all the prescribed services, day and night without ceasing, till ninety days have been completed, when (the tooth) is returned to the vihara within the city. On fast-days the door of that vihara is opened, and the forms of ceremonial reverence are observed according to the rules.

Forty le to the east of the Abhayagiri-vihara there is a hill, with a vihara on it, called the Chaitya,[17] where there may be 2000 monks. Among them there is a Sramana of great virtue, named Dharma-gupta,[18] honoured and looked up to by all the kingdom. He has lived for more than forty years in an apartment of stone, constantly showing such gentleness of heart, that he has brought snakes and rats to stop together in the same room, without doing one another any harm.

NOTES

[1] It is desirable to translate {.} {.}, for which "inhabitants" or "people" is elsewhere sufficient, here by "human inhabitants." According to other accounts Singhala was originally occupied by Rakshasas or Rakshas, "demons who devour men," and "beings to be feared," monstrous cannibals or anthropophagi, the terror of the shipwrecked mariner. Our author's "spirits" {.} {.} were of a gentler type. His dragons or nagas have come before us again and again.

[2] That Sakyamuni ever visited Ceylon is to me more than doubtful. Hardy, in M. B., pp. 207-213, has brought together the legends of three visits,--in the first, fifth, and eighth years of his Buddhaship. It is plain, however, from Fa-hien's narrative, that in the beginning of our fifth century, Buddhism prevailed throughout the island. Davids in the last chapter of his "Buddhism" ascribes its introduction to one of Asoka's missions, after the Council of Patna, under his son Mahinda, when Tissa, "the delight of the gods," was king

(B.C. 250-230).

[3] This would be what is known as "Adam's peak," having, according to Hardy (pp. 211, 212, notes), the three names of Selesumano, Samastakuta, and Samanila. "There is an indentation on the top of it," a superficial hollow, 5 feet 3 3/4 inches long, and about 2 1/2 feet wide. The Hindus regard it as the footprint of Siva; the Mohameddans, as that of Adam; and the Buddhists, as in the text,--as having been made by Buddha.

[4] Meaning "The Fearless Hill." There is still the Abhayagiri tope, the highest in Ceylon, according to Davids, 250 feet in height, and built about B.C. 90, by Watta Gamini, in whose reign, about 160 years after the Council of Patna, and 330 years after the death of Sakyamuni, the Tripitaka was first reduced to writing in Ceylon;--"Buddhism," p. 234.

[5] We naturally suppose that the merchant-offerer was a Chinese, as indeed the Chinese texts say, and the fan such as Fa-hien had seen and used in his native land.

[6] This should be the pippala, or bodhidruma, generally spoken of, in connexion with Buddha, as the Bo tree, under which he attained to the Buddhaship. It is strange our author should have confounded them as he seems to do. In what we are told of the tree here, we have, no doubt, his account of the planting, growth, and preservation of the famous Bo tree, which still exists in Ceylon. It has been stated in a previous note that Asoka's son, Mahinda, went as the apostle of Buddhism to Ceylon. By-and-by he sent for his sister Sanghamitta, who had entered the order at the same time as himself, and whose help was needed, some of the king's female relations having signified their wish to become nuns. On leaving India, she took with her a branch of the sacred Bo tree at Buddha Gaya, under which Sakyamuni had become Buddha. Of how the tree has grown and still lives we have an account in Davids' "Buddhism." He quotes the words of Sir Emerson Tennent, that it is "the oldest historical tree in the world;" but this must be denied if it be true, as Eitel says, that the tree at Buddha Gaya, from which the slip that grew to be this tree was taken more than 2000 years ago, is itself still living in its place. We must conclude that Fa-hien, when in Ceylon, heard neither of Mahinda nor Sanghamitta.

[7] Compare what is said in chap. xvi, about the inquiries made at monasteries as to the standing of visitors in the monkhood, and duration of their ministry.

[8] The phonetic values of the two Chinese characters here are in Sanskrit sa; and va, bo or bha. "Sabaean" is Mr. Beal's reading of them, probably correct. I suppose the merchants were Arabs, forerunners of the so-called Moormen, who still form so important a part of the mercantile community in Ceylon.

[9] A Kalpa, we have seen, denotes a great period of time; a period during which a physical universe is formed and destroyed. Asankhyeya denotes the highest sum for which a conventional term exists;--according to Chinese calculations equal to one followed by seventeen ciphers; according to Thibetan and Singhalese, equal to one followed by ninety-seven ciphers. Every Maha-kalpa consists of four Asankhyeya-kalpas. Eitel, p. 15.

[10] See chapter ix.

[11] See chapter xi.

[12] He had been born in the Sakya house, to do for the world what the character of all his past births required, and he had done it.

[13] They could no more see him, the World-honoured one. Compare the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xi, Buddhist Suttas, pp. 89, 121, and note on p. 89.

[14] Sudana or Sudatta was the name of the Bodhisattva in the birth which preceded his appearance as Sakyamuni or Gotama, when he became the Supreme Buddha. This period is known as the Vessantara Jataka, of which Hardy, M. B., pp. 116-124, gives a long account; see also "Buddhist Birth Stories," the Nidana Katha, p. 158. In it, as Sudana, he fulfilled "the Perfections," his distinguishing attribute being entire self-renunciation and alms-giving, so that in the Nidana Katha is made to say ("Buddhist Birth Stories," p. 159):--

"This earth, unconscious though she be, and ignorant of joy or grief, Even she by my free-giving's mighty power was shaken seven times."

Then, when he passed away, he appeared in the Tushita heaven, to enter in due time the womb of Maha-maya, and be born as Sakyamuni.

[15] I take the name Sama from Beal's revised version. He says in a note that the Sama Jataka, as well as the Vessantara, is represented in the Sanchi sculptures. But what the Sama Jataka was I do not yet know. But adopting this name, the two Chinese characters in the text should be translated "the change into Sama." Remusat gives for them, "la transformation en eclair;" Beal, in his first version, "his appearance as a bright flash of light;" Giles, "as a flash of lightning." Julien's Methode does not give the phonetic value in Sanskrit of {.}.

[16] In an analysis of the number of times and the different forms in which Sakyamuni had appeared in his Jataka births, given by Hardy (M. B., p. 100), it is said that he had appeared six times as an elephant; ten times as a deer; and four times as a horse.

[17] Chaitya is a general term designating all places and objects of religious worship which have a reference to ancient Buddhas, and including therefore Stupas and temples as well as sacred relics, pictures, statues, &c. It is defined as "a fane," "a place for worship and presenting offerings." Eitel, p. 141. The hill referred to is the sacred hill of Mihintale, about eight miles due east of the Bo tree;--Davids' Buddhism, pp. 230, 231.

[18] Eitel says (p. 31): "A famous ascetic, the founder of a school, which flourished in Ceylon, A.D. 400." But Fa-hien gives no intimation of Dharma-gupta's founding a school.

CHAPTER XXXIX

CREMATION OF AN ARHAT. SERMON OF A DEVOTEE.

South of the city seven le there is a vihara, called the Maha-vihara, where 3000 monks reside. There had been among them a Sramana, of such lofty virtue, and so holy and pure in his observance of the disciplinary rules, that the people all surmised that he was an Arhat. When he drew near his end, the king came to examine into the point; and having assembled the monks according to rule, asked whether the bhikshu had attained to the full degree of Wisdom.[1] They answered in the affirmative, saying that he was an Arhat. The king accordingly, when he died, buried him after the fashion of an Arhat, as the regular rules prescribed. Four of five le east from the vihara there was reared a great pile of firewood, which might be more than thirty cubits square, and the same in height. Near the top were laid sandal, aloe, and other kinds of fragrant wood.

On the four sides (of the pile) they made steps by which to ascend it. With clean white hair-cloth, almost like silk, they wrapped (the body) round and round.[2] They made a large carriage-frame, in form like our funeral car, but without the dragons and fishes.[3]

At the time of the cremation, the king and the people, in multitudes from all quarters, collected together, and presented offerings of flowers and incense. While they were following the car to the burial-ground,[4] the king himself presented flowers and incense. When this was finished, the car was lifted on the pile, all over which oil of sweet basil was poured, and then a light was applied. While the fire was blazing, every one, with a reverent heart, pulled off his upper garment, and threw it, with his feather-fan and umbrella, from a distance into the midst of the flames, to assist the burning. When the cremation was over, they collected and preserved the bones, and proceeded to erect a tope. Fa-hien had not arrived in time (to see the distinguished Shaman) alive, and only saw his burial.

At that time the king,[5] who was a sincere believer in the Law of Buddha and wished to build a new vihara for the monks, first convoked a great assembly. After giving the monks a meal of rice, and presenting his offerings (on the occasion), he selected a pair of first-rate oxen, the horns of which were grandly decorated with gold, silver, and the precious substances. A golden plough had been provided, and the king himself turned up a furrow on the four sides of the ground within which the building was supposed to be. He then endowed the community of the monks with the population, fields, and houses, writing the grant on plates of metal, (to the effect) that from that time onwards, from generation to generation, no one should venture to annul or alter it.

In this country Fa-hien heard an Indian devotee, who was reciting a Sutra from the pulpit, say:--"Buddha's alms-bowl was at first in Vaisali, and now it is in Gandhara.[6] After so many hundred years' (he gave, when Fa-hien heard him, the exact number of years, but he has forgotten it), "it will go to Western Tukhara;[7] after so many hundred years, to Khoten; after so many hundred years, to Kharachar;[8] after so many hundred years, to the land of Han; after so many hundred years, it will come to Sinhala; and after so many hundred years, it will return to Central India. After that, it will ascend to the Tushita heaven; and when the Bodhisattva Maitreya sees it, he will say with a sigh, 'The alms-bowl of Sakyamuni Buddha is come;' and with all the devas he will present to it flowers and incense for seven days. When these have expired, it will return to Jambudvipa, where it will be received by the king of the sea nagas, and taken into his naga palace. When Maitreya shall be about to attain to perfect Wisdom (and become Buddha), it will again separate into four bowls,[9] which will return to the top of mount Anna,[9] whence they came. After Maitreya has become Buddha, the four deva kings will again think of the Buddha (with their bowls as they did in the case of the previous Buddha). The thousand Buddhas of this Bhadra-kalpa, indeed, will all use the same alms-bowl; and when the bowl has disappeared, the Law of Buddha will go on gradually to be extinguished. After that extinction has taken place, the life of man will be shortened, till it is only a period of five years. During this period of a five years' life, rice, butter, and oil will all vanish away, and men will become exceedingly wicked. The grass and trees which they lay hold of will change into swords and clubs, with which they will hurt, cut, and kill one another. Those among them on whom there is blessing will withdraw from society among the hills; and when the wicked have exterminated one another, they will again come forth, and say among themselves, 'The men of former times enjoyed a very great longevity; but through becoming exceedingly wicked, and doing all lawless things, the length of our life has been shortened and reduced even to five years. Let us now unite together in the practice of what is good, cherishing a gentle and sympathising heart, and carefully cultivating good faith and righteousness. When each one in this way practises that faith and righteousness, life will go on to double its length till it reaches 80,000 years. When Maitreya appears in the world, and begins to turn the wheel of his Law, he will in the first place save those among the disciples of the Law left by the Sakya who have quitted their families, and those who have accepted the three Refuges, undertaken the five Prohibitions and the eight Abstinences, and given offerings to the three Precious Ones; secondly and thirdly, he will save those between whom and conversion there is a connexion transmitted from the past.'"[10]

(Such was the discourse), and Fa-hien wished to write it down as a portion of doctrine; but the man said, "This is taken from no Sutra, it is only the utterance of my own mind."

NOTES

[1] Possibly, "and asked the bhikshu," &c. I prefer the other way of construing, however.

[2] It seems strange that this should have been understood as a wrapping of the immense pyre with the cloth. There is nothing in the text to necessitate such a version, but the contrary. Compare "Buddhist Suttas," pp. 92, 93.

[3] See the description of a funeral car and its decorations in the Sacred Books of the East, vol. xxviii, the Li Ki, Book XIX. Fa-hien's {.} {.}, "in this (country)," which I have expressed by "our," shows that whatever notes of this cremation he had taken at the time, the account in the text was composed after his return to China, and when he had the usages there in his mind and perhaps before his eyes. This disposes of all difficulty occasioned by the "dragons" and "fishes." The {.} at the end is merely the concluding particle.

[4] The pyre served the purpose of a burial-ground or grave, and hence our author writes of it as such.

[5] This king must have been Maha-nana (A.D. 410-432). In the time of his predecessor, Upatissa (A.D. 368-410), the pitakas were first translated into Singhalese. Under Maha-nana, Buddhaghosha wrote his commentaries. Both were great builders of viharas. See the Mahavansa, pp. 247, foll.

[6] See chapter xii. Fa-hien had seen it at Purushapura, which Eitel says was "the ancient capital of Gandhara."

[7] Western Tukhara ({.} {.}) is the same probably as the Tukhara ({.}) of chapter xii, a king of which is there described as trying to carry off the bowl from Purushapura.

[8] North of the Bosteng lake at the foot of the Thien-shan range (E. H., p. 56).

[9] See chap. xii, note 9. Instead of "Anna" the Chinese recensions have Vina; but Vina or Vinataka, and Ana for Sudarsana are names of one or other of the concentric circles of rocks surrounding mount Meru, the fabled home of the deva guardians of the bowl.

[10] That is, those whose Karma in the past should be rewarded by such conversion in the present.

CHAPTER XL

AFTER TWO YEARS TAKES SHIP FOR CHINA. DISASTROUS PASSAGE TO JAVA; AND THENCE TO CHINA; ARRIVES AT SHAN-TUNG; AND GOES TO NANKING. CONCLUSION OR L'ENVOI BY ANOTHER WRITER.

Fa-hien abode in this country two years; and, in addition (to his acquisitions in Patna), succeeded in getting a copy of the Vinaya-pitaka of the Mahisasakah (school);[1] the Dirghagama and Samyuktagama[2] (Sutras); and also the Samyukta-sanchaya-pitaka;[3]--all being works unknown in the land of Han. Having obtained these Sanskrit works, he took passage in a large merchantman, on board of which there were more than 200 men, and to which was attached by a rope a smaller vessel, as a provision against damage or injury to the large one from the perils of the navigation. With a favourable wind, they proceeded eastwards for three days, and then they encountered a great wind. The vessel sprang a leak and the water came in. The merchants wished to go to the small vessel; but the men on board it, fearing that too many would come, cut the connecting rope. The merchants were greatly alarmed, feeling their risk of instant death. Afraid that the vessel would fill, they took their bulky goods and threw them into the water. Fa-hien also took his pitcher[4] and washing-basin, with some other articles, and cast them into the sea; but fearing that the merchants would cast overboard his books and images, he could only think with all his heart of Kwan-she-yin,[5] and commit his life to (the protection of) the church of the land of Han,[6] (saying in effect), "I have travelled far in search of our Law. Let me, by your dread and supernatural (power), return from my wanderings, and reach my resting-place!"

In this way the tempest[7] continued day and night, till on the thirteenth day the ship was carried to the side of an island, where, on the ebbing of the tide, the place of the leak was discovered, and it was stopped, on which the voyage was resumed. On the sea (hereabouts) there are many pirates, to meet with whom is speedy death. The great ocean spreads out, a boundless expanse. There is no knowing east or west; only by observing the sun, moon, and stars was it possible to go forward. If the weather were dark and rainy, (the ship) went as she was carried by the wind, without any definite course. In the darkness of the night, only the great waves were to be seen, breaking on one another, and emitting a brightness like that of fire, with huge turtles and other monsters of the deep (all about). The merchants were full of terror, not knowing where they were going.

The sea was deep and bottomless, and there was no place where they could drop anchor and stop. But when the sky became clear, they could tell east and west, and (the ship) again went forward in the right direction. If she had come on any hidden rock, there would have been no way of escape.

After proceeding in this way for rather more than ninety days, they arrived at a country called Java-dvipa, where various forms of error and Brahmanism are flourishing, while Buddhism in it is not worth speaking of. After staying there for five months, (Fa-hien) again embarked in another large merchantman, which also had on board more than 200 men. They carried provisions for fifty days, and commenced the voyage on the sixteenth day of the fourth month.

Fa-hien kept his retreat on board the ship. They took a course to the north-east, intending to fetch Kwang-chow. After more than a month, when the night-drum had sounded the second watch, they encountered a black wind and tempestuous rain, which threw the merchants and passengers into consternation. Fa-hien again with all his heart directed his thoughts to Kwan-she-yin and the monkish communities of the land of Han; and, through their dread and mysterious protection, was preserved to day-break. After day-break, the Brahmans deliberated together and said, "It is having this Sramana on board which has occasioned our misfortune and brought us this great and bitter suffering. Let us land the bhikshu and place him on some island-shore. We must not for the sake of one man allow ourselves to be exposed to such imminent peril." A patron of Fa-hien, however, said to them, "If you land the bhikshu, you must at the same time land me; and if you do not, then you must kill me. If you land this Sramana, when I get to the land of Han, I will go to the king, and inform against you. The king also reveres and believes the Law of Buddha, and honours the bhikshus." The merchants hereupon were perplexed, and did not dare immediately to land (Fa-hien).

At this time the sky continued very dark and gloomy, and the sailing-masters looked at one another and made mistakes. More than seventy days passed (from their leaving Java), and the provisions and water were nearly exhausted. They used the salt-water of the sea for cooking, and carefully divided the (fresh) water, each man getting two pints. Soon the whole was nearly gone, and the merchants took counsel and said, "At the ordinary rate of sailing we ought to have reached Kwang-chow, and now the time is passed by many days;--must we not have held a wrong course?" Immediately they directed the ship to the north-west, looking out for land; and after sailing day and night for twelve days, they reached the shore on the south of mount Lao,[8] on the borders of the prefecture of Ch'ang-kwang,[8] and immediately got good water and vegetables. They had passed through many perils and hardships, and had been in a state of anxious apprehension for many days together; and now suddenly arriving at this shore, and seeing those (well-known) vegetables, the lei and kwoh,[9] they knew indeed that it was the land of Han. Not seeing, however, any inhabitants nor any traces of them, they did not know whereabouts they were. Some said that they had not yet got to Kwang-chow, and others that they had passed it. Unable to come to a definite conclusion, (some of them) got into a small boat and entered a creek, to look for some one of whom they might ask what the place was. They found two hunters, whom they brought back with them, and then called on Fa-hien to act as interpreter and question them. Fa-hien first spoke assuringly to them, and then slowly and distinctly asked them, "Who are you?" They replied, "We are disciples of Buddha?" He then asked, "What are you looking for among these hills?" They began to lie,[10] and said, "To-morrow is the fifteenth day of the seventh month. We wanted to get some peaches to present[11] to Buddha." He asked further, "What country is this?" They replied, "This is the border of the prefecture of Ch'ang-kwang, a part of Ts'ing-chow under the (ruling) House of Tsin." When they heard this, the merchants were glad, immediately asked for (a portion of) their money and goods, and sent men to Ch'ang-kwang city.

The prefect Le E was a reverent believer in the Law of Buddha. When he heard that a Sramana had arrived in a ship across the sea, bringing with him books and images, he immediately came to the seashore with an escort to meet (the traveller), and receive the books and images, and took them back with him to the seat of his government. On this the merchants went back in the direction of Yang-chow;[12] (but) when (Fa-hien) arrived at Ts'ing-chow, (the prefect there)[13] begged him

(to remain with him) for a winter and a summer. After the summer retreat was ended, Fa-hien, having been separated for a long time from his (fellow-)masters, wished to hurry to Ch'ang-gan; but as the business which he had in hand was important, he went south to the Capital;[14] and at an interview with the masters (there) exhibited the Sutras and the collection of the Vinaya (which he had procured).

After Fa-hien set out from Ch'ang-gan, it took him six years to reach Central India;[15] stoppages there extended over (other) six years; and on his return it took him three years to reach Ts'ing-chow. The countries through which he passed were a few under thirty. From the sandy desert westwards on to India, the beauty of the dignified demeanour of the monkhood and of the transforming influence of the Law was beyond the power of language fully to describe; and reflecting how our masters had not heard any complete account of them, he therefore (went on) without regarding his own poor life, or (the dangers to be encountered) on the sea upon his return, thus incurring hardships and difficulties in a double form. He was fortunate enough, through the dread power of the three Honoured Ones,[15] to receive help and protection in his perils; and therefore he wrote out an account of his experiences, that worthy readers might share with him in what he had heard and said.[15]

It was in the year Keah-yin,[16] the twelfth year of the period E-he of the (Eastern) Tsin dynasty, the year-star being in Virgo-Libra, in the summer, at the close of the period of retreat, that I met the devotee Fa-hien. On his arrival I lodged him with myself in the winter study,[17] and there, in our meetings for conversation, I asked him again and again about his travels. The man was modest and complaisant, and answered readily according to the truth. I thereupon advised him to enter into details where he had at first only given a summary, and he proceeded to relate all things in order from the beginning to the end. He said himself, "When I look back on what I have gone through, my heart is involuntarily moved, and the perspiration flows forth. That I encountered danger and trod the most perilous places, without thinking of or sparing myself, was because I had a definite aim, and thought of nothing but to do my best in my simplicity and straightforwardness. Thus it was that I exposed my life where death seemed inevitable, if I might accomplish but a ten-thousandth part of what I hoped." These words affected me in turn, and I thought:--"This man is one of those who have seldom been seen from ancient times to the present. Since the Great Doctrine flowed on to the East there has been no one to be compared with Hien in his forgetfulness of self and search for the Law. Henceforth I know that the influence of sincerity finds no obstacle, however great, which it does not overcome, and that force of will does not fail to accomplish whatever service it undertakes. Does not the accomplishing of such service arise from forgetting (and disregarding) what is (generally) considered as important, and attaching importance to what is (generally) forgotten?

NOTES

[1] No. 1122 in Nanjio's Catalogue, translated into Chinese by Buddhajiva and a Chinese Sramana about A.D. 425. Mahisasakah means "the school of the transformed earth," or "the sphere within which the Law of Buddha is influential." The school is one of the subdivisions of the Sarvastivadah.

[2] Nanjio's 545 and 504. The Agamas are Sutras of the hinayana, divided, according to Eitel, pp. 4, 5, into four classes, the first or Dirghagamas (long Agamas) being treatises on right conduct, while the third class contains the Samyuktagamas (mixed Agamas).

[3] Meaning "Miscellaneous Collections;" a sort of fourth Pitaka. See Nanjio's fourth division of the Canon, containing Indian and Chinese miscellaneous works. But Dr. Davids says that no work of this name is known either in Sanskrit or Pali literature.

[4] We have in the text a phonetisation of the Sanskrit Kundika, which is explained in Eitel by the two characters that follow, as="washing basin," but two things evidently are intended.

[5] See chap. xvi, note 23.

[6] At his novitiate Fa-hien had sought the refuge of the "three Precious Ones" (the three Refuges {.} {.} of last chapter), of which the congregation or body of the monks was one; and here his thoughts turn naturally to the branch of it in China. His words in his heart were not exactly words of prayer, but very nearly so.

[7] In the text {.} {.}, ta-fung, "the great wind,"=the typhoon.

[8] They had got to the south of the Shan-tung promontory, and the foot of mount Lao, which still rises under the same name on the extreme south of the peninsula, east from Keao Chow, and having the district of Tsieh-mih on the east of it. All the country there is included in the present Phing-too Chow of the department Lae-chow. The name Phing-too dates from the Han dynasty, but under the dynasty of the After Ch'e {.} {.}, (A.D. 479-501), it was changed into Ch'ang-kwang. Fa-hien may have lived, and composed the narrative of his travels, after the change of name was adopted. See the Topographical Tables of the different Dynasties ({.} {.} {.} {.} {.}), published in 1815.

[9] What these vegetables exactly were it is difficult to say; and there are different readings of the characters for them. Williams' Dictionary, under kwoh, brings the two names together in a phrase, but the rendering of it is simply "a soup of simples." For two or three columns here, however, the text appears to me confused and imperfect.

[10] I suppose these men were really hunters; and, when brought before Fa-hien, because he was a Sramana, they thought they would please him by saying they were disciples of Buddha. But what had disciples of Buddha to do with hunting and taking life? They were caught in their own trap, and said they were looking for peaches.

[11] The Chinese character here has occurred twice before, but in a different meaning and connexion. Remusat, Beal, and Giles take it as equivalent to "to sacrifice." But his followers do not "sacrifice" to Buddha. That is a priestly term, and should not be employed of anything done at Buddhistic services.

[12] Probably the present department of Yang-chow in Keang-soo; but as I have said in a previous note, the narrative does not go on so clearly as it generally does.

[13] Was, or could, this prefect be Le E?

[14] Probably not Ch'ang-gan, but Nan-king, which was the capital of the Eastern Tsin dynasty under another name.

[15] The whole of this paragraph is probably Fa-hien's own conclusion of his narrative. The second half of the second sentence, both in sentiment and style in the Chinese text, seems to necessitate our ascribing it to him, writing on the impulse of his own thoughts, in the same indirect form which he adopted for his whole narrative. There are, however, two peculiar phraseologies in it which might suggest the work of another hand. For the name India, where the first [15] is placed, a character is employed which is similarly applied nowhere else; and again, "the three Honoured Ones," at which the second [15] is placed, must be the same as "the three Precious Ones," which we have met with so often; unless we suppose that {.} {.} is printed in all the revisions for {.} {.}, "the World-honoured one," which has often occurred. On the whole, while I accept this paragraph as Fa-hien's own, I do it with some hesitation. That the following and concluding paragraph is from another hand, there can be no doubt. And it is as different as possible in style from the simple and straightforward narrative of Fa-hien.

[16] There is an error of date here, for which it is difficult to account. The year Keah-yin was A.D. 414; but that was the tenth year of the period E-he, and not the twelfth, the cyclical designation of which was Ping-shin. According to the preceding paragraph, Fa-hien's travels had occupied him fifteen years, so that counting from A.D. 399, the year Ke-hae, as that in which he set out, the year of his getting to Ts'ing-chow would have been Kwei-chow, the ninth year of the period E-he; and we might join on "This year Keah-yin" to that paragraph, as the date at which the narrative was written out for the bamboo-tablets and the silk, and then begins the Envoy, "In the twelfth year of E-he." This would remove the error as it stands at present, but unfortunately there is a particle at the end of the second date ({.}), which seems to tie the twelfth year of E-he to Keah-yin, as another designation of it. The "year-star" is the planet Jupiter, the revolution of which, in twelve years, constitutes "a great year." Whether it would be possible to fix exactly by mathematical calculation in what year Jupiter was in the Chinese zodiacal sign embracing part of both Virgo and Scorpio, and thereby help to solve the difficulty of the passage, I do not know, and in the meantime must leave that difficulty as I have found it.

[17] We do not know who the writer of the Envoy was. "The winter study or library" would be the name of the apartment in his monastery or house, where he sat and talked with Fa-hien.

Hi Piya,

Here's my selection of texts. I'd like to use one of these, Nagara, as the mainline demonstra others will be given out for the class to work on in groups. I anticipate around 30 people per they divide into groups of five or six, this will require six texts.

For each text we should include:

Pali
Chinese
Sanskrit
Translation from Pali.

The class will be asked to translate the Chinese with reference to the Sanskit, and make co

Of course, i don't expect them to finish the sutta, even a few lines will give them an idea wha
In some of these, especialy Nagara, you will probably want to give just an excerpt rather tha thing. I will leave the editing details to you, but i should think it will usually be easy enough t the most interesting passages to present. The easiest is Kulaputta - i think this is about the

The bias towards the Nidana samyutta, by the way, is only because there happens to be a l available in Skt.

If possible, i'd like to collect in Singapore enough copies of the quadrilinear texts to use in K
If this is too many, best to email a pdf file to Dr Oo in Penang and Benny Liow in KL, so they those workshops.

Please let me know if there's anything else i can do to help with this.

in Dhamma

Bhante Sujato

This ZIP file contains:

PS_Handout (long).docmain handout
PS_Handout (cont).docsome additonal passages updated 29 Oct 2004
MahaNidana (bits).docpassages from MahaNidana Sutta (D.15) leedpal1.TTFfont for Pali terms (w/ diacritical marks) readme.txtthis contents file

Abhayagiri Buddhist Monastery

16201 Tomki Rd.
Redwood valley, CA 95470

707-485-1630
sangha@abhayagiri.org

These teachings are provided for Free Distribution only. Please only distribute these files in and seek permission from Abhayagiri Buddhist Monastery before distributing on-line.

Thank you.

5/2002

What's in this folder?

This folder (hts-cache) has been generated by WinHTTrack 3.40+swf and is used for updating this website.
(The HTML website structure is stored here to allow fast updates)

DO NOT delete this folder unless you do not want to update the mirror in the future!!
(you can safely delete old.zip and old.lst files, however) note:the hts-log.txt file, and hts-cache folder, may contain sensitive information, such as username/password authentication for websites mirrored in this project do not share these files/folders if you want these information to remain private

JWordTrainer v1.0

Released under GNU GPL

Table of Contents:

1. Introduction
2. How to Use
3. How to Add Words to an Existing Language
4. How to Add a New Language
5. Troubleshooting
6. Feedback

1. Introduction

JWordTrainer is a generic tool to help you memorizing words for basically any pair of languages (the interface is always in English though). As a pure HTML/Javascript web application it will run in any browser on any OS (Windows, Linux, Mac, ...).

When a language pair and vocabulary have been defined (read section 3 and 4 to learn more) this tool works as follows: You specify how many words from which input files you want to be asked and the programme will randomly choose that many. The first word is displayed, you think about it and then click a button to show the translation. After that you may decide whether to keep the word in the quiz (e.g., because you were wrong, it will be asked again later) or not. Then another word is shown. Like this, you continue until no more words are left.

There are no statistics or any checks whether you really knew the word or not. This tool is not meant for comparisons or tests but it will help you memorizing words quickly by...

- ... asking single words in a random order. There is no associative context (like position in some list), so you really have to mug up the words itself.

- ... asking words again later if desired. This allows you to internalize difficult words---the easy ones drop out quickly, the harder ones remain until you get them right.
- ... allowing you to choose the input files (= lessons), asked language and number of words according to your needs and time at hand.
- ... being usable anywhere: Just put it on a pendrive or upload it to some webspace and you can go for a few words whenever and where ever you have access to a computer or internet.

2. How to Use

This application was developed during my stay in Dhammagiri, Igatpuri, India for the Pali Programme 2010. Therefore, the example language pair included is Pali-English. How to use the programme is explained referring to this.

Basically, each language pair has one HTML-file (e.g., pali.htm) which defines the layout of the programme and has to be run in a browser (e.g. by double-clicking the file in the Explorer or entering the file path as URL in the browser). This will start the word trainer with the settings and vocabulary of this language pair.

On the left-hand side you can now choose the lessons from which you want words to be asked (Note, that you can use CTRL to select multiple entries from the list and SHIFT to select a range of entries just like in the Explorer.), the number of words and in which language you want to be asked. After having made your choice hit the "Start" button.

On the right-hand side the word is now displayed in the selected language. The "???" below marks the position where the translation will be shown. You may either use the three buttons

"Show" - show translation of the asked word
"Next" - remove word from quiz and ask next word
"Keep" - keep word in quiz (ask again later) and ask next word or the key commands

SPACE - show translation if not shown OR remove word from quiz and ask next word if translation is shown

ESC, "a" or "k" - keep word in quiz (ask again later) and ask next word.

Thus, as long as you know the words you can comfortably use SPACE (first to show translation, then to proceed to next word) as single key.

A simple search functionality is also provided. Click on the "Search" link below the "Lessons" heading on the left-hand side to access it. Note, that navigating to Search will cancel the current quiz. The search expression has to be in the input file word format (e.g., Pali Velthius format). All files will be searched and all words that contain the given expression as a substring will be displayed.

3. How to Add Words to an Existing Language

While HTML/Javascript gives maximum portability, it has one limitation: There is no way to access files. Therefore, the input files have to be manually edited and included to the corresponding HTML-file (e.g. pali.htm) with a text editor. Don't worry, this is easier than you think.

For each language pair defined exists a directory (e.g., pali). This directory contains a file named lang.js which provides language specific definitions (see section 4 to learn more; it can be ignored when just adding words) and any number of word input files ending in .js (e.g., nouns2010.js).

If you want to add a new file (a good way to organize vocabulary is to use one file for each lesson or page of words you have to memorize), as a first step copy an existing word input file (e.g. nouns2010.js) and rename it in a meaningful way. E.g., if you want to add a new lesson with all exercises from the first chapter of "Introduction to Pali" by A.K. Warder you could name it something like warderex01.js.

Then open this file with a text editor and clear it by removing all double-quoted lines below the line var jwtInputWords = new Array(

```
```

and change the caption to, e.g., "Warder Ex 01". Note: Anything between /* and */ is a comment and can be ignored. Your file should now look like this:

```
/* Pali/English word pairs. Pali is Velthius format. */
var jwtInputCaption = "Warder Ex 01";
var jwtInputWords = new Array(
);
```

Words are defined as actual word in first language, hash-symbol # as separator and actual word in second language, e.g. for Pali-English "naro # man, person". Note: It is important to enclose the definition in double-quotes and add a comma at the end of the line except for the very last entry.

E.g., with the first three sentences from Warder your file would look like this:

```
/* Pali/English word pairs. Pali is Velthius format. */
var jwtInputCaption = "Warder Ex 01";
var jwtInputWords = new Array(
"tathaagato bhaasati # the thus-gone speaks",
"upaasako pucchati # the lay follower asks",
"puriso eva.m vadati # the man speaks thus"
);
```

Note, that there is no comma behind the last entry. The required input format of words should be explained either in lang.js or given as a comment in the input files. The former is probably the better solution. For Pali it is just stated that the format is Velthius (thus long a is aa for example, retroflex t is .t and so forth).

Very important: If double quote is used within the definition (this is for example the case with the "n letter in Pali) it has to be "escaped" by backslash, e.g.,

```
" a\"nguli (f) # finger, toe "
```

Entries to existing files are just added in the same manner.

New files have to be added to the HTML file (e.g., pali.htm) to show up as a lesson. Therefore, open this file with an editor and search for the line

```
<!-- LANGUAGE DEPENDENT SECTION BEGIN -->
```

Only this section differs for each language, the rest of the file is always the same. The first entry loads the language settings (e.g., pali/lang.js), the other entries load the word input files.

Now, copy and paste any of the include commands in this section, e.g.,

```
<script src="pali/derivatives.js" type="text/javascript">...(snip)...
```

and adjust the file name (e.g. change "pali/derivatives.js" to "pali/warderex01.js"). This will give you something like:

```
<script src="pali/derivatives.js" type="text/javascript">...(snip)...
<script src="pali/warderex01.js" type="text/javascript">...(snip)...
```

Then refresh the page in the browser to reload the data (also needed when existing files have been changed). The new lesson will show up in the list (e.g., as "Warder Ex 01").

4. How to Add a New Language

Then copy an existing lang.js from any directory (e.g., pali/lang.js to german/lang.js) and adjust the language names (used for language selection, title, etc.) in the jwtInputLanguageNames array, e.g.:

```
var jwtInputLanguageNames = new Array( "German", "English" );
```

Now the tricky part which might need some programming: The main purpose of lang.js is to provide a mapping for the words in some input format into something the browser displays properly (best is HTML UTF-8 encoding).

But: For most languages it should be sufficient to simply use UTF-8 as encoding for input files and to type the words straight away with special characters. Most browsers should be able to handle this. If it works for you, there is no need for an encoding function and encodeWordToHTML() can be deleted leaving only the definition of the language names in lang.js.

However, for maximum portability to all enviroments it is recommended to use a format which conforms to ASCII (e.g. Velthius for Pali) for all input files and map the transliterations of non-ASCII characters to HTML encoded UTF-8 characters. pali/lang.js is a good example for this approach. How to do this for German-English is just outlined here as another example.

As described in section 3 already, each word, regardless of the file encoding, consists of the actual word in the first language, the hash-symbol # as a separator and the actual word in the second language. For more on adding and editing word input files read section 3.

So let us assume some encoding is needed. E.g., for German the u-umlaut is represented as "u in input files and has to be encoded to the corresponding unicode character 00FC. In this case the function

```
function encodeWordToHTML( word, lang )
```

has to be kept in lang.js and adjusted properly. The parameter @word is the word as described in the paragraph above (actual word in both languages separated by #) and the parameter @lang is either 0 (= return encoded word in first language) or 1 (= return encoded word in second language).

Since in this example the second language, English, needs no changes, the first part of the function remains unchanged. In the second part, however, the replace calls have to be adjusted. The first argument defines what has to be replaced (/g indicating that all occurences shall be replaced), the second with what it has to be replaced. So for replacing our u-umlaut we have to remove all replace-calls except for one:

```
str = str.replace(/"u/g,"&#x00fc;");
```

This will replace all occurrences of "u with ü (the HTML encoded unicode character 00FC). Note, that a double-quote in the search expression does not have to be escaped by a backslash as it has to be in the word input files (see section 3). To complete the encoding for German language all umlauts would require a similar replacement command.

After completing lang.js and defining words in input files accordingly (e.g., german/lesson01.js) these files have to be included to the HTML file (e.g., german.htm). Therefore, open this file, search for and adjust the include calls in this section. E.g., to include the language definition and the first lesson for German:

```
<!-- LANGUAGE DEPENDENT SECTION BEGIN -->
```

```
<script src="german/lang.js" type="text/javascript"></script>
<script src="german/lesson01.js" type="text/javascript">(...snip...)
```

Note, that the very first line for lang.js is shorter because it does not need a call to function addInputFile.

5. Troubleshooting

Two of the largest pitfalls in editing input files are to forget to put a backslash in front of any double-quotes in word definitions and to put a comma after the last entry in the array. Both errors will break the file without any obvious notice. Indicators are, that the previous lesson name in the list appears twice or that there are no words (because the file has not been processed). The error will be shown in the Error Console of Firefox though. So if you have any trouble with input files, use Firefox, open the Error Console (to be found in menu Tools) and check if there are any error messages.

6. Feedback

Suggestions, comments and other feedback is very welcome: kulkanie@gmx.net

Be happy!

Please load and check the file pacscp.doc and report incompatibilities, if any, to ulrich.stiehl@t-online.de

REINCARNATION-MY ANSWER

by Takashi Tsuji

Do you Buddhists believe in rebirth as an animal in the next life? Are you going to be a dog or a cow in the future? Does the soul transmigrate into the body of another person or some animal? What is the difference between transmigration and reincarnation? Is it the same as rebirth? Is karma the same as fate? These and a hundred similar questions are often put to me.

A gross misunderstanding of Buddhism exists in America today, especially in the notion of reincarnation. The common misunderstanding is that a person has led countless previous lives, usually as an animal, but somehow in this life he is born as a human being and in the next life he will be reborn as an animal, depending on the kind of life he has lived.

This misunderstanding arises because people usually do not know how to read the sutras or sacred writings. It is said that the Buddha left 84,000 teachings; the symbolic figure represents the diverse backgrounds characteristics, tastes, etc. of the people. The Buddha taught according to the mental and spiritual capacity of each individual. For the simple village folks living during the time of the Buddha, the doctrine of reincarnation was a powerful moral lesson. Fear of birth into the animal world must have frightened many people from acting like animals in this life. If we take this teaching literally today we are confused because we cannot understand it rationally.

Herein lies our problem. A parable, when taken literally, does not make sense to the modern mind. Therefore we must learn to differentiate the parables and myths from actuality. However; if we learn to go beyond or transcend the parables and myths, we will be able to understand the truth.

People will say "If such is the case why not speak directly so that we will be able to come to an immediate grasp of the truth?"

This statement is understandable, but truth is often inexpressible.

[Ed comment: we as human beings are limited in understanding

"Buddha Knowledge". We cannot speak TRUTH, only words ABOUT Truth]

Thus, writers and teachers have often resorted to the language of the imagination to lead the reader from a lower to a higher truth.

The doctrine of reincarnation is often understood in this light.

WHAT REINCARNATION IS NOT

Reincarnation is not a simple physical birth of a person; for instance, John being reborn as a cat in the next life. In this case John possesses an immortal soul which trans forms to the form of a cat after his death. This cycle is repeated over and over again. Or if he is lucky, he will be reborn as a human being.

This notion of the transmigration of the soul definitely does not exist in Buddhism.

KARMA

Karma is a Sanskrit word from the root "Kri" to do or to make and simply means "action."

It operates in the universe as the continuous chain reaction of cause and effect. It is not only confined to causation in the physical sense but also it has moral implications. "A good cause, a good effect; a bad cause a bad effect" is a common saying. In this sense karma is a moral law.

Now human beings are constantly giving off physical and spiritual forces in all directions. In physics we learn that no energy is ever lost; only that it changes form. This is the common law of conservation of energy. Similarly, spiritual and mental action is never lost. It is trans formed. Thus Karma is the law of the conservation of moral energy.

By actions, thoughts, and words, man is releasing spiritual energy to the universe and he is in turn affected by influences coming in his direction. Man is therefore the sender and receiver of all these influences. The entire circumstances surrounding him is his karma.

With each action-influence he sends out and at the same time, receives, he is changing. This changing personality and the world he lives in, constitute the totality of his karma.

Karma should not be confused with fate. Fate is the notion that man's life is preplanned for him by some external power, and he has no control over his destiny. Karma on the other hand, can be changed. Because man is a conscious being he can be aware of his karma and thus strive to change the course of events. In the Dhammapada we find the following words, "All that we are is a result of what we have thought, it is founded on our thoughts and made up of our thoughts."

What we are, then, is entirely dependent on what we think. Therefore, the nobility of man's character is dependent on his "good" thoughts, actions, and words. At the same time, if he embraces degrading thoughts, those thoughts invariably influence him into negative words and actions.

THE WORLD

Traditionally, Buddhism teaches the existence of the ten realms of being. At the top is Buddha and the scale descends as follows: Bodhisattva (an enlightened being destined to be a Buddha, but purposely remaining on earth to teach others), Pratyeka Buddha (a Buddha for himself), Sravka (direct disciple of Buddha), heavenly beings (superhuman [angels?]), human beings, Asura (fighting spirits), beasts, Preta (hungry ghosts), and depraved men (hellish beings).

Now, these ten realms may be viewed as unfixed, non-objective worlds, as mental and spiritual states of mind. These states of mind are created by men's thoughts, actions, and words. In other words, psychological states. These ten realms are "mutually immanent and mutually inclusive, each one having in it the remaining nine realms." For example, the realm of human beings has all the other nine states (from hell to Buddhahood). Man is at the same time capable of real selfishness, creating his own hell, or is truly compassionate, reflecting the compassion of Amida Buddha. Buddhas too have the other nine realms in their minds, for how can a Buddha possibly save those in hell if he himself does not identify with their suffering and guide them to enlightenment.

THE LESSON

We can learn a valuable lesson from the teaching of reincarnation.

In what realm do you now live? If you are hungry for power, love, and self-recognition, you live in the Preta world, or hungry ghosts. If you are motivated only by thirsts of the human organism, you are existing in the world of the beast.

Consider well then your motives and intentions. Remember that man is characteristically placed at the midpoint of the ten stages; he can either lower himself abruptly or gradually into hell or through discipline, cultivation and the awakening of faith rise to the Enlightened state of the Buddha.

NAMU AMIDA BUTSU

BuddhaNet BBS - The Buddhist Bulletin Board (612) 212-3061

Buddha Dhamma Meditation Association Inc

PO Box K 1020 Haymarket, NSW 2000 AUSTRALIA

Sitemap : http://www.tipitaka.fr/sitemap.txt

<!-- ==========
AUTOMAGICALLY GENERATED FROM AN INCLUDE FILE. --><!-- (Generated by BBEdit,
--><!-- HTML chunk for search engine form. --> <form method="get" action="http://www.accesstoinsight.org/cgi/search/search.pl"><input name="Terms" /><inpu class="only-online" type="submit" value="Search" /><input class="only-offline" type="submit Search online" /></form> <!-- THE TEXT ABOVE IS AUTOMAGICALLY GENERATED
========== -->

<td align="right" width="190"><input name="Terms" style="font-size:x-small; border: 1px sol class="only-online searchform" type="submit" value="Search" /><input class="only-offline se type="submit" value="» Online Search" /></td>

<td align="right" width="190"><input name="Terms" style="font-size:x-small; border: 1px sol
class="search-local" type="submit" value="Search" /><input class="search-remote" type="su Online Search" /></td>

<!--jtb 031019: To modify these search tips, be sure to edit only the BBEdit include file (searchtips.txt).--> Just type the words or phrases that you're looking for in the search bo the "Search" button. The search engine responds by presenting you with a list of all the web site containing those words or phrases. The most relevant content will appear at the top of y results. Common words (such as "the," "and," "you," etc.) are ignored during searche default this search engine tries to find pages that have exact matches for any of the w entered in your search query. Example: If you type noble right con the search box, you'll find hundreds of pages: every page that contains any one of the words right, or concentration. <hr class="minibar" /><h2>Improving your searches</h2><dl><dt>Put quotation marks around phrases.</dt><dd>To search fo words, enclose your query in double quotation marks ("..."). Example: To right concentration," type "noble right concentration" in the search box (include the do quotes!). </dd><dt>Use + and - qualifiers.</dt><dd>A word beginning with + is the page. A word beginning with - is required to NOT be on the page. Example:<dt>Use th wildcard.</dt><dd>If a query word ends with a * your search will find pages containing w with your query word. Example: To find pages that contain generous, g generic, etc., type gener* in your query. </dd><dt>Combine these techniques.</dt><dd>Examples:
+generosity +layp* -virtue</i Finds pages that contain generosity AND layperson or laypeople BUT virtue.
"buddha's son" "son of the buddha"
  Finds pages
Rahula, the Buddha's son.
+ananda +sutta -savatthi +"first jhana" suttas that mention the Buddha's cousin Ananda, AND the first jhana, but NOT the town of Savatthi.
</dd><dt>Case doesn't matter.</dt><dd>Searches are case inse
for "Dana" will match the lowercase "dana" and uppercase "DANA."</dd><dt>Accents d matter.</dt><dd>By default, all searches are accent insensitive: ñ is the sa
ö is the same as o, etc. (But see "Searching for Pali wor below.)</dd><dt>Correct spelling is crucial.</ engine is ruthlessly strict about spelling. If you can't find what you're looking for, check your spelling. Example: Here are some words that you won't find in a search: "
"bikkhu," "sanghka," "visudimagga." You will, however, find: "Tipitaka," "bhikkhu," "sangha,"
"visuddhimagga." </dd><dt>Searching for Pali words.</dt><dd>Searching for Pali words can be tricky because of the diacritical m in the phonetic representation of Pali in our roman alphabet. On this website most (but not a are represented without diacritics: nibbana, ditthi, etc. The palatal nasal is usually represent
ñ, hence ñana, viññana, etc., although this search engine re and ñ as equivalent. In some texts, diacritics are represented using the Velthui widely used on the Internet: double the vowels, and precede the affected consonants with p

of the diacritic (see "Diacritical M
"A Guide to Learning the Pali Language" for details). You'll have to be a bit resourceful in yo you can't find the word you're looking for, try a different spelling. Example:
up the Pali word for mental absorption, try these alternate spellings: jhana or jhaan insight knowledge, try ñana, nana, naan.a, or ñaan.a;</ consciousness, try viññana, vinnana, vinnaa.na, or viññaa.na; etc. Keep in mind that long Pali words are sometimes them more readable in English. Example: The famous Mahasatipa sometimes written as Maha-satipatthana sutta. To find the sutta, try looking up "maha simply "satipatthana." Search in Pali, not Sanskrit. Although a few common Buddhist appear on this website in their Sanskrit equivalents (dharma, karma, nirvana, etc.), th of terms are in Pali (dhamma, kamma, nibbana, etc.). Searches for Sanskrit words lik (Pali: jhana), smrti (sati), or sutra (sutta) will yield little fruit. If you're having trouble finding Pali terms that you believe must be on the webs
Glossary of Pali and Buddhist Terms are spelling it correctly. </dd></dl>

<!--jtb 031019: To modify these search tips, be sure to edit only the BBEdit include file (searchtips.txt).--><script type="text/javascript" language="javascript">// <![CDATA[<!-- var agt=navigator.userAgent.toLowerCase();var is_konq = false;var kqPos = agt.indexOf('konq !=-1) { is_konq = true;is_minor = parseFloat(agt.substring(kqPos+10,agt.indexOf(';',kqPos)));is_major = parseInt(is_minor);} var is_safari = ((agt.indexOf('safari')!=-1)&&(agt.indexOf('mac')!=-1))?true:false;var is_khtml = (is_safari || is_konq);var is_gecko = ((!is_khtml)&&(navigator.product)&&(navigator.product.toLowerCase()=="gecko"))?true:false ((agt.indexOf('mozilla/5')!=-1) && (agt.indexOf('spoofer')==-1) &&(agt.indexOf('compatible')= (agt.indexOf('opera')==-1) &&(agt.indexOf('webtv')==-1) && (agt.indexOf('hotjava')==-1) & && ((navigator.vendor=="Firefox")||(agt.indexOf('firefox')!=-1)));function addEngine(name,ex ((typeof window.sidebar == "object") && (typeofwindow.sidebar.addSearchEngine == "function")){window.sidebar.addSearchEngine("http://www.accesstoinsight.org/tech/firefox_s me+".src","http://www.accesstoinsight.org/tech/firefox_support/"+name+"."+ext,name,cat);}e errorMsg(name,ext,cat);}}if (is_fx) {var info = '<table align="center" class="shaded" style="margin-bottom:1em"><tr><td style="text-align:center">Greetings, Firefox user.Add the A plugin now!<\/b><\/a><\/td><\/tr><\/table>';}else {;}document.write(info); -->//]]></script> Just type the words or phrases that you're looking for in the search box and c "Search" button. The search engine responds by presenting you with a list of all the web pag containing those words or phrases. The most relevant content will appear at the top of your results. Common words (such as "the," "and," "you," etc.) are ignored during searche default this search engine tries to find pages that have exact matches for any of the w entered in your search query. Example: If you type noble right con the search box, you'll find hundreds of pages: every page that contains any one of the words right, or concentration. <hr class="minibar" /><h2>Improving your searches</h2><dl><dt>Put quotation marks around phrases.</dt><dd>To search fo words, enclose your query in double quotation marks ("..."). Example: To right concentration," type "noble right concentration" in the search box (include the do quotes!). </dd><dt>Use + and - qualifiers.</dt><dd>A word beginning with + is the page. A word beginning with - is required to NOT be on the page. Example:</ that mention generosity but not virtue, try +generosity -virtue </dd><dt>Use th wildcard.</dt><dd>If a query word ends with a * your search will find pages containing with your query word. Example: To find pages that contain generous, generic, etc., type gener* in your query. </dd><dt>Combine these techniques.</dt><dd>Examples: +generosity +layp* -virtue Finds pages that contain generosity AND layperson or laypeople BU virtue. "buddha's son" "son of the buddha"
 Finds pages

Rahula, the Buddha's son.
+ananda +sutta -savatthi +"first jhana" suttas that mention the Buddha's cousin Ananda, AND the first jhana, but NOT the town of Savatthi.
</dd><dt>Case doesn't matter.</dt><dd>Searches are case inse
for "Dana" will match the lowercase "dana" and uppercase "DANA."</dd><dt>Accents d matter.</dt><dd>By default, all searches are accent insensitive: ñ is the sa
ö is the same as o, etc. (But see "Searching for Pali wor
below.)</dd><dt>Correct spelling is crucial.</ engine is ruthlessly strict about spelling. If you can't find what you're looking for, check your spelling. Example: Here are some words that you won't find in a search: "
"bikkhu," "sanghka," "visudimagga." You will, however, find: "Tipitaka," "bhikkhu," "sangha,"
"visuddhimagga." </dd><dt>Searching for Pali
words.</dt><dd>Searching for Pali words can be tricky because of the diacritical m in the phonetic representation of Pali in our roman alphabet. On this website most (but not a are represented without diacritics: nibbana, ditthi, etc. The palatal nasal is usually represent
ñ, hence ñana, viññana, etc., although this search engine re
and ñ as equivalent. In some texts, diacritics are represented using the Velthui widely used on the Internet: double the vowels, and precede the affected consonants with p
of the diacritic (see "Diacritical M
"A Guide to Learning the Pali Language" for details). You'll have to be a bit resourceful in yo you can't find the word you're looking for, try a different spelling. Example:
up the Pali word for mental absorption, try these alternate spellings: jhana or jhaa insight knowledge, try ñana, nana, naan.a, or ñaan.a;</ consciousness, try viññana, vinnana, vinnaa.na, or viññaa.na; etc. Keep in mind that long Pali words are sometimes them more readable in English. Example: The famous Mahasatipa sometimes written as Maha-satipatthana sutta. To find the sutta, try looking up "maha simply "satipatthana." Search in Pali, not Sanskrit. Although a few common Buddhist appear on this website in their Sanskrit equivalents (dharma, karma, nirvana, etc.), th
of terms are in Pali (dhamma, kamma, nibbana, etc.). Searches for Sanskrit words lik (Pali: jhana), smrti (sati), or sutra (sutta) will yield little fruit. If you're having trouble finding Pali terms that you believe must be on the webs
Glossary of Pali and Buddhist Terms are spelling it correctly. </dd></dl>

ÉÍÍÍ

The commentary on THE GREAT PERFECTION: THE NATURE OF MIND, THE EASER O called the Great Chariot

The First Chapter of the commentary on THE GREAT PERFECTION: THE NATURE OF M
OF WEARINESS called the Great Chariot

In Sanskrit the title is Mahasandhi citta visranta vritti maharatha nama, In Tibetan Rdzogs pa nyid ngal gso'i/ shing rta chen po/ shes bya ba

I prostrate to glorious Samantabhadra

From the ocean of the glorious two accumulations come clouds that bear the abundant rain happiness.
These are the hundreds of qualities of the Nature that constitute the beauties of trikaya.
The thunder of wisdom and kindness pervading the limits of space, the great drum of Bhram
To the all-knowing Chief of Beings, to the Dharma, and Sangha, the leaders of beings, I bow

On an island in the lake of Uddiyana,
Born within the blossom on a lotus stalk,
Spontaneous emanation of the victorious ones,
Blazing with qualities of the major and minor marks,
Padmasambhava protects the lotus of my mind.

O primordial, spotless, full ocean; you who emanate samsara and nirvana
O non-dual, unborn, full nature; perfect essence of Buddha, you the natural state, O fullness with no existence or lack of it, views that things are eternal or nothing, coming or object of complex variety.
O fullness with no conception of good or evil, you who neither accept or reject.
I bow to the uncompounded nature of the mind.

This is the unsurpassable city of joyous liberation. Here the Victorious Ones of the three tim supreme peace. So that all beings may go there directly, it embodies the heart of the sutras Here,
day and night, with unremitting effort, with single-minded devotion, my mind is absorbed in p Great Chariot of the profound path that liberates from samsara be clearly elucidated.

Of this explanation of the GREAT PERFECTION, THE NATURE OF MIND, THE EASER OF WEARINESS, The single path of all Dharmas and traditions, there are three main sections:

First, the manner of entering on the composition of the treatise and the meaning of the introd
Second, the extensive explanation of the main subject of the text, Third, the conclusion.

First, the manner of entering on the composition of the treatise and the meaning of the introd

The divisions are

First, the meaning of the homage
Second, The vow to compose the text.

First, the meaning of the homage

The Buddha has come into this world. The excellent speech of his teachings, holy Dharma, kindness of genuine beings remains in existence. Here are the details of how the ocean of t mantra vehicles may be practiced by a single individual Now that the freedoms and good favors, so attain,
have been attained. In that way oneself and others may completely cross the ocean of suffe
How mind, wearied in samsara, eases its weariness in the land of peace is taught fully and This goes from how the beginner enters and begins, up to how the fruition of buddhahood m the completed and perfect meaning of all the vehicles.
Wishing to compose the thirteen chapters of this treatise, the Great Perfection, the Nature o Easer of Weariness, first I offer a short homage:

The primordial lord; the great, full ocean of buddha qualities;
Whose natural wisdom and kindness is limitless in its depth,
Birthplace of the Victorious Ones and all their sons,
Who emanates heaped up clouds of goodness and benefit,
I prostrate to the one who is all that is desired.

Thus I call on him. This lord is the manifestation of enlightenment, whose place is in the prim ground. This is the teacher, the Buddha Bhagavat. Having the nature of the great full ocean renunciation and realization, he rules the sphere of inexhaustible adornments of body, spee

the depth and expanse of supreme understanding and wondrously arisen compassion are just t incomprehensible to the mind that sees only the manifestations of the I of "this side."
By earnestly practicing the Dharma taught here, mind becomes the source of the jewel of th the three times and their sons. Then for all the realms of sentient beings, as limitless as the
are temporary benefits in accord with the happiness of each. Gods and human beings alike are happiness.
The ultimate happiness is being brought to whichever of the three enlightenments of the shr pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattvas is in accord with the good fortune of one's powers. The us to supremely ultimate great enlightenment, omniscient buddhahood. Therefore, I prostrate t Samantabhadra and so forth, all the victorious ones and their sons throughout the ten direct times.

As for the ocean of buddha qualities of this primordial lord. The glorious Net of Illusion says

The lord is timeless perfection, known as buddhahood.
This is the precious ocean of Buddha qualities.

These precious jewels also arise within the connections of cause and effect. The Uttaratant

From the Buddha comes the Dharma; From the Dharma comes the assembly of the Noble C

Regarding emanation of heaped up clouds of goodness and benefit for sentient beings, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

They have compassionate kindness for every sentient being.
They have the kind of vision we do not need to seek.
They have the kind of vision that is inseparable.
I prostrate to you with the vision of goodness and happiness.

We should prostrate, because there are such great benefits for both ourselves and others. S bodies are of this excellent kind, if we briefly praise the good fortune of words and meaning,
all this is holy. If we undertake this holy activity who stay with it, we cannot but reach the goal.
Commentary on the Prajñaparamita in 8000 Lines says:

Those who have the kindness of benefit for others
For the sake of living beings, do not relax their powers.
Though these holy beings bear a heavy burden,
They never put it down and dwell in discouragement.

This needs to be attained by others as well. When the teacher and shastra are understood way, there is devotion. Nagarjuna says:

It is never fruitless, when the authors of the treatises
Express their homage to the teacher and the teaching;
Because of doing so they make us feel inspired.

As for saying that both kinds of benefit must be attained, by perfecting the accumulations th ripening will be accomplished. The Sutra of Vast Play says:

The wishes of those with merit will surely be accomplished.

The Sutra Producing many Buddhas:

Whoever for the Conqueror as a leader,
Does even a little bit of activity,
Having gone to various celestial realms,
Will attain the level of buddhahood.

Second, the vow to compose the text:

Here why homage is made:

Luminous dharmakaya, immaculate realm of the conquerors!
For us who wander here in samsara, by ignorant grasping,
Amidst this realm of grief of karma and the kleshas,
Today may our weariness come to rest in the nature of mind.

The nature of mind is primordial luminosity, the essence of the buddha realm. It is beyond t extremes of existence, non-existence, eternalism, and nihilism. It primordially pervades all s
The
Uttaratantra says:

When by the luminous nature of the mind
It has been seen that kleshas are essenceless,
After it has been realized that all beings
Are completely pure of the four extremes,

All will dwell within perfect buddhahood,
Possessing the mind that has no obscuration.
Beings completely purified will possess
the limitless vision of the perceiver, wisdom.
Therefore, to that nature I pay homage.

Though primordially pure wisdom exists within us, by not recognizing it, we wander here in s
This karma of ignorance produces ego-grasping. By that in turn are produced passion, aggr pride, and envy. It is because of these five poisons or kleshas that we are whirling around h Why so? As various habitual patterns are superimposed on alaya, we enter into unhappines result is that by the karma of ignorance we are born as animals. The intermediate is that by seduction and desire we are born as pretas. The worst is that by the karma of aggression w
Those who have pure merit, but also an equal amount of pride, are born as gods or human l
Those who have equal parts of goodness and jealousy are born as asuras. Each of these h existence, with its happiness, sorrow, and the states between them. They have their own so evil
behavior. So it is that we wander helplessly in this plain of the beginningless and endless su samsara, so difficult to cross. In vanity we grasp at an I or real self, which is like the seemin appearances of a dream. Though if we examine these well, they are non-existent, at this time of our confusion be really and truly existent. The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

The life of samsaric beings is like that in a dream.
Since this is so, no one is ever born or dies.

The Request of Bhrama says:

The beings of appearance are like those in a dream.
By their personal karma, they are bound as individuals.
They wander among samsara's many joys and sorrows.
Though their nature is suchness that is egoless
Still these unknowing children fixate I and ego,

And so samsara's torments are ever on the rise.

The sentient beings of samsara are held in various kinds of bondage. Though all dharmas a fixators of ego excluded themselves off from the eye of liberation, and have to be taught the essence.
How? When they know that this is their path, it is improper for them to concern themselves goal of peace alone. As all beings wander here in beginningless samsara, there is not even our father and our mother. So to reject them and liberate ourselves alone is not the proper way.
Letter
says:

Our kinsmen who are carried in the ocean of samsara
Seem to have tumbled down into a great abyss
If we have rejected these, who do not know what they are,
Because of the process of birth and death and transmigration,
If we produce liberation for ourselves alone,
They will never be liberated from their karma.

Thinking about that, and seeing the weariness of sentient beings, exhausted by the burden o wandering here in samsara, I wanted to compose a treatise giving the instructions of how we weariness by coming to the resting place ornamented by the wondrous wealth of the Victorio
of great nirvana. I wanted to illuminate how by immeasurably abundant compassion, we can g in samsara. The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

Kye! O son of noble family, when we see the realm of sentient beings, all undertakings of body, speech, and mind become the immeasurable great compassion. We work with the worldly sciences and those beyond the world that have come from the heads of the noble or Having been inspired to the good, we perform once more the buddha activity of the former Victorious Ones. Let us offer to the Tathagata. Let us raise the victory banner of Dharma. us introduce the great path of liberation. O Holy beings! O precious crest-ornament!

That was the vow to compose the text.

Second, there is the extensive explanation of the actual subject.

In general, the extensive explanation of the subject, how the two benefits arise, is in thirteen

I. The free and well-favored human body, so difficult to obtain

There are four sections:

A. The general explanation of being free and well favored, and how it is so difficult to obtain
B. Recognition of being free and well favored.
C. True analysis of the environment and inhabitants of the phenomenal world.
D. The dedication of the merit of the situation.

A. The general explanation of being free and well favored, so difficult to obtain.

Within the general topic there are

1. The summary of the essence
2. The extensive explanation of the nature.

1. The summary of the essence

Now from the explanation of the real body of the text, first, briefly, the support of establishing enlightenment is being "well-favored." As for the details, here is the praise:

My friends, this body, the precious essence of freedom and favor,
Is very hard to gain within the six realms of beings,
Thus, like a blind man who has found a precious treasure,
With excellent joy, may good and benefit be accomplished.

Who has crossed over to enlightenment? This is the spiritual friend who has established en
The instruction is given to those with the good fortune of bodhicitta, the wish for enlightenme
In regard to attaining the holy freedoms and favors, it is wonderful even for those who are no attain what is supremely precious, let alone the poor. If those who are blind and helpless att even more astonishingly wonderful than that. As for praise of beings, who attain the free and well favor while they are whirled about in the six lokas of samsara, The Sutra Teaching the Freedoms

It is like this: Like a blind person who finds a precious jewel among earth and stones, sentient beings wandering in samsara, blinded by cataracts of ignorance who find their real humanity are supremely joyful. And so we ought to practice the Dharma, which is always excellent.

2. The extensive explanation of the nature,

There are eight topics

a) The extensive explanation of the eighteen freedoms and favors:

If you ask what are these freedoms and excellent favors,
We were not born in Hell, nor yet among hungry ghosts.
We are not beasts, nor long lived gods, nor vicious barbarians,
We were not reared in wrong views, nor in a time without buddhas,
Nor have we been born as idiots without speech,
We are completely free from all these eight non-freedoms.

We were born in the human realm, and in a central country.
Also we sound in all our faculties,
Not having done inexpiably wrong in deeds and actions,
We are properly faithful to the objects of faith.
Thus the five holy favors regarding oneself are complete.

The Buddha has appeared and he has taught the Dharma.
Moreover, at this time the teachings still remain.
So that they may continue, people still follow them,
And others are treating us with kindness and concern.
These five favors are those that exist in regard to others.

Those were the eighteen kinds of being free and well-favored.
On this auspicious occasion they are complete within us.
So strive from the heart, that liberation may be accomplished.

We should take this to heart. Why? The life of the king of Brahmins Drökyi Kyeche says:

It is hard to find the opposites of the eight non-freedoms.
It is hard to find attainment of humanity.
It is hard to find the freedoms in purity and completeness.
It is hard to find the arising of a buddha.
It is hard to find true powers that are without defect.

It is hard to listen to the teachings of a buddha.
It is hard to find the friendship of any holy beings.
It is hard to meet with genuine spiritual friends.

If we are born as Hell beings, pretas, or animals; distracted by suffering, we have no freedo
The blind, who cannot associate verbal symbols with their meanings, have no freedom of sp
Those who are long-lived may never see the practice of Dharma. Buddhas may be absent, arise in a dark kalpa without the appearance of the teachings. Even if buddhas appear, peo barbarians with no idea of entering. Even those who want to enter, falling into extremes of e denigration, may fall into the four wrong views. Such people have no freedom of mind.
None of these have an opportunity to practice Dharma. They have been deprived of it by th karma of the eight non-freedoms. By abandoning those eight, one always has the correspo

The Commentary on the Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

Beings in Hell, the pretas, and the animals;
The long-lived gods and those who are barbarians,
Those in an age without buddhas and those who have wrong views,
These and the blind comprise the eight states of non-freedom.

The Spiritual Letter, says:

Those who grasp wrong views and animals,
The hungry ghosts and beings born in Hell,
Those without the word of Victory,
And those who are born as savage barbarians,
The blind, the feeble-minded, and the gods;
These possess the faults of the eight non-freedoms.
Those who have the freedoms from these eight
Should strive in eliminating further births.

As for being well-favored, the Moon in your Heart Sutra says:

Those for whom the ten qualities are complete
Are said to be the ones who are well-favored.

What are these ten qualities. The following have been listed:

1. We have left behind the lower realms of life.
2. We are not feeble-minded.
3. Our senses are not impaired.
4. We are born as vessels.
5. Our health is good.
6. We are not impoverished.
7. We are not enslaved.
8. We have the power to use words.
9. We have come within view of many noble beings.

That is many people's view of what they are. But here they are as in the Sutra of the Twelve

These are the five perfections pertaining to oneself

1. We have attained the human condition.
2. We are born in a country where there are noble ones.
3. Our powers are sound.
4. We have not performed extremely evil deeds.
5. We have faith in the proper topics of faith.

These are the five perfections pertaining to others.

6. A buddha has come.
7. The Dharma has been taught.
8. The holy Dharma still remains.
9. Others also practice it.
10. Others show kindness to those who practice the Dharma.

As for kindness to others, the spiritual friend apprehends us with compassion, and leads us Dharma. As for there being twelve perfections, the two bases of distinction are also counted commentary says:

A central human being with faculties that are sound,
Without extreme bad actions, but with faith in the objects of faith.
These are the five kinds of favor pertaining to oneself.
A buddha has come and taught, and the teaching still remains.
The teaching still is followed and beings are kind to others.
These are the five kinds of favor pertaining to other beings.

Here the freedoms are the essence and the favors are its particular dharmas. This is like th lotus and its stalk and so forth. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

If even becoming human is difficult to attain,
Why even speak of completing the view of the precious freedoms?

b) Not being steadfast, even if we have the freedoms and favors

Even though we may have attained all of these freedoms, by craving samsaric happiness ev

If we accomplish no benefit within this life,
We may not hear later even the words "the higher realms".
Cycling again and again on the wheel of samsara
For a long time we will have to stay in the lower realms.
Having no knowledge of what we should accept and reject,
We will certainly go upon a mistaken path
Wandering in samsara, without beginning or end.

If within this life, so good to obtain, we do not practice the beneficial holy Dharma, by the po karma we will be born in the lower realms. There we shall not so much as hear the words "h say nothing of going there. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

As for our behavior which is of such a kind,
If we shall not even gain a human body,
It goes without saying we cannot go to higher realms.
For if we shall not even gain a human body,
We shall do only evil, and there can be no good.

Now when there is a chance for excellent behavior,
If, even so, good actions are not what we perform,
What are you going to do when they have come for you
With the stupefying sufferings of the lower realms?

If we go to the lower realms, we shall not be liberated for a very long time. The same text sa

Even in the course of a thousand million kalpas

I will not even hear the words, "the higher realms."

c) The instruction to strive for the Dharma

An opportunity of liberation from the limitless depth of samsara is hard to find. So let us striv Dharma with all our hearts. That is the instruction.

Therefore, now when we still have the power to do so,
By auspicious conditions that accord with the proper path,
Relying on the inexhaustible wholesome dharmas
Gained by having gathered the two accumulations,
Let us pass beyond the city of samsara.

Keep in mind aging, becoming old and decrepit, and dying. Now while we still can, let us be the path of liberation. If we do whatever goodness we can, we shall surely come forth from Sutra
of the Vast Display says:

O monks, because death, aging and enfeeblement are non-existent, because by nourishing goodness, one's powers will be transformed, and because enlightenment will proliferate, stri accumulate merit and wisdom. For you the three cities of samsara will be emptied. The gat to the lower realms will be cut off. The stairway to the higher realms will be established. Th realm of liberation will be attained.

d) How we must work hard at this

When the freedoms and favors of knowing about and establishing such benefit and goodnes accomplished by a guide who is our spiritual friend, extreme situations do not manifest. Wh ship
has been attained in the middle of the fearful, limitless ocean of samsara:

If we do not cross the limitless ocean of samsara
Now at the time of having attained this precious ship,
Then how can we do it at another time
When painful waves of the kleshas are always utterly raging?

If we have a great ship which will serve our purpose, we should use it to cross the ocean. S having attained this ship of humanity, we should cross the great ocean of samsara, so fearfu whose beginning and end are not apparent. Because of wandering in constant birth, old age death,

samsaric situations are never bearable. Shantideva says in the Bodhicharyavatara:

Whoever with the support of this ship of human birth,
Can cross the great waters of the river of suffering,
  Since later such a ship may be difficult to find,
Would be wrong to sleep at this time, because of stupidity.

e) The suitability of this,

Because the freedoms and favors are so difficult to attain:

Therefore, quickly donning the armor of exertion
Clear the murk of mind and the events of mind,
And thus complete the path of spotless, luminous wisdom.
May the path of enlightenment be without obstacles.

When the turbulence of samsaric mind and mental events is pacified, the luminous wisdom of mind naturally rises. Becoming familiar with this is called the path of enlightenment. Try uninterruptedly day and night, abandoning sleep and tiredness. Just remain THERE. The P

All the complexities of mind and mental events
At the time when these are completely pacified
Arise as luminosity, the state of wisdom,
This is without conceptions and has no center or limit.

Here, "Mind," means exaggerated conceptions which support the three realms. By the expr subsequent analysis in terms of these there arise murky disturbances that obscure suchnes conceptions are completely pacified, we enter into wisdom that is completely non-conceptua Truths says:

Mind and mental contents are merely conceptualization,
Exaggerated phenomena, the three realms of samsara.

Samsaric mind correlates with the generalized conception of "this," when an object is first s
"That's an utpala lotus" is the mind's consciousness of such a first moment. Then, as we di various distinctions of that object, we make analytic demarcations of the contents of mind. Here the conceptions as, "this utpala lotus is blue in color, and round in shape. It has a blossom, star pistil."

The Center and Extremes says:

To see the object as "that" is consciousness.
Distinctions of that are objects of the mind.

The Abhidharmakosha says:

There are conception and analytic discernment and these may be fine and coarse.

All who are bound in such conception and analytical discernment, bound by such habitual pa mind and mental events, are blocked from the level of buddhahood. The Madhyamakavata

When all the dry firewood of knowable objects has been burned,
There is peace, the dharmakaya of the victorious ones.
Then there is no arising, and also no cessation.
Cessation of mind brings manifestation of the kayas.

When, within self-awareness wisdom, we become enmeshed in the net of the kleshas, beca confusion of grasping and fixation, that is called "samsaric mind," the dim and dismal cellar o
and analysis. Liberation from that is buddhahood. The enlightened object and perceiver are free attachment to the examination and analysis of grasping and fixation. The Praise of the Vajra of Mind, sa

If we are enmeshed within the net of kleshas,
"Mind" is that which is expressible by speech.
If we should be separated from the kleshas,
This is the very thing that is known as buddhahood.

The Abhisamayalankara says:

Having "big mind" is the jewel itself

Buddhahood is having "big mind," or the great wisdom. The Sutra on the Array of Qualities,

The mind of sentient beings is that of false conception.
However, the great wisdom is the mind of buddhahood.
Just like gold in mountains or in the banks of rivers,
Sometimes it is pure and sometimes it is not.

In mantrayana big mind and its big kleshas are said to be wisdom itself. It is like that:

The dimness that does not know that is purified of its blindness.

The unceasing desire of mind is stupidity. When we meditate, objects still appear within awa awareness of concept and analysis ceases. The Sutra on the Bases of Discipline says:

Within dhyana O monks, though the motion of mind has ceased, objects still appear within the sense-consciousnesses. Objects whirl with the motions of samsara.

But now they are like fleeting reflections in a still pond.

The Ascertainment of Proper Reasoning says:

Even when the inner self rests motionless,
Visual forms arise in the mind of the visual sense.

Within the senses, apparent objects are not conceptualized. The same text says:

This is taught because sense-awareness is not samsaric.

In brief, conceptualization and analysis of objects produced due to grasping and fixation are samsaric mind and its mental objects. Object and insight when grasping and fixation are co are kaya and wisdom. The Sutra of the Glorious Garland says:

Whenever there are distinctions of grasping and fixation, that is reprovable. Such conceptualization of objects is the mind of samsara. Whenever grasping and fixation do not exist, object and insight are the wisdom of liberation.

By that it is established.

f) The samsaric torments if we do not make an effort now.

A person who has the Dharma by the power of former goodness:

Whoever has the happy good fortune of the Dharma,
Becoming a vessel of that precious spotlessness,
Yet has no use for its cooling rain of Dharma-amrita,
Will be annihilated by the torments of samsara.
The holy rain of the cooling waters of wisdom
From the banks of clouds of benefit and great bliss Falls to cleanse the free and favored minds of beings.

Being a good vessel is like having the precious human body. When the rain of Dharma falls are not vessels who can hold it, we will only exhaust oneself in suffering in the torments of s Generation Born in an Iron House says:

Even though the free and favored vessel is gained,
Since no drops of Dharma are received within it,
We shall roast in Hellfire, so difficult to bear.
Long and excruciating pain will be our karma.

g) The teaching of the freedoms and favors, which support the Dharma.

Supported by the freedoms that we have, the natural arising of Dharma is like this:

Therefore joyfully practice the Dharma from your heart.

That is the instruction. The supreme teachings of the Buddha are the rain of Dharma. The f favors are its support. This rain naturally falls. The Arrangement of the Vessel says:

Kye! O child of a noble family, for those with the freedoms and favors, the great rain of perfe Dharma will fall. They will possess immeasurable benefits.

h) Why the freedoms and favors are difficult to obtain:

It is harder for us to gain a human birth
Than for a tortoise to thrust its head into a yoke
That is tossed about in the middle of the ocean.
That is what the teacher of Gods and men has said.

Then why even speak of a free and well favored body.
Let us be diligent in days that are to come.

Let us say that a turtle lives in an ocean for a hundred times a hundred years. Floating upon is a single yoke with a hole in it, blown by the wind so that it did not stay in one place for eve
It is very unlikely that the turtle's throat will be thrust into it. But obtaining a human body from wi lower realms of samsara is taught to be far more difficult. The Spiritual Letter says:

It is harder to gain a human birth and the Dharma,
From the state of having been an animal,
Than for a turtle to put its head into a yoke
While both of them are lost in the vastness of the ocean.
Therefore with these faculties of human beings
By practicing holy Dharma let us reach its fruition.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 4.20

This is the reason why the Bhagavan has taught
That attaining human birth is much more difficult
Than for a turtle to put its head into a yoke,
Tossed within the vastness of a limitless ocean.

As for the scripture they are speaking about, the Bunch of Flowers says:

It is difficult for the Buddha Bhagavats to enter into the world. But very much more difficult than that is attaining human birth. Let the reason for this be taught in an example. O Shariputra, let the great difficulty of the first be like an ocean. Within it let there be a yoke, having a single hole. Let there also be a decrepit turtle. In that great ocean the wind blows above and blows from below, and as it blows these things about, that decrepit turtle rises ou the ocean once in a hundred times a hundred years. The difficulty of becoming human agai after having fallen back is not equal to that of the throat of that decrepit turtle that rises once hundred times a hundred years quickly entering into the hole of that quickly moving yoke. F those who fall away like that, becoming human again is very much more difficult.

If even attaining the human body is so very difficult, why even speak of a body with the freed favors, and the view that realizes the Dharma. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 4.15

That a tathagata has actually arisen,
That we have faith, and have attained a human body,
And that, in addition, we can practice goodness;
When will what is so rare ever be gained again?

The Request of The One with the Jewel in the Crown says:

To see a guide is something very hard to find.
To hear the teachings, the Dharma of peace, is very hard.
It is very hard to be born as a free and favored person.
Discipline and faith are always hard to find.

B. Now there is the second division of the general meaning: delineating the nature of the fre

There are six sections:

1. The explanation of merely attaining a human body.

What is a "precious human body?"

a. Here is the explanation of the three divisions of those with a human body:

There are some who merely gain a human birth,
Some whose body is special, and some whose birth is precious.

b. What is said about the divisions:

Respectively these are persons who act improperly,
Because they have no knowledge of what is right and wrong.
Even if their powers are sound, their birth is common.
They are barbarians even in the central realm.

The Sutra of Precious Space says:

These are born in the human world because of former goodness, have senses that are completely sound, and always are born in a country where the Dharma is practiced. Howev they still do not know about karma and its ripening.

Many of them will depend on the path of what is not good. It may be said that these have become human beings, but they will only be the worse for it. That is the last time they will b because they will fall without limit into the lower realms of death.

2. The special human body

Those who do not apply the teachings are confused
They do not have proper faith about what is right and wrong.
Preoccupied with this life, distracted by its business,
Undisciplined and beguiled, neglecting what is to come,
With no interest in liberation, though they may hear the Dharma,
They do not have the best body, but only the middle kind.

Occasionally their minds are drawn to something wholesome,
But mostly their mental vision is blocked by evil deeds.
They only go through the motions, what good are they to anyone?
Whether they take the form of a householder or a monk,
Only because they are slightly above lower realms,
The Buddha has said that these have a special human body.

The Sutra of Precious Space says:

In the realm of sentient beings some do not dwell purely in the Dharma, even though they could, because their behavior mixes right and wrong, and they are preoccupied with worldly activities. Even if they are sincere, with undisciplined body, speech, and mind, they easily seduced. Falling into the three lower realms, they have the karma of remaining there However, since they have seen the sunlight of the Buddha's compassion, and have had see liberation for a long time, they are said to have the special human body.

Because their behavior mixes vice and virtue and they give only lip service to devotion, they protected from the lower realms. The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

Breaking their discipline, they go to the lower realms.
They are unprotected, no matter how great their learning.

The Nirvana Sutra says:

Kashyapa, the monk Devadatta had heard only the ordinary sutra vehicle of the burden of an elephant. Even though he grasped it, because of his non-virtue, he fell into the lower realms.

The Pair Sutra says:

Collection of Medicines, those sentient beings who wail so at the time of death are not among the ones who possess ripened karma of good deeds. If these are protected from ka who would not be?

Also it says there:

Though the Tathagata has arisen and been seen,
And though the striking of the gandi has been heard,
Though they have heard the teachings of the holy Dharma,
Which take us to the peace which is called nirvana,
Nevertheless they never acted on what they heard.
People such as these are later going to say:

I am a person with the mind of a perfect fool.
Having fallen under the power of bad companions,
By the desires which rose from confusion in my mind,
I produced the karma of many evil deeds.
By cultivating and going along with these desires
I have been a murderer of living beings.
By listening to the people who waste the goods of the Sangha
I had to know the unbearable fruit of doing that.

I am destroying stupas by my harmful thoughts
By malicious words I punish everyone, even my mother.
Regarding this human body that I formerly made Soon all my transgressions will be common knowledge.
My mind will then be summoned to the lowest Hells.
The births I see ahead are more than I can bear.

3. The Precious Human Body.

As for the third part:

Supremely excellent beings, spotless vessels of Dharma
Apply their powers to what they hear and contemplate.
Having tamed themselves, they establish others in goodness.
They are immovable in their practice, like Mount Meru.
All these straightforward sages, like banners of saintliness,
Whether they are householders or renunciates,
Are taught by the Teacher to have the precious human body.

After having tamed oneself by hearing, contemplating, and the yogic resting of meditation, o exhorts others to goodness. That is the good gate of auspicious Dharma. Putting on the gr liberation
one flourishes the great banner of the sages. Calling this badge or clothing a victory banner figure of speech. When we urge others to work for the good, whether one lives in a house or is a ren called having the precious human body. The Sutra of Glorious Secret says:

Glorious Secret, though many have heard this, their hearing is obstructed. The meaning is made into conceptualized thoughts. But by meditating without kleshas, union is produced. If one also urges others to do this, this produces the essence of the freedoms an favors, the most sublimely beautiful thing in this world including its gods.

Also the Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, bodhisattvas say, "I practice the good," to exhort others to do the same.
Producing the essence of the freedoms and favors, this is praised by all the buddhas. I prai
I honor it.

As to how others should be exhorted the Vast Play says:

All compounded things will quickly be destroyed.
Like lightening in the sky they cannot last for long.
As your time too is therefore drawing ever nearer,
The time has come for true repentance to manifest.

The master Chandrakirti says:

First for a little while all the listeners

Will certainly be joined to small talk and the like.
When they become good vessels, after that occurs,
That is the time to relate to them with deeper words.

That is how it should be done. What it is to be such a vessel, generally depends on which o one is concerned with. In particular, as for the freedoms and favors in the unsurpassable ves

Space Sutra says:

The bodhisattva Akashagarbha asked, "Bhagavan, how should the freedoms and favors be viewed?"
This was the word of the Buddha: If it is divided by the discursive conceptions of mind, it is abused. This should be known as disturbing what one is engaged in. After discur conceptions of mind have been pacified, resting within the nature is known as freedom. As the favors, if the nature of mind, awareness, receives the wealth of what mind really is, that i being well-favored.

4. Why we should think about the Dharma.

Here is the reason why the person who has attained freedom and favor should think only of

Therefore, having heard the Dharma from holy beings,
To establish what is proper, abide within in the Dharma
Cultivate what is Dharmic, weed out what is not.
By practicing Dharma, we will abide within the Dharma.

That is the holy instruction. It is difficult to meet with a spiritual friend. To hear the Dharma able to practice it is difficult. Always to work hard is very difficult. When the Buddha was ex scriptures of the Vinaya at Vaishali, this was among the beneficial instructions given:

O monks, look on the beings of the lower realms. After going there, a material human form is very difficult to obtain. Look on bad teachers. Meeting a genuine spiritual friend is very difficult. Look on those who have broken their discipline, and how they have damaged discipline and liberation. By dwelling in the goodness of renunciation, Dharma, which alone good, will be practiced. Therefore, joyfully dwell in forests or monasteries, and go beyond th others.

5. The benefit of contemplating the reason

As for the benefit produced:

Procrastinate no longer. Cross over samsara's ocean.
Quickly go to the island of peace and pass beyond suffering.

The Request of Devaputra Sutra says:

Devaputra, Exerting ourselves in this alone, let us exert ourselves on the side of the good. We shall quickly hold the benefits of complete, perfect enlightenment.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Having well attended an excellent spiritual friend,
We ought to make the attempt to behave in a decent way.
This is what was taught by the utterly perfect Sage.
Attend on holy beings, for having attended them,
There are very many who will attain to peace.

6. If the inhabitants of this earth practice, there will be great benefit.

Beings who have been born as inhabitants of this earth, Jambuling, have established a porti goodness. But if, having become human beings, they do not train in goodness, here is wha

There is no one who has a mind more foolish
Than those becoming human who do not live in goodness.
Like coming back empty-handed from a land of jewels,
They make no use of the freedom and favor of their lives.
So let us act in the way of the Dharma, which leads to peace.

Though we may have attained these freedoms, if we do not practice the holy Dharma, then we have come to an island of precious jewels, we take none of them. Returning empty-han
The
Bodhicharyavatara says: 4.23

If even having attained the leisure of these freedoms
We do not train in what is wholesome and what is good,
There is no seduction that is greater than this.

There can be no fool who is greater than such a one.

After doing some insignificant bit of good, we shall not have complete attainment. But by ex themselves in the truth and goodness of Dharma alone, many attain the perfection of the Bu

Precious Mala says:

Thus it is that if we always practice the Dharma,
We shall be the masters of all within the world.
Whoever transforms what is noxious into goodness,
In a little while will surely reach the peak.

Because the good of Dharma will wake us from our sleep,
When we awake to goodness, we shall be purified.
Because the master within us is one who has no faults,
Even in dreams we shall see what is virtuous and wholesome.

If we have respectful devotion to our parents,
Attending on the principal persons of our family,
Committing ourselves with patience to virtuous behavior,
Speaking soft words of truth without any calumny,

By such discipline over a single lifetime,
The powers of a god have actually been attained.
Once again at this time, we shall produce those powers,
We gradually will establish the state of buddhahood.

After that:

As for the benefits, the fruition of such karma,
We shall act in accordance with what we have come to know.
If we are always performing benefits for beings,
This itself will be of benefit to us.

While we do so, for this reason, there will be the wholesome merits of the Dharma.

C. True examination of the nature of the environment and inhabitants of the phenomenal wo

There are six sections:

1. The teaching of mind, the root of Dharma.

When we undertake to find the natures of the environment and inhabitants of the phenomen are truly analyzed as being one:

Dharma depends on mind, and likewise mind in turn Depends on the freedoms and favors, so both depend on them.
Now these many conditions and causes have come together.
The thing we chiefly need to do is tame our minds.

All dharmas depend on mind. Mind depends on the free and well-favored human body. Thi interdependent arising of the environment and inhabitants of the phenomenal world. Mind is Dharma, the cause of all that is wholesome. As it is the companion necessary condition of t favors, we must study exactly how to tame the mind. The Spiritual Letter says:

The Bhagavan says we must tame our minds.
Mind is the root of Dharma, as is taught.

The All-creating King, says:

Without remainder all dharmas, however they appear,
Are emanated by mind, produced by the nature of mind.

The Lankavatara Sutra says:

Though reflections may appear within a mirror
They do not exist; and if we do not know
The appearances of mind as mere appearances,
The duality of conceptual thinking will arise.

With the seeds of habitual patterns, what is completely pure Arises as the variety of the mental contents.
Though for human beings these seem to be external,
Nevertheless the phenomenal world is only mind.

Also it says there, in regard to mind that does not possess true reality:

For mind that is disturbed by seeds of habitual patterns
Within the completely real, appearances will arise.

The appearances of mind are like those of a dream. Arising merely from the viewpoint of co mind, the variety of inner and outer arises as nothing at all. Such appearances arise from th confused habitual patterns. In reality they do not truly exist; but because they appear in the mind as if mind is the root of all dharmas. Though mountains and so forth appear externally projected from the vie mind, there are really no mountains. They exist only in the mind. If students have not guar before, they will not be able to guard it later. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

If this mind has not been guarded previously,
We will not be able to keep the disciplines.

Also it says there:

Aside from the kind of discipline that guards the mind,
What is the use of performing many disciplines?

Also it says there:

Thus it is that everything that frightens us,
And also all of our measureless pain and suffering,
Are only contents that have risen with the mind.
So it has been taught by the Speaker of Truth himself.

Who was it that produced the multitude of weapons
For the use of sentient beings within the Hells?
Who was it that produced this ground of blazing iron?
From where do these multitudes of blazing flames arise?

Every one of them, and all such things as these,
Are the mind of the evil-doer, so the Sage has said.
Thus it is that in the whole of this three-fold world,

There are no terrors that are other than the mind.

Also it says there: 5.5

If we ever succeed in taming the mind alone,
All these various things will likewise have been tamed.

Since all that is wholesome and unwholesome within samsara has arisen from mind, workin mind is the root of all Dharmas. The Sutra of the Clouds of the Three Jewels says:

When we have been instructed by our worldly mind,
This mind of ours will never see the actual mind.
All our virtuous karma and that which has no goodness
Are nothing but collections in that worldly mind.

Also it says there in the chapter called, "Guarding the light:"

Mind produces various karmas like a painter.
In manifesting all harm, it is like an external danger.
In producing all suffering, it is like an enemy.

The Dro Namje Sutra says

The ground is made of iron, blazing hot,
And blazing tongues of flame are everywhere.
The justice of the sharpened iron saws
Divides a single body into eight.
Such things as these arise as mental contents,
From evil acts of body, speech, or mind.

Mind is the root of all our joys and sorrows. Our only effort should be to tame the mind.

2. The Instruction that We Should Exert ourselves in Dharma Day and Night.

When we are wandering in samsara, as successive distractions occurring time and time aga what should be done:

Being terrified of death, within our endless births,

With deprivation and suffering falling on us like rain,
Arises from making no use of being free and well-favored.
The result is a state of becoming radically disturbed.

The higher manifestations, the dharmas of truth and goodness
Arise from thinking how hard it is to be free and favored,
Enjoy such an effort unstintingly, working day and night.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

Kye! O son of noble family, wherever beings wander within samsara, the body adorned with the freedoms and favors, so hard to obtain, is not produced, due to manifestati of thoughts. Because of the bad company of non-spiritual friends, there are samsaric phenomena, and we are tormented in flames of suffering. Nevertheless, by contemplating t freedoms and favors, we shall be completely liberated from samsara.

3. When the benefits have been explained, we arouse joy

Now there is the instruction to be joyful because of these benefits:

Here since it is useful to have seen a guide,
And it is of use to hear the Dharma and practice it,
Making use of this life and all its later fruits,
Arises from having gained this free and favored body.
Contemplate this again and again, with the highest joy.

Having seen how Buddhas of former times were completely liberated, having the benefit of b favored day and night on the present occasion, and collecting the seeds of a later liberation-
have,
if we are among the fortunate. All this arises from contemplating the freedoms and favors, w
to obtain. The Closely Placed Mindfulness says:

Ananda, how should the arising of what has been well seen and well heard by you from having contemplated the freedoms and favors be viewed? It is what establishes the happine beings, and whatever good dharmas there may be. That is how it should be viewed.

Therefore, let us meditate with heartfelt joy on having attained these freedoms.

4. How we can attain superhuman goodness

Now, moreover there is the explanation of how superhuman goodness is to be established:

Since having attained the deathless level of amrita
By the Lord of this world of beings, including the gods,
And his sons among the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas,
Arose from having attained the precious human body,
The freedoms and favors are praised as better than being a god.
Therefore, rejoice in having attained this human body.

When the Sage, the Bhagavan, attained enlightenment, he became the chief of the human b Jambuling. Therefore, he was called better than the gods. The Sutra of Complete Enlighter

Enlightenment in the realm of the gods produces an exclusive pride, and truth is not comple realized. It is seen only as a human being, for whom the freedoms and favors are complete Therefore, to the place of those who dress in yellow and white.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:
[@@@]
This body, which is better than the body of a god...

5. Praise of the freedoms and favors, the support of all the vehicles

The level of wisdom, that sees the truth without conception
Is easy to gain among gods and men as a human being.
Even the vajra vehicle, profoundest heart of the path,
Is easily gained as the fruit of attaining a human body.
It is taught that among the foundations of the Dharma,
Within both the greater and the lesser vehicles,
The free and well favored human body is best of all.

The Abhidharmakosha says:

Thirdly, nothing higher than this is seen:
Within the valley of sadness of human beings
So that they might see its end this was composed.

Also the suchness of the secret mantra is quickly established with the support of human birt Tantra of Exhausting the Four Elements says:

This is the wondrously risen king of secret mantra.
If human beings exert themselves in gaining it,
Accomplishment occurs within this very life.
Why even speak of the siddhis of any other yogas?

Therefore, as the support of all the vehicles, the freedoms and favors have been praised.

6. Meditating on how difficult these are to obtain.

To take this difficulty of obtaining a human body as an object of meditation, sit on a comforta
Take refuge and arouse bodhicitta. Then we visualize our own bodies, adorned with the fre

As a poor man who has found a gem of the highest value,
Fearful and anxious that it was nothing but a dream,
Contemplate the freedoms and favors with joyful longing,
Since this will establish the holy benefits of the Dharma.

Like a poor man who finds the finest of gems, let us rejoice in having obtained these freedo favors. This is a Dharma that should be practiced exclusively. Thinking, "If only this is not a
are afraid and terrified. Since we have attained it, meditating in heartfelt joy, let us dedicate it to ultimate benefit of sentient beings. The Discrimination of Scripture says:

Maudgala, these freedoms alone should be contemplated. Remember them with joy.

D. The fourth section of the general meaning: Dedicating the Merit.

Now there is the dedication of the merit of having taught the freedoms and favors to sentien

The futile agitation of beings is pacified,
By the precious amrita of this auspicious news.
Going into sweet solitude of pleasant forest retreats,
May Mind, worn out within this thicket of the kleshas,

Be freed this very day from all its weariness.

By looking at this explanation of the holy amrita of peace, adorned with a continuous stream flowers of truth, may all beings, exhausted by the agitations of this life, eliminate them. In a joyful life, in the peaceful solitude of meditation, may their minds, long wearied by samsara, be released weariness.
This is the instruction on the particular topic of easing weariness. May the meaning of the w showing samsara and its sadness be instantly taken to heart. There is also a dedication wri completing the chapter. May the further chapters also be known in that way:

In peaceful forests, caves, and joyful valleys of herbs,
Dancing with moving flowers, to the rush of waterfalls,
May this mind, which has been so long in complete exhaustion.
Producing the holy benefit of the freedoms and favors,
Come to rest in unmoving equality/equanimity.

May no beings be seen who are not tamed by that.
With pacification of kleshas and the seven noble riches
After leaving behind this body and this life,
May we reach the primordial level--the King of Mind.

II: The Impermanence of Life

There are five sections.

A. The brief teaching.
B. The extended explanation.
C. The instruction that we should exert ourselves.
D. The concluding summary.
E. The dedication of merit.

A. The brief teaching.

Even though the freedoms, so difficult to obtain, have been obtained, since our minds are no are instructed that our nature is such that we need to exert ourselves:

Even if this hard-won freedom has been gained,
These destructible dharmas will not last for even an instant.
If they are examined, they are without an essence.
They are no more to be trusted than bubbles floating on water;
So contemplate day and night the certainty of death.

Even if the freedoms and favors are obtained, they cannot be permanent. They have no hea banana tree and, will not bear analysis. Like bubbles on water, they appear for only a mome one of their main and subsidiary characteristics is destroyed. On examination, they are necessa separable from reality. The Shrine of Telling the Reason Why says:

Kye ma! How impermanent are all compounded things!
Anything that is born is going to be destroyed.
Since having once been born, all will be destroyed,
"Them as dies quickly will be the lucky ones!"

They are like starry lamps that are clouded-over with mist,
Ephemeral things like bubbles on water or drops of dew,
Dreamily insubstantial, like lightning in the clouds.
All compounded things are taught to be that way.

B. The extended explanation,

1. Grasping the importance of the impermanence of the human body.

This essenceless body is impure and changeable. Its individual qualities are separable and it continues. Here is the instruction that those inclined to material desires should absorb the night in contemplating impermanence:

This body, the principal source of the rising of the kleshas,
Is the source of all suffering and unhappiness of the mind.
Though decked in garments and ornaments, flower garlands and such,
And worshipped with many offerings of food and drink,
In the end we must separate and part from it.
Because it is impermanent and destructible,
This body will be food for foxes, vultures, and jackals.

Abandon all thoughts that it is important, lasting, or pure.
Rather, from now on, let us practice the holy Dharma.

Grasping our alleged bodies as a permanent I and self, we offer them food and clothing, ten with a level of ceremony befitting our ideas. Though we hardly want to talk about it, sorrowf instead by reversing our ministrations to harm. Shantideva says:

This body of ours is like a momentary reflection.

The time when we will be taken by the Lord of Death comes without warning. When the mir from the body, we cannot be with the body any more. It will be food for charnel birds, dogs, vultures.
To count such a thing as paramount and even think that we should do evil deeds for its sake
as vanity. Really we are something like a servant indentured to the body's happiness. Why is
of being rewarded with food and clothing? What is worth exertion day and night is the Dharma Instructions to the King says:

O great king, these have an essence like a great mountain, solid and firm in all the four directions. This mountain is indestructible, not to be split, very hard, undamageable. Its four sides, dense and massive, touch the sky and return again to the earth. Grass, trees with tru branches, and all their leaves, living things, and spirits accumulate there, like flour on a millstone.
To escape it by speed, remove it by force, buy it off, or get rid of it with substances, mantras, and medicinal herbs is no easy task.
O great king, that is what these four great terrors are like. One cannot escape them by speed, remove them by force, buy them off. To get rid of them with substances, mantras and medicinal herbs is no easy task.
What are these four? They are old age, sickness, death, and deterioration.
O great king, old age comes to conquer youth. Illness comes to conquer health.
Deterioration comes to conquer all our good qualities. Death comes to conquer life itself. O cannot escape them by speed, remove them by force, or buy them off. To get rid of them w substances, mantras, and medicinal herbs is no easy task.
O great king, it is like this. The king of beasts, the lion, dwells among the beasts. He preys on the beasts. He rules as he wishes. The beasts are powerless against his mighty ja O great king, it is like this. There is no provision against the gleaming staff of the Lord of Death, there is no protector, no refuge, no friendly forces, no friends and relatives. Our jo will divide and come apart. Our flesh and blood will dry up. Our bodies will be racked by sickness. We shall rage with thirst. Our arms and legs will convulse. We will not be able to act. We will have no strength. Our bodies will be covered in saliva, mucus, urine, and vomi Our powers of vision, hearing, smelling, tasting, touch, and thought will fade away. We shal vomit. Our voices will crack and wheeze. Our medicines will be given up as useless. All ou medicine, food, and drink will be thrown away. Our possessions will go to others. We shall in our beds for the last time. We shall subside into the beginningless round of birth, old age death. We shall have no body. We shall be terrified by the Lord of Death. Our powers of acting will be gone. Our breathing will stop. Our mouths and noses will gape. Our teeth wil be exposed. They will demand, "Give us our inheritance." Our karma will take over, and we shall pass into the control of samsaric existence. Alone without a second, we shall be frienc We shall leave this world. We shall be outside the world. We shall be borne up in the grea change of abode which is death. We shall dwell in the great darkness. We shall fall over th great precipice. We shall be crowded off the edge of the world. We shall be cast into the gr wilderness. The great ocean will carry us away. Our karmic energy will pass away. We sha go to ugly places. We shall enter the great battle. We shall be seized by the great harm. W shall die away into space. Our fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, sons, and daughters will gather round. Our breathing will stop. They will say that our property and clothes should be handed out. Oh no! our fathers will say. Oh no! our mothers will say. Oh no! our children w say. Fear will overwhelm us. Generosity, penance, and Dharma will be our only friends. There will be no refuge but Dharma. There will be no other protector. There will be no othe friendly forces.

O great king, at this time, at this moment, the Dharma will be an island, a dwelling, a protector, a teacher. O great king, though looking like we are asleep in our beds, we shall experience appearances of the life to come. If we are going to go to the lower realms, terrif premonitions of those realms will arise. What refuge will there be then but Dharma?
O great king, You should fully guard such a body. But no matter how perfectly you look after it, its time of death will come. Intimates having all virtues, with whom we have bee satisfied by much pure food and drink and so on, parents and children, will be there for the la time. The medicines will be thrown away. When everything is gone, we will be unhappy. S will be the time of death.

O great king, your body will be repeatedly washed and fumigated with incense. It will be covered with fragrant flowers and, no doubt, pleasantly perfumed aromas will arise.
O great king, you will be dressed in fine clothes of Varanasi cotton and silk, and when this has been done for the last time, it will be like going to a defiled, stinking place, as a serv who has to go alone, and so the time of death will come.
O great king, though you have enjoyed your various desirable possessions, abandoning them all, as if they did not satisfy your desires, the time of death will come.

O great king, within your house incense, flowers, silk hangings, seats, and various cloths will be collected. With the pillows on the left and right, your bed will be taken away to the great charnel ground full of crows, foxes, and nauseating human corpses. Doubtless yo motionless body will lie upon the ground.
O great king, as you are thus carried on the backs of your elephants, horses, and so on, different kinds of music will be heard and pleasantly enjoyed. Various parasols, victory banners, and so forth will be raised aloft. The new king, minister, and friends and relatives v make pleasant little speeches, praising you and going to look at you. The bed, formerly not raised very far, after you have died in it will be raised high by four pallbearers, lifted by your brothers and so forth. After servants, compelled by painful beatings bring it out by the south gate of the city, in a solitary wild place it will be put down on the earth. You will be eaten by crows, vultures, foxes, and so forth. Your bones will be burned by fire, thrown into water, or put on the ground, whichever it may be. They will be dispersed by wind, sun, and rain, and strewn in all directions. They will rot.
O great king, all composite things are impermanent. Do not rely on them.

This extensive teaching should be taken to heart and remembered. Persons knowing that th of this life, no matter what they are, are empty, should try to exert themselves solely in pract

Dharma, day and night.

2. To attain even the realm of Bhrama and so forth is impermanent.

Those who are the true foundation of wealth on the three levels Gods like Bhrama Shiva, Surya, and Ishvara,
Though they shine in the radiant gleam of fame and fortune, Have no chance to vanquish th of the Lord of Death
Even if they stay in samadhi for a kalpa,
When their karma has been exhausted, that is their time of death.
Gods as well as asuras, siddhas, and sorcerers,
However many villeins and vassals there may be Throughout their endless births are terrified by death.

Bhrama, Maheshvara, Vishnu, Indra, the four great world-protecting kings, and so forth fill th with great rays of light, brighter than a thousand suns. They are more splendid than a mour fame of their merits fills the world. They are the highest beings of the three worlds, below th

the earth, and above the earth. But, though they are adorned with all this real wealth, they still h
The Dulwa Lung says:

O monks, look on this wealth as being essenceless and subject to deterioration. If the retinue mindful of my teachings were transferred into the inconceivable life and insatiable powers of Bhrama, Indra, the world protectors and so forth, they would be brought down to t lower realms.

Also it says there:

Bhrama the pure one, wrathful Indra, and thousand-eyed Surya,
As well as desireless Vishnu, are impermanent, and passing.
The display of the sun and moon is only for a moment.
The continents of the world, are seen to have been emptied.

The gods of the four dhyanas, and the other gods, the asuras, siddhas who have accomplish and all holders of vidya mantra still die. The same text says:

The gods who accomplish the dhyanas, as well as the kinnaras And ascetic sages who are blaze with splendor,
Are impermanent, though they may live for a long time or a kalpa.
As for conditioned humans, whose bodies are like foam,
No need to discuss their freedom from individual destruction?

The lords of the four continents, the universal monarchs, kings, ministers, and all kinds of or people, monastic renunciates, brahmins, householders and so on, none of them escape dea

Telling the Reason Why says:

Kings possessing the seven precious treasures,
Great noble lords and royal ministers
Monks and brahmins, householders and such,
All of these beings are impermanent.
They are like beings experienced in a dream.

3. There is impermanence because change is the nature of things.

Because there is transference and change, there is impermanence:

Within the impermanent play of the rain-clouds of this life,
In garlands of flashing lightning, dances the Lord of Death.
Day and night, the falling rain of the changing seasons
Drowns whatever sprouts may grow within the three levels.

Ornamented by the essence of the freedom and favors, the dark summer cloud-banks of this while, naturally wreathed in quivering lightning, the Lord of Death performs his dance. Day a pausing for an instant, the rain of immanent death falls constantly, flooding out and drowning
of sentient beings dwelling within the three worlds. The Vast Play says:

The three worlds' impermanence is like the clouds of autumn.
The birth and death of beings has the aspect of a dance.
The lives of beings vanish like lightning into space.
Like waterfalls cascading down a precipitous mountain,
As quickly as the water comes it falls away.

4. The impermanence of the Vessel and Essence

The vessel is the world, which has long been stable and motionless. The accompanying ess contents supported by it is taught to be moving beings.

When the vessel and contents of this impermanent world,
With all its various cycles of creation and destruction,
Is destroyed seven times by fire and once by water,
And blown away like dust by the force of the raging wind,
Even Mount Meru, with its four slopes of precious substance,
Surrounded by the four oceans and the four continents,
Encircled by mountain ranges and the ramparts of the world,
Will not endure when all is turned to a single space.
Thinking that this time must certainly come to pass,
Therefore, let us practice the Dharma from our hearts.

The external vessel and contents are destructible. The inner vessel and contents too are ta impermanent.

In the beginning of the first kalpa, in the accommodating sky, the empty space of nothing wh pranavajra was born from a crossed vajra, indestructible. Above it was born the mandala of vajra. There also on the little island which is this world, was the supreme mountain of precio Mount Meru. The east was made of crystal, the south of yellow beryl, the west of ruby, the n Reaching to the edges of the surrounding water, with seven lakes between them are Nyashi the seven mountain ranges, surrounded by the expanse of the outer ocean.

In the outer ocean, in the east is the continent Purvavideha. In the south is Jambudvipa, in t Aparagodaniya, in the north Uttarakuru.
On Mount Meru, are four groves, and to the north-east, completely enclosed in trees, is the a good house, ornamented by caverns like a city, with agreeable mountains at the edge. Fron horizon, as far as the other surrounding iron mountains, is the vessel, the world, ornamente moon.

Supported within it is the essence, sentient beings. The luminous gods are separated from four main continents and eight sub-continents beside them. These sub-continents are Deha and Upachamara, Satha and Uttaramantrina, Kurava and Kaurava.
Also there are the appearances produced by lower karma, the individual realms of lower bei animal, hungry ghost, and Hell realms. In the dhatu of the animals the great ocean is the ro
the hungry ghosts' royal capital city is their chief place. Hell beings have the hot Hells and snow

Hells. Under them all, like a yellow rose with eight joined petals, are the neighboring Hells, o
the four directions of the Avici or Unremitting Hell, which is the place at the root. The widely scattere
the hungry ghosts wandering in space, and the ephemeral human realm are also there.
The six kinds of kama divinities of the desire realm, kama deva shatkula, are halfway up mo rising place of the sun, moon, stars, and planets. First there are the four, great, noble kings is the heaven of the thirty-three. Above them with their sky palaces dwelling like the stars and pla there are the desire realm deity heavens of the strifeless, Yama; joyful, Tushita; Delighting in Ema Nirmanarata;
and Mastery over Transformation, Paranirmita.
In holes in the rocks of Mount Meru dwell the asuras. In the edges of the water Rahu, and i Garland of Stars, a city at foot of Mount Meru, is the asura king Kanto Mali.

In the edges of earth are nicely textured slopes where desire gods contend in wealth and en
the four realms of the desire gods, in the Bhrama realms of the first dhyana are the stratum Abhasvara; Priests who chant before Bhrama Bhramapurohita; and Great Bhrama, Mahabh
In the space above is the heaven of Mastery over the Emanations of Others, Para-nimitta-va sixth of the twenty-eight desire heavens) whose thrones reach upward four pagtse.
The second dhyana has the heavens of Lesser Radiance, Parittabha; Immeasurable Radiar and radiance, Praabhasvara.
The third has Lesser Virtue, Parittashubha; Immeasurable Virtue, Apramanashubha; and Va Shubhakritsna.
The fourth has Cloudless; Increasing Merit, Punyaprasava; and the great fruition born of me
Then there are the five Pure Abodes, Pañcashuddhanivaasa. Here the three places of indiv are the Slightest, Avriha; Painless, Atapa; and Attractive Sudrisha. The other heavens of th
are extreme Insight, Sudarshana, and the Highest, Akanishta. These five heavens are one abo
The four formless realms are limitless space, Akashanabtyayatana, limitless consciousness nothing whatsoever, Akimchanabtyayatana and neither perception nor non-perception, naiv These peaks of samsara, depend on former attainment of the formless samadhis. They are where one dies. Thus, uniting the aspects of vessel and essence, as explained, this is called
of four continents.
A thousand of these, likewise surrounded by iron mountains as high as the place of the thirt is called a first thousand-fold world realm.
A thousand such realms, with surrounding mountains as high as the Para-nimitta-vashvartin called a middle-thousand world realm.
A thousand of those, with surrounding mountains as high as the special first dhyana realm, i great three thousand fold world realm. In each of these worlds is shown a body like that of nirmanakaya, performing the twelve deeds of a buddha that are not performed before or afte appearance,
these are called worlds of those to be tamed.
Other than that in the ten directions, are measureless other words, round, semi-circular, squ other shapes, pervading to the limits of space. They also have immeasurable kinds of senti below, and on the same level.
Generally, in this universe of suffering, the times of arising, enduring, destruction, and vacui
The first is the time of well-arising. Then there is the present time of well-remaining, from th
the coming of the tathagata Nampar Zikpa when all beings attain immeasurable lives to when S to the time when beings have lives of ten years. From the long ago time of the beginning liv
by

200 years each. Then when they reach 100, they increase by one from 11 to 80,000 after M
After 100, they diminish by 1, until reaching 10 years of life.
There are 80 such cycles of increase and decrease, 18 in the present kalpa; Among these, arise. Then from 200 years lives increase by one to measureless. When they go a little low buddha called "Devoted" comes," all the deeds, lives and assembled retinues of former buddhas are
and the same deeds and lives and assemblies arise. Beings not tamed by the former buddhas a
of the three jewels is heard. This continues until even beings who had sundered the basis of d completely slandered virtue are liberated from samsara, and by the power vows to do so, th accomplished. Until their nirvana the holy Dharma also remains that long.

The completely perfect third-thousand-fold universe's sentient beings, however many they w established in liberation. After their tenth year of life, that kalpa is entirely burned seven tim destroying fire, to ashes. The fire lasts a day. Some sutras say seven days. Some say that one sun havin arises. In reality 700 times ten million suns will occur and, the universe will be annihilated a ashes will be washed away by water, scattered by wind, and finally, having become a single like the former situation where nothing had yet been born. Know all dharmas to be like that.
The
Like this story of how the outer vessel and essence will be destroyed, the inner body too sho viewed. Mind becomes the single first nature of mind. From within that the wind of ignoranc conceptualization are born. Because of that, by the karma of dwelling in samsara, by the co karma
establishing the nature of water, from the semen and blood of the father and mother, the bo
the eyes are the sun and moon, whose inner essential natures are white and red. The twelve a
are the four continents and eight sub-continents. The eight consciousnesses are the seven mou horizon, making eight altogether.

Supported by body, speech, and mind are the three main nadis, roma and kyangma to the le and the central channel. With the support of the three gates, the three poisons, and the thre are the three realms. The nadis petals which are the five or six chakras are the five or six buddha fa
There are many distinct but similar realms, and within all these thousand-fold world systems many joys and sorrows and so forth. Gathered together, they separate. Born, they die. Co destroyed.

When the time of death comes, the four external elements within which dwell the four inner e destroyed seven times by fire and once by water, eight altogether. Then the inner elements secret
elements, primordial luminosity, and everything becomes a single space.
When the four elements of the body have been gathered together, the emptying of prana na are the seven destructions by fire. Transmigration of life is the one destruction by water. Ce breath is the final scattering by wind. The individual body disperses, finally becoming nothing at all like before the body was born. The Later Tantra of Vast Wisdom: says:

Ripened by the elements of air and water and fire,
The world of the body is engendered as the vessel.
Nadi and prana and the essence of the elements,
Existing as the pure nature of the four great elements,
Then abide in the form of changeless, radiant light.

Dwelling in space, if we transfer into purity,
All the different elements, nadi, prana, and essences,
That is like the world-destruction by seven fires.
The dissolving of the elements is the one destruction by water.
Cessation of coarse and subtle is the scattering by wind.
Entering into the light is the realm of spaciousness.

Then there is the primordial lord, enlightenment,
This is reaching the final goal of non-confusion.

We should examine further the subsiding of the worlds of individual sentient beings. The Sp Letter says:

For seven days the mass of the earth, as well as the oceans,
Will blaze, and all these beings will be burned away.
If visible bodies all will be reduced to ashes,
Why even speak of those which are invisible.

That is how we should think about it.

5. Impermanence of the teachings of how the victorious ones and their sons attain nirvana.

Even the teachers who come into these worlds, the many tathagatas and their retinues, go b suffering to nirvana. In considering how their teaching declines, there is the further teaching lives
are impermanent:

Even the leaders of the world, the lord buddha sages,
Attended by their retinues of buddha sons,
Pratyekabuddhas and hosts of shravakas,
As within the clear sky the always-existing moon
Is encircled by its attending garland of stars and planets;
Though these shine with brilliance in their luminosity,
They also teach impermanence by passing into nirvana.
See too how the measureless sun of the precious teachings
Sets ever more from generation to generation.
Then why should our bodies, like plantain trees without a heart,
Or like a phantom castle, fail to be destroyed.

Teachers came to this world of suffering. Their forms were seen. Vipashyi, Ratnach_da, Vi Krakucchanda, Karakamuni, Dipamkara, and Shakyamuni, like the full moon rising on an au blazed with the brilliance of the major and minor marks. They were surrounded by hosts of s retinue, shravakas, bodhisattvas, pure ones, world protectors, and so on. Their bodies blazed with s speech was brilliant, and without meaningless chatter. Their spotless minds shone with their illumin were as firm as vajra, having passed beyond suffering.
Other teachers, gradually declining, depend on the supreme being of the Shakyas. If all of t impermanent, how will my body, as insubstantial as a bubble, not be impermanent. The Shr Impermanence says:

Ablaze with a thousand marks is the body of sugatagarbha.
If this is impermanent, established with merit a hundred times over,
Then, as unreliable as a breaking bubble,
How can, this, my body, not certainly be destroyed?
The one who is the benefit of sentient beings,

The Victorious One, the Sugata, passes like the sun,
The moon, the treasure of holy Dharma, is seen to set.
As for our goods, our retinues, and our enjoyments,
We should be ready to know that they are impermanent.

6. We are impermanent because our lives never wax but always wane.

If even a vajra-like body is impermanent, why depend on this body, as insubstantial as a pla
That is the instruction:

Therefore, though it is certain that we are going to die,
Of where and when and how there is no certainty.
Our life-span never waxing, is always on the wane,
Conditions of death are many, and those of living few,
Life has no time to waste, so keep right to the point.
From today onwards, what makes sense is to work with Dharma.

Just by being born, death is certain. The White Lotus of Holy Dharma says:

Wherever there is birth, death will be there too.
Wherever there is gathering, there is dissolution.

Though time is beginningless, everyone has died. The Good Marks Sutra says:

Who was ever known who might not die tomorrow?
Therefore this very day we should exert ourselves.
The Lord of Death and his considerable tribe,
Neither of the two, are any friends of ours.

Anywhere in the world, death is inevitable. Walking, standing, or whatever we are doing, we ready, thinking, "Is it today that I will die?" The Sutra of the Good Army says:

Mountains or steep ravines, defiles or precipices,
At home or in the streets, or on the bank of a river.
Somewhere upon the earth will be my last abode.
This is something that is not to be divulged.
This completely removes my enjoyment of the world.

Because of conditions, the time of death too is uncertain. The scriptures say:

Some people die from choking on their food.
Others die from taking their medicines.
Why even say that beings have different conditions?
There is no certainty of the time of death.

Our life-spans never increase, but always grow shorter. Death is certain. The News of Impe
says:

Like the rock of a pool that was cut by falling water,
There is no increase, but always only decrease.
Since all of us must enter on the path of death,
Who can rely upon this incidental life.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Day as well as night it never stays at all.
This life eternally fleeting is getting ever-shorter Having gotten shorter, it will not then increase.
Why would one like me not be going to die?

Few conditions are required for death other than birth in a womb. Death is certain. The New Impermanence, says:

Though the conditions of death are a numerous multitude,
The conditions of our being born are very few.
Therefore since it is certain that we shall quickly die,
Let us keep the holy Dharma in our hearts.

7. How what seems external is inner impermanence

One's own mind is even more mortal than an ancient ruined city:

Sentient beings, like a bower gathered from the four elements
Are ornamented with moving thoughts like people inside.
Composite, their dharmas arise from conditions and are destroyed.
Since all is impermanent, like an ancient city,

Let us quickly perform the actions of holy Dharma.

That is the exhortation. Ruined cities that are now abandoned were once well-constructed a many beings. Later they became vacant. Look at this life as being like that. Kye ma'o! Wh former youth and wealth of these samsaric beings? Only the people's names remain. Their destroyed, bones are all that is left of these beings who once emanated their various discurs Like this, our bodies, these bowers collected from the four elements, are now beautiful with ornaments. What people will later call by our names is our bones. "That's how it is," we sho

our hearts. The Spiritual Letter says:

As we near the finish of the body, we glimpse its bleak end. At last its foul essence is not th at all. It is worn out, decomposes, and is completely destroyed. Know that its dharmas will asunder.

8. An example of impermanence

Like being instantly killed in a dream in which we have enjoyed celestial bliss for a long time time:

As the flame of a lamp that has been caught in a sandstorm
Flickers and is not steady, even for a moment,
When suddenly we are struck by the fierce conditions of death,
We shall not endure, but certainly will die.
Therefore, practice the holy Dharma right away.

A lamp may endure a soft breeze rising from the hearth, but is quickly blown out when a stro arises. Our lives, like such a flickering lamp, are agitated by the incessant, soft wind of day
When we have grown old, death gives no respite, and as if by a fierce wind, we will be quickly blown a conditions of illness or harm. Think about this being certain. The Letter to Students says:

Like the tongue of flame of a lamp,
Blown away by a mighty wind
This tiny moment of life,
Has no reliance at all.

9. All is impermanent and must be left behind.

Moreover, as for thinking of impermanence; because, having left everything behind, we mus

Attendants, pleasures, friends and relatives,
Youth and beauty, power and social rank--
We have to leave alone, abandoning them all,
Followed by black and white karma, until they both are emptied.
Then there is no refuge other than the Dharma.
Why should we not exert ourselves to go beyond them?

At the time of death, none of the appearances of this life will be of any use to us. Only the D be our refuge from the execution of the karma of our virtue and vice. About this the Sutra of
the King says:

The time approaches when the king will go,
Your cherished pleasures, friends and relatives
Will not follow where you must go then.
As for kings, wherever they may go,
Karma follows after like a shadow.

The Sutra requested by Shridatta , says

By karmic confusion we are made to seek enjoyments
We are also distracted by our children and spouses.
By that we shall experience suffering alone.
They will do us no good at our appointed time.
Our beloved parents, siblings, children, and spouses,
Servants, wealth, and crowds of friends and relatives,
Will not travel with us when we go to death.
Karma will be an only child at that time.

At that time those who have gathered powerful bad karma will seem to be surrounded by tho they have killed, and the minions of the Lord of Death will seem to lead them away with a no
Bodhicharyavatara says:

If this is the day when a man is being led
To a place where he will have a limb cut off,
With dry mouth, blood-shot eyes, and such,
He seems quite otherwise than he was formerly.

When the utterly terrifying messengers of the Lord of Death
Having a form of flesh, seize us bodily.
How badly will we be stricken with the illness of great fear?
What need is there to say how terrible that will be?

Who is the sahdu that can be our guardian
One who is able to guard us from such frights as these, Our flesh will crawl with panic, and v eyes,
We shall search for protectors in the four directions.

Having seen that in the four directions there are none,
We shall be enveloped in complete despair.

Then it will be too late to think about Dharma. It will be like criminals looking for a refuge as given into the hands of their executioners. From now on we had better remember that. The

Even if we truly abandon laziness,
Then it is too late. Then what could we do?
After the Lord of Death has suddenly appeared,
We shall think, "Oh no, all is surely lost."

Thus:

The three jewels and the virtue of Dharma are a refuge
For those who have supplicated for this spotless gift.
For those besides such beings, though they have appropriate virtue,
Even our father and mother will be no refuge to us,
Nor will a host of friends, and wealth and beautiful youth.
All such refuges will sink into samsara.

We should give over our bodies joyfully to the buddhas,
And likewise entrust to them our lives and our enjoyments.
Other than the three jewels, there is no refuge at all

On which we can rely while we are sentient beings.

10. The impermanence of the three times

Samsaric existence and the being of ourselves and hosts of others are all more impermanen

Think of the existence of former and later worlds.
Countless former generations have passed away.
Also most of the beings of the present world
Certainly will not last another hundred years.
Those of the future will follow in a similar way.
Young and old are equal in their lot of passing away.
Because we too will not transcend this common nature,
Thinking that death is certain, let us practice Dharma.

Our existence was primordially good and pure, but think of the other spheres of apparent be we will later transmigrate. Look and see whether the people who lived a hundred years ago

We who are now human beings a hundred years from now will be only names. The Shrine c Why says:

A person who just for a night
Entered into a womb,
Would suffer tremendous harm.
Such going is irreversible.
In the morning one would see
Many different beings.
By evening some would be gone.
Of the many one would see later
The next morning more would be gone.
Numerous men and women
Die even in their youth.
Why are the young so cheerful,
So confident they will thrive?
Some will die in the womb.
Some the day they are born.
Some will be snatched away,
In unexpected departures.

Some will die old, some young
But one by one they will go,
Like fruit that ripens and falls.

11. The impermanence of the three levels
Moreover:

Within the three levels from Hell up to the peak of samsara,
There is no liberation from the Lord of Death.
All is impermanent, changing, and essenceless.
Nothing stable, and things roll along like a wagon wheel.
Particularly the human world has many afflictions.
Being a place of harm by sickness and by döns,
By fires and falls and weapons; by poison and wild beasts.
By kings and enemies, by robbers and the like,
We will be ravished of life and our wealth will be destroyed.

There are no beings anywhere in the six realms, for whom death does not establish itself. W recall that none of the six kinds of beings in the three levels transcend death. The Sutra on are the
Bases of Discipline says:

Someone who is born without death being established
Such a one does not exist within this world.
Nor are there any in the air or in the oceans.
There are none who live among the tallest mountains.

When we die, as soon as we lose our bodies, this mind by its former karma undergoes roun samsaric existence in many worlds. The Vast Play says:

Beings, by of the power of samsaric ignorance,
In divine and human paths, and those of the lower realms,
Are tumbled in samsara as five kinds of ignorant beings .
For example, as a pot is turned upon a wheel.

Baited with fine and pleasant forms and ravishing sounds,
Sweet fragrances, delicious tastes, and blissful touch,
The snare of evil times always traps these beings

For example, like a monkey snared in a hunter's net.

Many in the human realm are afflicted with leprosy, contagion, disorders of prana and bile, a diseases. There are many injuries from birds, rakshasas, dakinis, geks and döns. Kings, en dissipation of the skandhas, and so forth end hundreds of lives. These contend with the Lor
our body and life. Since we die without respite, we should try to practice the holy Dharma. The Precious Qualities says:

With the many harmful spirits and diseases of the world,
Peace is a truly kind and beneficial gift.

12. Instantaneous Impermanence

Not only do we die of such afflictions, but even if we have no afflictions, the life of sentient b passing away:

Even with no afflictions, the life of beings is passing.
Day and night, with the passing of every moment or instant,
It is always approaching the land of the Lord of Death.
As over waterfalls, water flows into the ocean,
Or far to the west the sun declines until it sets.

Even though there are lives where someone can say, "I have not been harmed by incidental and though there are teachings that extend life by appropriate food and medicines and so fo is of no use--we have to enter death. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Though seemingly today, I am without any illness,
Even if I have food and am without affliction
This life is still no more than an illusory instant,
This body is no more than a momentary reflection.

About its not lasting for even a moment, the Pinnacle of Precious Gathering says:

It was said by Subhuti, "The life of beings is like a waterfall.

The Sutra on Teachings that are the Bases of Discipline says:

Waterfalls descend in rivers to the sea
The sun and moon sink down behind the western mountains.
Day and night tick off their fragmentary instants.
Like these the life of beings must pass and disappear.

13. The impermanence of the conditions and time of our existence:

Having completed life's conditions, such as food,
As sure as taking poison, will bring occasions of suffering.
With so many contrary conditions that do us harm,
How can this completion fail to be destroyed?
All of it must turn into a cause of death.
Never knowing how or when or where we die,
We have been seduced into futility.
Therefore, abandoning the dharmas of this world,
Let us turn to genuine practice from the heart,
Attaining the Dharma teaching of impermanence and death.

Though food is necessary for life, it is also a condition of sickness. Though it appears to be beneficial, essentially it is an inevitable establisher of harm.
Even beneficial purification with baths and medicine leads to sickness, not to mention life be damage that actively opposes it. Since the conditions of death are changelessly many, let u approach of death. Moreover, as above, whoever lives will die. Only when and how are unc even be sure that we will not die today. And even if we could, the Bodhicharyavatara says:

"At least today I will not die," I say.
What reason is there to rejoice in that?
For still, the time when I become a non-existence
Will doubtless come to pass, in any case.

C. The three instructions of striving

1. The instruction to practice at this favorable time of having the guru and oral instructions.

At this auspicious time of completely attaining the free and well-favored human body, we sh ourselves from samsara:

If, having attained the ship of being free and well-favored,
Whose captain is the oral instructions of the guru,
If we do not strive to cross the river of suffering,
But stare at it fascinated, until there is no choice,
At last we shall fall in, and so be swept away.

In the ship of external freedom and favor, having the holy guru as our guide, if we think we c to work with the tradition of Dharma established by the Buddha Bhagavat, we are much dec
Students says:

Whoever, attains the path of Dharma of the Sages,
The tradition like a great ship, and throws it away again,
Will whirl like a giddy dancer in the ocean of samsara.
A mind that thinks that joy is certain is deceived.

2. The exhortation truly to make an effort from our hearts:

This is because if we do not try, we will not be liberated.

While we have this precious vessel praised by the Teacher,
Which offers an end to evil and attainment of what is pure,
If we will not receive the wealth of the two benefits
That for ourselves and also that for other beings,
We only chain ourselves in the prison of samsara.

Those with the support, these freedoms, who do not practice the holy Dharma that benefits s others will be bound forever in the noose of samsara. Those who use their leisure to turn ba establish the liberation of holy Dharma. Urging practice, the Letter to Students says:

Whoever has the best gifts of the ocean of arising
Also plants the good seed of supreme enlightenment.
Its virtues are better than those of a wish-fulfilling gem.

Whoever has human birth, though lacking the fruition,
Having the power of mind attained by human beings
Should rely on the sugata path, which is the guide of beings.

Such a path is not attained by gods and nagas,
By sky-soarers, kinnaras or serpent gods.

Having attained humanity, so hard to gain,
Whoever really thinks about the worth of that
Will practice very hard with the greatest diligence.

3. The motivating power of compassion

Third, for the human beings who have been so well-urged, there is also the motivating powe compassion. These words have been spoken so that we can protect beings. How can we r hearts? Therefore, our aspiration to peace is always motivated by the guiding power of com

Kye ma! As if we had been chained to solid rock, Thinking mostly of this world, our sorrow grows.
Not realizing what was taught; not understanding the teachings,
Even though our day of death may be tomorrow,
We fixate our lives as being long and permanent.
Not grieving at samsara, with no speck of renunciation,
We are consciously proud and knowingly confused.
While we are so distracted, the rain of the kleshas falls.
How can we ever be of use to sentient beings.

Kye ma! Sentient beings have been told how things are, but with a fool's intelligence, they d comprehend the details of the symbols and the means of practice. Really having very little f them, they will never realize them. They do not understand the explanations.
Some, even while they are being urged to get rid of the appearances of this world right awa attached to keeping them, motivated only by the actions of this world. Their karmas and kle
fire,
and they are far from happiness.
Others with the fire of aggression burning within them are jealous of others. They abuse the ways, provoking faults, spreading bad rumors, and belittling them.
Some, no matter how many sufferings torment and oppress them, are not saddened by sam never experience the least particle of renunciation.
Some, who have heard just a little, dispute and condemn others because of pride and arrog thousand tongues of klesha flames in the ten directions. Dispensing with the natural goodn being, they burn up anything pure. As they break vows and samayas day and night, there falls a rain of

we see this, sometimes the thought arises that we should give up and just try to practice pro alone in peaceful forests, with the intent of personal enlightenment. But for the most part, the pow compassion produces the joyful thought, "Let's get enlightened!" The following are verses o aspirations.

Those who are in the ten directions of the world,
As many sentient beings as may be in existence,
By my merit may all of them gain happiness,
And may they all be free from any suffering.

Those who are sickly and those whose lives will be cut short,
May they have the good fortune and auspiciousness
Of lives that are long and happy, without attacks of sickness.

May those condemned to being poor and hungry beggars
Have abundant food and drink, and ample wealth.
May all in fear of bandits, savage ones, and kings,
Great abysses, water, fire, and other terrors,
Attain the happiness that is free from all such fear.

Whatever they wish for, may their wishes be established.
Because of always acting well and properly,
May they be liberated in enlightenment.

By a good Sakyong King may the whole earth be protected.
May his gentle kingdom widely spread and flourish.
May his ministers' Dharmic wishes be fulfilled.
May his servants always live in happiness.

May those who have the sufferings of the lower realms,
Be freed and have the happiness of the higher realms.
May those who have the sufferings of the higher realms,
Be peaceful and establish prosperity and bliss.
May sentient beings who dwell in the three realms of the world
All be happy in their minds and every thought.

Let no evil conceptions flash within their minds.

Day and night may they transcend them through the Dharma.
May there be good harvests in all the realms of beings
May they be free from every sickness and affliction.
May there be no strife and quarreling between them.

May they be happy, like the gods in heavenly realms.
May promoters of goodness be completely successful.
Those who want wealth and retinue, servants, and attendants,
May it be accomplished, just as they desire.

May merit and dominion increase for sentient beings.
May the Dharma increase for its renunciates.
For those who want virtue, may virtuous states of mind increase.
May life and auspicious fortune flourish and increase.

For those who practice dhyana, may samadhi and insight,
Higher perceptions, and miracle flourish and increase.
May there be the path and fruition of the Dharma.
May we come face to face with liberating wisdom.

Those who are tormented with pain and suffering,
May their minds be soothed, expanding with great joy.
May those who are idle and slothful, strive for enlightenment.

May those well-ornamented with the wealth of merit,
Those who have dhyana and discipline, never be separate
From all who need them in their fear and anxiety.

May the many children of the Victorious One
Have immeasurable body, life, and buddha activity.
May benefit for others be completely perfect.

May they time they remain on earth be very long.
If anyone at any time who depends on me,
May happiness and prosperity of such beings increase.

Those who have mastered the vinaya, knowing what is allowed,
May they be possessors of the seven aryan riches

Whether they praise or blame, or verbally disparage,
May all who see or hear, remember or contact me
Quickly cross the fearful ocean of samsara.

May those who even hear my name, because of that,
Be expelled from samsara in that very life.
Attaining bliss and liberated from samsara,
Let them be set firm as unsurpassable buddhas.

May I always, like the elements, earth and so forth,
Be a sustaining ground for the sake of sentient beings.
May everything that is beneficial be established.

May those who are poor and suffer setbacks in samsara,
Needlessly tormented in blazing tongues of flame,
Become a happy throng, completely liberated.
May they always try to benefit other beings.
May beings' sufferings serve to ripen them for me.

Whatever merit I have, may it ripen sentient beings.
By any virtuous mental power I may have,
May beings attain to bliss and purification of suffering.
May suffering be unseen, even in their dreams.

May they attain an ocean of bliss and happiness.
Pervading the space of the sky in all the ten directions
As many buddhas and sentient beings as there may be,
May they be associated with happiness.

May they be wealthy and prosperous, because of what I do.
Throughout the ten directions, for all who hear my name,
May there fall a rain of all that is desired.
Making offerings to buddhas and other sentient beings,

May sentient beings of the six realms and ten directions
No more be surpassed by any victorious ones.
May I completely liberate every one of them.
May the endless ocean of samsara be empty.

Sukhavati, totally beautified by ornaments of light, the precious source of all beings, is a uni filling the whole of space, established from clouds of pure happiness. By grasping this white scepter or jeweled umbrella, all the obscuring torment of the three levels is cleared away.
In this undisturbed water, may the gradually blossoming lotus of the victorious ones be plant pleasant and delightful divine maidens, their heads adorned with fragrant lotus garlands, pla platform with water birds, lovingly caress the lotus anthers. By these teachings may human hearts be floating in the water of explanation emanating as it does in the pure lands.
  Free from the harm of the kleshas, completely filled with samadhi, may those excellent one sentient beings cross over.
Like the undefiled young sun, whose eye is characterized by an excellent red light, wreathed stars. Becoming amrita for beings, their eyes shine more excellently than the brilliantly blazi Bhrama.
May the vast appearance of these radiant masters, revealed as great beings adorned with th major and minor marks, fill the whole of space.
May all beings effortlessly reach that field, the supreme wealth of trikaya, the cloudless path and moon, free from even an atom of the nirvana of lower people.
Without duality of one and many, in uncompounded, primordial existence incomprehensible the spontaneous presence of peace, in the field of Samantabhadra may the purified minds o their weariness. May they reach the space of the dhatu beyond wide and narrow, high and low, b concept and thought.
There may they remain without sadness and weariness, with excellent thoughts, exerting the benefit self and others among the rocky mountains.
Urged on by the intention of benefit, one can hardly not be sad at the Dharma teachings of impermanence. For those with a mind that always grasps samsara and never turns back, te addressing a lump of stone or an animal. The Instruction on Impermanence says:

Like me you too will die.

And:

There is no doubt about it.
Kye 'ud! I am an animal.

D. The final summary

There are two parts.

1. How to think of impermanence in order to cross over from samsara.

Now the final summary teaches of the great exhortation to meditate and work until samsara

Whoever truly wishes to cross the ocean of evil
And establish the wondrously risen excellent qualities,
Now should contemplate the certainty of death.
Meditate day and night on impermanence alone.
Again and again arouse renunciation and sorrow.

Whether going, staying, eating, sleeping, arising, walking, talking, or seeing a crowd of many and whether staying in villages, valleys, or monasteries, always meditate on impermanence.
hear, and remember has the nature of impermanence, and the marks of impermanence. Re of impermanence. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Always, day and night, I should think of this alone.

If we do not think about it, what's the problem? Having come into the power of this life alone be ambition, love of fame, desire, hatred, laziness, hoarding, indolence, cantankerousness a Dharma's not arising. We will not quickly be liberated from samsara. We do not have enoug tasks, let alone the liberation of enlightenment.
Strive with a long and continuous effort until buddhahood is attained. Dipamkara, Shakyan forth were at first sentient beings like us. But by their exertion, they became Buddhas. Now wandering in samsara. Even though countless former buddhas have come, we have not be realization of enlightenment.

Thinking that by our own karma, we will wander limitlessly in samsara, by now we should ha to complete their path of enlightenment. Thinking that this life is impermanent, like a borrow instant, we should try to practice the Dharma. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

If I do not make an effort from now on I will simply go ever lower and lower still.

Though countless former Buddhas have come throughout the past,

Having the purpose of benefit for all sentient beings,
I, because of my own faults and shortcomings,
Was not within the scope of their healing ministrations.

If from this time on, I still act like that,
Again and again, as it has been before,
I will die and have to go to the lower realms,
Being cut in pieces and suffering other tortures.

2. The Benefits of the Teachings

If we meditate day and night only on impermanence and death, in a short time we will accum measureless accumulation of virtues. Then because of that,

Thus goodness and benefit will surely be established.
Striving with fierce energy to establish them,
The mind of this life will be abandoned and cast away.
The confusion of fixating egohood will be destroyed.

In brief, establish all the excellent qualities.
Restrict the mind to the root of all dharmas, impermanence.
This will be the cause of holy liberation,
Bringing us the end of everything that is evil.

Death is certain, Thus our own death is certain. When the smoke of thinking, ceaselessly " even tomorrow," continually arises, the blazing fire of exertion in Dharma will also naturally a we will be led to the path of this and later benefits.
When appearances of this life are seen not always to have power, mind does not desire, be quarrel, grasp maliciously, be angry, harm others, and naturally leaves behind all afflictions.

grasping cannot occur, and by the rising of the extraordinary, all is harmonious and pleasant
that wealth, retinue, and all relatives and companions are impermanent, desire and attachment t arise.
When through these relatives and companions other harms or benefits arise, whatever joys occur, no desire or aggression will arise. When these die or are separated from us, or even nothing, the suffering of unhappiness will not arise. Wherever we go in the world, we will not return to th desire

and attachment.
Whatever suitable and unsuitable conditions arise, the individual marks of desire, aggressio grasping of attachment will not arise. Day and night will pass in happiness. Having come to Dharma,
we will fulfill our vows and difficult practices. Our activities will be spotlessly pure, unobscur transgressions. Working with the Dharmic activities of the path, we shall accumulate the tw hundred times over.
Since our conduct will not be mixed with evil deeds, there will be no regret for anything we d special faith, compassion, and renunciation will newly arise. The Buddha and all the bodhis care of us. Men and non-men will have no opportunity to harm us, and the gods of Abhirati will k whiteness of virtue. We will sleep in happiness, rise in happiness, go in happiness, walk in possess happiness, and live happy lives.
The higher worlds of the celestial realms will arise. We shall see the Sugata and his childre hear the good Dharma. We shall meditate on the good path. We shall attain the good realn Sutra on Teachings that are the Bases of Discipline says:

Those who act with pure conduct
And meditate well on the path,
Will not suffer in dying,
As if freed from a burning house.

These and limitless other virtues will be attained.

E. Dedicating the merit.

Now the merits of well composing this are taught as a way for beings to attain blessings:

Thus by the amrita of this auspicious news
From the resounding drums of the thunder-clouds of Dharma,
By the deep, melodious speech of beneficial instructions,
May the weary nature of the minds of beings
Unhinged by the kleshas and fixated thoughts of permanence,
Be released this very day from all its weariness.

In benefit-producing white light, to the sound of divine drums, from the swelling ocean of goo teachings, emerge water dragons of instruction with gaping mouths. For beings exhausted b turbulent extremes of ever-grasping mind are completely pacified. By the primordial lord wh enjoyment of bliss and happiness in his excellent house adorned by the rays of the sun, may eased.

Beings are distracted, as if they were in a dream.
Gathering and dispersing, dharmas are hollow and empty.
Though travelling to a market, companions match our path,
They like impermanent dharmas soon will go their own way.

Like an flash of lightning among the autumn clouds,
The life of beings hurtles by like a waterfall.
Dharmas are impermanent with no stability.
From today let us realize that with certainty.

Things and property and much collected wealth,
Along with any fame and glory we possess,
Are fickle dharmas. Mind can never rely on them.
Let us know their nature of the four extremes.

III. The Sufferings of Samsara

There are four parts:

A. The general explanation of the nature of suffering
B. The extended explanation of the particulars
C. The appropriateness of thinking about the sufferings of samsara
D. The dedication of merit

A. The general explanation of the nature of suffering

There are eight parts.

1. The brief teaching of suffering.

After realizing the impermanence of dharmas, is the teaching of the suffering intrinsic to sam one says about it falls short of the truth.

For those among the dharmas of the three realms of samsara,
Unremittingly changeable, there are the extremest sufferings.
With sufferings of suffering, change, and composite nature,
All beings of its six habitations live in extreme anxiety

The Sutra of Instructions to the King says:

O great king, this samsara is change. This samsara is impermanence. This samsara is suff

The three kinds of suffering are the suffering of suffering, the suffering of change, and the su
the composite. By these the six kinds of sentient beings struggle and sink in the ocean of sams

2. The examples of suffering.

By these verses the examples of how the kleshas are produced are explained:

Like some person who is thrown into a fire,
Or attacked by a ravening horde of savage men or beasts,
Or imprisoned by some king, just like an animal,
With successive waves of suffering like the Unremitting Hell And having no chance of escap only increase.

Thus as the assembled faculties of sentient beings are not purified of former suffering, it will later.
Unbearable, it is without measure or limit. The Jewel Mala says:

Space in all the directions, earth, water, fire, and air,
Just as they are limitless, so are beings' sufferings.

They rise again and again, as waves rise in the ocean.
They are like always having to live in terror and fear

With vicious beasts of prey and cruel savages.

Like the dungeon of a king, getting free is difficult.

3. The example of being seduced by desire.

Though all sentient beings want to find happiness and be free from suffering:

One may wish to find bliss, and be separated from suffering.
But suffering strikes us, acting as both cause and effect.
Like a moth who is attracted by the flame of a lamp
Enticed by grasping, desirous of his wished-for object,
Or like deer, bees, and elephants,
Enticed by sound or smell or else by taste, or touch,
Beings are seduced by desire for the five objects of sense.
See how they never find bliss, but only suffering.

By the obscuring power of accepting and rejecting, though we may want powerful means of fruition, we do not produce the cause. How can we be free from accepting and rejecting? T
happiness
should practice the cause, the virtuous path. We want to leave suffering behind, yet wholeh into its cause, non-virtue. We practice all the causes of suffering, the five klesha-poisons, and the three ch
We are rushing to practice the source of all suffering, whose fruition is suffering itself, and experience of its diff varieties. Still we just accept this and cannot even be ashamed of it. This is like a thief who is punished by having of, but still robs us again. This time his punishment is having his head cut off. The Bodhicharyavatara says

We think we have the intention of getting rid of suffering,
Instead we run right to that very suffering.
Though we want happiness, because of ignorance,
We conquer our own happiness like an enemy

How do we conquer it? By the force of desire and attachment to the five desirables, the pow increases, and we enter into suffering.

A moth desiring the form of a lamp's light, is burned when it is reached. Deer are killed beca listen to the sound of a flute. Bees who suck flowers, which are the source of nectar, get tangled wh them.

Fishermen entice fish by the taste of food on the point of a hook. Elephants wanting to feel lakes and die. A song in the Dohakosha:

By the mudra of samsara all beings are seduced.

Also it says there:

Kye ho! The stupid are wounded by arrows it is said.
View them as having been enticed like gullible deer.
They are like fish and butterflies, elephants and bees,

The kleshas arise from the five sense-objects, and by their force we wander endlessly in sa more to be feared than poison, it is taught. The Letter to Students says:

Objects and poison alike are pleasant when first experienced.
Objects and poison alike are unbearably harsh when ripe.
Objects and poison alike are imbibed because of ignorance.
Objects and poison alike are potent and hard to reverse.
Poison and objects, imputed with certainty by the mind,
Both do harm, but poison may simply be avoided
But injuries by objects are not so easily shunned.
Poison is only poisonous in a sentient being
Our feelings regarding objects are poisonous anywhere.
Poison when mixed with other poison is neutralized.
Thus supreme secret mantra is properly used as a cure.
Poison skillfully used is of benefit to man.
However, the great poison, objects, never will be so.

4. How beings are tormented in successive births within the six realms of beings

These samsaric beings whirl about with each other and suffer:

For gods, asuras, Hell beings, and the hungry ghosts,
For humans and animals, all beings of the six realms,

Like the chain of buckets on a water wheel,
Limitless sufferings follow each other in train.

The Precious Mala says:

Its three paths have no beginning, no middle and no end.
Like the circle that is made by whirling a fire-brand.
Mutual causes become the mandala of samsara.

5. How enemies, friends, and relatives are uncertain

Thus when we are whirled within samsara:

In the course of the generations, every sentient being
Has carried the burden of being our friend and our enemy.
Also they have been neither, or something between the two.
The number of times that they have done us right or wrong
Or benefit and harm transcends enumeration.
Often a father becomes a mother and she a sister,
And she again a brother, lost in uncertainty.
We can never be sure if our friends will change to enemies
In all the generations from beginningless time a particular sentient being will have been the f
the sentient beings in the three realms, and so forth. The number of times that it will have been mother, and intimate cannot be counted. The Spiritual Letter says:

By desiring what is fine, deprivation, and death
Sickness, age, and so forth, are sources of many sufferings, Samsara indeed is a treasury of every sorrow.

6. How we suffer in countless births:

If thus we think of the karmic succession in this world,
Our sorrow should increase to its ultimate extreme.
If all our previous bodies, when we were born as ants,
Were gathered up together and piled into a heap,

Its height would surpass Mount Meru, with its four precious slopes.
The tears we have wept would surpass the four oceans in their volume.
When we have been a Hell being or a hungry ghost,
The amount of molten copper that we have had to drink,
And the foul volume of pus and blood and excrement,
Is unmatched by the flowing rivers to the limits of the directions.
Our other sufferings were as limitless as the sky.
The number of time our head and limbs have been cut off,
Because of desire, is unmatched by the atoms of the world.

The Resting in Closely-attentive Mindfulness, says:

O monks, be sorrowful within the realm of samsara. Why? While we were being whirled about in beginningless samsara, we were born as ants. If their discarded bodies were broug in one place, and made into a heap, it would be taller than Mount Meru. We have wept mor than there is water in the four oceans. The countless immeasurable number of times we ha Hell beings and pretas, we have drunk more seething molten copper, blood, urine, pus, and there is water in the four great rivers that flow down to the ocean. Because of desires, the r times that our head, eyes, and major and minor limbs have been cut off equals the number o earth, water, air, and fire in as many worlds as there are grains of sand of the river Ganges.

The Spiritual Letter says:

More than the four oceans is the milk that we have drunk.
More than the retinue of existing individuals,
The heap of all our bones would be bigger than a mountain
If juniper berries were as many as our mothers,
The earth would not suffice for such a number of them.

7. How, even if we attain the fruition of Bhrama and so forth, we will ultimately suffer.

Moreover, when we course within samsara, here is what happens:

Charnel vampire-ghouls, and demonic mountain spirits,
Beasts and snakes, and various things that creep and crawl
Experience the countless pains and pleasures of this realm.
Bhrama and Indra, and adepts of dhyanas formed and formless
Defending their territory and seven precious possessions

Human rulers, whatever splendor and wealth they gained,
Fell to the lower realms, suffering more and more.

In this time of samsaric succession, there are no realms of earth, water, mountains, islands, where we have not been. Countless times we have been gods, nagas, rakshasas, gandharvas, kimbh experienced the sufferings of all the six lokas at once, Bhrama, and Indra, and world-ruling no joy and sorrow of any of these that we have not experienced. Again, we have been whirled down to lived among their extreme sorrows. The Letter to Students says:

What being exists that we have not been a hundred times?
What joy is there that we have not savored many times?
What glories, like splendid white yak tails, have we not obtained?
Yet whatever we have gained, our desires only increase.

There is no river upon whose banks we never lived.
There is no country's region where we have never lived.
There is no direction where we have never lived.
And yet the difficult power of our desire increases.

There is no sorrow that was not ours formerly many times.
Nothing could satisfy beings that we have not desired.
There is no sentient being that we have not engendered
But whatever we have in samsara, we are not free of desire.

Completely grasping at birth these widely meandering beings
Are rolling on the ground in ecstasy and sorrow.
There is no being with whom we have not been intimate.

8. Suffering due to the nature of change.

These others who did badly in the mouth of samsara are worthy of further thought:

Having enjoyed unlimited wealth within this life
These beings of exalted station, after they departed,
Were stricken with poverty or even made to be servants.

As wealth in a dream is gone as soon as we awake,
If we thoroughly think of the sufferings of change,
Arising from the impermanence of all our joy and sorrow,
Our sorrow increases, building ever more and more.
Therefore beings within the three realms' habitations,
Without desire for samsara's pleasures, should get enlightened.

So it is for Indra, the king of the gods, and Bhrama, the paranimitavashavartin gods, and tho attained
happiness among human beings. When they exhaust the fruition of their former virtuous ka chakravartins, gods, including samadhi gods and formless gods, and ordinary people who h
by the power of former karma, death, and transmigration, must experience many afflictions, goi realms and so forth. The Sutra on Renunciation says:

When from their joyful and excellent existences
Lion-like lords of beings have to die and transmigrate.
The gods will speak to them, saying words like these:
This care-free life must be completely left behind.
The joys of the gods, however many they may be,
All of these arose from the cause of our good karma.
Now by these pleasant actions that you have in mind
All your collected virtue is totally exhausted.
Now, experiencing suffering from non-virtue that you have,
You will fall into the suffering of the lower realms.

Extensive manifestations of this kind will arise. Also the Sutra on Teachings that are the Ba Discipline
says:

Wealth in a dream with houses and abundant enjoyments, Dreaming that one has been mad gods and men
Becomes quite non-existent as soon as we awake.

It is like that. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 2.35

Like the experiences that we have in our dreams
Whatever may be the sorts of things that one enjoys

These become nothing more than objects of memory.
They all are gone. We do not see them any more.

When one transfers between lives, this also happens. The Spiritual Letter:

Indra who is worthy of homage from the world,
By power of his karma, falls back upon the earth.
Even after becoming universal monarchs,
Lords of the world are born again as others' servants.

Breasts and buttocks of celestial courtesans,
Are delightful to fondle, but after time has past,
Destined to be sausage in the Lord of Hell's machines,
Such lovers will be attended by knowledge hard to bear.

The touch of their shapely legs, is happily endured,
But having lived with tremendous joy for a very long time
Again in Hells of biting flames and rotten corpses
An equal result of unbearable pain will be produced.

After the joyful attentions of celestial maidens,
After this life of pleasure in exquisite groves,
By a forest of trees, with leaves like swords and daggers
Ones arms and legs and nose and ears will be cut to pieces.

Having lived in a place with divine girls free to hand,
All with pretty faces and golden lotuses,
Again we shall be helpless in the rivers of Hell
Forced into scalding water, as hot gates block return.

Desire for the realm of the gods will be very great
But having attained the desireless bliss of Bhrama again,
Once more we will fuel the fires of the Avici Hell.
We shall be thrown into constant suffering with no gaps.

Attaining the sun and moon, the light of our personal bodies
Will shine with brilliance to the limits of the world.
Then again we shall come into dismal murky darkness,

Unable to see so much as our own hands and feet.

Thus, as for the merit of those who were criminals,
After the triple lamp of the Buddha's teaching appears,
They will go where the sun and moon have never shone,
They will pass into chaos, limitless endless darkness.

The three realms of desire, form, and the formless, are the cities of appearance, half-appear appearance. This is because they have coarse appearance, subtle appearance, and none a happy, not desiring the path at all, are instructed to establish unsurpassable enlightenment. But being leisure to establish merit, they must make an effort. The same text says:

If our hair or garments suddenly burst into flame
The first thing we would do is put them out again.
Then we would try to keep it from happening again.
There would be no priority that would be higher than that.

B. The extended explanation of the particulars

There are three parts:

1. The basis of confusion

There are two parts.

a. The basis of confusion in the three worlds.

Whatever sufferings exist, their basis of dependence is the inner three realms. These are b mind; or desire, form, and the formless:

In the cities of appearance, half-appearance and non-appearance
Tormented by composition, pain, and change,
The compositions of senses, mind, and consciousness
Are remorselessly turning mills of the objects of joy and sorrow,

Body composed of coarse things is the city of appearance. Speech, as appearance that is an echo, is the city of half-appearance. Mind, without the phenomena of the five gates and con things, is the city of non-appearance. These are also called the realms of desire, form, and the formless.

Intention
says:

Body is the coarse, the desire realm. Speech is the subtle, the form realm. Mind is the very subtle, the formless realm. Within these three cities lives the child of apparent true existenc

That child is explained as naturally-arising wisdom. The three gates are tormented by the th
By
the condition of conceptualizing everything, arising becomes experience of one confusion af does confusion arise? The objects of the six senses individually come forth by means of the pow sense-consciousnesses. By fixating these objects, there is continuous attachment to them as happ and neutrality.
These individually arising phenomena of form and so forth are called "consciousness." The general phenomenal process of conscious is insight, rigpa, or mind, sem. When we analyze the par
are passion, aggression, and ignorance, a continual series of mental contents of one or another kinds,
comprising "content-mind," yid. The Bodhisattvabhumi says:

The appearance of objects is known as consciousness
The first conceptualization of these is known as mind.

Subsequent particular analysis of these deals with the mental contents. This is content-min contents
are also established by mind as having universal relationships, similarities or classes that ex mental contents.
When objects are evaluated by insight, at first there is a generalized perception of nature. T does this is mind. Then, by discriminating particular aspects, mental contents are individually designate Because

this is our real object understanding, and except for such analysis, there is no other. The Pr
says:

If you ask about the objects that are seen by mind,
They are what is conventionally expressible.
Without the mental contents, mind cannot arise.
Not to maintain them as co-emergent is meaningless.

At the level of a sugata and the completely non-conceptual natural state, apparent objects a discriminated by insight, but there is no mind, content mind, or consciousness. This is beca grasping of dualistic appearance, or awareness of a grasped object by a fixating mind. The Praise of Va

Sentient beings, who have mind, content-mind, and consciousness, since they are accuston grasping and fixation, conceptualize them. Therefore, they do not have non-conceptual wisd Supreme wisdom is the mind, lo, that sees reality.

The Structure of the Three Jewels says:

Neither mind, content-mind, consciousness; nor samadhi which is free from these are discar secret mind of the sugata is incomprehensible by thought.

When form, sound, and so forth arise as the corresponding external phenomena, and the m apprehends them, it is called consciousness, literally nampar phenomenal awareness shepa productions appear to be objective phenomena, they are called nampar shepa. At the first t objects, the aspect of insight, that apprehends, "this," is mind. The analyzer of the distinctions that arise connected to that is content mind. After the instant of clarity when individual things first present themselve knowledge that discriminates object awareness analyzes them. If it is attached to them as pleasant there is passion. if as painful, there is aggression. If there is neither, but attachment to "this," that is ignorance. Example a good woman
we once knew; seeing an enemy that once conquered us; and seeing a wall, water, a highw ordinary people, toward which we have neither joy or sorrow. The Sutra on Teachings that are the Basis of D

If we see amicable people, then we feel desire.
If harmful ones are present, our minds become aggressive.
For intermediate ones, our ignorance will increase,
In any case the gates of our faculties have been bound.

b. The basis of confusion in the eight consciousnesses

Now the ground of arising and divisions of these are extensively taught as follows:

Alaya consciousness, content mind, and then the five gates,
Gradually proliferate, one upon the other.
From that arise the cause and effect of samsaric suffering.
The root of samsara and suffering is ignorance,
Having the confusion of grasping and fixation.
By objects, conceptualization, and mind's habitual patterns,
By fixating "me" and "mine," samsara is established.

Here to distinguishes the different aspects, at the very time when awareness of individual o without divisions of their vividness, mind which has insight of this is called the alaya-conscio
the mind
that fixates that, that peacefully saves it, with much analysis of objects at its leisure and so f content-mind. The Sutra of the Ornament of Manjushri's wisdom says:

Mind is the alaya consciousness.
The "I" fixator is content-mind.

The eye-consciousness sees, when forms are seen, depending on the eye. Similarly depen
is sound, depending on the nose there is smell, depending on the tongue taste, depending on These are the five consciousnesses The arising of later knowledge from such former phenomena is ca Tibetan
this is kyeche, meaning increase or proliferation of what has arisen. The objects and aware immeasurable conditions, and since these many and extensive aspects are not put aside, bu called kham or in Sanskrit dhatu.

From the object there is the arising of the seemingly supported perceiver-mind. From what connection to the later arises, and dharmin, the realm of dharmas, and dharmata, their natu interdependent arising. When the two minds of object and perceiver are combined, pleasur phenomena are felt and included in insight. By the condition of contact, this is called feeling. The particular and other aspects are beyond describing.

In brief, by the three poisons, arising from the three collections of objects, the senses, and t concept
mind, come all motivating karmas. These karmas are unhappiness.
From patience and so forth freedom from the three poisons arises. This is the great happin bliss.
On the path of the ten virtues and so forth, prajña and compassion are not fully accomplishe path of the lesser happiness. Accumulated by ignorant earthly beings, after the fruition of samsaric produced, it is exhausted. This is happiness proportional to merit.
The enlightened happiness produced by completely finishing the path is happiness proportio
By the three poisons there is universally arising unhappiness. The lower realms and whatev may be are produced by this cause. Happiness proportional to merit grasps the glorious hig and human

happiness.
The happiness proportional to liberation is produced both by incidental highlights and ultima goodness.
The Precious Mala says:

As for passion, aggression, and ignorance
The karma produced by them is unhappiness.
As for non-passion, -aggression, and -ignorance,
The karma produced by them is happiness.
Unhappy karma is all suffering.
Happy karma is all the higher realms
And all the happiness of sentient beings

'Externally appearing things are like the things that appear to be other in a dream.' This mea grasping involves habitual patterns of objects. These various appearances of pure and impure are co Habitual patterns of reality are produced by the karma of bodily arising and also by the inner conditio suchness.

These are the shandhas, dhatus, ayatanas, and so forth. From them arise all the kleshas, a that is their fruition, the support of the confusions of fixation.
Luminous, naturally-arisen wisdom is in essence empty, and by nature luminous. It is the so unobstructed arising of various kinds of radiance. When we become attached to this as the characteristics of grasping and fixation, insight arises as the habitual patterns of mind. The five or the three arise. The root of confusion is fixating on the "I" and ego. Because of that, the confused appearances of sams reflections, dreams, or hairs drifting before the eyes. Moreover, fixation is fixated as "I", and grasped ob fixated as "mine"
with an attitude like that of the owner of a house.

2. The manner of confusion,

There are two sections:

a. By knowing or not knowing what we are there are liberation or confusion.

Now the basis and way of confusion are extensively taught, as follows:

The changeless nature of mind, perfection, dharmakaya,
By ignorant fixation, takes on habits of false conception.
Involving confused appearance of impure relativity, Dualistic appearance of objects as self and other,
Then come to be grasped as really being two.
Intrinsically this presents itself as limitless suffering.

When we have realized the ever-changeless nature of mind,
By the path of meditation on this unerring perfection,
We will properly reach the field of pure relativity.
Easing the weariness of the village of samsara.

Here three great doctrines of the yogachara tradition are taught. These are false conceptio and the perfectly established, in Sanskrit, parikalpita, paratantra, and parinishpanna.
There are two kinds of false conceptions, characteristics, and accountable false conceptions
By characteristics, from someone's viewpoint something is conceptually imputed, though it is such as the horns of a rabbit or the alleged ego. This includes any bad doctrines and all the nam of this and that established from that that may be presented by such a mind.
What is this like? Some search for the real bodily existence of that to which the name "lion" but do not find it. Though the phenomenal meaning has been presented as "this," from mere arrog individual characteristics without any real remembered mental object, they may say it is like "fire." Accountable false conceptions are various aspects of the environment and inhabitants of the arising from the viewpoint of confusion--joy and sorrow, the skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas really do not exist, but only appear like a dream from the confused viewpoint of mind, they are called acc conceptions.
Though all these things are natureless, they appear from the viewpoint of confusion. Since exaggerations, they are called parikalpita, or false conceptions, in Tibetan kun tak, literally all-imputation or all-la
The
Bodhisattvabhumi says:

As for the false conceptions of parikalpita
Though non-existent, are produced by the mind of confusion.

There are also two kinds of relativity, pure and impure. Pure relativity is the pure fields and of the pure seeing of the buddhas, appearances that arise of buddha fields, the seven precious thi palaces of pure light. Some say that the relativity of yogachara tradition is unacceptable, since all such thing classified as personal appearance. Such disputatious people have not seen this properly. This sort of relativity is established by oneself from personal habitual patterns of awareness. It is not like the phenomena reflected in a mi produced by conditions.

Whether everything is included within personal appearance should be analyzed. Either min mere appearance, or appearance is included within mind.

If it is like the first, at the time of mere appearance, there is no discernible boundary betwee that are included and those that are not included. Therefore "included" is a mere word, having nothi phenomena.

If it is like the second, how can this be suitable? Someone might say, "Since appearance a it too is mind."
Then a boy child that comes from a woman would also be a woman, but this is not so. Excr the body, so it would be the body. This is clearly not the case.
Someone also might say, "Appearance is mind because it appears in mind."
Then form would be visual consciousness, because it appears in visual consciousness. Bu erroneous sentient beings would be the minds of those beings. Fallaciously, these sentient erroneous minds would be buddhas. Since sentient beings also appear to these buddhas, the whole r beings would all be buddhas. Moreover, this fault that spotless buddhas are also defiled sentient beings cou abandoned. This is because if buddhas were not mind, they could not arise at all.
If someone says, "Phenomena are mind," then what is really cause and fruition would be a s
this did not exist, neither could arise at all. Thus, an enemy and one's anger at the enemy woul single thing.
Therefore, without the enemy, there could be no anger at the enemy.
  Also it is not proper to say, "phenomena are mind because they are produced by mind." T
a painting would be the painter, because the painter produced them.
How is it proper to maintain that external earth, stones, mountains, and rocks are mind? Ad arising from the habitual patterns of mind is confused appearance. If this were not so, when a hun one vase, the vase that is seen by them all would be their awareness, and all the hundred beings wou awareness. If this is maintained, it would be proper reasoning that if one of them gets enlightened, they would enlightened. If one went to the lower realms, they would all go there. If it is like these notions, sentient beings i like you and me would not exist at all, since all that appears like that would be other than one's own mind. M would not be suitable that there were any other buddhas besides the single one Shakyamuni. This is bec seen by him would be his awareness. If one maintains that, clearly he is us. These days many people fi traditions and completely obscure the mahayana. From what they say it would follow that a huge body co

the size of a lotus. A flower could have ear-rings. A gold face would be more than a mere orna would be just the sound of trumpeting.
If you ask what are pure appearances, when it is proclaimed within proper reasoning that co phenomena that are spotless are mind-only, that tradition says:

These appearances of oneself to oneself are one's own mind appearing to itself, but the app is not mind.

Many yogachara texts say:

As many things that appear, that many are mind.
But that is not so for apparent objects themselves.
Having habitual patterns from beginningless time,
We are shaggy, as it were, with hairs before the eyes.

Appearance and the apparent object are distinguished. Others may think, "The apparent ob
is a mountain!" but the clear appearances of fixation of mind arise in dependence on the facult objects we directly encounter, the phenomena fixated by our minds, are private, personal appearances.
encounter the same mountain, that their apparent objects are the same as ours does not fol objects are fixations of what appears in sense perception in terms of the habitual patterns of former eye
A mere abstraction, a mental object, a luminous appearance of what does not exist, vividly mental sense. Therefore, even if appearances apprehended by the mind and the fixator of t others and the fixator of them are all mind, the object which arises for and is perceived by the mind is classified as an apparent object. All the objects of the five gates appear even though they like shaggy hairs before the eyes, because of beginningless habitual patterns. Thus they become dualized.

"Do you
therefore establish appearance and apparent object as different?
For you also they are two. This is because they exist externally to apparent mind, and beca maintained
within the fixating mind. These are one within the mind, but are called "two."
It may be asked, "according to proper reasoning are they one? Here the apparent object ca habitual patterns and the appearance ascertained by fixation, while both do not exist, neithe conventionally from the phenomena confused by habitual patterns. Moreover, since there are not really two suc established to be not-two in nature. For we who profess madhyamaka, if we analyze, not only the thing apparent object, but the appearance too is maintained not to be mind. {{217.5}} This is because mind is inne
so, not exist
externally and external appearance that arises within the individual senses is analyzed as be mind. If appearances had an external aspect too, then peoples' consciousness would be two or mor one's consciousness would be a material thing. There would be many such fallacies.
  Therefore, the fixator of appearance and non-appearance is mind, but appearance itself is
as mind. What is or is not the word "tail" is grasped by the listening consciousness, but listenin consciousness itself is not established as the word, "tail."
In brief, one's own mind, though seemingly externally projected does not really go outward, external phenomena really appear inwardly. However, external appearance is never interna Because what appears does not exist. A variety of such things, white and red, arise.
For one who has diseased eyes due to a disorder of the phlegm objects which are completely non-existent nevertheless appear, externally, internally and be said to be natureless or empty of essence. Neither what is established as mind and what is establishe mind are liberated from attachment to truly existent self-nature. In that respect they are indistinguisha one may say,

"Isn't this assertion that there are external objects-things which are not directly known, like th shravaka
vaibhashika school?
It is not the same. The vaibhashikas proclaim that these objects are established to have ind characteristics of material things. We, on the other hand, say that habitual patterns of confused appearanc even though what seems to be there is non-existent like a dream. This approach is not refuted by madhy suitable.
Someone may ask why what has been proclaimed by us is not refuted by the prasangika ma Mere appearance is not refuted, but attachment to true existence is refuted. The teacher N

Thus though appearance itself is not to be refuted,
Eliminate thoughts that conceptualize this as truly existent.

{218.5}}The yogachara true-aspectarians proclaim that phenomena are mind. Both the true aspectarians assert the refuted tenet that the absolute is truly established as self-insight, so how will they deny t appearances of habitual patterns arise while they are non-existent and that classifications of existents are re into? This is because these would be made into the classification of the relative at the same time.
Thus outer relativity and the relativity of mind or insight, arising after the former, its appeara depending on other previous objects, must be analyzed in terms of inner patterns. If seeming appearan after is imputed, the name alone is the meaning, and they accord. If it is maintained to be other and what is present, one's own insight cannot be established as a characteristic of something other, bec assertion is contradictory. This is not good reasoning. The former text says:

Thus all these various different kinds of appearances,
Because they seem to be phenomena that are other,
Are the impure relativity of grasping and fixation.
The pure is also said to be relativity,
But what becomes through external power is not pure.

This too is explained as appearing to be something other.

The perfectly established is changeless and true. This changeless, completely established confusion is the emptiness of dharmata, by nature intrinsically pure, without distinction of ea later. This changeless perfectly established is the quintessential natural state. The empowerment of th as empty or as threefold.
It is naturally empty of itself, other, and both. As for emptiness of itself, it appears as non-ex like the moon in water. Individual characteristics are abandoned, and divided aspects of self and ot but spontaneously present dharmas are not put aside, there are both imputations of these and c their self-
nature.
Other emptiness is the other emptiness of not having or the other emptiness of accountable Emptiness of both self and other has both emptiness of accountables and emptiness of the i characteristics denoted by the words.
This luminous nature of mind, the nature, the dhatu, the essence, is empty of all fallacious th
the characteristics of the buddha qualities. Its purity of essence is beyond faults and virtues, an or clearing away.
 Various defiled dharmas of confused appearance, red and white, arise. These false concep consciousnesses, are natureless. Their self-nature is empty. Accountable like a pillar or a v empty and fallacious. The pure nature is beyond faults and virtues, establishing or clearing away. The empty of themselves and have some virtuous and some faulty aspects. But the pure essence is beyo
At the time of the ultimate purity, all injurious faults together with their habitual patterns are c
in emptiness. This is the absolute itself. Whatever qualities of the absolute dhatu exist are als manifestations and are not empty. The pure essence is beyond faults and virtues, establishing and clearing aw In brief, as for self-emptiness, the nature of dharmas of this and that has no true existence.
divisions, as for characteristics being empty of their own essence, whatever characteristic is non-existent like the horns of a rabbit. Though appearing from the viewpoint of confusion, it is without nature empty like the moon in water.

Emptiness of self-nature of imputation, is emptiness of what is imputed by names, words, ar
as mere mental constructions, the individual characteristics of these objects do not exist, as for what is imputed by the name "lion" really has a turquoise mane. What is actually denoted by the wo small child has a body without such a mane, but since the understanding producing name can have an meaning
even when it is empty, all impute to it an effect-producing power.
In emptiness of other, a dharma is imputed to be empty of another dharma. From the two di emptiness of not having the sun is said to be empty by not having darkness, a pillar, a blank
Here,
dharmas that are non-existent within the sun are other real individual natures.
As for emptiness of accountable others, "the sun" and "light-producer," and "the one with se general accountable imputations. Since the natures and particular included examples expr
the individuating characteristics which are the meaning of the sun, it is empty of them.
What is empty of both self and other, is a dharma that has neither. From the two divisions.
accountable imputations and real individual characteristics.
Within the one involving accountable imputations, are the skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas are imputed by samsaric confusions. All such things are also empty of the individual charac three realms, since they are constructions of conventional mind in names. They have both empty individu like the water in a mirage, and no individual characteristics, like the child of a barren woman. Thoug of any truly

any existing nature, they unubstructedly appear, vividly luminous, with an emptiness like tha
If the three essences are divided in this way, there are six sorts of things of which there is er
Though these are expressed by calling them empty of essence, they are also completely pure and b expression empty since being beyond mind is included as a second sense, all dharmas should be realiz in this manner.
As for what is said by exponents of nihilistic emptiness, since that style of emptiness is impo
dharma

is like that of the outsider materialists, the charvakas. There is emptiness; but this non-empt merely partial emptiness. It accords with the dharma of those of the eternalistic view of the shravakas and
and therefore it falls into both the eternalistic and nihilistic extremes, and simply should not be re Correct perfect establishment is the path of true liberation. In realizing the natural state as it
the phenomena of appearance are not put aside, in the relative, merit can be accumulated. The which is contemplated is the accumulation of wisdom within the absolute. Earnestly produce this dha free from one and many. The former text says:

"Correct" is genuinely gathering the truths of the path.

In brief, we enter into the nature of mind, the changeless luminosity of suchness, after all dh realized to be empty in the sense of being mere false conceptions. If we meditate on the path, impure appearance, along with the mind of false conceptions, becomes pure as it really is. The primordial state has be dharmas of the holy teachings are gathered into one as the inexhaustible body, speech, and mind, of the ornament. One becomes a perfect master of the pure buddha fields.

b. The suffering of wandering in samsara because of ego-grasping.

Now because there is such a grasper and grasped, while we are wandering here in samsara are compared to people sinking in a river:

E ma! How limitless is this realm of samsara.
How difficult it is to examine what it is.
So painful is the weariness of the path of samsara
That anyone born there has no happiness at all.
This unbearable fruition is produced by unhappy actions,
It is a self-projection which is wrongly understood,
The sort of thing we often do within a dream.

The natures experienced by individuals of the six lokas
Are confused appearances of what does not exist.
Therefore they give rise to measureless sufferings.
Listen while briefly I summarize what has been taught about them.

The Analysis of Scripture says:

As if in a filthy swamp of foul and disgusting stench
Beings of the six realms have no happiness.
As if in a blazing pit where it is never cool
Those in samsara too never have any joy.

Within samsara they transmigrate from the desire realm to the realm of form. From the realm formless, they transmigrate into the realm of desire. From the realm of the formless, they tra the realm of form. Wherever samsaric beings exist within the six lokas, there is only suffering, and they h of happiness.

For a little while, as explained in the scriptures etc., they may remember how those who hav aside the mind of joy in samsara and urged them to "practice the dharma of liberation." If they do not r do this, generally they will continue to wander in samsara. The Letter to Students says:

Whoever dwells within the ever-changing round of samsara, Happily thinking that it is just a
Will certainly willy-nilly many hundreds of times
Wander everywhere with like and dissimilar beings.

3. The Divisions of Confusion

a. The Hells,

1) the Hot Hells

Of the twelve hot Hells, the first is the Reviving Hell.

a) The Reviving Hell:

i) A brief explanation:

Over the blazing iron coals of the Hell of Reviving,
Beings meet and kill each other with their weapons.
A voice says, "Revive," and again they suffer as before.
They experience this until their karma is exhausted.

Above blazing iron coals, these Hell beings are gathered by their karma. They strike each o battle-axes, iron clubs, disks and so forth. Seeing each other as hostile enemies, they seem all of them are killed. Then a voice from space says, "Revive," and right away they revive as they were bef experience countless times the real suffering of being killed by their weapons. The Spiritual Letter says

Three hundred times a day by short sharp spears,
These are fiercely stabbed, and their sufferings
When they enter into the sufferings of Hell
Are an intolerable rain of sufferings.
Even one instance is unbearable.

ii) The measure of their lives

The measure of their lives is until their karma is exhausted, briefly, as it says in the ordinary

Fifty years within the life of a human being
Are just a day for the four great gods who are kings of the world.
Their months are thirty such days, and twelve months make a year.
Five hundred such years are a day of the Reviving Hell.
They have to suffer for five hundred years of days like these.
An exact calculation of this according to the sutras
Is a hundred and sixty trillion years of human time.

The ordinary sutras of the mahayana, the tantras, and the shastras say that individuals' karm thick and by merely transmigrating between lives, those who fall into that place are not taug single certain measure of life. Strong antidotes may arise in one's being and so forth, so that one sudden Someone

who was something like a tantric master might have to remain for many kalpas, until release obscuration.
The Spiritual Letter says:

Thus they experience quite unbearable suffering
Over the course of eight times ten million years.
For as long as their bad karma has not been exhausted,
For that long they cannot be free of that life.

In the case of the viewpoint of the ordinary sutras, the Abhidharmakosha says:

In the six levels of the Reviving and so forth,
One day equals the life of the desire gods.

According to the account given in the Objects of Mindfulness and Le Namje, fifty human yea
the great conquering kings of the four families. Thirty of these is one of their months, and twelve counted as their year, and five hundred of those years is one day of the Reviving Hell. They suffer for five hu years. If one counts this in human years, the Objects of Mindfulness says:

Beings endure a hundred thousand times ten million years and 62,000 in the Reviving Hell.

b) The Black Thread Hell

The Hell below this is the Black Thread Hell:

In the Black Thread Hell they are sewn together with blazing needles,
Then just where they were stitched, they are cut apart again.
Because of this, their suffering is terrible.

If we take a day of a hundred and three human years,
A thousand years of those is a day of the Black Thread Hell.
According to the teachings, a thousand of their years
Is twelve trillion, nine hundred sixty billion years of ours.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Some are sewn with needles, and parted like that again.
By sharp irresistible axes they are cut apart

If 133 human years is counted as a day, a thousand years of such days is one day of the Bl
They
endure a thousand such years. If one counts the same period in human years, the Objects

The years of beings in the Black Thread Hell are twelve hundred thousand and ninety six tim million years.

c) The Hell of Crushing and Joining

Below that

In the Hell of Crushing and Joining, beings are crushed to atoms
By mountains like horses, camels, lions, tigers, and so on.
The mountains part, and again they are living, as before.

In iron valleys hammers pound them into dust.
While they are being crushed, streams of blood flow down.
Two hundred years are a day for the Aviha gods.
Two thousand such Twin-god days are a day of the Crushing Hell.
There they are said to suffer for two thousand of their years,
Or thirty trillion, nine hundred and eighty billion years.

The Letter to Students says:

Herded by two fearful mountains like giant shepherds
Gathered between them their bodies are crushed and reduced to dust.
They are separated by wind that does not cool at all.
Then again they are crushed to dust like that a hundred times.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Some are crushed like sesame seeds,
And others ground fine like flour.

There are certain gods who, because they are free from fighting with the asuras, are called "
strife," Aviha, and because boys and girls emerge from their loins together, they are also called the hundred human years make up one day for them. Two thousand of these days are one day in the He Joining.
Beings there must endure two thousand such years. If this is divided in human years, the O Mindfulness says:

Those of the Hell of Crushing and Joining endure 10,368,000 times ten million human years

d) The Crying and Screaming Hell

i) A brief explanation

Then below that:

In the Crying and Screaming Hell, beings are burnt in fires,
This is why they weep and lament, they scream and wail.
They suffer by being cooked in boiling iron cauldrons.
Four hundred years are a day for the Tushita gods.
Four thousand of these are a day of the Crying and Screaming Hell.
Their sufferings go on for four thousand of these years.
In human years this is a hundred and eighty trillion
Nine hundred and forty-four billion are also added to these.

The Spiritual Letter says:{{229.3}}

Some are burned by blazing embers continuously,
While they are being consumed, their mouths are gaping wide.
Some boiled in iron caldrons, or great copper ones,
Are cooked like meat that is being made into soup.

The Letter to Students says:{{229.4}}

Some fall into great soup-kettles and are boiled there
Others transmigrate to burning sand that gives off sparks.
They cannot see the ground on which they put their feet.

Four hundred human years are counted as one day among the gods of the Tushita heaven. these are one day of the Crying and Screaming Hell. They endure four thousand such years in human
years the Objects of Mindfulness says:

ii) The measure of their lives

Those of the Crying and Screaming Hell live for 10,944,000 times ten million human years.

In the Hell of Great Screams, in a blazing iron house, Beings are burned in fires and hacked in pieces by Yama.
Eight hundred years are a day for the Nirmanarati gods. Eight thousand of those are a day w Great Screams.
Their sufferings go on for eight thousand of their years.
This amounts In human years to three quadrillion,
Five hundred and fifty-two trillion, six hundred and sixty billion.

The Letter to Students says:

They live in Hell fire and a shroud of stinking smoke.
Tongues of flame pervade the circle of the directions.
Adorned with heaped white bones, like some terrible wreath.
As elephant skins appear as a means of threatening them
These beings cry out in pain and fear "Kye ma! Kye hu!

Some places great flaming fires are emanated
With an agonizing roar they rise and tower upward.
By day their voices peak in number and shrill volume Inside their dwellings of bones, they loudly scream and howl.
Not even kalpa fire produces what they fell into.

Eight hundred human years are counted as a day of the Nirmanarati gods, and eight thousa a day of the Hell of Great Screams. They remain for eight thousand of their years. As for th in human

years, the Objects of Mindfulness says

They have to endure the Hell of Great Screams for 663,552,000 times 10 million human yea

e) The Hell of Heat

Below that:

In the Hell of Heat beings are in an iron house.
Their brains are first exposed by using a short spear.
After that they are thoroughly beaten on with hammers.
Inside and out they are seared by blazing tongues of flame.

A day of the Paranirmitavashavartin gods
Has the same length as sixteen hundred human years.
Sixteen thousand of these is a day within the Hell of Heat.
They suffer there for sixteen thousand of their years.
Which equals three billion and eighty-four million human years,
To which are added another hundred and sixty thousand.

The Letter to Students says:

We see the noose of time in the hand of the Lord of Death
Poisonous snakes are coiled around the head and lap.
Crows, gulls, ravens, and vultures peck out eyes and brains From living victims without the s hesitation.

Sixteen hundred human years is counted as one day by the Paranirmitavashavartin gods. S these are counted as one day in the Hell of Heat. They endure sixteen thousand of their yea years, as the Objects of Mindfulness says:

Those of the Hell of Heat endure this for 818,416 million times ten million human years.

f) The Very Hot Hell

Below this:

In the Very Hot Hell, among two rows of iron houses,

They are burned in fire and stabbed with three-pointed weapons.
Their heads and shoulders are parted, then joined with bandages.
They also suffer by being boiled in copper cauldrons.
The length of their lives is half an antahkalpa.
It is beyond being counted in terms of human years.
In four small kalpas the world arises and endures.
It is destroyed and there is nothingness.
The length of these is equal to one antahkalpa.
One great kalpa is eighty intermediate ones.

A sutra says:

In the Very Hot Hell are a host of blazing fires
Their bodies are pierced and stabbed by vajras and by tridents.
They are boiled in great copper cauldrons and tied in bandages.
They only rest while burned by fires within and without.

The measure of their lives is unfathomably long. In four stages the word arises, endures, is remains in emptiness. Each of these is counted as one antahkalpa or intermediate kalpa. T of such a kalpa. The Objects of Mindfulness:

Those of the Very Hot Hell experience their sufferings for half an antahkalpa. This should b mind.

g) The Avici Hell

Below that:

In the Uninterrupted Hell, in blazing iron houses
Aside from the clamor of lamentation of the Hell beings,
The fire and those beings cannot be separately seen.
Just As the burning flame of a lamp will cling to its center,
There is just a spark of life in the center of the fire.

They have to suffer this for the time of one antahkalpa.
Since there is no greater suffering that this,
Therefore it is called the Uninterrupted Hell.

The Letter to Students says:

As dry grass burns from the heart, they are burned by blazing fires.
From throats and mouths repeatedly issue smoky flames.
Falling from inner hunger, their innards burst and splatter.
They produce an indescribable howling cry.

Wishing to be freed from their great suffering,
Again and again, they watch from within the opening gates
Seeing other places, they wait until they open.
As soon as they go forward the gates shut tight again.

Then there is further pain of unbearable depression.
Like a falling rain of sharp and blazing arrows, the guardians beat them with sticks, and boiling tears flow down.

Because they are being stewed in a pot of molten iron, Drinking in a heaped up wreath of to Smoke rises from the holes of mouth, and nose, and ears.
Eyes and brains ooze like cream in blazing tongues of flame.
That fire, as if furious at those piled bodies,
Flare like piles of dry firewood that are being kindled.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Among the unbearable sufferings of all of these
Those of the Avici Hell are worst of all.

The Analysis of Karma says:

At the gates of the Avici Hell is an iron mountain of 60,000 pagtse. The Hell beings, exhausted by getting by it, transmigrate to new lives.

There are an immeasurable number of them, it is taught. This is manifested by very heavy k abandoned Dharma, broken samaya etc. The Objects of Mindfulness says:

Those of the Avici Hell transmigrate after having passed there an intermediate kalpa. Even they are born as a king, their powers will not be sound, so it has been taught.

h) The summary of the meaning of these

Now there is the summary:

In each these different Hells that have been mentioned above,
The tongues of flame are seven times hotter than the last.
Each is lower, with greater suffering, than the last.
Beings suffer until their karma is exhausted.

As for these Hells that have just been described, the tongues of flame become seven times the next. The Analysis says:

Hellfire from one to the next Increases by seven times.
Likewise the sufferings
Are seven times the last.

More and more sufferings are stacked up, like blisters on top of leprosy. As if their sensatio seven times stronger, their sufferings are also seven times stronger. They must endure this until th exhausted.

i) The ephemeral Hells

i) The Main Explanation of the temporary Hells

Included among these Hells are the following:

The ephemeral Hells may be in the mountains, trees, or sky.
In water, fire, or rocks, or in uncertain places.
Groups or single beings remain there for a while.
In those places they suffer their respective torments.
That explains their being called "ephemeral Hells."

The beings of the ephemeral Hells are in mountains, rocks, water, fire, space, and so on, or places, like a pestle, rope, refuse rag, a burning piece of wood, or a log. There may be different kin together, or one alone. They may be hot, cold, wet, or dry, ripped apart, cut up, boiled, whatever sort of suffe but each of them unbearable. This may last half a day and night, just a moment, or for all eternity, since the force of different karmas. Thus they are called ephemeral. The Sutra on Teachings that are the Bas says:

Then son of Maudgal from across the ocean, the Hell of the beings of the ephemeral Hells a in places like a pestle, or a tree, and they are seen to be tormented by many different kinds

Within the realm of samsara, beings have no pleasure.
They are like the beings of the ephemeral Hells,
All tormented by their individual sufferings,
As if they had been forced to live in a blazing land.

ii) In order to refute other kinds of wrong conceptions:

Some mistakenly say that the name "ephemeral"
Is given as few are there, or since their lives are short.
But scorpions live for quite a while among the rocks.
And once there was an ephemeral Hell that had the form
Of five hundred shravakas gathered for their noontime meal.
It is said that they took up weapons and struck each other.

Some say are called ephemeral since each day they become non-existent. This is not the ri

After many human generations in an iron house
Still they have many years to remain within this Hell.

With such harm, and some alone and companionless, they are called ephemeral. When Sh arrived in a vihara, from one with a net beating a gandi, as soon as 500 beings had taken th shravakas, they quarreled with each other, and resolved it with weapons. The moment the hostilities were c longer seen, so the scriptures say.

j) The Neighboring Hells

i) The brief teaching.

Around the Avici Hell are 16 others:

The Neighboring Hells are found by the Uninterrupted Hell.
They are found in each of its cardinal directions.
These are the fire pit Hell, the Hell of putrid stench,
The plain of weapons, and the river without a ford.
In all there are four times four--sixteen such Hells.

ii) The extensive explanation

There are six sections describing these, which open in whatever direction one turns.

a)) The Fire Pit Hell:

Thinking that its ten million gates have now been opened,
Beings come forth from within the uninterrupted Hell.
Seeing shady river valleys, when they enter the running water,
Having sunk into blazing coals up to their knees,
Their flesh is burned away, leaving bones as white as lotuses.
Then revived, as before, their suffering is extreme.

First, their karma mostly restrains them in the iron houses of the Avici Hell, where sufferings afflicted with increasing sufferings. Then, thinking that the gates have opened, they flee. As they app iron dogs, they seem to see a pleasant shady ravine. About what they suffer the Letter to Students say

A crowd of torn people are herded by dogs with gaping jaws
Long thorn-like fangs with vajra tips rip at their bodies.
There is a ravine and river completely lacking water,
Full of dismal ashes and licking tongues of flame.

While driven they are mutilated by corners of rocks,
Having sharp razor points that tear unbearably.
Fleeing into the river, they sink into the ashes.
Their flesh and bones are burned, and then they revive again,

b)) When they think they are free,

Here is what they reach:

As soon as they enter the cooling ponds that they have seen,
They sink in a putrid, stinking mire of rotting corpses.
Worms with metal beaks of copper, iron, and gold,
Piercing their bodies, bore and tunnel into them.

The Letter to Students says:

Some move about like little worms and insects.
Because of the crowd their bodies are immobile.
Or else they rot away upon the fields.
With lives blocked by the trap of their karmic nature
They live without being even able to move.

c)) Then:

As soon as they return to the pleasant plains they have seen
They are cut to pieces by blazing daggers while still alive.

The Letter to Students says:

Into a grove whose branches are swords with dagger leaves,
They run exhausted, and of course their bodies are wounded,
by many three pointed short spears, arrows, and sharp swords Fangs in the mouth of the Lord of Death pierce as they fall.

d)) And then:

When they have entered into pleasant leafy groves,

They are overcome by a forest of sharp swords

The Letter to Students says:

Enduring many torments difficult to bear
Day and night, their bodies are grievously destroyed.
As they go among green trees which they formerly saw
They cannot help falling onto leaves of a hundred weapons.
There in long entanglements they are badly wounded.

e)) And then

Passing from there to a very pleasant mountain peak,
They see their former homeland and go as if they were summoned.
Flesh and blood are scraped away with sharp iron spoons.
Vultures peck their brains, as they are climbing upward.
Then they think that they are called to descend the mountain,
And again they are scraped by the spoons, as when they first went up.
At the edge of the plain are men and women with sharpened beaks.
In the blazing embrace of these their suffering is extreme.
After that they are eaten by many dogs and jackals.

Then they think that there is a very pleasant mountain. When they go there, these former m to see all the features of the countries where they formerly lived, and seeing people once clo thinking they are calling, they ascend. As they are scraped with iron spoons, their flesh and blood multiplies.
down, they suffer the same pains of being scraped as when they went up. The Letter to Students says:

As they quickly climb this slope of unbearable shalmali trees,
There is a host of briars. Sharp spoons scrape them through.
With terrible pain, they destroy inside, and then subside.

And also:

When they move downward, from iron briars going upward,
They Remember many sharp things roughly piercing their bodies,
Then sometimes by the sharpness and the painfulness

Of blazing three pointed spears, their bodies cannot descend.

Then by crows whose beaks are marked with symbolic weapons
They are driven along by ordinary needs
Of their bellies and such, and as they are lost and scattered.
Some fall into fearful abysses of mountain chasms.

Also

From all the women a hundred tongues of flame come forth.
They live ornamented by massive wreaths of flame.
Toothed like saws these do not ever leave their bodies.
Lured into pleasant groves, they embrace unite with them.

f)) And then:

Also having seen the cool streams of flowing rivers,
As soon as they joyfully go and are immersed in them,
They sink to their waists in hot ashes, and flesh and bones are consumed.
They see the guards of Yama keeping them from the two banks.
There they have to suffer for many thousands of years.

The Objects of Mindfulness says:

When they go there, they see streams. As soon as they step into them up to their waists, th flesh is burned, and even their bones turn to powder and separate from them. When again t revived, on the banks where they formerly were, the beings of the Lord of Death appear to b

k) The instruction on eliminating those sufferings.

They are as follows:

If someone in the Hells remains unterrified,
But knows the nature of these endless samsaric torments,
Then that person will have the means of passing beyond them.

That is the instruction.

2) The Cold Hells,

There are three sections

a) The eight cold Hells.

Now the sufferings of cold are explained:

There are also eight Hells where there are the torments of cold.
In extremely frigid places of snow and so forth,
Arbuda, Nnirarbuda, Atata, and Hahava Huhuva and Utpala, Padma and Mahapadma.
In blackest darkness their bodies are ravished by swirling blizzards, Devoured by living things with sharp and flaming beaks.
Until they reach the end of their karma they shiver there.

Having been afflicted, in cold and snowy places, cold and dark, blasted by black winds, they blisters and, when the blisters burst, with wounds. Except for sneezing "achu!" they cannot lament, "kye 'ud!" and their teeth chatter, so that no speech can get out. They are wounded like a blue ut fine roots and big leaves turned inside out. Like a red lotus, they are split into four pieces. Like a big lotus split into eight pieces. From their wounds come fine streams of fluid. Insects crawl in and eat. As for their sufferings from cold, the Letter to Students says:

They are many beyond example, exposing even their bones.
Their hungry bodies shiver, becoming shriveled and crooked. A hundred blisters rise with flu break,
Insects ravage them with beaks as sharp as swords
To their feet the blood and gore comes dripping down.
Their teeth chatter helplessly. Their head and body hairs tremble.
Sore eyes, ears, throats and noses, torment all these beings.
With bodies and minds corrupted to the very center,
They remain in those Cold Hells, and loudly cry and wail.

b) The explanation of the measure of time.

The time of their suffering in these eight Hells:

The length of their lives in the Hell which is called Arbuda
Is as long as it would take to empty out
A sesame store in Kosala containing 200 bushels
By removing only a single grain in a century,
In each of the other cold Hells, it is twenty times the last.

The Objects of Mindfulness says:

If the storage bin of the city of Kosala were full of sesame seed full of sesame seed without a lives of the beings in the Blistering Hell are as long as it would take to empty it by removing one grai years. The others each last for twenty times longer than the last.

In accord with this, the Abhidharmakosha says:

From within a sesame store every hundred years
Removing a single seed until they all are emptied,
That is the length of life within the Blistering Hell.
The lives each of the others are twenty times the last.

c) The Instruction of striving in the means of liberation from these Hells

Thus thinking of these immeasurable sufferings of heat and cold:

Beings with minds should then arouse their strength of effort
To conquer these merely mental worlds of Hell.

So it is taught. The Spiritual Letter says:

Evildoers, as soon as their breath has ceased,
When they are cut off by time, at the end of life,
Having heard of Hell's measureless sufferings,
To be fearless through emptiness requires the vajra nature.

If having seen pictures of Hell and heard of it,
Remembering, reading, or merely glancing at pictures,
People are often stricken with unbearable fear
Why speak of the actual experiences of ripening?

b. The suffering of the hungry ghosts,

There are three sections.

1) The way they live:

Pretas stay and roam in their world of hungry ghosts.
Their bodies are large with great paunches. Their hands and feet are small.
Their necks are slim with mouths no bigger than a needle.
Finding no food or drink, they are racked by hunger and thirst.
Trees and flowers, medicinal herbs, and wholesome things
Wither away as soon as these pretas look at them.
Externally they eat vomit, or things that are foul and vile.
If they do see food and drink, they seem to be kept away.
Because of inner defilement, their food is consumed by fire.
Smoky tongues of flame are spewing from their mouths.
Obscured with malicious anger, they always fear deprivation.
In terrifying places, they suffer helplessly.

Living in space, externals are obscured for them, and since externals they do experience are they do not get what they want. Their evil bodies have to eat evil vomit, and even if these ravening and drink, it seems to be guarded, or as soon as they get to it, it dries up. By that they suffer. Their inne obscurations are even worse. Flames blaze from their bellies, and emit smoke. As for their obscurations generally they always suffer poverty, deprivation, hunger, thirst, ugly forms, and sensory distortion. They always h by others. They are fearful, without refuge and protector. The Letter to Students says:

Unbearably tortured by thirst, they seem to see spotless streams.

They want to drink, but as soon as they can, the water
Is full of clots of hair, mixed with fish dung and pus
Trailing mud and slime, and blood and excrement.

In time winds disperse the water, and they are among cool mountains.
If there they see green growing groves of sandalwood
Above them, the forest flames, with sharp thick tongues of fire,
Blazing embers fall and they cannot help themselves.

Fearful ocean waves rise and crash over them
Even if they get beyond that foamy trouble,
Millions of harsh red clouds of howling, gritty wind
Whirl and drown everything in a fearful, sandy desert.

If the rain-clouds come that they are praying for,
A rain of iron arrows, falls with smoke and embers,
Hot vajra boulders crush and ravish them completely,
Seeming of golden color, wreathed with orange lightning,
A rain of these falls everywhere upon their bodies.

2) Those who live in the air and in space:

As for this subtle assembly:

The spirits of the air are evil hungry ghosts.
By miraculous actions they go unhindered anywhere,
Accomplishing their various manifestations of harm.
Bringing sickness, they ravish health and cut off life
A month for human beings is just a day for them.
Five hundred years of theirs are fifty thousand of ours.
They suffer thus within the realms of the Lord of Death.

These too are among the hungry ghosts, and their suffering is immeasurable. Their realm is unpleasant, dangerous, fearful, hungry and th is close to their hearts is infected with fatal diseases. They themselves are always tormented by these spread these diseases. Life and health are ravished away, and only harm to others is accomplished. The unhappy to meet.

Going about by miraculous power, they appear as guardians of narrow paths. Their individu gates, bubbles, half burned or split pieces of wood, and various dogs and birds. Some by former s enjoyments, but also suffer many sufferings. Mostly events occur at the wrong season and moreover eve enjoyments there are limitless sufferings and so forth. The same text says:

Even in a snowstorm they are afflicted by heat.
Helplessly chilled by winds, they are even cold in a fire.
By such unbearable ripenings they are stupefied.
Various kinds of things wrongly appear to them.
Even the eye of a needle seems many terrifying miles,
With their great bellies, even if they drink an ocean,
It will not wet so far as even the end of their throats.
By the heat of their mouths they are thirsty for even a drop of water.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Hungry ghosts are impoverished by never-ending desire.
The suffering so produced is continuous and unbearable.
Hunger, thirst and cold; heat, fatigue, and fear,
Produce unbearable sufferings that always attend them.

Some with tiny mouths as small the eye of a needle.
And bellies as big as mountains are tormented by hunger.
They cannot get rid of the false perspective of their eyes.
They do not have the power to seek out anything.

Some are naked with bodies formed of skin and bones
They are dry like the sun-baked tops of desert palms.
Some are ablaze with fire from mouths and genitals?
As food of burning sand falls into their gullets.

Some of the lower ones do not even get
Pus and excrement, or blood and other filth.
From their throats, they mutually infect each other.

Buboes arise, and then exude a ripening pus.

For pretas, even in the springtime of their lives,
Even the moon is hot and even the sun is cold.
Trees are fruitless and barren, blasted by their glance,
As soon as they are looked at, rivers and springs dry up.

Sufferings attend them continuous and unhindered.
As for the karmic noose of their evil activity,
The bodies of some of them are quite tenaciously held.
They will not die in five or even ten thousand years.

One human month is counted as a day of the pretas. Five hundred of their years is taught t years.

3) Encouragement to practice Dharma, not Desiring Samsara.

As for the endless ways of suffering:

Having seen this saddening nature of how things are,
Accordingly, persons, to gain their liberation,
Should distance themselves from samsara's hedonic calculus.
By that the true peace of holy Dharma will be established.

That is the good instruction.

c. The Animal Realm

1) Animals too are without happiness:

In the animal realm, those who live within the four oceans
All devour each other, in measureless suffering.
Even if they hide in the dark places of the land,
They fear heat and cold, and hunger and thirst, and being eaten.
Wild beasts and birds throughout the human realm
Are in danger from sharp weapons and also from each other.
Horses, oxen, camels, as well as donkeys and such,
Have limitless pains of carrying burdens and being beaten.

They are killed for their skins, and for their meat and bones.
They cannot see the limitless suffering of their nature.

Nagas suffer the pain and pleasure of midday and midnight.
And the pains and pleasures of coming day and coming night.
In some places there fall rains of abrasive, burning sand.
In some they are forsaken, alone without companions.
Mostly stupid, they fear soaring birds and such.
They meet with a great variety of sufferings.
Their lives, uncertain, are sometimes just a day.
Divine Takasaka and others are said to live a kalpa

The great oceans between the four continents are filled without gaps with fish, conches, croc
like, crawling like grain in chang. The big ones eat the little ones, the little ones eat still littler one so forth.
Others from this continent to the surrounding iron mountains-hide under fine in darkness ins since the sun and moon do not appear there. As in the water, they eat one another, and have me of hunger and thirst.
The scattered animals on the face of the world, living in the human realm's mountains, plains sky,
and so forth, small creatures, worms, insects, birds, wild animals, and so forth, each have th sufferings of heat, cold, hunger, thirst, being eaten by each other, and so forth--measureless illness and a particular they are tormented by hunters, fishermen, and birds of prey. Some die for their flesh, skins, and bon beaten and bleeding and then killed at the end of their labors, and have limitless other sufferings.
In the serpent realm too though there are appropriate pleasures of day and night, morning a
are also the many particular sufferings of hot and cold, hunger and thirst, and so forth.
Where some live thousands of rains fall, and some are forsaken by any. Some are entirely a companionless. In general they are stupid and afraid of birds, vidya mantra, and immeasura phenomena. Their lives are uncertain. Some live only an instant, a day, and so forth. The l like Takasaka, live for an intermediate kalpa. The Abhidharmakosha says:

That of Takasaka is a kalpa.

The Sutra Requested by Ocean says:

He lives in the ocean for an intermediate kalpa.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Those who live within the animal realm
Have various sufferings of bondage and beating.
They are worked and driven with whips and hooks and so forth.

2) The instruction to be diligent in the Dharma:

Having thought about this, those who want liberation
From the world of animals, to benefit themselves,
Should customarily travel the path of accurate vision.
Striving day and night to be absorbed in the wholesome.

For these reasons, those desiring liberation from the fate of those who have gone astray am
from the goodness and so forth of holy Dharma, should strive with this opportunity of the great hu path of the ten virtues that accord with merit, the four dhyanas, and the four formless attainments. This instruction of the ultimate great path of liberation through the accumulations of merit and wisdom. Its essence compassion. Strive to meditate on that path by the six paramitas and so forth.

d. The human realm,

There are nine sections:

1) The torments of the eight sufferings:

Now, though they have attained the higher realms:

Humans also have no chance of happiness.
Sorrows, unhappiness, strife, and war and such,
Before we are rid of one, we suffer with another.
Sometimes our food is changed by being mixed with poison.
Food, clothing and requisites fail us, and therefore we get sick.
Later sufferings we have ripened then come forth.
There are the three kinds of suffering and also the following:
Birth and age, sickness, death and hostile people;
Being parted from those we love and what we want,
As well as the pain of having to deal with what we get.
The suffering of these eight is without measure and end.

What kinds of suffering do people have? The three great root sufferings are the sufferings

1). Suffering,
2). Change
3). Conditioned existence.

The eight kinds of suffering that always grasp us in samsara are:

1). Birth,
2). age
3). sickness
4). death
5). meeting with hostile enemies
6). being separated from dear intimates 7). not getting what one wants 8). sufferings intimately associated with the five skandhas.

In the suffering of suffering, one misery is heaped on another. It is like our father dying, and mother
dies too.
In The suffering of change, as much as one's present pleasure is the suffering it emanates.
house
falling apart when someone has not been careful about the site, or poison mixed with food.
The suffering of conditioned existence is like having eaten poison. Though our food, clothin
are not directly harmed, they are involved in the subsequent sickness; or from one's senses bei injuries follow on that. The Dulwa Lung says:

The misery of samsara Arises from the skandhas.
There are the three sufferings
Of suffering, change, and conditions.
From the eight varieties,
People suffer terribly.

The suffering of birth is predominantly before birth occurs. Thus wandering in the intermedia lives, spirits who come near and enter, as they grasp existence in the mother's womb:

Prana mind and bindu of ignorant consciousness.
Gather as oval and oblong, and then a solid lump,
Then we are like a disk, then like a fish and tortoise,
In seven weeks a body is gradually engendered.

When the mother is tired, hungry or thirsty, hot or cold,
Even a little bit, we suffer immeasurably.
Dark and close, it is fearful with an unpleasant stench.
We must suffer unbearable suffering of restriction.

After seven weeks, for twenty-six following
The deceptions of the senses and limbs are being established.
For a total period of thirty-six weeks,
The bodily embryo grows and gains the power to move.

Then soon to be extruded between the girdle of bones,
By our karmic energy we are turned head downward.
There is greater pain than dying, like the Crushing and Joining Hell.

After birth, being touched is like being skinned alive.
Being washed is like our flesh being scraped away with razors.

From the intercourse of the father and mother there is a mixing of the essence of the red an which constitutes consciousness. In the first week, the embryo has the shape of a fluid oval like m second, there is an oblong shape like mucus . In the third there is a lump shaped like a finger. In the fourth hard lump like an egg. In the fifth, there is a disk like a lotus petal. In the sixth, it is like the fish as which Vish incarnated. The seventh is like a tortoise. For example, the head, feet, and hands are very non-prominent like those Then for twenty-six weeks, the limbs of the body, the fingers, the eyes and other senses and structures, the hair of the head and body, the heart and veins on the inside, the prana and d blood and lymph, masculine and feminine organs, and so forth develop along with the ayatanas.

During the thirty-sixth week, in the body that has developed, there is the downward moving food and drink, and produced by the fetus's eating and drinking, there is occasional moveme thoughts and the body becomes uncomfortable. During these stages, the fetus dwells in darkness. It see disgusting. There is the suffering of being restricted, and if the mother's belly is too well satisfied, it thinks it is squashed by mountains and oceans. If she is tired and strongly agitated, there is suffering like being thrown over a Young boys, remain with their faces looking inward from the mother's right side, covered by Girls stay looking outward from the left. Then by the wind of karma their heads turn upside been extruded

through the pelvic girdle, at birth they suffer as much as those in the Hell of Crushing and Jo as they are touched, it is as if their skin was being taken off. When they are washed, they suffer immea their flesh were being cut off with razors. The sufferings of growing, can be briefly seen from those of enteri
Of these the Letter to Students says:

Confined, accumulating unbearable unwholesome stench,
Enclosed in unmitigated darkness and narrowness.
Having dwelled in the Hell-like place that is the womb,
The body, completely restricted, must suffer great suffering.

Gradually ground like sesame oil, how will it be born?
But in the sutras it says its life will not be lost.
Indeed its condition is highly fit for suffering.
Living in filth, by looking about it is badly harmed.

By the damp womb it is fettered, in unbearable fearful stench.
The pain of development is as bad as being destroyed.
Like coming on something disgusting, former memory is lost.

2) The suffering of old age

Then in stages:

The suffering of age is very hard to bear.
After youth decays, there will be no more pleasures.
We cannot get up and down without the help of assistants.
As bodily heat is impaired, our food is hard to digest.
Our strength is failing and we begin to tremble,
So that it is difficult either to go or stay.
Our joints decay. We cannot get where we want to go.
The senses fail. The eyes are dim and cannot see
We cannot hear sounds or voices any longer.
There are no sensations of smell and taste and touch.
Memory is not clear. We sink in an ignorant sleep.
Perception of things is failing, so there are few qualities.
Delicious food and such appear as the opposite.
As life is failing, thoughts are disturbed by the fear of death.
Like a child's, our patience and span of attention are small.
We are quickly gone, like a lamp whose oil is spent.

By the slipping away of youth, the strength of the body deteriorates. The joints disintegrate.
not nourish. The senses cloud. The eyes are fuzzy. The ears become increasingly deaf. The Memory is lost. Objects and food that were previously delightful are no longer pleasurable. To the dim organs of the tongue food and drink, do not taste like they did when we were young. We are afraid of dea again, we have little patience. There are such immeasurable sufferings. The Letter to Students says:

Then for all persons, age,
The hand of the Lord of Death,
After it has grasped us
With no chance of letting go,

Our hair turns gray and white,
All our collection of teeth
As if for a joke are taken.

Our joints all come apart.
Our minds become impaired.
Our situation becomes
As bad as being in Hell.

3) As for the suffering of sickness:

The suffering of sickness is very hard to bear.
The bodily nature changes, and mind becomes unhappy.
Our enjoyment of things no longer give us pleasure.
There is increasing fear that we will lose our lives.
We wail a lament about this unbearable suffering.

When we are afflicted with sickness our minds are distressed and no joy arises. Perception
with,
and we are irritated. We must die, or sometimes we just think it would be better if we did. W but at the same time the torment of dying rivals Hell. The Commentary on the Praise of the Hundred A

As for embodied beings
Tormented by sickness,
It feels like being in Hell.
Rising higher and higher,
Such is the misery
Of suffering in samsara.

4) The suffering of death

When one's time is exhausted, or even if it is not really exhausted, but one throws it away:

The suffering of dying is even greater than this.
There is our last meal and our last words are spoken.
For the last time we get dressed. We go to our final sleep.
Body and life, attendants and servants are left behind.
Friends and relations, wealth and enjoyment, are left behind.
We cannot stay, but still we fear to go alone.

For the last time we lie down, rest, talk, eat, get dressed, and come to the last appearances Attendants
and enjoyments are left behind. We has no power to keep living, and leave alone and com thought about how we will do it, with an unhappy heart, with a strong feeling that one's essence is be life ceases.
We experience wandering in the bardo. Without refuge or protector, our skandhas are lifted are taken to the charnel ground. We are eaten by jackals and so forth. Our assembled intimates suffer i Letter to Students says:

How is it going to be?
This fearful Lord of Death
Walking at my head,
Whether oppressed or doubtful,
The pain will seem like vajra.

Those who harm the mind,
After having oppressed it
Relations and the household
With tears streaming down their faces
We see their pain like vajra.

That having infiltrated
Into our deepest nature Is most unbearable
like entering murky darkness.

This body we guarded so zealously
And all its accustomed pleasures
Will be completely lost.

Firmly bound at the feet
Of the terrible Lord of Death
Our head tuft is pulled out,
Our fate will be determined.

As we are taken by him,
By the roar of those nearby
One's many screams and cries
Are never heard at all.

Between water hard to cross and piled heaps of boulders, Pricked by sharp piercing thorns,
Those on this frightful path,
Bound by the noose of time,
By the things of the Lord of Death
They are fiercely driven with sticks
And herded like animals.

5) The suffering of meeting with enemies:

By the suffering of meeting people we dislike
We are oppressed by fear of the danger of being unpleasantly harmed.
If we meet with hostile enemies, we will no longer be able to have our bodies, lives, and enjo

6) The suffering of being separated from those dear to us:

To separate from people and the country that we love
Causes sorrow, lamentation, and unhappiness.
Remembering their qualities, we are tormented by longing.

If we are separated from our dear friends and relatives who are kind to us, remembering the minds are tormented with suffering.

7) The suffering of deprivation.

As for the suffering of being deprived of desirables:

In the suffering of being deprived of what we want
A tormented mind arises when we do not succeed.
We are worn out by poverty, like hungry and thirsty pretas.

If we do not succeed in our goals, our minds are unhappy. When we are deprived of posses something desirable, we are tormented by unhappiness.

8) The suffering of defilement:

Form, feeling, perception, formations, and consciousness
Which comprise the five perpetuating skandhas,
Because of defilement are the ground of all suffering.
They have been said to be its source, support, and vessel.

The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, because the closely connected skandhas are defiled, they are the place of all suffe
They are the support of all suffering. They are the vessel of all suffering. They are the sou suffering. Moreover, since form manifests the harm of suffering, it is its place. Since feeling takes on suffering, it is its vessel. Since perception is the first gate to being disturbed by conceptualization, it is its support. Since the doer and understander arise among formations consciousness, they are its source.

These are so explained in the Great Commentary on the Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand

9) The Instruction of exertion in the means of liberation from this.

Now there is the instruction on eliminating unhappiness:

Thus within the limits of this human world,
With suffering as cause and effect, there is no happiness.
To be liberated from this, think of the excellent Dharma.

That offers the means of liberation from samsara.

As for the path, by the action of the cause of suffering, unhappiness, there is subsequent su Sometimes,
by the fruition of former actions, there will be suffering. We should be liberated from that.

e. The suffering of the asuras,

1) How they are unhappy:

a) The way of their unhappiness:

Asuras likewise are without a chance of happiness.
Through hatred they have senseless quarrels, disputes, and wars.
Through envy they cannot bear the splendor of the gods.
Their warlike perspective supports many hundreds of sufferings.

They fight and quarrel even with their own kind. Having seen the happiness and wealth of th gods, they are tormented with fires of hatred and jealousy. Sometimes, in the wars which they figh their heads and limbs are cut off. They are injured by vajras, arrows, wheels, and so forth, and sometim from fear of dying. The Spiritual Letter says:

Since by their nature asuras
Hate the splendor of the gods,
Their minds all suffer greatly Though they are knowledgeable,
by the obscurations of beings,
They do not see things truly.

As for this explanation that they do not see truly, their seeing is like that of the path of seeing shravakas and pratyekabuddhas, but not like that of the mahayana. The Edifice of the Three jewels sa

If one explains an account of the dharmas of those lives, the gods, nagas, asuras, and sky soarers of the animal realm, the kinnaras, and the big bellied hungry ghosts beyond number respect to dharma do not have even a particle of the dharma eye, nor do they attain spotles

Therefore, the way of their vehicles should be realized.
b) The instruction to be diligent in practicing Dharma:

Therefore, those who are going to happiness and peace
Should quickly practice the Dharma, that leads to liberation.

f. The suffering of the gods

There are four sections

1) the suffering produced by death and transmigration.

Thus in the heavenly realms:

Also the gods of the realm of desire have endless suffering.
Drunk with desire, they are careless. They fall in the changes of death.
Their flowers wither, their thrones no longer give them pleasure.
Abandoned by their friends, they dread their coming state.
For a week these gods will have unbearable emotions,

The victorious Four Great Kings and the Thirty-three, and the Twin Gods, and the Ganden g Thrulga gods and Shenthrul Wangje appear to be happy. But even this happiness does not suffering of change and the suffering of conditions. At the time of their deaths, the color of their bodies l unpleasant. Their thrones do not please them. The flowers wreathing their brows wither. Their clothes smell b have never experienced before arises. They are troubled by the perception that they will leave their divi and be alone.
With the divine eye, they see the place where they will be born, they are terrified. When the from far away
the gods who are their father and mother or intimates call their names, saying, "May you be beings in Jambuling. There having practiced the ten virtues, once again may you be born here in the said that and scattered flowers, they depart. The day of such gods is a week. The Spiritual Letter sa

In the celestial realms, as they are very happy,
The suffering of death and transmigration is therefore great.
Having contemplated that, superior ones
Do not crave for celestial realms that will be exhausted.

Their color of their bodies becomes unpleasant to see.
Their thrones no longer please them. Their wreaths of flowers wither.
Their clothes smell bad; and irresistibly in their bodies,
Arises a dread that they have never felt before.

These are the five presages of being summoned by death
And their transmigration from the celestial realm.
That arise for gods within the realm of the gods.

As with men on the earth who are going to die
There are those who are summoned to view their deaths.

2) The associated suffering of their subsequent samsaric birth

The samadhi gods of such realms of form, as the realms of Bhrama, Exhausting their former karma, fall down into samsara.
They suffer the suffering of having foreseen this change.
They see how their karma of formless shamatha will be exhausted.
They suffer anticipating their subsequent state of samsara.
Though they have gone to heaven, they cannot rely on it.
Therefore, fortunate ones should gain enlightenment.

During their great fruition in the Bhrama realms, the samadhi-gods have natural bliss. But th
this is transformed. they suffer over entering into their subsequent births. Nagarjuna says:

Those with self-existing samadhi like the Bhrama realms,
Though they have the brilliance of limitless light and color,
Since they have not seen their latent ego-conceptions,
After they die, they cannot help being born in Hell.

Those gods who remain one-pointedly in formless shamatha, also die and transmigrate, and formations of suffering on seeing their subsequent samsaric birth, they must be reborn. The
says:

Since they are in such a samsaric state asuras
As well as Hell beings, animals, and hungry ghosts
Are not good births and therefore we should know these births
To be the vessels of many further kinds of harm

3) The suffering of defiled bliss:

All beings who are attached to samsaric happiness
Are tormented for their craving in a fiery pit.

Moreover, they sow the seeds of subsequent existences in the lower realms where there wil flow of the four great currents. The Letter to Students says:

Gathering fiery suffering in the world of destruction,
Beings who expect to be happy are manifesting pride.
They will be flung to the giant mouth of the Lord of Death.
They sow the seeds of the tree of subsequent rebirths.

4) How we should establish liberation,

There are four sections.

a) How if we do not establish it, we shall not attain liberation

We may think that we will really be protected by the Buddha from the lower realms, but here
have done evil deeds, the fruition of the lower realms is ripening within us. As for the teaching tha difficult to have an opportunity of being seen with compassion:

Enlightenment and the means to it depend on us.
So it has been said by the Teacher of gods and men.
It cannot be the incidental gift of others,

Just as dreams in the coma of sleep cannot be stopped.
If this could be done, samsara would already have been emptied
By the rays of compassion of the Tathagata and his children.
You yourself must gird yourself in the armor of effort.
Now is the time to ascend the path of liberation.

Being liberated from the lower realms and from samsara depends on our own efforts. This c any amount of effort or skillful means by someone else. The vinaya says:

I, by teaching you the means of liberation
Teach you to strive for freedom depending on yourselves.

That is the right idea. Attempting to let the karma of one's self-accumulated projections reve
like eliminating a dream, by going to sleep and having another dream. If that was workable, thes samsaric
beings would already have been emptied previously by the light rays of compassion of the b

b) Since we have not been tamed by the buddhas in the past, if we do not make an effort n liberated by them.

Therefore, by our own defects:

Those like us who have not practiced the remedy,
As was done by countless buddhas in the past,
Will wander on the desolate path which is samsara,
Whose nature is to be a path of evil deeds.
Think how, as before, if we do not make an effort,
We will produce the sufferings existing within the six realms.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 4.13-14

For the sake of benefiting sentient beings
There have been countless buddhas, teaching in the past;
Though this is so, simply because of my own defects,
I have not been the object of their curative actions.

If now again I act in such a way as that,
Having acted again and again in just that way,
How will I be worthy of their consideration?

c) The instruction that compassion will not enter into bad karma:

The sufferings of samsara are as limitless as the sky.
As unbearable as fire, and as various as all objects.
Our lack of care for ourselves is really such a shame.
How can we have a chance to enter into compassion.
The wise and skillful deeds of buddha activity
Are said to depend on the karma of those who are to be tamed.
Therefore having come to recognize our faults,
Mindful in our hearts of the suffering of samsara,
So that we and beings may be liberated from samsara,
Let us truly embark upon the path of peace.

The sufferings of samsara are as limitless as space and cannot be encompassed by though fire difficult to endure. Since their existence is not reasonable, enduring the variety of seemi and white apparent external objects is not right. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 4.29

This is an inappropriate and shameful object of patience.

Since such patience is truly shameless. Not seeing the rays of the sun of the Buddha's com like people in the darkness under the earth who have no chance to enter into sunlight. Just as t the earth has its own impure manner of existence, unassociated with conditions that produce light, within t of one's own being, it is difficult for compassion to have an opportunity. The compassion of the Victo appears only in accord with the merit and good fortune of those who are to be tamed, The Avatamsaka Su

Just as, even if the disk of the moon arises,
When there is no vessel, it will not shine there,
Also the ever-shining moon of the Buddha's compassion

Will not shine where there is no vessel of good fortune.

Since this is so, it is right to exert ourselves in the means of true liberation.

d) How, even though suffering has been explained, we are not saddened

Suitability for that is like this:

If our suffering now is hardly bearable,
How will we bear the pain that is truly unbearable.
If we are not even a little sorry when this is explained,
Our hearts must be great lumps, composed of the hardest iron.
Our minds must surely be as thoughtless as a stone.

Shantideva says: ???

If even the amount of suffering I have now
Is irresistible and more than I can bear,
What about the sufferings of sentient beings in Hell?
How will I be able to bear such pain as theirs?

Think about that, and don't just say "Well it isn't my fault!" The Basket-like Talk says:

We hear of samsaric suffering, and yet we are not sad.
We who are like that are certainly very foolish.
As if we were made of stone or a piece of solid iron.
We clearly show ourselves to be just mindless fools.

C. It is right to contemplate the sufferings of samsara.

For that reason:

Samsara is a valley of unbearable suffering.
Knowing mind as the source of many different kleshas, Kleshas and sub-kleshas, and those that are universal,
Who would want this state of samsara to increase further?
So let us quickly be victorious over samsara.

The nature of samsara is suffering. The fruition of suffering is the five skandhas. These are causes. The five root kleshas and the twenty lesser kleshas are all included in the truth that all is sufferin nature of this great source of many illnesses and harms should properly make us sad.

D. the dedication of merit of the situation

Now the merit of proclaiming the nature of these in song is dedicated as a cause of benefitin
beings:

Therefore, by this dharma feast, the source of happiness,
May as many beings as dwell in the three habitations
Be able to nourish themselves on joy and happiness,
Wearied by all the various kinds of suffering,
Today may the nature of mind, be able to come to rest.

That is the aspiration. And by the auspiciously-caused merit of this wreath of genuine words may all the beings here in the three worlds of beginningless samsara, impoverished and exhaust accumulation of merit, be enriched by the true wealth of the noble ones, so that their wearin

May those tormented by masses of fire in Hell and so forth
Be cooled by a lake of celestial water gently falling.
Wreathed in a circlet of jewels, their faces adorned in light,
Having gone to the higher realms, may they reach enlightenment.

Thus may hungry ghosts, animals, and asuras,
Human beings and gods, becoming of equal fortune,
Having attained the joy of the celestial realms,
Attain the enlightened peace, where not even an atom exists.

Awakening from the pure view of good dharmas of meditation.
And also the absorptions of the four formless attainments,
By having completely perfected themselves in merit and wisdom
May they attain a state like that of lord Amitabha.

By this true and virtuous intention which is mine

May all samsaric beings be led to total peace,
Striving day and night, may they perfect the two benefits.
May they attain the limitless major and minor marks.

IV This is the commentary on the fourth chapter of the GREAT PERFECTION, THE NATUR
THE EASER OF WEARINESS, "Karma, Cause, and Effect."

The fourth chapter, "Karma, Cause, and Effect," has four parts:

A. The brief teaching of the essence,
B. The extensive explanation of the nature,
C. The final summary,
D. The dedication of merit.

A. The brief teaching of the essence.

Why do these lives of wandering in the sufferings of samsara, each with its own appearance sorrow appear? They occur because of karma:

Thus, samsara's heights and depths of pleasure and pain
Arise from former accumulations of our karma.
That is how it has been taught by the Sage, the Buddha.

From the different conditions of beings, different fruitions of their associated karma exist. Ma connection with their happiness and sorrow ripen. The Hundred Actions says:

E ma ho! Karma comes from the world.
Joy and sorrow are a painting produced by karma.
The assembly of conditions arises karmically.
Happiness and suffering are produced by karma.

Also it says:

Karmas over the time a hundred kalpas
Do not dissipate, but accumulate.
Once embodied beings have acquired them
The ripening of their fruition is assured.

The White Lotus says:

Karma, like a painter, produces everything.
Karmic patterns are choreography of a dance.

The Gathering the Accumulations of Enlightenment says:

Having as well as being without the three-fold kleshas
Are established according to merit and karma of liberation.
Because of mind, karma, and the causes of beings,
Many karmas are gathered up, and then remain like seeds.

B. The extensive explanation of the nature of karma, has two sections.

1. The establishment of the samsaric world,
2. Being connected to peace.

1. The establishment of samsara.

There are three sections

a. The brief teaching,
b. The extended explanation,
c. How to eliminate it.

a. The brief teaching

From the establishment of the samsaric world, and being connected to peace, this is the firs

The black and white actions that are the formations of samsara
Have the nature of the ten wholesome and unwholesome actions.

The ten unwholesome action and the ten wholesome ones that accord with merit establish s
What are they? The Precious Mala says:

Not cutting off life, and giving up thievery;
Leaving alone the spouses of other people;

With no talk that is frivolous, wrong and rough,
Keeping our speech both true and genuine.
Without the attitudes of desire and anger,
Having completely abandoned the view of ego,
These ten actions are the white karmic path.
The opposites are the path of unwholesome blackness.

These unwholesome actions produce suffering and the lower realms. By the wholesome on happiness and the higher realms. The Objects of Mindfulness says:

By unwholesome ones we gain suffering and the lower realms,
By wholesome ones there is happiness and the higher realms.

The Sutra on Production of Karmic Phenomena says:

The Householder Toutaputra, the bhramin's son, asked, Kye Gautama, by what cause and conditions are sentient beings short or tall, have many illnesses or few illnesses, have a pleasant or unpleasant color, great or small powers, exalted or low caste, great or small activities, and great or small prajña?
The Buddha spoke saying, "O Bhramin's son, sentient beings are as they are because of karma. Their karmic roles are performed. They have their karmic birth-places. They depen on karma. Low, high, and middle, exalted, degraded, bad, and good ones develop. The kar of sentient beings is various. Their views are various. Their actions are various. By black karma sentient beings are born among hell beings, pretas, or animals. By white karma they born among gods and human beings.

b. The extended explanation,

There are three parts

1) The support,
2) The supported,
3) The fruition.

1) The support

There are ten sections,

a) The explanation of alaya and consciousness,

The supporting ground of these is the neutral alaya.
As if on the surface of a mirror without reflections,
Luminous awareness, without conceptual objects,
Produces a ground for such reflections to arise,
It is like the luminous clarity of a mirror.
From that comes the consciousness of the five sense faculties.
As the five senses fixate their objects, such as form,
In its own nature this is not conceptual;
Rather they are like reflections in a mirror.
After that occurs, there rise the awarenesses
Of the divided objects of grasping and fixation.
Within successive moments, as these are fixated or not,
There may be conceptualization, or there may not.
The former is klesha-mind, and mental consciousness.

Karma and all the resulting appearance of phenomena depend on what is within alaya as its Sutra of the Immaculate Wisdom of Mañjushri says:

Alaya is the ground of everything,
The ground of both samsara and nirvana,
And all the appearances of phenomena.

The suchness of space is called the neutral alaya. The ground of all that is divided it is com neutral and undistinguished.
On top of this, or within it, connected to and supporting the spontaneously present, primordia uncompounded nature of insight is the alaya of reality. This is made into a ground by ignora
The support of the dharmas of samsara, the collections of the eight consciousnesses, with t patterns, is called the alaya of the various habitual patterns. Within this are supported all th compounded nature of good and evil, arising as various joys and sorrows. Here all causes a accord with merit and all goodness according with liberation are also supported. These are naturall
the fruition free from defilement.
As for the extended explanation of these, on top of the neutral alaya are lower wholesome a unwholesome samsaric causes and effects; the aspects according with liberation, the separ nirvana;

and the karma of phenomenal appearances. As many as are perceived are supported.
Wholesome things according with liberation, included in the true path are incidental and com
Therefore, they are supported as separable causes within the alaya of various habitual patte supported on the gotra as fruitions of separation. Such a fruition is dependent in something that the revealed sun depends on the sun behind obscuring clouds which is yet to be revealed. The Earth is in water, water in wind, and wind in space.

But space is not in the dhatus of wind and water and earth.
Thus the skandhas and dhatus, and the powers of sense,
Are supported in existence by karma and the kleshas.

Karma and the kleshas are not as they should be.
They always exist in the form of mental artifacts.
As for these mental artifacts that are not proper entities,
They exist completely in the purity of mind.
But the true nature of the mind does not exist in these.

In this case we speak of:

1). The ground of separation
2). The cause of separation
3). The fruition of separation
4). The separated.

The ground of separation is the element or essence. The cause of separation, eliminating d superimposed on that, is the aspect in accord with liberation, possessed by the wholesome fruition of separation is that when sugatagarbha has been freed from all defilements, the buc manifest.
The separated is the eight consciousnesses, with their various habitual patterns, which depe alaya of the various habitual patterns.
These, according to secret mantra, are known as the basis, producer, and fruition of purifica which is to be purified. The words are different, but the meaning is the same. Within that st dependence, is the nature of ignorance, the alaya of the various habitual patterns. It is the c samsara and its consciousness. That compounded wholesome entities are associated with liberation has been taught for a long time. The alaya of reality is associated with the buddha nirvana,

which depend on it. These arise because of the essence, emptiness; the nature, luminosity compassion. The jewel-like qualities of the alaya of reality, neither defiled nor free from defi spontaneously present as realization of the primordially luminous kayas and wisdoms.

THE NATURAL STATE.

The natural state is natural, complete purity, like space. Though described by the names ma emptiness, completely uncompounded, and so forth, it is not nihilistic empty nothingness; ra realization of spontaneous presence, the luminosity of the kayas and wisdoms. It is empty in the sense completely liberated from all dharmas of samsara. The Continuous Display of Beauty says:

The disk of the moon immaculate and pure,
Always undefiled, is completely full.
By the power of time within this world,
The moon is thought to wax and wane in phases.

Likewise, the alaya of reality
Always is or possesses sugatagarbha.
Alaya here is another word for the essence
As it was taught by the tathagatas.

For individuals who do not understand this Alaya, by the power of habitual patterns,
Is seen as various karmic joys and sorrows,
The Universal affliction of the kleshas.

With a nature pure and undefiled,
With qualities like a wish-fulfilling gem,
Without transmigration, and without change,
It is the perfect awareness of liberation.

Maitreya says:

There is nothing to be illumined,
There is nothing to be improved.
The real looks at the real.

In accountable names, this is called the associated alaya of reality, the beginningless goodn element of dharmas, sugatagarbha, the dhatu, the luminous nature of mind, dharmadhatu, t natural state, the natural purity of suchness, the perfection of prajña, the supporting ground,
arising,
and the producer of the cause of separation. However, what is being named cannot be truly thought.
In addition to the nature of mind there is the support of habitual patterns of samsara, called t the various habitual patterns. What is it like? It is primordially without the karmic natures of
and unwholesome, liberation and apparent phenomena. That is because it is the support and pr incidental productions. Since the arising of both good and evil depends on it, and because i ignorance, it is neutral.
Some say that ignorance rather than the alaya of the various habitual patterns is the suppor producer of the five poisons and phenomenal arising. That is just a change of labels. Why?
the same as the ignorance that discriminates the five poisons, co-emergent ignorance at the tim confused by samsara is also called ignorance.
The support and producer of phenomenal appearance should be examined further. It is not and producer of the wisdom of buddhahood, possessing the two purities, primordial purity ar incidental defilements. That kind of alaya must remain unchanged. The Holy Golden Light s

The alaya that remains, is dharmakaya, the essence.

The Tantra on Exhausting the Basis of the Elements says:

The pure alaya is the same as dharmadhatu.

Pure alaya is not the cause of the dhatu separate from defilement, and they are not related a supported. It does not produce compounded merit and actions of meditation on the path of wisdom, except in the sense of being the support of their phenomenal appearance. Since th

the true path, though classified as deceptive and impermanent, it is therefore accepted that they
the alaya of various habitual patterns. If so, how is it reasonable that it also destroys such thing
This has been said, but it really is like that. It is like a lamp dependent on a wick or a fire de fuel burning until they burn themselves out. Though they depend on alaya, habitual patterns selfpurified by the path of the two accumulations. In that way defilements of the gotra, or of dha purified. Then the phenomenal exists as it did at first, as the manifested luminosity of enligh produces this manifestation is called the condition of purification. Subsequently the antidote purification destroy even themselves. This is because they are good false conceptions impu commentary on the Uttaratantra says:

The beginning of the manifestation of enlightenment occurs because all truths of the path are eliminated.

The Madhyamakavatara says:

By burning all the dry kindling of every knowable object
There is the dharmakaya of the victorious ones.

If so, what about the kind of emptiness that throws nothing away or the thirty seven factors o enlightenment?
Things are gathered into the level of buddhahood without being thrown away, and there are seven factors of enlightenment; but neither of these are included in the path, since at that po over.
The list of names of the great darkness is co-emergent ignorance, the alaya of the various h patterns, obscuration without beginning or end, primordially existing unawareness and so fo
The nature of mind like the sky, besides existing as the beginningless space of the dhatu, o liberation is yogic union, and depending on samsara is the various habitual patterns. These sorrows of the different appearances of samsara and nirvana and the arising of their faults a commentary to the Uttaratantra says:

The dhatu of time without beginning and end
Is the true state of all the various dharmas.
Since this exists, all beings are in nirvana.

THE DIVISIONS OF ALAYA AND THE EIGHT CONSCIOUSNESSES.

The neutral alaya of the various habitual patterns is like a mirror.
The alaya-consciousness, is like the luminous clarity of the mirror.
The consciousnesses of the five gates are like reflections in the mirror.

The mental consciousness is the process of analyzing former objects of these or saying, "Th apparent objects of the five gates," when these first arise.
Klesha-mind occurs after that, when desire, hatred or indifference arise simultaneously with
If there is no such appraisal by klesha-mind, there is no formation of any of the three poison
is accumulated by the six sense-awarenesses. This is how the former teachers say it should b
When the nature of all dharmas is known, the situation of the view, meditation, and action, is Ignorant beings who make biased assertions about such a mind accumulate bad karma.
Thus, the gate of accumulating karma is the mental sense and the five senses along with th
The actual accumulator is mind possessing the kleshas and wishing for goodness, and the c mind. When these are collected, they are collected on top of alaya. The developer, prolifera collector, diminisher and so forth, is alayavijñana. Master Lodrö Tenpa in his great commentary on th
Mahayanasutralankara says:

The mind-sense and the five senses, the eye and so forth, are the gates of karma, and supports of its entering. The mind that thinks of good, bad, and indifferent is the producer. six objects, form and so forth, are what is produced. Alayavijñana is the developer. Alaya is their support and place, like a house.

Alayavijñana is clear and vivid awareness with no fixation of grasper and grasped. Prolifera that are the awarenesses of the five senses.
The eye consciousness has insight of form. It does not arise conceptually, but as consciou
Similarly the ears hear, the nose smells, the tongue tastes, and things that the body can tou
They do not arise conceptually, but as consciousness. The apparent objects that seem to arise as lik five gates are dharmas. They are also the mind consciousness and the dharmas of the obje phenomena, arising as apprehensions, are known as consciousness. The same text says:

As for mind-consciousness, traces like former objects arise, or inferences of non-manifest objects, but these too are objects of consciousness. Also the awarenesses of the five gates alayavijñana, as soon as they have ceased, as former objects or phenomena of the individu awarenesses, are also mental.

The Abhidharmakosha says:

As soon as the six have ceased,

Their consciousness becomes mind.

When there is apparent form, the vivid, luminous object without a grasper is alayavijñana. T awareness that apprehends a form-phenomena is the eye-consciousness. When presentati the instantly arising aspect that thinks and makes the imputation, "this is form," is mind or co Moreover, entering that same instant, labeling that non-conceptuality quickly and precisely a
the object first intuited is labeled in "grasping conception." Detailed analysis that arises after th
"fixating conception." If there is not this continuation of the apprehension of mind at the first instant, not accumulate. So it is maintained by all the lords of yoga. The Doha of the Peak of Knowing

The consciousness of the objects of the six senses,
Is not defiled by simply being grasped.
Without karma, it is also without its ripening.
It is seen without defilement, like space.

b. How consciousness accumulates karma

Now, as for how these consciousnesses accumulate karma:

By the coarsened vice and virtue of conceptual desire
Alaya supports the seeds of constructing what is desired.
Luminous non-thought is reconstructed as form.
Depending on these seeds there is one-pointed, formless non-thought.
The removable two obscurations, the nature of samsara,
Are an essential part of their environment.

From the false conceptions of the coarse grasping and fixation of mind, one falls into the goo karma of the desire realm.
If the natural state is not attained in samadhi, meditation in which conceptualization of appar
as appearances does not arise, karma collects on top of alaya in the realm of form.
By meditating in complete non-thought, in the sense of blocking apparent objects, seeds of formlessness are heaped up in alaya. The chapter on "ultimate samadhi" of the Edifice of th
says:

Whoever is afflicted by desire produced by discursive thoughts, in turn produced by formations of good, bad, and indifferent, falls into the desire realm.

Whoever within this kind of mind has complete non-thought that does not discard objects, produces one-pointed yogic union. Separate from the essence of Dharma, this is conditioned formation of the form realm. Whoever is within neither form or desire, not seein the tracks of mind's objects, and becoming accustomed to this by looking at it a great deal, whirls in the formless realm.
These will never be liberated from these three realms of samsara. Therefore, hearing with true hearing, one should earnestly meditate on that which should be meditated on.

c) The occasion of awareness

Now the occasion of awareness is taught:

When awareness is undistracted, being without all thoughts,
One pointed without the grasping of apparent objects,
That is the time of apprehending the neutral alaya.
When there is no fixation of luminous appearance,
That is the motionless, clear, and luminous alaya-consciousness.
When the five objects are grasped and fixated, affirmed and denied,
And objects are coarsely conceived in the seven consciousnesses,
That is what is called the seven consciousnesses.

Unwavering one-pointedness without any thoughts at all is alaya. When apparent objects a seen, with still attention and without any thoughts at all, this is alayavijñana. Then, when ph objects arise clearly and distinctly this is awareness of the five gates. When any object that arises i the first instant, and then is adulterated by kleshas produced by secondary apprehensions, this fixat klesha mind and the mental consciousness. Those are the seven consciousnesses. The Level of t Bodhicitta says:

Non-thought unconnected to objects is the occasion of alaya. Non-thought connected to ob is the occasion of alayavijñana. Individual apprehension of phenomenal objects is the five g With subsequent analysis of the first conception of objects as for grasping and fixation arisi this is mind-consciousness and the occasion of klesha-mind.

d) Knowing the occasions:

When becoming familiar with these, in the three realms of samsara,
There is formation of the three gates and of suffering.

Knowledge of alaya unconnected with the path of liberation is the stable samadhi of one-poi and the stable conceptionless luminosity of vipashyana. Subsequent arising of objects, with condition of the six senses, in their accumulated coarse awareness of good and evil are the
and desire realms. The reason is that liberation is not accomplished, and grasping and fixation a transcended.
Also, grasping this samadhi of non-thought, and resting in it one pointedly without distraction fixation.
Pure dhyana is meditation in the style of skillful means, the great compassion, and prajña wi phenomenal complexities of subject and object that does not abide in the two extremes. Th with no one-sided nihilistic meditation, is connected with the natural state incomprehensible
the happiness and bliss attained with it. Though miracles and higher perceptions are attained, t haughty delight and pride in them and no fixation of marks.
Since one has to come out again from nihilistic meditation, it does not go beyond samsara.
that today's meditation has strayed into the common-path meditation of the extremists etc.
have
the intrinsic buddha qualities.

e) What predominates in the three chief realms

As for these consciousnessses in their own place and as chief factors of other places, and c ways
of samsara:

In the realm of desire the seven consciousnesses dominate.
In the realm of pure form it is the alaya-consciousness.
In the formless realm there is only the non-thought of alaya.
The other two samsaric styles are merely latent.
Each of the levels should be known like that.

In his commentary examining alaya and wisdom, Loppön Sanje Sangwa says:

Within the desire realm, the seven consciousnesses, the eye-consciousness and so forth are the principal ones, and the others exist as their retinue. In the realm of form, the alayavijñana, and object-engaging consciousness are principal, and the others are their reti In the formless realm, alaya is the principle one The others exist only as latencies.

f) How consciousness dissolves

Here are the extensive divisions of the subject:

Thus when we go to sleep, within the desire realm,
Awareness of the five objects by stages dissolves into mind.
This dissolves within the non-thought of alaya.
This is a one-pointed state without apparent objects.
This too dissolves in dharmadhatu, simplicity.
When it develops again, from the alaya consciousness,
There is isolated mind, known as the mind of dreaming.
What is really nothing appears. We affirm and negate its variety.
This develops further and we awake from sleep.
By entering into the objects and consciousness of the six senses,
Various karmic formations come to be engendered.
This is how things appear throughout the day and night.

When beings of the desire realm go to sleep, the awareness of the five gates of the senses mind gradually dissolve into the mental consciousness. As the mental consciousness disso alayavijñana, luminous non-thought arises for a little while. Those who recognize this and rest within it co dreaming in the luminosity of dharmata. Some teachers of the new transmission say that Al entirely into the impermanent alaya. Alaya dissolves into dharmadhatu. On the subsiding o grasping, the simplicity of empty and luminous dharmata arises and, if it is recognized, confu eliminated.

Sangwa Yeshe says in the Compendium of the Precious Tantras says:

After the seven consciousnesses dissolve into alaya
Alaya dissolves in the purity of space.
Then there is the primordial state of co-emergence,
The natural state of wisdom, emptiness/luminosity.

That is something that every yogin ought to know.

Then these unfold from wisdom again: there is alayavijñana, and by that, from the rising of t consciousness alone, various dreams arise. At this time, objects of habitual mind are grasp having their own individual nature. Also the conceptually activated pranas and the pranas in the na on the seven consciousnesses enter into the side nadis roma and kyangma, and then the central c known as the consciousness that is not equalized with alaya. That is because they are unite prana

and equalized with them. Then they enter into the central channel in one taste. This is the t One
goes into deep sleep without dreams. Some directly experience the characteristics of drean there. Then as for alaya dissolving into dharmadhatu, in the center of the central channel th supreme luminosity. The elements of the coarse nadis do not become this, and the unmoving prana l clear light. The All-illuminator says:

The nadi that exists in the center of the central channel
Does not become supreme luminosity.
The clear space of luminosity without solidity
Is spontaneously present wisdom, the true state of everything.

The essence of prana in the central channel is said to be awareness itself. At the time of its luminosity arises. At that time the bindus of apparent luminosity, radiance, rainbows, and so Empty
luminosity, mind itself free from all complexity arises. The luminosity of union, the great wisd experiences luminous insight arises. Then, when alaya, its consciousness and mind consci within the life-nadi the mind prana that depends completely on memory proliferates. Then b prana

into the nadis that support the individual senses, we wake from sleep. The objects that appe in the usual unreflective grasping and fixation. Then if an object that seems to be form is conceptu apprehended, its individual divisions will be nothingness.

g) If one divides dharmas individually

In the level of pure form, there are the four dhyana states.
These remain within the alaya consciousness.
Though sometimes a subtle consciousness may grasp at objects,
By training in samadhi, this mostly does not occur.

At the time of the actual dhyanas, each one has its own non-thought as the principal thing.
of objects are dormant and exist as a retinue. The first second, and third dhyanas have the concept, analysis, and a feeling of concentrated joy. Up to the fourth some exist there with the three sentient
beings, death, transmigration, and the chance to listen to the dharma.

h) How continuity of mind depends on the four formless skandhas of name:

Consciousness of the formless level is alaya.
In its four one pointed shamathas, those on space and the rest,
Are very subtle feelings, perceptions, formations, and consciousness,
On these four skandhas of name, depends mind's continuity.
We may not awake from one-pointed samadhi or a kalpa.
When this is examined, no virtuous seeds are planted at all.

Before death, feeling, perception, formations, and consciousness dissolve into alaya. These known as the skandhas of name. The mental body, depending on the continuity of mind, go one-pointed shamatha, resting in the four states of limitless space, time, consciousness, and perception

nor non-perception. Even after an entire kalpa, like lapsing into deep sleep, no good karma produced. Though no actual bad karma will have been produced either, intrinsic karmic igno and one's natural ignorance increases.

i) How to comprehend the mind of the four formless dhyanas:

Therefore, even this, the mind of the formless dhyanas,
Is left on exhausting the karma of which it is the fruit.

Because it is ignorance, its nature is neutral.
Because it produces repeated errors of cause and effect,
Therefore we need to be liberated from it.

The Sutra on Being Without Suffering says:

By the productive power of former collection of virtue,
Fine houses of the celestial gods are reached and relinquished.
From the formless samadhis too, when their karma is exhausted,
Again one goes with those who are on or under the earth.

j) In particular, how the three-fold awareness of the desire realm of same and different, by b familiar to the mind of desire, also produces the cause of liberation.

As the mind of desire becomes what it is accustomed to,
It also produces the cause of being freed from its highs and lows.

Both the coarse and celestial levels are levels of karma. In particular, since one can becom practicing the Dharma, the Objects of Mindfulness says:

In the desire realm mind becomes coarsened by planting seeds of good and bad. Therefore particular, we should try to work with good dharmas.

i) What consciousness predominates during the day:

By day the seven consciousnesses usually dominate.
The other two natures are then the retinue of these.
Thus the grasping of form by visual consciousness
The luminous aspect, free from thought, is alaya-consciousness.
The aspect of non-thought is alaya itself.
All the other six should be known in a similar way.

The eye seeing form is the eye-consciousness. Clear awareness of luminosity and non-thou alayavijñana. Non-thought is alaya itself. Similarly, for sound, smell, taste, and touch, and w apprehends a remembered object, the consciousnesses apprehend their respective individu awareness is alayavijñana. Non-thought is alaya. When there is the motionless, vivid lumin alayavijñana, individual objects are not hindered, and there is also awareness of them. The luminosity is a

the non-thought is alaya. Also one-pointed entering and dissolving into real alaya exist as laten the stars exist as latencies when the sun rises. Here is how the Commentary Examining Mind and W armor of buddhahood:

Completely non-conceptual awareness rests in alaya. Its mere clarity/luminosity is alayavijñana. Apprehension of individual objects is the six consciousnesses. Entering, dissolving, and non-thought are the situations of alaya.

ii) The way in which these are the same and different

Here is the explanation of how they are the same and different:

Sleep is one-pointed, and when we awake from out of our dreams,
Alaya, the alaya consciousness, and the mind,
And then the six senses also should be known
As successively one and two in one and all in one.

In one-pointed sleep, all awareness is one in alaya. It never fails to be outwardly re-emanat dream, from within that come alayavijñana and superimposed on that, the mind consciousne this time of no external emanation, alaya is of one essence with the consciousness rising fro
mind
consciousness. When we wake from sleep, there is a great deal of external emanation from alaya and all of the eight consciousnesses are still of one nature. As for these, the Secret C
that
the four elements are displayed.
Now if the meaning is summarized very clearly, luminous mind is the support or source of al Within it, samsara and nirvana are completely undivided and undifferentiated. This natural changeless unity is sugatagarbha, the source of samsara and nirvana. The Dohakosha says:

Solitary mind itself is the seed of all.
Whatever emanates as samsara and nirvana.
It bestows the fruition of whatever is desired.
I prostrate to mind, which is like a wish-fulfilling gem.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

To describe the special cause, from which arising occurs,
It is not without causation. It is also not without action,
Not different from appearance; not different from alaya.

If phenomenal appearances were different from it,
In that case, alaya would not be something eternal.
Unmanifested, undestroyed, and permanent,
Alaya completely excludes the four extremes
Existing as the purity of sugatagarbha,
It is said to be the emanation of wisdom.

It and the essence are mutually not different
It is like a finger, pointing to the essence.
The various levels and alaya are also sugatagarbha.
Alaya is that essence, the Sugata has taught.
Though the essence thus is known as alaya.
Those whose minds are weak have no knowledge of this.

The nature pure of causation, the kayas and wisdoms and so forth, is known as the undefile
When it is made into the support of samsara, it is designated as the defiled alaya of the vari patterns.
The different kinds of supported dharmas are of one nature with the supporting ground. Th Abhisamayalankara says:

By particular kinds of supported dharmas
Its divisions are completely to be expressed.

That is the same approach. When there is defilement, it also exists by a different name as c enlightened family nature or essence, in itself pure of every defilement, but needing to be pu separable stains. The above text says:

Just as in the conception of those who do not know
The moon is thought to wax to fullness and wane away.
Though actually the moon neither grows nor diminishes,
That is how it seems to people in the world.

Similarly within the alayavijñana,
Foolish, ignorant beings who do not know how things are Think that things are always growing and diminishing.
Not thinking in this way is known as buddhahood.

Alaya as the ground of all the various dharmas,
Has habitual patterns of pride and all the rest
And so is disturbed by concepts and discursive thoughts.

If it becomes otherwise, it is undefiled.
If it ever attains its natural non-defilement,
Since this is eternal, it will always have it.

The actual moon neither waxes nor wanes; but by the power of time it appears do so. The l nature of mind itself is buddhahood. It does not have the characteristics of joy and sorrow.
beings
see the celestial realms, the lower realms, and so forth. If the real nature is purified, one rea real alaya.
That is what is being said.
That completes the explanation of the arising of alayavijñana and the eight consciousnesses
These are included within the ignorant confusion of the mind-consciousness. The Sutras sa

Mind, the chief, is very quick.
It precedes all the dharmas.

When we do not know the changeless nature, the perfectly established, there is false conce kinds of impure, confused appearance arise, produced within relativity. When these dreamli samsara are eliminated, there is the perfectly established, mind itself. By meditation on the upaya and prajña in the developing and perfecting stages; the primordial ground, the essence, is made realized as it is. That completes the explanation of the ground, the support of karma.

2) The explanation of the supported, karma,

a) The root, ignorance:

The root of karma, dependent dharmas, is ignorance.
Its threefold essence is passion, aggression, and ignorance.
These produce the board of samsara, black and white.

Primordially luminous mind-itself, by not apprehending its own nature, propagates confusion grasping and fixation all over the ground, so that all the sentient beings of samsara are confu Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

As many sentient beings as there are, low, middle, and high,
They have arisen from ignorance. So the Sugata taught.

The lower ones are those in the lower realms. The middle ones are human beings. The hig the gods. Each experiences the joys and sorrows of their own particular kind of karma. Th ignorance. They all equally possess the three poisons. They all equally possess unwholeso with their virtues and merits, they all produce fruitions of happiness.

The section on the producer, the wholesome or virtuous, has two divisions, the ground and wholesomeness. As for the explanation of the ground: by the wholesome, happiness and th established. By the unwholesome, suffering and the lower realms are produced.

b) The producer, unwholesomeness

As for the explanation of the unwholesome:

Since we can fall from high to low within samsara
There are the unvirtuous actions, divided into ten.
There are three of body, four of speech, and three of mind.

The ten unwholesome actions that produce falling from the higher realms into the lower one nothing but suffering are as follows:

The three unwholesome actions of body

1. Cutting off life.
2. Taking what is not given.
3. Sexual transgression.

The four unwholesome actions of speech

1. Lying.
2. Divisive speech.
3. Sophistic speech.
4. Harsh words.

The three unwholesome actions of mind

1. Covetice.
2. Ill-will.
3. Wrong view.

c) The divisions,

i) The actions of body:

Cutting off life is intentional killing of another Related is endangering life through beating and such.
Taking what is not given is stealing another's goods.
Related to this is getting them by using fraud.
Transgressions in sex are with persons committed to others.
Related are dharmas like improper sexual acts.

Everything from maliciously killing worms and insects, knowingly cutting off their lives, and s them, chopping them up, and so forth is included in cutting off life.
Taking what is not given is stealing the wealth of others, and related is using fraud to have th Sexual transgression, refers to another's spouse, those who are close relatives, or not in the minds,
or deliberately having sex at an improper place or time. Included are intercourse in forbidde body,
such as the hands.

The Abhidharmakosha says:

Cutting off life, as we rightly think, is killing others.
Taking what is not given makes another's wealth one's own;
Including acquisition of it through force or deceit.
Forbidden desires, comprise the four kinds of wrongful sex.

The commentary on the Drowa Namje says:

What is like the actual thing, is related to it. Having arisen similarly, it is like it; like beating someone with a stick and relying on magical ceremonies to that end.

ii) The four actions of speech:

Speaking false words is lying to change another's opinion.
Related is devious words that others will receive falsely.
Slander is speaking words that bring about dissention.
Related is saying one thing here, another there.
Idle talk is evil teachings and frivolous words.
Related is disconnected or fallacious speech.
Harsh language is abusive words that denigrate others.
Related is gentle words that are displeasing to others.

To make speech a gate of entering the Dharma, actions of speech are explained. To speak not true to change the perceptions of others is false speech. Related to that is if one sees th been deceived by literally true words. Saying slanderous words that bring dissension to others is say one thing to one person, and something else to another is related.
 To
To start, spread, and listen to gossip; and to talk disconnectedly and frivolously, saying vario that contradict dharma; is idle or sophistic speech. To say something inappropriate at the tim Harsh language is saying things unpleasant to the ears of others and insulting them. Relate things gently to make them unhappy. The Abhidharmakosha says:

False words change the perception of another person
By their understanding of their meaning of the words.
Divisive words are those that bring dissent to others,
These are the words of a mind that has the kleshas.
Rough words are those that are not pleasant when they are heard.
All that have the kleshas are words of idle talk.

The commentary says:

True words that are deceptive, to repeat such words, to speak at a time when one should not, and to speak pleasantly, but make others unhappy are the related actions.

iii) The three actions of mind:

Covetice finds another's wealth unbearable.
Therefore it makes an attempt to make it into one's own.
Related is longing for others' glories, such as learning.
Malice is the angry mind that harms another.
Related is anger that does not want their benefit.
Wrong views include eternalism and nihilism,
Or the view that says that cause and effect do not exist.
Related are errors of glorification and denigration.

Inappropriately wishing that another's belongings were one's own is covetousness. Getting learning and so forth of another and wishing it were one's own is related. Wishing to harm a

Being unhappy and angry with their benefits is related. Denigrating karmic cause and effect
the extremes of eternalism and nihilism are wrong views. Exaggeratedly glorifying and denigrat dharma,
the spiritual friends who teach it, and others who are in accord with the dharma is related. T Abhidharmakosha says:

Covetice wrongly craves another's wealth
Malice is hostility to beings.
Wrong views say there is no good and evil

The commentary on the Drowa Namje says:

To be angry at learning and so forth and covet it, to be angry and displeased at others' benefits, to disparage true spiritual friends and others according with dharma are the related actions.

In this case, though it does not call denigration of the dharma and individuals a related actio
Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

Subhuti, those who accumulate the karma of depriving others of the Dharma will be born as beings of the lower realms or among those who have fallen into wrong views. They suffer among the beings of the great hell, the Avici Hell. Having been contained in its fires fo kalpa, they will be born in the great hells of other world systems. There too, when they have been contained in fire for a kalpa, It is taught that they will go to another, and so forth beyon measure.

The Sutra of the Miracle of Ascertaining Complete Peace says:

For 500 kalpas they will have five hundred heads.
Every one of these heads with not less than five hundred tongues,
And every tongue with plows, five hundred and not less,
Of hotly blazing iron, will be repeatedly plowed,
And all because of the evil deed of denigration.

The Examination of the three Jewels says:

Kashyapa, If some individual says that I or one like me who has grasped the Dharma and grasped the measure of individual beings, has not grasped the measure of the dharma and measure of individual beings, that individual will fall.

3) the fruition,

There are three sections

a) The brief teaching of the nature.

Now the fruition of these is explained:

With bad object, motive, thoughts, and their application.
As for the fruitions of the ten unwholesome actions,
There are ripening, and according with their causes, power, and action.

When these unwholesome actions are produced by an unwholesome object, motivation, tho application, a fruition ripens in accord with the causes and the dominant nature or power. S the great texts, and moreover, in the oral instructions, the fruition of action is explained additionally.

b) The four divisions

i) The ripening of the fruition:

The lesser fruition of the ten actions is birth as an animal.
The middle as a preta, and the great to suffer in hell.

The Objects of Mindfulness says:

Of these ripenings, the lesser is to be born as an animal. The intermediate is to be born as a preta. The great is to be born among the hell beings.

ii) Fruition according with the cause,

There are two kinds

1)) Accord with the cause of action.

According with the cause is said to be twofold.
One is born in a situation like that of one's former action.
Then there is the fruition of such a situation.

The Hundred Actions says:

Those who have become accustomed to unwholesome conduct, will again be dependent on unwholesomeness and will act unwholesomely. They will continue in their unwholesomeness.

2)) Accord with the cause of experience:

Even if such beings attain the higher realms,
Their lives are short and they will suffer from many diseases.
They will not be rich in possessions, and have to share them with enemies.
Their spouses will be ugly, and still there will be rivals.
They will be often slandered and cheated by other people.
Their servants will always be intractable and bad.
They will hear unpleasantness and quarrelsome words.
No one will heed their words; their ventures will be uncertain Desire will grow. They will not k what is enough.

Not acquiring benefits, they will harmed by others.
Their views will be wrong, and therefore, they will be much deceived.

The ten unwholesome actions have two stages of fruition
The fruition fits the cause, then one experiences that.

The Hundred Actions says:

Those who cut off life can be among gods and humans, but their lives will be short with muc
Those who take what is not given will be anxious about possessions, impoverished, and hav enemies.
Sexual transgressors will have an unpleasant spouse shared with others. Those who speak often be slandered and cheated. Divisive people will have bad servants and retinue with wh reconciled. Those who speak harshly will hear unpleasant and quarrelsome words. Idle tall their words heeded and trusted. The desires of covetous persons will increase, and they will nev enough. Malicious people will get nothing beneficial and be objects of harm. Those with wr have bad views and be much deceived.

The Precious Mala says:

For those who cut off life, their own lives will be short.
By taking what is not given we are separated from wealth.
Those who engage in imprudent sex will make enemies.
Those who speak falsely thereafter will often be reviled.

By divisiveness, we will never have companions.
By harsh words, we will hear unpleasant things.
By idle talk our speech will always go unheeded
By covetice the hopes of mind will be destroyed
By malice we will be given the gift of being destroyed.

iii) the fruition of power

As for the dominant result

The power of the effect ripens externally.

Here with impure dependence on the power of other,
Takers of life will live in a place that is very drab.
Medicinal herbs and trees, leaves and fruits and flowers,
Food and drink and are insipid with little potency.
Also hard to digest, they make obstacles to life.

From taking what is not given, crops will never ripen.
We are born in a fearful region of cold, with hail and famine.

Sexual transgressors are born in crowded places,
Miry swamps that are full of urine and excrement,
Nasty places of stinking filth and sticky defilement.
They are cramped and depressed in places without joy.

Liars are born in inhospitable, fearful places.
Wealth soon shifts as one is cheated by all the others.

Slanderers are blocked by impassible heights and depths,
Cliffs and ravines, and deep defiles block all progress
With a unpleasant variety of irregular surfaces.

Those who use harsh language are born among stones and thorns.
In places that are hot or otherwise unpleasant

By idle talk we are born where harvests do not ripen,
Places where the flow of seasons is disrupted.
We cannot stay anywhere long, as things are so unstable.

By covetice we see meager grain and copious chaff,
Born where the better times of year are changeable.

By malice we are born in places naturally harmful Crops and grain are pungent & bitter to the taste
There are thieves and imperious rulers, savage natives and snakes.

By wrong view we have no source of precious things.
Medicinal herbs and trees, flowers, and grain are few.
There is no refuge and we are without any friends or protection.

The resolution is as presented. The Commentary on the Center and Limit says:

By the power of being a vessel, virtue predominates

iv) The fruition of action:

Whatever people may do, there is an unhappy result.
Whatever is done, by its spreading, suffering is produced.

the Objects of Mindfulness says tersely:

Ignorant ones who do evil deeds will do them again.
Evil deeds proliferate, and there is tremendous suffering.

c. The final summary:

In short these ten actions by their nature are unwholesome.
They are like poison and anyone who ever performs them
Heavy, light, or medium, will make great suffering.
Therefore we should try to avoid them like enemies.

The instructions to the noble one Gyebu Nor in the Dulwa Lung say:

The unwholesome is like poison, because a little produces great suffering. It is like a wild man, because it destroys the assembly of wholesomeness. Therefore it should be abandoned and one should try to do what is wholesome.

The Precious Mala says:

What is unwholesome in body, speech, and mind
Should entirely be eliminated.
What is wholesome should always be pursued.
By that the above two dharmas are explained.

c. How to eliminate the unwholesome,

There are three sections

1) Producing the benefits of the higher realms:

The ten kinds of wholesome actions lead to the higher realms.
Their wholesome intention avoids the ten unwholesome ones.
Cutting off life is avoided, and taking what is not given.
Wrongful sex is avoided, and also lies and slander.
Speech is not harsh or frivolous. Thoughts are not covetous.
We keep far away from malice and wrong views.

Merely by abandoning the unwholesome actions, the ten wholesome ones will occur. This is they are related as opposites. Therefore, the attitude that abandons the ten unwholesome a the ten
wholesome ones, the Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

"I have abandoned the taking of life," and so forth. These ten are said.

2) The ripening of their fruition:

If these actions are small, we are born in the human realm.
If more, we are born among the gods of the realm of desire.
Great ones connect us to the samadhi of formless dhyanas.
Thus, we can grasp the pleasures of the two higher realms.
The four results are the opposite of the previous ones.
The fruition should be known to be birth in the higher realms.

By lesser wholesome conduct, we are born among the human beings and gods of the desire great, we are born in the samadhi realms. These are the two higher realms the realm of pur formless realm. The higher realms are attained, and entrance into the lower realms is cut of Mala says:

By these dharmas we are completely liberated
From being a being in hell, a preta, or animal.
After birth among gods or else among human beings
Increasing glory and happiness is easily attained.
One experiences the bliss of Bhrama and so forth
Or the measureless samadhis of the formless realm.

3) How we should choose what to accept and reject:

Thus, by the merit of these ten wholesome actions
We are led to happiness, but the ten of unwholesome nature Lead instead to falling into the lower realms.
Accept the white cause and effect, and likewise reject the black.
This will be the path to worldly happiness,
Taught to be the fine vehicle of divine and human birth.
By establishing subsequent lives in happy forms,
We truly lay a foundation for our liberation.
Therefore, fortunate beings should depend on doing so.

The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, by accepting the true path of these ten wholesome actions, we are born in the higher realms. By remaining on the path of the ten unwholesome actions, we are born in the lower realms.

The White Lotus of Holy Dharma says:

The vehicle of gods and human beings has the ten virtues.

The Supreme Essence says:

The vehicle of gods is the four dhyanas and the four formless attainments. The vehicle of human beings is the ten virtues. The latter depends on good dharmas.

Yana means vehicle, mount, or means of conveyance. When we ride them, each one brings particular fruition. The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says 304.3

Riding them does away with the sufferings of beings.
These vehicles are a great house, immeasurable as space.
The highest yana produces joy, happiness, and well-being.

Depending on different levels of mind, different vehicles are taught. For example, one is taught who aim at complete peace. The White Lotus says:

That one vehicle does not have the three vehicles.
It is taught as provisional skillful means.

Two are also taught. the Immaculate Space Sutra says:

In accord with the affinities of sentient beings,
I have bestowed the teachings of the two vehicles.

These are the mahayana and hinayana. Three are also taught. The White Lotus says:

Teaching how to tame the kleshas the gates of Dharma
Are said to be eighty-four thousand, but the true intent of the buddhas
Is the one inseparable essence. That I have taught three vehicles
Is explained by different capacities of sentient beings.

In brief, the levels of mind are limitless, and not all of them perceive the true meaning. The Lankavatara Sutra says:

Not all the minds as enter finish the vehicle.
Once mind has done that, there is no mind nor vehicle.

In this case the vehicle of gods and men is being discussed. The same text says:

Likewise I explained all the different vehicles.
The vehicle of the shravakas, and that of the pratyekabuddhas.
Within the vehicle of gods and human beings
Samsaric suffering can be eliminated.
However, what comes later is not seen at all.

2. the second section of the extended explanation of karma and being joined to peace,

There are six sections

a. the general explanation of the wholesome being associated with liberation.

Now, as for the wholesome being associated with liberation, good is certainly established. I explained:

The happiness of freedom puts samsara far away.
It leads to peace beyond the game of black and white,
Forming the array of the heights and depths of samsara.
Included within the five paths that lead to this liberation
Are the ten wholesome actions, and the four dhyana states of form,
The five formless dhyana attainments, the six perfections and so on.
Realizing that persons and dharmas have no self,
By the happy combination of prajña and upaya,
Dwelling neither in samsara or nirvana,
We shall produce great benefits for all sentient beings.
Attaining the limitless state of the Victorious One,
By the wholesomeness of yoga we pass beyond all worlds.

The previously taught merit completely transcends both the good and evil associated with it.
good which completely liberates us from defilement, the cause of being born in the cycles of phenomenal accumulation of merit, the ten virtues, the first five paramitas, and so forth are n non-phenomenal accumulation of wisdom, prajña, does not dwell in the two extremes. When, by five paths, these are united, we apprehend the level of buddhahood beyond the world's goodnes Worldly goodness is grasped in terms of things and characteristics. This is beyond things an characteristics. From the very time the good action is done, it is liberated from the mind of n non-merit.
It is awareness of the empty, compassionate essence. As to the details, the Prajñaparamita

If they are able to carve a well-formed woman's image,
Wood-workers who are skilled can make anything else as well.
Likewise, bodhisattvas skillfully trained in prajña
Can do whatever is done by the wisdom of non-thought.

The Precious Mala says:

Whoever pacifies having knowledge and being without it,
Thereby has gone beyond both merit and evil deeds.
Liberation from the higher and lower realms,
Is what is explained as being truly liberated.

Also it says there:

Having the essence of emptiness and compassion,
One has been established in enlightenment.

With the mind of truth, in apparent goodness without entangling attachments, like emanations and illusions, we acts for the benefit of othe
the space-like goodness established by prajña does not establish the path of liberation, this will
The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

If a billion blind persons with no one to lead them
Tried to get to a city, though they did not know the way,
Attaining the first five perfections of the Victorious One,
Without attaining the eye of prajña is like that.

The Essence of the Eight Instructions says:

The time when the five first paramitas are completed by the perfection of prajña is the time of entering into the city of omniscience.

Thus, since all dharmas are natureless, the good too is natureless, and in this way beginner inferior mind abandon it. The Precious Mala says:

Though these dharmas are truly good and very wholesome,
With the air of being profound and subtle beings
Childish individuals who are without true learning
Will try to avoid them, so the Victorious One has said.

The Instruction on Prajña says:

Subhuti, All dharmas are without essence. The six perfections are also without essence. Neither examined or the examiner are found. They are not perceived. They are r really seen. That is how it should be known.
This should not be told to those of the families of those who have newly entered into the vehicle, of shravakas, and of pratyekabuddhas.
Why? They will be so fearful and terrified that their hair stands on end. By this being said, for this reason, they will abandon this perfection of prajña.

b. comprehending this: the goodness of liberation

If it is asked what is the goodness of liberation:

The accumulation of merit is involved with particular objects.
The accumulation of wisdom is not. By these combined, Cleansed of the two obscurations, the two kayas manifest.
The stages of meditation and post-meditation are practiced.
These are corruptible in ordinary beings,
But in the noble ones they are immutable
In meditation and the state that follows it
By such a pattern of practice liberation will be attained.

The five first perfections, generosity, discipline, patience, exertion, and meditation, are the a of merit. Prajña is the accumulation of wisdom. By their unification, the two kayas, dharmak will manifest. The Precious Mala says:

As for the rupakaya possessed by all the buddhas,
It arises from the accumulation of merit.
Dharmakaya is born, to give a brief summary,
From accumulating the wisdom of the conquerors.
By these two accumulations, buddhahood is attained
If this is what we want, we should always rely
On these two accumulations, those of merit and of wisdom.

The major and minor marks of the Buddha's rupakaya are established by these two accumu way that is highly exalted. As much merit as ordinary beings, shravakas, pratyekabuddhas, may have, a single body hair of the buddhas has ten times more. A hundred times as much hair exists in the minor marks. A hundred times the amount in each of the eighty minor mar
of the major marks. The merit of each of the thirty-two major marks increased by a thousand is between the eyebrows. A hundred thousand times the collective merit of the tuft between th
of the ushnisha tuft at the top of the Buddha's head. A thousand times the merit of the hair-tuft be that established by the conch of spoken dharma. The same text says:

As merit is beyond the scope of thought,
So the major marks of the Buddha rise.
The great scriptural treasury of the mahayana
Says he is a great being like a king.

All the merit of the pratyekabuddhas,
All merit in the world without remainder
That of both the learned and non-learned
If it should be increased to ten times more,
Would be as much as in one of the Buddha's pores.
The hair-pores of a Buddha are all like that.

As for all the merit of these hair-pores,
That amount increased a hundred times,
Would be the merit of one of the minor marks.
That many times that same degree of merit
Is that of each of the royal major marks.
These merits of the thirty two major marks,
If they are multiplied a thousand times,
Are those of the brow-tuft like the sun and moon.

The merits of the brow, increased by a hundred
Would not appear as much as the tuft of the head.
As much as is produced at the crown of the head,
If that were made hundred times as much,
That of the conch of dharma would still be ten times more.

Below the supreme dharma, is the defiled, worldly dharma. Above that is the world-transcen undefiled dharma. The border is between what is corruptible and what is immutable. The w is undefiled, while that of post-meditation is defiled. They are the corruptible and immutable first five paramitas, generosity and so forth, are defiled, and prajña is undefiled. They are corru immutable goodness.

c. How the cause of liberation is produced,

If it is asked on what these goodnesses depend, and from what they are produced, the real accord with liberation, the true path, is accumulated as a cause of separation. Therefore, it alaya
of the various habitual patterns. The fruition of separation attained by this cause of separati
the gotra or the essence, which therefore, is the true cause of changeless liberation. That is the

The gotra is the support of the goodness of liberation. In having this we have the luminous Spotless dharmadhatu is the naturally present gotra.
In its apparent aspect this is the two rupakayas.
These are described by the Uttaratantra's nine examples.
This nature of compassion exists eternally.
The Sugata has said that this is the "growable" gotra:
Its root is the luminosity of insight-wisdom.
Its essence is wholesomeness, that does not have the three poisons.

This is taught as it is in final word of the true meaning sutras, the great teaching of all the bu
These are The Sutra of the Questions of King Dharantsvara, The Glorious Mala of the Lion's Sutra Requested by the Girl Precious One, The Sutra Requested by the Goddess Immacula the Dwarf Angulamala, The Noble Complete, Great Nirvana Sutra, The Sutra requested by Tathagatagarbha Sutra, The Sutra of the Wheel Curing Sickness These say that within all s
the primordially existing dharmadhatu, the naturally pure space which is the nature of mind. Thi tathagatagarbha.
It exists primordially. It is changeless. Its apparent aspect is rupakaya, the source of the m minor marks. Its aspect of emptiness is dharmakaya, free from all the extremes of complexity, prin spontaneously present. Its qualities, in their spontaneous presence are exemplified by a jev changelessness, by space; In moistening and pervading all sentient beings, it is exemplified
The
Uttaratantra says: 21

Like a jewel, space, or pure water;
Its nature has never had the kleshas.

At the very time it is obscured by defilements, its essence is undefiled suchness. The nature primordial luminosity. The Gyu Tongpa says:

Mind is not mind. The nature of mind is luminosity.

That is the dhatu of buddhahood, the gotra or enlightened family which all sentient beings po
Uttaratantra says: 21

Because the perfect buddha kaya radiates
Because of suchness being inseparable,
And because of possessing the dhatu every sentient being Always possesses the very essence of buddhahood.

This should be known to be the good dhatu of the Dharma. It is fundamentally enlightened f beginning. The Expressor of Marks says:

Buddhahood is without beginning and end.
The primordial buddha is without any bias.

The Two Examinations says:

Sentient beings are buddhas, in actuality.
But they are obscured by incidental obscurations.
When these are cleared away, then they are buddhas.

Even at the time of being a sentient being, the nature of mind has the apparent buddha qual rupakaya and the buddha qualities of the emptiness aspect as dharmakaya; but since they a unremoved defilements, this is called the dhatu or enlightened family. At the time of buddha
is free from all defilements, it is called enlightenment. This occurs merely by the appearance o
of the perfected power of the nature, mind itself. It is not maintained that first, at the time of be sentient being, the qualities are non-existent, and later they are newly produced. This is because they are o Sutra
of the Supreme Appearance of the Essence says:

The dhatu has no temporal beginning.
It exists as the true state of all dharmas.
Since it exists, all beings have attained nirvana.
As it was before, it will be later.

This is the changelessness of suchness.

The luminous nature of mind is not obscured by the kleshas. The Uttaratantra says: 26

The nature of the mind is luminosity.
It is just as changeless as the space of the sky.
By the rising of false conceptions, desire and so forth obscure it,
But its nature is not obscured by incidental defilements.

The divisions are the primordial gotra and the removable gotra, whose arising depends on c incidental defilements.
As for their beginningless existence as dharmin and dharmata, the Nirvana Sutra says:

O son of noble family, as for the nature of mind, naturally luminous and naturally essenceless, the way naturally pure mind appears is by participating in buddha qualities tha blaze with the major and minor marks, and not being separate from them. Nevertheless its empty and apparent natures are distinguished.

The established gotra, superimposed on the primordial gotra is the incidental upaya and pra four paths of learning, produced by mind and so forth. Purification occurs through the activit accumulations of merit and wisdom. the Gandavyuha Sutra says:

Kye, sons of the Victorious One! This which is called the gotra of enlightenment is genuine dharmadhatu
It is vast like the sky. When its naturally luminous nature has been seen, training in accord w the great accumulations of merit and wisdom is purified.

The Uttaratantra says: 39

Like the buried treasure and the fruit
The two aspects of the gotra should be known
They are the beginningless natural presence
And supremacy that has been truly received.

As is taught, arising from these two gotras,
The trikaya of the Buddha is attained.
By the first arises the first of the kayas,
By the second arise the subsequent two.

All the splendor of svabhavikakaya,
Like the precious statue of the Buddha.
Is self-arising and therefore unproduced.
It is a mine of precious qualities.

Because it has great dominion over the dharmin
It is fully expressed, like a universal monarch.
Its phenomenal nature is like a reflection,
With emanation-bodies like forms of gold.

Svabhavikakaya is mind itself, the naturally existing gotra. This is like a naturally existing je within it comes the gotra with the nature of the dharmin. Here there are the universal monar sambhogakaya,
and its reflected emanation, arising in dependence on it, nirmanakaya, the supreme emanat
to be tamed. At the time of existing as a sentient being, these do not appear, because defilem
By accumulating merit through visualization and so forth, defilements that obscure rupakaya away. By the accumulation of wisdom through emptiness meditation and so forth, obscurati from the dharmata-svabhavikakaya, the body of the self-existing-essence, the nature of dha
The support, the naturally existing gotra, is like clear water. Within it the supported, the esta gotra, rises like a variety of reflections. The two exist primordially, like reflector and reflectio Within the gotra that exists as the ground, as knowable objects, the incidentally established as the phenomena of knowing mind. These are respectively support and supported.
The dharmin exists separably with dharmata, the naturally existing gotra. As a separable fru non-existent. The produced gotra is an antidote to purify defilements. Though the two kaya were produced effect and producing cause, there is no actual causation. That gotra makes the pe qualities to be born as the realization of the paths of learning. This is their liberation or ripening as th buddhahood. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

The nature and the vast extent of its blossoming;
That these exist as support and what is supported;
Their existence and non-existence; their buddha qualities.
Are what should be known as the meaning of liberation.

Sugatagarbha pervades all sentient beings. By the nine examples it is taught to exist within of the kleshas. The Uttaratantra says: 31

A buddha in a decaying lotus, bees and honey.
Gold within a covering of an unclean nature.
Treasure in the earth, the germ within a fruit,
An image of the buddha that is covered with rags.
A king within the belly of a poor and ugly woman.
Jewels in the earth, in such a form,
Obscured by the incidental defilements of the kleshas,
This dhatu exists within sentient beings.

These nine examples are related to the obscured dhatu as it exists in ordinary individuals, a the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattvas dwelling on the paths of seeing and people are those who have not entered into the path; or those who have entered but their be
to the assembly of the four obscurations, passion, aggression, ignorance, and all of these toge
four examples of the dhatu within them, first, as for the example of how the essence exists, wher

propensities of desire, the Uttaratantra says: @@@

Existing in a lotus that is evil-colored,
A tathagata-statue, blazing with a thousand marks,
Having been seen with the undefiled eye of the gods,
The statue would be removed from its mud-born lotus cover.
For tathagatas dwelling in places without torment
The intrinsic buddha eye sees what will later be unobscured.
Their intrinsic endless compassion will free them from obscuration.

Second, the example of the dhatu existing in a covering characterized by propensities of agg
@@@

Like honey that is surrounded by a swarm of bees, Capable persons have a wish that they could acquire it Having seen it is there, by using skillful means,
They completely separate it from the swarm of insects,

By the all-knowing eye of the great sage himself

Having seen the honey of the dhatu or gotra,
Having obscurations like the swarm of bees,
He makes them be completely abandoned and disappear.

Third, the example of the dhatu existing in a covering characterized by propensities of stupid

Just as kernels of grain still covered by their husks
Are not usable in that form by human beings,
They remove the grain from out of the covering husk.
Using the part they want for food and otherwise

Just so, mixed with defiling kleshas of sentient beings,
As many victorious ones as there are in the three worlds,
If they are not liberated from being mixed with these kleshas,
So many will not be made into victorious ones.

Fourth, the example of the essence existing in a covering manifesting kleshas characterized of passion, aggression and stupidity all together: @@@

Just as on a journey someone's treasured gold
In the confusion might fall into a filthy place,
That dharmin by falling there, would not have been destroyed,
Remaining there like that for many hundreds of years.

By a god who had the pure eye of the gods,
If the gold existing there was seen and found
People would say the god established that precious thing,
This supremely precious thing, that actually was abandoned,

So the buddha qualities of sentient beings.
Have sunk and disappeared among the filth-like kleshas.
Having been seen by the Sage, to purify them that filth,
For all beings he caused the dharma to arise.

As for the example of the dhatu existing in a covering of habitual patterns of ignorance, in th
the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas: @@@

Just as in the house of a poor man, under the floor,

An inexhaustible treasure might be lying buried;
But he would not know the existence of this treasure,
Nor would the treasure say to him that it was there.

So with the precious treasure that is within the mind,
Spotless dharmata, with no adding or taking away,
When it is not realized, we experience
The poverties of suffering, continuously arising.

if the covering is abandoned when seen, here is the first of the two examples of how the ess
@@@

Just as in a mango or in other fruits
There are undestroyed dharmas of seed and germination,
And then if there should be plowed earth, and water and such,
The stuff of a king of trees will gradually be established.
So in the fruit of the ignorance of sentient beings,
Inside the covering skin is the good dharma-element
Which similarly depending on the condition of goodness
Will gradually be the stuff of the King of Sages.

As for the second example: @@@

As a precious statue of the Victorious One Might be covered up in dirty tattered rags,
But still a divine one on the path might seen and uncover it,
And then it would be said, "He really dwells on the path."

So the sugata nature, wrapped in beginningless kleshas,
Having once been seen, even within an animal,
There would be a real means of by which it could be set free.

From the two examples of how, within the covering of defilements that is to be abandoned b there exists the splendor of the good dhatu of dharmas, as for the first: @@@

Just as an ugly woman with no one to protect her Staying in a shelter for the poor and homeless
Might hold a splendid king in the confines her womb.

And would not know this lord of men was in her belly.

In the refuge mission of life within this world,
Impure sentient beings are like that pregnant woman.
With only what she has, she will one day have a protector.
Gestation of the spotless dhatu is similar.

As for the second example: @@@

Just as gold ore that has a big nugget inside of it
Has a external nature that is very drab,
Having seen it those who know it for what it is,
In order to purify the gold that is inside,
Undertake to remove the outer covering.

Having seen the luminous nature that is within us,
Although it has been covered up by the incidental;
Likewise the source of seeing what is precious in sentient beings
Removes the obscurations of supreme enlightenment.

Though the obscurations to the pure ground are many, the same text says: @@@

Passion, aggression, and ignorance; active or as an imprint;
That to be abandoned by seeing and meditation;
The higher bhumis relatively impure and pure,
Many defilements are taught by the covering lotus and so forth.
Transcending all the divisions of closely-connecting kleshas,

By these defilements fools and those with the learning of arhats,
Are meant by respectively four and one of these examples.
Seeing and cultivation, and the pure and impure levels
Have two and two comparisons of their impurities.

Joining these examples of defilements and the essence to a determination of their meaning, says: @@@

Just as when a lotus arises from the mud,

When it first manifests the mind is very joyful,
But afterward it decays and then there is no more joy.
The joy arising from desire is like that.

Just as delicious honey is completely crawling
With irritated bees that sting like an army of spears;
Just so, if aggression rises, and swarms within our minds
Suffering will be produced within our hearts.

Just as the essence, the kernels rice and other grain
Is hidden by an external husk which covers it,
So sight of the essential meaning buddhahood
Has been obscured within the egg of ignorance.

Just as filth is something that is unsuitable,
So are those who have desire for these poisons
That is because depending on the cause of their desire,
What is like filth will be arising everywhere.

Just as when wealth is hidden underneath the ground,
One who does not know this will not attain the treasure,
So the self-arising treasure of the nature
Is hidden in the ground of habitual patterns of ignorance.

Just as by gradual growing of the sprout and so forth
The shell of the seed is cut apart and falls away,
So by seeing the suchness of the natural state
What is to be abandoned by seeing is reversed.

Those who conquer the essence of transitory collections
Through being connected to the path of the noble ones,
Make wisdom the thing to abandon on the path of meditation.
This is taught to be like being wrapped in rags.

The defilements supported by the first seven bhumis,
Are like the defilement found in the covering of a womb.
Non-thought is like being free of the covering of the womb,
This completes the ripening of the insight of wisdom.

Defilements associated with the three highest bhumis
Should be known to like a covering of mud and clay.
By a great being's having attained the vajra view,
The vajra-like samadhi destroys that covering.

Thus the many defilements of desire and so forth
Are like the examples of a decaying lotus and so forth.

The Enumeration of Dharmas of the Complete Passing Beyond Suffering of the Noble Ones

Then the Bhagavan spoke to Kashyapa. O son of noble family, It is, for example, like this. wealthy king had on his forehead a vajra jewel. With other wealthy ones, radiating power, it touched the heads of those other wealthy ones.
The jewel on the forehead sunk inside his flesh, and he did not know where it had gone. Because a wound arose, he asked a doctor, "Cure me." From this instruction, a very capab doctor would not treat him for that wound of the jewel going into his flesh, saying these word "Kye most powerful one, why are you asking about your forehead-jewel?
That wealthy one, from aversion, would say to the doctor, "Because my forehead jewel should not go anywhere." he would think, "Is it an illusion that it is not there?" This would produce much suffering.
Then that doctor producing joy in that wealthy one would say, "Thus do not produce suffering. If you emanate power, the jewel will sink into your flesh, a mere reflection will appear externally. If you emanate power, hatred will arise. Though the power of the jewel h sunk into your flesh you did not feel it."
Not believing these words that were said, the king would say, "Doctor don't lie. If it sinks into my flesh, which is matter and blood that is very opaque, it is not reasonable that a reflection would appear."
Then the doctor would say, "A mirror is likewise opaque, but the jewel will also clearly appear in it. When you have seen that this is like that, a wondrous, marvelous perception w arise.
O son of noble family, all sentient beings are like that. Since they do not venerate the spiritual friend, though they have the buddha nature they cannot see it. It is obscured by passion, aggression, and ignorance. Many different beings who have so been overcome ar within samsara and suffering.
From that nature , O son of noble family, within the bodies of all sentient beings there are the ten powers, the thirty-two major marks, and the eighty excellent minor marks.

This has been taught in many ways. The Hevajra says:

Within the body there exists the great wisdom
The truth of this has abandoned all conceptions.
Universal, it pervades all things.
Embodied existence does not arise from the body.

The Precious Mala says:

I and limitless sentient beings are primordial buddhas.
By the power of discursive thoughts there is samsara.
From that I shall produce the supreme mind of enlightenment.

The Wisdom of the Moment of Death says:

Since whoever realizes mind is a buddha, produce the supreme perception by not searching anywhere else.

The Praise of the Vajra of Mind says:

Water that exists within the earth
Exists there pure without defilement.
Just so, within the covering of the kleshas,
Wisdom exists without defilement.

The Secret Essence says:

Throughout the ten directions and four times,
Perfected buddhas are nowhere to be found.
Except for the perfect buddha, the nature of mind,
Do not look for any other buddha.
The victorious ones themselves, if they should search,
Would never find it anywhere at all.

So it is taught, there and elsewhere. In brief, by the example of the great billion-fold expans three-fold thousand worlds it should be known that within all sentient beings primordially exis
and wisdoms of buddhahood, without adding and subtracting, like the sun and its light. That dha naturally pure. Its self-nature does not change. Its defilements are false conceptions and te changes.

The commentary on the Uttaratantra says:
@@@
O great rishi, The kleshas are darkness. Complete purity is light. The kleshas are weak. Cl seeing is powerful. The kleshas are temporary. Natural purity is the root.

So it is taught there and elsewhere. Since the dhatu is primordially without defilement, it is p it is changeless, it is the true self, since it always exists, it is permanent. Though it falls into th sufferings of samsara, it is not overcome by them, and this is the perfection of bliss. The Uttaratantra say

Purity, self-nature, bliss, and permanence
Are the perfect qualities of the fruition.

The dhatu of the tathagata pervades all sentient beings.. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Just as space is maintained as eternal and omnipresent,
This too is maintained to be eternal and omnipresent.
Just as space is an aspect found within all forms,
This too is in all the assembly of sentient beings.

When this essence is obscured by clouds, they do not stain it, any more than when the sun clouds. At the time of primordial buddhahood, the dhatu exists indestructibly and inseparabl commentary
to the Uttaratantra says

The dhatu of the tathagata existing in the three occasions is present within all beings. All th kleshas and phenomenal appearances are composed of this changeless reality.

As regards the three occasions, the Uttaratantra says: 24

These are the three-fold stages of impurity,
Both pure and impure, and being completely pure.
  They are said to be the stage of sentient beings,
And those of bodhisattvas, and of tathagatas.

The impure situation is that of sentient beings. That which is both pure and impure is that of bodhisattvas. Complete purity is the situation of the buddhas. As nothing is like the gotra, it exemplified by anything at all.

The same text says: @@@

Since it is completely beyond the world
No example is seen within the world.
Therefore the tathagata and the dhatu
Are taught to be similar in this respect.

As to how it is incomparable, it is essentially single. Therefore, to explain it by many examp different situations would be merely partial characterization of it.
It may be asked, "How can this gotra be seen as it is? Beings who do not see the natural st accepted by the spiritual friend. Those who have devotion to the vehicles of the shravakas, and bodhisattvas; and also beings dwelling on the bhumis realize it in a single way. This realizat that of the bodhisattvas dwelling on the tenth bhumi. As for this being the way it really is, it is no otherwise even by the buddhas themselves. The commentary to the Uttaratantra says:

Seeing clouds and the sun, whether from here on the earth or from the sky above the clouds, we have a similar apprehension. The noble ones whose eye of the mind is pure also all this very clearly. Bhagavan, your completely pure understanding of dharmakaya sees all limitless knowable objects pervading the space of the sky.

The dhatu or essence is the buddha field of the three kayas of one's own mind itself, along w wisdoms, existing as the circle of the ornament. How is this seen? Since this is buddhahoo explained in these texts. By having faith in the paths of learning it is entirely apprehended. text says:

The absolute truth of the self-arisen ones
Has to be realized by means of faith.
The blazing light in the circle of the sun
Is not seen by those who have no eyes.

The Sutra on the Essence of Buddhahood says:

No matter what they rely on, individual sentient beings, shravakas, pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattvas do not see the essence of the buddhas as it is. For example, a blind man cannot see what is painted by others in oil colors. When they say, "it is like this pillar, and h touches the pillar with his hands and grasps it as cold. They say, "it is like the wings of a swan." By hearing the sound of the wings of a swan the color of a pillar is grasped as a fluttering sound. He asks, "what is the color of those wings like?" "It is like a conch." By touching a smooth conch, he grasps it as smooth. Just as a blind person does not know col as they are, seeing the highest nature of buddhahood is very difficult.

It is also very hard for sentient beings to realize it. The same text says:

A king assembled many blind men, and having shown them an elephant. Asked to describe the characteristics of an elephant, those who had touched the trunk said, "it is like a hook." Those who touched the eye said, "It is like a bowl. Those who touched the ear said, is like a winnowing basket. Those who touched the back said, "It is like a tray. Those who touched the tail said, "It is like a rope." These blind men were not talking about anything oth than an elephant, but they had not understood its totality.
The buddha nature is also like that. Those who have said different things, that it is emptiness, like illusion, luminous and so forth, have not realized its totality.

Beings who are noble ones have a little realization of it, but not as it is. The Nirvana Sutra s

O son of noble family For example, it is like this. A blind man in order to have his eyes heal went to a capable physician. The physician holding a gold knife removed the hindrance. Ha cut off the opaque part that obscured the eye. He lifted up a finger.{{328..}} When he show it, the blind man said, "I do not see it." If he showed two or three fingers, the patient would s "I see a little bit."
O son of noble family, if this Sutra of Complete great Nirvana is not taught, as many are not among the bodhisattvas, even after they have perfected the ten paramitas, even wh they exist on the tenth bhumi, they will not see the nature of buddhahood. It is like that. Wh this is taught by the Tathagata, they will see it a little.
The birds soaring in the sky above must examine where the pure sky is. If a swan is in the top of a tree it examines whether it is a tree or water, and thinking about the top of a ship the ocean, or in space, also knowing the top of the second. Though by such examples the essence is not seen, it is taught to be the manner of non-ascertaining seeing.

If it is asked, "what is the use of teaching this essence that is subtle and difficult to examine,

with certainty while one is a sentient being?:"
By teaching that the essence of buddhahood exists within the being of oneself and others, h one's own discouragement, knowing that establishing liberation is not difficult, we gain confi Eliminating contempt for other sentient beings, we respect everyone equally with the teache Having eliminated not knowing that realization of the kayas and wisdoms exists within one a reality, prajña realizes the space of the absolute.
Knowing the natural state like that, it eliminates glorifications and deprecations of is and is n eternalism and nihilism.
Then wisdom realizes true reality, and the supreme self. Having eliminated pride and desire more, it sees self and other as equal.
It is taught that these are the five necessities for the arising of the great kindness for others.
Uttaratantra says: 40

Like clouds, dreams, and illusions, and the other examples
All the dharmas of knowables are always emptiness.
When this has been taught by victorious ones to sentient beings
Why do they also teach them that they have the essence.

To answer that question:

Contempt for lesser ones and disenheartened beings,
Joining those who grasp untruth to the truth of dharma,
For those who have abundant faults of ego-grasping
It is taught so that those like that will abandon them.

As for those who wrongly slight the body and are enslaved by the golden net of wrong view, support realization of the true meaning of the sutras and secret mantra with partialities, their "essential meanings" are really provisional. They teach the intention that, "If the cause fruition
will arise."
It is not like that. This is like the eternal self of the Hindu extremists. "The two kayas of bud arise from the two accumulations. This should be stated as definitely true." O you with your lotus net of eternalism, you truly do not know the intention of saying that the three turnings to the wheel of dharma. You are truly grasping the extreme of emptiness.
The first turning of the word, intended for beginners and those of weak mind, made the four and renunciation into an antidote. This was so that these beings could eliminate samsara as complete liberation from what is to be abandoned.

In the second turning, intended for them eventually when they had completely abandoned th those of intermediate capacity of mind, he taught the eight examples of illusion and emptine
This
was a means of liberating them from the bondage of grasping the antidote.
For those who reached that goal and from the viewpoint of those of the highest powers, he t self-nature of knowables as it really is. This is not like the self of the heretics. Their impossi is a nonexistent, exaggerated nature. They make measures of greater and lesser, and therefore the dharmas of the kayas and wisdoms.

It is not the true meaning that self and non-emptiness were taught simply as an antidote for attached to egolessness and emptiness. The Nirvana Sutra says:

O son of noble family, moreover it is like this. For example a woman was nursing her small child who was afflicted by mouth rot, and when the child was struck by sickness, that woman too was tormented by suffering, and sought out a physician. The physician gave he medicine, oil and milk and shakara. When the child was given this to drink, he instructed the woman with these words. "Because we are giving medicine to this child, for a little while unt you, the mother, are cured, it shouldn't be given your milk to drink. So he would instruct her Then so that it would not nurse, he put bile on the nipples; the child would have said that her nipple was smeared with poison and not suitable for sucking. The child, tormented thirst, desired the breast, but having tasted it, would not take it.
After being treated by the physician the woman would wash her breast clean. When the child cried she would go to it. "Now take the breast and nurse," she would say. That ch though tormented with thirst, because of the former taste it experienced, would not come wh called.
In this instance the mother would give these instructions. "You have drunk the medicine I gave you before. With this medicine, until the mother is cured, since it is not prop that the nipple be given for nursing, it was smeared with bile. Now, even taking your medici the nipple will have no taste in your mouth." When she said that, gradually approaching as before, it would drink.
Son of noble family, The tathagata also, in order to liberate all sentient beings, is the persistent teacher of egolessness to sentient beings. By his having persistently done that, t attitude of "ego" is non-existent. Suffering is completely eliminated. This is in order to clear away the bad views of the worldly charvakas. By meditating on the dharma of egolessness, body will become completely pure.
Just as that woman, because of her son, smeared bile on her breast, the tathagata too is like that. So that there will be emptiness meditation, he teaches that all dharmas are selfles

Just as that woman later washed off the bile and called her child, saying take the nipple and nurse, my teaching tathagatagarbha is like that. O monks so that you will not be afraid, as t called the child, and it gradually drank her milk, O monks, you too should make a distinction. Tathagatagarbha should not be said to be non-existent. In my former sayings in the prajñap sutras, which taught emptiness, understand that the intention was merely naturelessness. O meditating on the emptiness of nothing at all, the fruition produced would accord with the ca kayas and wisdoms would not arise.

Emptiness expresses the idea that the apparent dharmin, from the time it appears, is empty complexities grasped as one and many, and empty of individual existences, like the reflectio that all extremes are completely non-existent, and that non-existent now and primordially, things are confused appearance. The Heart Sutra says:

Form is emptiness. Emptiness is form. Emptiness is nothing other than form. From is nothing other than emptiness. Similarly, feeling, perception, formations, and consciousness empty.

The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Every dharmin in its own turn is taught to be empty of essence. But if it is formless, how will there be the view that form is empty?

The Uttaratantra says:
@@@
The emptiness that has the supreme of all aspects
Is emptiness that is expressed as form.

And also: 39-40

Here there is nothing at all that is to be cleared away,
And nothing that is to be added to what there is.
Within reality the real is what is seen.
If thus one sees the truth, one will be liberated.

Of what has the characteristic of separability
The dhatu, pure of the incidental, is empty.
Of that which has the characteristic of being inseparable,

The unsurpassable dharmas, it is not empty.

Its commentary says:

Why is this taught here? For the reason that it is not contradictory with saying that this dhatu of the tathagata is by nature completely pure from all the kleshas that are to be cleare away. It is free from incidental obscurations because it is its nature to be so. Within this the is nothing to be added for reasons of phenomenal appearance. Completely undivided dharr is also its nature. Therefore, sugatagarbha having divisions and what is separable is empty all the separable coverings of the kleshas. What is indivisible and inseparable from it is the buddha dharmas beyond being encompassed by thought, surpassing the grains of sand in t Ganges. They are not empty.

When something does not exist in something, the latter is said to be empty of the former but subsequently assert that whatever remains there eternally exists and is known truly as it is. Though obscurations of the two primordial kayas of buddhahood, are cleared away by the t accumulations, they are not producing cause and produced effect. If they were, dharmakay would be composite productions, and hence impermanent. However, dharmakaya is change Madhyamakavatara says:

The kaya of peace is like a wish fulfilling tree,
Like a wish-fulfilling, gem it is inconceivable.
Till beings are liberated, it is always in the world,
And it will appear without complexity.

The Uttaratantra says: 52

The Mara of death has been conquered by the lord of Dharma.
Being without essence, he is the permanent lord of the world.

Contradicting this idea that it has cause and effect it also says: 11

Uncompounded and self-existing,
Not realized by other conditions,
Having wise and compassionate power,
Buddhahood has the two benefits.

That refutes its having a producing cause and produced effect. Saying it is "egoless," "empt dual," and so forth should be understood in this way. The Great Nirvana of the Noble Ones

The secret essence of the tathagata is shown to be the completely pure buddha nature that changes nor transmigrates. If it so exists, it is unreasonable for those who are skilled in praj maintain that. To say it is non-existent would be false speaking, and likewise that it has dev succession. Those of the race of fools espouse nihilism, not knowing the secret essence of
If it is said to suffer, the blissful nature could not be within the body. Stupid fools think, "All bodies are impermanent." This is like sending the freshness of awareness into cla Those who are skilled in prajña make distinctions. They do not say that everything is impermanent in every way. Why? Because within our bodies there exists the seed of buddh nature. Stupid fools grasp the thought that all the dharmas of buddhahood are selfless. For those skilled in prajña, selflessness is just an abstract label. It should be discriminated as ha no true existence. Knowing this, one will produce no doubts about the matter. When someo says that tathagatagarbha is empty, stupid fools give rise to views of nihilism and non-existe Those who are skilled in prajña make a distinction. Within human beings there is the single tathagata. It is said to be eternally existent, unchanging, and does not transmigrate.
If by the condition of ignorance, composite things are said to arise, stupid fools when they have heard this think that insight and ignorance are to be distinguished as two. Those are skilled in prajña realize that their natures are non-dual. That which is non-dual is reality.
When someone says that by formations consciousness arises, stupid fools grasp formations and consciousness as two. Those who are skilled in prajña realize their natures non-dual. Non-duality is purity.
All dharmas have no self, and tathagatagarbha also has no self. When this is said, stupid fools grasp it dualistically. Those who are skilled in prajña realize that their natures a non-dual. Self and selflessness are intrinsically non-dual. Tathagatagarbha has been supre praised by the buddha bhagavats as immeasurable, beyond evaluation, and limitless. I too taught this in all the sutras about the qualities it possesses.

So it should be known. The Sutra of Miraculous Display says:

Those who have wrong craving have the characteristic of never transcending suffering.

When this is taught regarding these and those of the cut off family, we may think that not all pervaded by the garbha; but it is not like that. The intention is that those with wrong craving
the mahayana dharma will not be liberated for a long time. Those who are reversed from the pa temporarily cut off from the family of those in whom the path is established. They are not cu dhatu,

the luminous nature of mind. The commentary to the Uttaratantra says:

"Those who have wrong craving have the characteristic of never transcending suffering." This teaches that wrong craving causes hostility towards the dharma of the mahayana. This is said with the intention that this hostility to the mahayana dharma will be reversed at another time. Because the dhatu exists with a nature that is completely pure, it proper to say that some will never become pure. Therefore the bhagavat's intention was tha sentient beings without distinction are capable of being completely purified. Though samsar beginningless, it does have an end. The naturally pure and eternal is obscured by a coverin beginningless obscurations, and therefore not seen, just as gold might be hidden.

Since within the dhatu of dharmas all goodness exists, it can always be purified. Though, sa beginningless, it has an end. By that is it established.

The reasons that the two gotras are awakened are two. As for the reason that dharmakaya, existing gotra, is awakened, the Madhyamakavatara says:

When someone hears about emptiness, as an ordinary person,
The highest joy will arise within them again and again.
Their eyes are wet with tears that flow because of this joy.
The hairs of their body arise with wonder and stand on end.

Within them the seed of attaining buddhahood exists
They have become the vessels of direct and straightforward teachings.
Now the absolute truth has really been taught to them.

As for the reason that the dharmin-gotra of rupakaya is awakened, the Mahayanasutralanka

As for why one becomes a connected vessel,
Practicing compassion, and devotion,
And dedication to what is truly good
Is truly explained as being due to the gotra.

Regarding the benefits of awakening the gotra, the same text says:

The lower realms are far off, and liberation is quick.
When that occurs, one experiences little suffering.
By sadness sentient beings will then be quickly ripened.

Once the gotra is awakened, from then on one is liberated from the lower realms like growin naturally falling to the ground. There is little suffering. By strong weariness sentient beings ripened.
If there were no such gotra within sentient beings, no matter what sufferings arose, they wou saddened. The attitude that aspires to nirvana and rejects samsara would not arise. The at liberation could also not arise. That in some, without being taught by anyone, compassion f

of others arises, and that some who experience suffering develop renunciation and so forth is goodness of the beginningless dhatu of dharmas. The Uttaratantra says: 23

If there were no dhatu of buddhahood,
Suffering would never make us sad.
There would be no desire for nirvana,
Or effort and aspiration to that goal.

Being able to see the comparative attractiveness of samsara and nirvana, seeing their faults therefore due to the existence of the gotra. If the gotra did not exist, neither would these.
Thus from the extensive teaching that by having the gotra the essence of buddhahood exist now some summary verses are interposed:

Without exception all sentient beings have sugatagarbha.
In the covering veil of incidental obscurations,
Exists the primordial lamp, the luminous dhatu of dharmas.
This is the kayas and wisdoms, this itself is the Dharma.
Within it nothing is added, and nothing is taken away.

Existing within us, this itself is self-existing.
By devoting ourselves to this essence of emptiness and compassion,
Having attained this dhatu, called by the name "enlightenment,"
We will benefit all the host of beings without remainder.

Primordially self-arising, like the sun in space,
When it is obscured by clouds, temporarily dimming the daylight,
Then we experience the dreamlike sufferings of samsara.
So make a powerful effort to clear away obscuration.

Confused incidental appearance, appearances of the six realms,
Are emanated like dreams, from habitual patterns and karma,
Appearing as what never was, nor is, and shall not be.
The spontaneous presence of wisdom primordially exists.
It always exists, but nevertheless it is not seen.

As what we perceive in sleep, is not seen to be within us.
Dharmas defiled with false conceptions are vain and futile.
Do not grasp them, but train in the luminous nature of mind.
Grasp the two benefits, bringing wealth to oneself and others.

"If this gotra exists in everyone, why, pray tell, are we wandering in samsara?" We exist this knowing our own face, because of the futile grasping of a meaningless ego. As lineage-hold from earlier to later, we are in bad company. We have poverty-mentality. Conditioning is pr relative reference point. This is samsara. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Well-practiced in our kleshas, and in bad company.
With impoverished attitude, and relative reference point;
Briefly stated, these are the four that should be known.
These are the degradations that have defiled the gotra.

The Details of Light says:

Primordial luminosity itself is ignorant.
So-called "rising" of mind produces attachment to ego.
By these objects having been grasped as so-called "others,"
Beings become confused, within the realm of samsara.
Because of their karma of inappropriate joys and sorrows,
They have the experience of individual beings.

The All-Creating King says

This phenomenal play, which is wonderful and marvelous,
Is actionless existence, like the space of the sky.
Ignorance without apprehension of anything,
Rises immediately from nothing but itself.

This is the path that is alike for everyone.
This is the nature as it is within all beings.
Defiled by the removable, it therefore is confused.

Also it says there:

By gathering in the light that exists in all directions
To the limits of the four directions, above and below,
In an unpredictable rainbow whose colors are not fixed
The different kinds of gotra will manifest in appearance.
Suchness moves and particles never move at all.
This is the principle one of all the five elements.

The primordial, luminous nature of mind, empty/luminous self-arising wisdom, is in essence like the sky. Its nature is luminosity like the sun and moon. The radiance of its compassion ceaselessly, like reflections in the surface of an untarnished mirror. The natures of dharmakaya, sambho nirmanakaya come from within sugatagarbha, which is entirely without bias and partiality. T
is also the accommodating space of arising. The luminous nature naturally abides as the five naturally appear as objects. Arising as compassion, cognitive knowledge of insight-wisdom confusion. The Secret Essence says:

E MA HO! from out of sugatagarbha,
From out of our karmic relationships comes confusion.

At this time, the aspect that does not know its intrinsic wisdom to be its own nature is co-em ignorance. The aspect that fixates its own projections as other is the ignorance of false con Because of not knowing that all this has arisen within the natural state, by the power of attachment of eg its objects, habitual patterns of the vessel, the external world, ripen as body. Habitual patterns
essence, sentient beings within the world, ripen as mind. This is confusion, the various phenomena o poisons.
The All-Creating King says

When the nature of me, the doer of all, is not realized,
The dharmas created by me are imputed with fixed existence.
By the power of desire and craving, apparent things exist.
And so their impermanent nature as illusion is destroyed.
The partless nature becomes like colors to the blind.

The root of confusion is not knowing what we are. The Prajñapramitsamgatha says:

As many sentient beings as there may be,
Of lesser, middle, or of higher rank,
All of these have arisen from ignorance.
So it has been taught by the Sugata.

The Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines teaches that confusion is conditioned by dualis

Grasping an I and a mine, beings whirl in samsara.

The Prajñaparamita in Twenty Thousand Lines says:

Childish sentient beings perceive the non-existence of skandhas as skandhas. They perceive the non-existence of ayatanas as ayatanas. They perceive the non-existence of th that arise interdependently as interdependent arising. Therefore, they are completely within grasp of the ripening karma of all these dharmas that are wrongly perceived as interdepende arising.
As to how these dharmas arise, from the two ignorances come samsaric formations.
From that comes the succession of births of individual beings. Name and form are establish
When the body has been established by the embryonic stages from an oval to birth, there ar contact, perception, feeling, the six ayatanas, and old age and death. So with the twelve lin interdependent arising, we cycle in samsara.

"The primordial natural state does not exist within samsara. It is not proper that sugatagarb samsaric."

Not so! It is like clear, unmuddied water becoming solid rock-like ice, in a transparent winte
From the primordial state, conditioned by the arising of grasping and fixation, confused appe itself as a variety of solid things. A song from the Dohakosha says:

When the wind gets into water and thereby stirs it up
The softness of the water becomes as hard as rock.
Having been stupefied through being disturbed by concepts,
What was formless becomes completely hard and solid.

Sugatagarbha is the primordially pure, changeless essence, dharmakaya, designated as th reality. When this becomes confused, it and the connected wealth of the nature of mind, rup buddha
fields, the perfect entities of wisdom, are obscured through the confused grasping and fixatio
This is the due to the alaya of the various habitual patterns. Within this, since beginningless time planted the various seeds or habitual patterns of confusion. Their great power becomes individual e higher and lower realms, and so forth. When we are within dream-like samsara, fixating I ar experiencing desire, aggression, and the five poisons, collecting karma and kleshas, from meaningless co with a variety of attachments to truly existing entities.
Day and night the wheel of confused appearance continuously turns, and since its successio groundless, we are never liberated from it. It is like the confusion of a dream. Wandering b kleshas,
because of good and evil, is like a prince wandering along a road, separated from his kingdo intrinsically a time of suffering. Since he was born into a royal family, the happiness of true wealth is natu him; but now he suffers temporarily. As to what is taught by this example, the Song of the Oral Instru Inexhaustible Treasury, says:

Beings bound in samsara, as if they were tangled in vines,
In the desert of ego-grasping are completely mad with thirst:
Like a prince without a kingdom, separate from his father,
Without a chance for happiness, he gives in to despair.

As to the way that tathagatagarbha exists at this time of wandering futilely on the plan of sar Tathagatagarbha Sutra says:

Kye, Son of the Victorious One, it is like this. For example, the measure of a three-fold thousand world system is one billion. That billion perfectly records the number of all worlds o the three-fold great thousand world system. Similarly the measure of the great surrounding of the world is written "the great surrounding wall of the world." The measure of characteristi is written "characteristics." The measure of the second or middle thousand world realms is " second or middle thousand world realm." The measure a thousand world realms, is "a thous world realms." The fourth thousand world realms is "the fourth thousand world realms." The measure of the great ocean is "the great ocean." The measure of Jambuling is "Jambuling."

The measure of the eastern continent Videha is "Videha." The measure of the western conti Aparagodaniya is "Aparagodaniya." The measure of the northern continent Kurava is "Kurava." The measure of mount Meru is "Mount Meru." The measure of the palaces of the gods of the terrestrial realm is written "the palaces of the gods of the terrestrial realm." The measure of the palaces of the gods of the desire realm is "the palaces of the gods of the des realm." The measure of the palaces of the gods who course in the form-realm is written "the palaces of the gods who course in the form-realm."
A billion is the measure of worlds in a threefold-thousand world system. A billion is also the measure of such worlds that enter into an atom. Just as an atom enters int those billion worlds, similarly all the particles of atoms without remainder enter into the meas of that billion.
Then living, active beings are born on middle earth, learned and wise with clear minds.
Their eye is the divine eye. Everything is completely pure and luminous. By their divine ey they view phenomena, seeing those billion within this small atom. Some sentient beings ca fully understand that. They think, "Kye ma, by what mother, by great force of effort was this billion later put in this atom?" All such beings, thinking that, invented a powerful agent. The thought that atom particle had been opened by a subtle vajra to that billion-fold world system which all sentient beings lived. From one like that, the rest did the same.
Kye Son of the Victorious One, like that the measureless wisdom of the Tathagata dwells within all sentient beings. Within the mind-continuum of all sentient beings it dwells without deception. These mental continuums of sentient beings do not have a measure like of the wisdom of the Tathagata. Fools bound by grasping perception do not know the wisdo the Tathagata. They do not know it at all. They have never experienced or manifested it.
Seeing how each sentient being is within dharmadhatu is the perception of a master, the desireless wisdom of the Tathagata. Kye ma, these sentient beings do not know the wisdo the Tathagata as it is. Those sentient beings in whom the Tathagata's wisdom continues to function were directly taught the path of the noble ones. All the perception-created bonds w cleared away. They were eliminated.

d. How by awakening the gotras liberation is attained:

The wakening of these gotras arouses the two bodhicittas.
Establishing the manifestations of compassion
As accumulation of merit, within the relative.
This is the three abhishekas of the pure developing stage.
Establishing realization of the nature of emptiness
Is accumulation of wisdom, within the absolute.
This is the fourth empowerment, fulfillment, and mahamudra.
When we meditate well, by the growing of the two stages,
Kleshas turn into wisdom. Happiness grows and grows.
By this the obscurations of dharmadhatu are cleansed.
The sun of dharmakaya and rupakaya is seen.

In naturally pure and essentially spotless mind itself, the holy wisdom of buddhahood, the primordially existing spontaneous presence of the luminous nature of mind, the apparent as qualities of the rupakaya of buddhahood. This is taught by many examples. The qualities o emptiness, dharmakaya, are explained everywhere in the sutras and tantras by the example The inseparability of these two is the good dhatu of dharmas. Since it is changeless it is the existing gotra." After its defilements are purified, by manifesting its full-blown buddha qualiti called the "developed gotra." Its root, self-awareness wisdom, is luminosity.
When those two gotras are awakened, by the two accumulations being accumulated, defiler two gotras are purified. The buddha qualities are made capable of appearing. Ultimate rupa buddha qualities is attained.
Just as the six perfections are classified in terms of the two accumulations, so are the stage development and fulfillment. The Net of Illusion says:

Development and fulfillment are the two accumulations,
Those of merit and wisdom, as well as the three empowerments,
Plus the fourth, which is the nature of suchness itself.
There are other ways of dividing beyond all measure.

The first three empowerments, or abhishekas, are the vase, secret, and prajñajñana abhishe Producing the purity of the developing stage, these are the accumulation of merit. The deve includes all meditations with complexity on the mandalas of deities and so forth.
The fourth, the precious word-empowerment, producing the purity of the fulfillment stage, is accumulation of wisdom. The fulfillment stage includes all meditations on luminosity and so without complexity.

By these purifying defilements of the gotra, as the sun emerges from dark clouds, self-existi buddhahood comes forth from the coverings of the kleshas.
As for the extensive explanation, the gotras were previously taught. The stages of secret m explained below, so we shall not deal with them here.

e. The related explanation of the virtues

There are three sections

1) How the unification of the two accumulations is perfected

The actions of the ten virtues are the best dharmas in the world
The formed and formless dhyanas are part of gathering merit,
That is concerned with relativity and appearance.
What is completely without the complexities of the world
Is accumulation of wisdom, which is the absolute.
These are the objects of meditation and post-meditation.
By practicing the unification of these two,
Everything that is excellent will be established.

As previously taught, the ten virtues, dhyanas, and formless attainments are in accord with r
when a being has aroused bodhicitta and attained prajña and upaya; the ten virtues, dhyana attainments, and so forth become causes of liberation. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita s

O Subhuti, those who develop the conduct of the ten virtues, the four samadhis, and the four formless attainments, when they also arouse bodhicitta, aspiration to unsurpassable enlightenment, at that time, since this is in accord with liberation, it becomes a cause of omniscience. This should be performed. By being mastered, this should be established.

2) How one does not dwell in samsara or nirvana:

Just like wholesome actions that are samsaric formations,
Formations of nirvana are explained as karmic actions.
But since the latter are a means of transcending samsara,
They are also a means of liberation from karma.

The ten wholesome actions that accord with merit are samsaric confusions. However, if one with these, we will become confused, it is not so. These activities lead to liberation when we karma is natureless, as is taught by similar examples. Insofar as these activities are a means of bein samsara, they do not produce samsaric formations. In any case, the great compassion by w saddened with samsara exists within samsara without being covered by its defects. While it

to be unborn, and by skillful means, the great compassion does not fall into one-sided peace.
Abhisamsayalankara says:

By knowledge we do not dwell within samsara,
By compassion we do not dwell in peace.

The Precious Mala says:

Exponents of nothingness go to the lower realms.
Exponents of being will go to the higher ones.
By knowing reality exactly as it is,
Without dualistic dependence, we will be liberated.

And that is how it is.

3) The explanation of the fruition

From the brief and extended teachings,

a) The brief teachings

Now the fruition of entering into the ten virtues of the path is explained:

For those who are on the path, the fruit of the ten wholesome actions
Has ripening, concordant cause, the power, and action.

These are its four aspects.

b) The extensive explanation,

There are nine sections

i) Ripening

As for the fruition of ripening:

Depending on whether such practice is small, between, or great,
We will be born as human beings or as gods,
Elsewhere we will attain to ultimate truth and goodness.

The aspect according with merit is not exhausted. Temporally we experience the happiness human beings. Ultimately, we will attain the level of buddhahood. The Prajñaparamita in Eig
says:

O noble Shariputra, what is gained by virtuous roots is that after going among gods and human beings, we become unsurpassably enlightened. What are virtuous roots? There the ten virtues, which possess the single arousal of bodhicitta, the aspiration to supreme enlightenment, the four dhyanas, the four formless attainments, and the six paramitas. Thes never have any gaps and never become non-existent.

ii) Karmic fruition that accords with the cause

As for the fruition according with the cause:

Actions that have compatibility with the cause
Are those of one who is by nature inclined to the wholesome.
Experience of this is of long life and great enjoyment.
We have a compatible consort and is without enemies.
We is not reviled. Relationships are friendly.
Our words are taken to heart, and people gladly hear them.
Satisfied, we are kind to others, and have good views.

The Sutra Teaching the Ten Purities says:

Because of the karma of these ten virtues, the field is ennobled by our efforts. Our lives are lengthened. Our enjoyments are greater. We have compatible spouses and no en We are not disparaged. Everyone is pleasant to us. Our words are considered worthy of b heeded. Everyone is glad to hear them. We become contented. There is mutual kindness.
There are good views.

iii) The fruition of its power

As for mastery or power:

We are born by its power in rich and brilliant countries.
Potent food, drink, and herbs are easily digested.
We are born in clean places of medicinal herbs and such.
The odor and atmosphere is good and agreeable.
Others do not cheat us, and we are not in fear.
There are no harmful obstacles or danger to our lives.
People suit us and contact with them is very happy.
The flow of the seasons is good, and grain is plentiful.
We live in level places, adorned by lakes and ponds.
The many flourishing flowers and fruits are very good.
Vegetables, fruits, and herbs are delicious with fine aromas.
Everything grows well and there are friends and protectors.

By giving up cutting off life, we are born in good and pleasant countries. By giving up taking not given, we are born in places where food and drink are good-tasting and easily digested a are potently effective. By abandoning inappropriate sex, we are born in clean and good-sme

By abandoning false speaking, the places in which we are born are without danger of harm f enemies, thieves, and so on, and we are not deceived.
By abandoning divisive speaking, we are born in places with many compatible people, with f stones, and thorns. By abandoning harsh language, we are born in a place where the seaso grain ripens at a good time. By abandoning sophistic speech, we are born in level places or lakes and ponds.
By abandoning covetice we are born with places where many flowers and fruits and abunda harvests are seen. We have excellent protectors, relatives, and friends. This is taught in the Ten Purities

iv) The fruition of action:

The actions of beings spread happiness on happiness.
All good thoughts are established just as one desires.

The Vast Play says:

By good behavior one's stock of merit is increased.
We are made holders of that which is excellent,
The supreme accumulation of enlightenment.

The Excellent Action says:

These excellencies occur even within this human life.

v) The fruition of the six perfections:

Generosity brings enjoyment, and discipline happiness.
Patience brings beauty, and diligence brilliant qualities.
Meditation beings peace of mind, and prajña liberation.

The accomplishments of bodhicitta are that possessiveness is renounced, harmful behavior anger is abandoned, we exert ourselves in what is wholesome, the mind is one-pointed in vi
of the two truths is known. By good actions of the six paramitas, true fruition is attained. The F
says:

Generosity, discipline, patience, and exertion
Meditation and prajña, and compassion are cultivated.
Generosity completely bestows our intrinsic wealth.
Discipline performs beneficial actions for others.
Patience is the way that we abandon aggression.
Exertion is enthusiastic, wholesome action.
Meditation is one-pointedness, without the kleshas.
Prajña is resolving the meaning of the truth.
Compassion is a heartfelt noble identification
With all other sentient beings as of one taste with ourselves.
Generosity beings enjoyment, discipline happiness;
Patience radiance and exertion brilliancy.
Meditation brings peace, and prajña liberation.
Their essential kindness is the accomplishing of all goals.
When all of these seven activities, without remainder,

Have been brought to complete perfection all at once,
There is the sphere of wisdom beyond the compass of thought.
We have attained the being of a world-honored one.

The six paramitas are essentially kindness. This is the accomplisher of the deeds of bodhic extensive explanation is below.

vi) The fruition of the Four Immeasurables

As for the benefits of the four immeasurables:

Kindness makes us pleasant, and compassion beneficial.
Joy fulfills, and equanimity makes us sublime.
In short the ultimate fruit of the two accumulations
Is that incidentally higher states are manifested.
Ultimately truth and goodness are established.
This excellent path is the chariot of the mahayana.
It establishes the perfection of the buddhas of the three times.

Through kindness, we are pleasant to everyone. Through compassion we perform limitless brings perfect wealth. Equanimity makes the mind workable. The sutras say:

By having kindness mind is vast, the seven activities have been performed. One's knowled is certain. Shravakas, pratyekabuddhas, and extraordinary ones will attain the pleasures of and human beings and be colorfully adorned.

The Precious Mala says:

Food of fish for three hundred Offered three times each day
Cannot match the pure merit
Of just a minute of kindness

Kind ones will be gods and humans.
They will be well-restrained.
Unharmed by poison and weapons,
Their minds will be good and happy.
Born in the world of Bhrama,

Their success will be effortless,

Even if not liberated,
They will attain the eight qualities.
    Beings will be made to produce
The mind of bodhicitta.

Having relied on that,
They will become as solid
As the lord of mountains.
Within them bodhicitta
Will be forever attained.

It will never happen
That they have no chance for faith.
By custom becoming excellent,
By emptiness and so forth,
Without desiring dharmas,
Carefully they will attain
To everything that is wholesome.
By their motionlessness,
They will gain mindfulness.

Producing discursive thoughts
They will gain intellect.
By offering and homage,
they will realize the meaning.

By carefully guarding Dharma
They will develop prajña.
Those listeners to the Dharma
Who have the gift of faith,

By having no obscurations,
Will accompany the buddhas.
Everything they wish for
Will quickly be obtained.

Without even wanting to do so
They will accomplish their goals.
As they are not miserly,
Enjoyments will increase.
Since they have no pride,
They will be principal ones.
By patience in the Dharma,
They will grasp its power.

With essential generosity
    And fearless generosity
Unharmed by all the maras.
They will gain the highest powers.

Stupas strung with lamps,
Lamps to those in darkness
By these generous lamps and ships
The divine eye will be gained.

By offerings of stupas,
Services, music, and bells,
Excellent yak tails and conches,
The divine ear will be gained.

Not discussing confusions of others,
Not mentioning injured limbs,
Because they guard their minds,
They know the minds of others.

Giving boots and horses,
Growing humble and reverent,
Giving mounts to the guru,
They gain miraculous power

For the sake of Dharma and such
They remember the meanings of texts.
By spotless generous Dharma

Remembering former lives.

Knowing things as they are,
They know that things are essenceless.
They gain the six higher perceptions,
Exhausting all defilements.

To accomplish the liberation
Of limitless sentient beings,
They possess equanimity,
Knowing the nature of suchness,

Because their meditation
Is moistened with compassion,
Having the supreme aspects,
They are victorious ones.

By various pure aspirations,
The buddha field is purified.
Giving precious things to the sages,
They emanate limitless light

With such pure karma and fruit,
Always thinking of beings,
They will always do benefit.
That will benefit you.

Just those are the realm means of crossing over to the level of buddhahood. The Successio
says:

Of the two accumulations of merit and wisdom
The highest fruit is entering holy liberation
No other way of entering was ever known to exist.
Descending from the gathering clouds of purity
Make the cool rain of excellent dharmas now appear.

vii) The fruition of the two truths:

Thus the formative actions of samsara and nirvana
Depend on mind whose nature is luminosity.
Simplicity like the sky, it does not think of a doer,
The meaning of both the two truths is dependent origination.

All karma depends on mind; if we examine mind, it is essenceless and luminous. The supre distinction of the relative and absolute truths, because of the nature of interdependent arisin
pure.
The Shri-Samadhiraja Sutra says:

At that time without evil deeds, and with the ten powers,
There is the supreme samadhi of the Victorious One.
Beings in samsara are like beings in a dream.
None of them is ever born or ever dies.

Though in transmigration we go to other worlds,
None our karmic actions is ever left behind.
Within samsara their black and white fruitions ripen.
They are not permanent, nor are they nothingness.

Without any gathered karma, there would be no pure lands.
Even if they were created, they could not be reached.
If another produced them, they could not be seen.
Without any transmigration, there is no rebirth.

Nothing at all exists, and nothing is non-existent,
Or it would not be pure to enter the natural state.
There would be no entering perfect pacification
Of all the activities of deluded sentient beings.

The three worlds like a dream are utterly essenceless.
Quickly vanishing, they are impermanent like illusion.
Because there is no coming, there also is no going.
Constant things, eternally empty, have no marks.

This is what is realized by the sugatas--

With the excellent buddha qualities of the victorious ones,
The markless natural state is the peace of the unborn.
Its powers and strengths are powers of buddha qualities.

This itself is the Buddha, supreme among all leaders.
By collecting the qualities of excellent white dharmas
We attain the power of wisdom and buddha qualities
And the excellences of miracle and higher perception.

viii) The individual fruitions of virtue and evil deeds

Appearing even while it is nothingness, karma is explained by the example of being like a dr

Primordial purity appearing as nothingness,
Like a painter, karma produces everything.
It follows us everywhere, as a shadow does the body.
Like physical pleasure and pain, it never slips away.
Like a waterfall, it is difficult to deflect.
Making beings rise or fall, it is like the ruler of beings.
It is extremely vast, like the endless space of the sky.
Whether black or white, it never changes at all,
Any more than the white kunda lotus becomes the blue utpala.

Though karmas and kleshas are natureless, they ceaselessly appear. Therefore, they depe ignorance as their root. The condition is the arising of objects. The cause is connection wit poisons.
The Objects of Mindfulness says:

The ground of karma is ignorance, and if there is insight, one will not come into the power of karma. It is like a skilled and confident painter, who produces a variety of works. T condition is thoughts of objects. like a monkey, it is very active. Like a fish, it dwells in the ocean of samsara. Like a householder, it collects a variety of habitual patterns. Like illusion something that does not exist still appears. Like a shadow, it always follows us. Like joy an sorrow, it does not transmigrate. Like a river, it is hard to turn back. Like a king, it can exchange happiness and unhappiness. Like the sky, it is vast. Like utpala and kumut lotus one does not become another.

ix) The fruition of profound interdependent arising:

Though examining karmas, they have no nature at all,
Like dreams they are still creators of various joys and sorrows.
Except as mere projections, they have no substance or quality.
Profound dependent arising, infallible cause and effect,
Neither existent nor nothing, they are non-duality.
They ripen as something like the action that was done.
This is the vision of things in their nature and extent.
As it was well-taught by the Omniscient One.

The inner and outer realms are false conceptions. If they are analyzed, even if we look for t karma and kleshas are found. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 4.47

If the kleshas are not in objects, the senses, between, or elsewhere,
Where are these harmers of beings? They are like illusion.
Abandon the fear in your heart and try to rely on prajña.

In the absolute there is no karma; but here in the dream-like relative, there is happiness and and joy and sorrow are distinguished. If it is discriminated and examined by the mind, karma existence
and non-existence, is like space. Since there is no karma to be accumulated, do not accum mind being confused over and over again. That is the instruction. This presentation is know
by the Omniscient One, and not by the traditions of others. The teacher Bhajya says in his Pre Madhyamaka:

Karmas with non-deceptive cause and effect,
As it has been taught, are like a dream.
Bhagavan this is taught by you alone.
Aside from that, it is not explained in treatises.

f. Refuting other wrong conceptions,

There are four sections

1) Eliminating denial of cause and effect.

Now other sorts of wrong conceptions are eliminated:

Those who deny the validity of cause and effect
Are students of the heretics and the nihilists.
Whoever has confidence merely in emptiness Falls into the extreme of the nihilistic view.
These go lower and lower upon an evil path.
Never liberated from the lower states of being,
They are ever more distant from the happy ones.

Such fools are conspicuous in their pride. Some who do not know the intent of the Dharma no karma and no fruition of karma--within suchness like space they do not exist at all. Givin
they practice the evil deeds that are natural to them. The Good Army Sutra says:

Those who say there is no karma and no ripening of karma are fools who have only the literal meaning. Those who say this and rely on a great collection of unwholesomeness may promise this Dharma with their mouths, but are not within this Dharma. They rely on the pat of the worldly charvakas. They say, "It should be understood as a delusion of Mara."

The Precious Mala says:

In short, a view like this is nihilism.
They say there is no such thing as fruition of karma.
Having no merit, they go to the lower realms.
They are said to be persons with wrong view.

Also it says:

Nihilists like these will go to the lower realms.

2) Refuting the view of emptiness.

Some also say:

"Cause, and effect, and compassion, and the gathering of merit.
With these childish literal Dharmas one will never get enlightened."
They do not speak the truth, whose meaning is like the sky.
The story great yogins tell is "Go and do your practice!"

As for those who say such words:

Such a view is more nihilistic than nihilism.
They are on a path that goes ever lower and lower.
To deny the cause and affirm the effect is very strange!

Even such outsider materialist extremists as the charvaka nihilists do not say that perceived are without cause and effect; you deny a cause of liberation, but still maintain the effect. Th
You do this by maintaining that there is liberation because of actionless meditation.

3) Refuting those having the mind of the summit of samsara

When people claim, "it is like space," we should say:

If space is reality, why do we need to meditate?
If not, then meditation is useless drudgery.
If liberation is gained by meditating on nothingness,
Those who have a vacuous mind will get enlightened.
But proclaiming such meditation establishes cause and effect.
Therefore, put aside this bad and inferior path.

Some people claim, "It is like space." If so, and if it is already established, we do not need t

If it is not established, meditation will be of no use. This non-existent thing will never becom thing, just as empty space will not later become something else. This is a reply to those who say,
the kleshas is attainment of liberation altogether." Saying it is attained by this alone, postulates that this occurs by cause and effect. Therefore say that there is no cause and effect. If it is maintained that there is liberation by meditating nothingness, even worldly hedonists could be liberated by doing that. The Dohakosha says:

Someone who says, "I have been pierced by an arrow,"
Will never be liberated by having a mind like space.

This refutes such a view, so do not think like that.

4) The true explanation of cause and effect.

Now the true meaning is explained:

The genuine path has interdependence and cause and effect.
This is spontaneous union of prajña and upaya.
Using the means of apparent but natureless cause and effect,
There is the apparent natureless path of meditation.
And thus the apparent natureless fruit can be attained.
Apparent but natureless benefit for sentient beings
Is produced in a way that is apparent but natureless.
This is pure cause and effect, profound in its interdependence.
Therefore, the essence of sutras and tantras of the true meaning
Is that by having united the two accumulations,
And by the two stages of development and completion,
Perfect buddhahood will quickly be established.

From the two accumulations, whose illusion-like appearance is natureless, buddhahood is e
The Knowledge of Illusion Sutra Requested by Supreme Goodness Lady says:

By gathering the illusion-like accumulations,
There will be illusion-like enlightenment.
There will be a performance that is like illusion
Of illusion-like benefits for the sake of sentient beings.

The sutras of the true meaning and all the tantras explain it in the same way. In the tantras, development and fulfillment establish the two accumulations, and by that one becomes enlig mandala.

C. the final summary:

Therefore, abandon all the aspects of cause and fruition
That have a part in constructing formations of samsara.
But then we should produce with wholehearted diligence

The cause and fruition of the state of liberation.
By that the highest truth and goodness will manifest,
There will be the establishment of enlightenment.

All virtues are to be established. All evil deeds are to be left behind. The goal of life must be exist, since one should quickly go to it. The Spiritual Letter says:

With many harms, this life is blown away on the wind.
If even a river of water is impermanent,
Exhaling and inhaling, when we go to sleep,
That we ever awake is really miraculous.

For that reason to do evil to oneself and others is not suitable. To go so far as to do evil dee sake of khenpos, loppöns, and the three jewels, is senseless, since by the evil ripening with not be able to participate in them. The same text says:

Practice virtue. For the sake of brahmins and gods
For feasting, fathers and mothers, queen and retinue,
Even for their sake do not do evil deeds,
You will get no reward but ripening in hell.

As for doing any sort of evil deeds,
If this is not cut off at once, as if with a weapon,
When the time of death arrives, then there will manifest
The karmic fruition of all these various evil deeds.

Therefore, even with the elimination of evil actions, it also says:

As for the seeds of these unwholesome activities,
By purifying defilements of body, speech, and mind,
We should earnestly strive with all our present skill.
Not to create an atom of these for any reason,

This cannot be established by anything other than our own powers, or by any association wi
Accepting good and rejecting evil must come from themselves alone. It is said:

As for liberation depending on oneself,

It does not come from association with another,
If we have learning, discipline, and meditation,
A purified world will thus attain to happiness.
Let us attain a happiness like that of the Bhrama realms.

Completely abandoning through practice of the four dhyanas,
The happiness and sorrow of desiring and acting,
Let us make an effort in the four noble truths.

As to how this should be done, it says:

The proper noble master always day and night
Transcends the ordinary kind of highs and lows.
Not without fruition even in the womb,
By being mindful, anything else will become weaker.
One will always experience kindness, joy, and compassion.
And always meditate in genuine absorption.

Even if it does not please superior ones,
May we attain the happiness of the Bhrama realms.
The happiness and sorrow of desiring and acting,
Completely being abandoned through practice of the four dhyanas,
May purity, radiance, and happiness increase,
And our fortune of fruition be equal to the gods.

Without conception, without attachment and antidotes,
Having the principal virtues of the four dhyana states,
As for the five great virtues and the five non-virtues,
Let us strive to perform the ones that are virtuous.

In a bit of water, a bit of salt will change its taste;
But this is not the case with the stream of the river Ganges.
Similarly, though our evil deeds are very few,
They will be known within the scope of our virtuous roots.

Wild discursiveness and sinking in sluggish depression
Are states that will be harmful to dark and murky minds.
Sleepiness and doubt and yearning with desire,

These five obscurations are thieves of happiness.

However as for faith, pure effort, and mindfulness
The supreme dharmas of samadhi, and the five good prajñas
We should make an effort to manifest all of these.
Then there will be the highest powers and faculties.

In that way much that is to be transcended will be transcended, and good dharmas that are excellent will be established.

D. the dedication of the merit of this extensive explanation of the aspects of the meaning ar proper:

Thus with the cooling Dharma rain of mahasukha
May the two accumulations, merit and wisdom,
Grow and flourish widely within the fertile soil,
Of well-manured minds of limitless sentient beings.
Here in samsara, completely filled with karma and kleshas,
May the weary nature of mind today find ease from fatigue.

That is the good aspiration. By the cooling dharma rain of words and meaning, in the field o of sentient beings, by the increase of the good harvest of happiness, may whatever kleshas cleared away, removing the impoverishment of those who have been deprived with accumulating ha wealth of the sky-treasury of buddha qualities, may our weariness be eased.

By these present teachings the gates of Dharma are opened.
The profound and precious meaning is there to be received.
With the thought that they would benefit others, this was composed.
By them may all sentient beings encounter supreme enlightenment.

Within the sky of mind, the planets and stars of the kleshas,
Improper mental creations, produce the white glow or appearance.
By merit overcoming their luminous/empty nature,
May there come the daylight of the dawn of wisdom.

May the wishes of beings for joy and happiness be fulfilled.
May we cross over the ocean of karma and the kleshas.

May there be effortless increase of all that is good and happy.

Chapter V: Relying on the Spiritual Friend

By the four ordinary preliminaries, one's continuum of mind has been made workable, and b explanation of the qualities of our enlightened family, the gotra, joy has been produced. Now fifth chapter on the spiritual friend, the one who properly teaches their meaning. Here there are

A. Fully relating to the one who teaches the path without error.
B. The source of all truth and goodness.
C. The instruction to rely on the holy ones and abandon what is evil.
D. Avoiding those to be avoided, with those associated with them
E. Knowing what to accept and reject, and how siddhi is to be received.
F. The dedication of the merit of the situation.

A. fully relating to the one who teaches the path without error.

Now there is the teaching of the characteristics of the spiritual friend who teaches the way o has just been explained:

Thus the unerring cause and effect of the excellent path
Arises from relating to the holy ones.

Knowing Dharma and adharma, and wholesome and unwholesome, comes from relying on friend, or in Sanskrit kalyana mitra. The Sutra of the Display of Noble Ones says:

Kye, O son of noble family, by you the spiritual friend should be pleased. Since he completely knows the collections of merit and non-merit, when there is samsara, he complet clears away its causes.

B. the source of all truth and goodness:

Thus the unerring cause and effect of the excellent path
Arises from relating to the holy ones.
Attainment of the three kinds of enlightenment,
That of victorious ones, together with their sons,

That of the shravakas, and that of the pratyekabuddhas,
Arises from a relationship to spiritual friends.
Also the higher manifestations of samsara,
And whatever happiness may be involved in them,
Arises from relating to the holy ones.
Therefore, we should rely upon the holy ones.

The Sutra requested by Maitreya says:

The liberation of those who are shravakas, pratyekabuddhas, and supremely enlightened ones, and as many with the skandha of wisdom as there may be, all these shou understood to arise from relying on the spiritual friend.

Maitreya says:

Moreover, as much benefit and happiness as there may be for sentient beings, it all arises fr one's virtuous roots. This should also be understood to arise from the spiritual friend.

C. The instruction to rely on the holy ones and abandon what is evil,

Within this section there are

1. the brief teaching
2. the extended explanation.

1. the brief teaching

Now there is the instruction to rely on the spiritual friend and abandon evil:

As vines that grow on a sandalwood tree assume its odor,
By relating with holy ones, we ourselves become holy.
Like kusha grass that has its roots in a putrid swamp,
By keeping to bad company, we ourselves go bad.
Therefore sincerely try to relate with holy persons.
And also to abandon evil spiritual friends.

A vine that clings to a sandalwood tree, because of that is tall and fragrant. Kusha grass gro of decayed fish and so on itself becomes nasty. Just so, having seen the benefit and harm t relying on holy and unholy ones, as for the instruction to rely on holy ones, the Vinaya says:

As a vine that relies on a sala tree
Will grow to be strong with an aromatic smell
The person who relies on the holy ones
Will be embraced by goodness and shine with splendor.

Also it says there:

When kusha grass is entwined with rotten fish,
And they have not been kept quite far away,
The kusha too will begin to be like the fish.
And similarly what people will become Relying on unholy persons is like that.

2. The extended explanation

There are three sections.

a. The characteristics of the one to be relied upon;
b. how one should rely on such a person;
c. the characteristics of the student who is to be accepted.

a. the characteristics of the one to be relied upon,

There are eight sections.

1) the characteristics of the spiritual friend in general,

Briefly, as for the characteristics of spiritual friends, if it is asked what they should properly b first
generally, and then in the paramita tradition

What is the proper manner of these holy ones?
As leaders of the world, they cooperate with all.
In going beyond the world, they cooperate with nothing.

In actions of the three gates, they are more noble than anyone.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

If it is asked what spiritual friends should be like, insofar as they are perfect leaders of many sentient beings, if they are seen, it is not inappropriate. Since they are beyond the wo they have nothing in common with anything. Since what they undertake is always beneficial they accomplish immeasurable benefit.

2) Their virtues

If it is asked what their virtues are like:

They are peaceful in body, their actions pure and faultless.
They are skilled in cutting through doubt. Their speech is faultless and pleasant.
Their deep and peaceful minds are a treasury of omniscience.
Compassionate and learned, they are limitless in their virtues.
Vast in ñ, their vision and action are like the sky.
In their buddha activity they are limitless.
All who have a connection with them are benefited.
In kindness they abandon sadness and fatigue,
And for that reason they are constantly diligent.
Beings rely on spiritual friends as ennobling guides.

They benefit sentient beings by many virtues of body, speech, and mind. Their prajña and r as deep as space. The undertakings of their Buddha activity plant seeds of liberation in all v connected with them. By their compassion they look on every one of them like an only child. By the we qualities of the teachings, they turn the wheel of Dharma of any vehicle to which someone m
The Madhyamakalankara says:

Spiritual friends are tamed and peaceful--very peaceful.
Replete with effort and qualities, they are rich in teachings.
Having supremely realized these, they are skilled in speech.
Guarding the nature of kindness, they rely on renunciation.

3) Their particular characteristics.

In addition to these qualities, among others that they have, the guru of secret mantra also ha

In particular, as for the marks of gurus of secret mantra,
They keep their empowerments, vows, and samayas pure and unbroken.
They reach the other shore of the ocean of tantric instructions.
They have mastered the four aspects of sadhana
Propitiation, practice, transforming, and buddha activity.
They have perfected view, meditation, action, and fruit,
And the nyams, the signs, and heat that accompany realization.
Very kind, with an excellent grasp of skillful means,
They establish students in ripening and liberation.
They are undiminishing cloud-banks of the rain of lineage blessings.
Rely on such a skilled and accomplished, glorious guru.
The commentary of the great teacher Vimalamitra, The Mirror-like Net of Miracles says:

Such gurus also have completely attained the empowerments of the outer and inner mandalas. Their vows and samayas are pure. They are learned in the individual meanings the tantras. They have trained in propitiation and practice, together with the karmic applications. Their view of realization is not obscured. In their meditation, they are familiar with the experiences of the nyams. They are connected to a variety of actions. By compass they lead students. They have these eight characteristics.

The guru, in addition, because the lineage is unbroken, diffuses an atmosphere of blessings this ninth characteristic is taught.

4) The praise by means of examples,

If it is asked how many virtues such a guru has, this is the explanation:

Their buddha qualities are utterly limitless.
To give only part of the praise that is due to such friends of beings,
They steer the great ship that crosses the ocean of samsara.
Incomparable captains of those who journey on that path.
They remove poverty, like wish fulfilling gems.
They are the amrita that puts out the fire of karma and kleshas.
They are the excellent clouds of the cooling rain of Dharma.
They are celestial thunder, delighting all sentient beings.
Kings of physicians, they cure the sickness of the three poisons.

They are a radiant lamp, dispelling the darkness of ignorance.
They are like a great tree that can fulfill all wishes.
All the joy of sentient beings arises from them.
Like an "excellent vase" or a wish-fulfilling gem,
They spontaneously grant whatever is desired.
They are the measureless rays that shine from the sun of kindness.
Removing affliction, they are the light of the moon of benefits.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

Kye, O son of noble family, moreover, because they liberate from the ocean of samsara, they are like ships. They are like captains of those who dwell on the path of libera Since they clear away the deteriorations of samsara, they are like a king of wish-fulfilling ge Since they remove the fires of karma and the kleshas, they are like a river. Since they caus great rain of Dharma to descend, they are like excellent clouds. Since they make all beings rejoice, they are like the great drum of the gods. Because they clear away the sickness of th kleshas, they are like a king of physicians. Because they clear away all the darkness of ignorance, they are like a lamp. Because they fulfill the hopes of all desires, they are like a wish-fulfilling tree. Because they accomplish all that is wished for, they are like an excellent wishing vase. By their measureless kindness they are like the disk of the sun. Since they c the torment of the kleshas, they are like the disk of the moon. Since they bestow the wealth the buddha qualities, they are like the god of wealth Vaishravana.

5) The praise of their being in accord with the goal.

Vast in realization, they are like an unbroken sky.
Like planets and stars, their samadhi is self-luminous.
The ocean of their kindness is utterly measureless.
Their great waves of compassion flow like the stream of a river.
They are like a snow mountain in their immovable splendor.
They are supremely immovable, like the mass of Mount Meru.
Like lotuses growing in mud, they are not obscured by samsara.
They are kind and loving like a father or mother,
With equanimity toward every sentient being.

Their limitless qualities are a precious treasury.
As leaders of the world, they resemble powerful kings.

The sutra of the supremely vast garland of buddhahood, the Avatamsaka Sutra says:

Kye, sons of the Victorious one, these virtues arising from the spiritual friend are measureless. Since they arise because of opportunities for compassion, they are like the sk Their collection of many samadhis and dharanis is like the stars. Their immeasurable compassion is like a great, full ocean. Their loving-kindness is immeasurable like a river. Never disturbed by agitation, they are like a snow mountain. Not being moved from suchnes they are like Mount Meru. Since, even when they exist within samsara, they are not obscure by defilements, they are like a great lotus. In the equality of unobscured compassion, they a like a father or mother. Because of their immeasurable buddha qualities, they are like a precious treasure source. Since they completely liberate from all wandering within samsara they are like the Tathagata. This host of their buddha qualities is beyond measure and limit.

6) The summary.

As for further qualities:

Wherever these gurus dwell, who are the lords of Dharma,
They are the equals of all the buddhas of the world.
By seeing, hearing, or contact, or by remembering them,
Samsara will be subsequently overthrown.
In the immensity of their great waves of buddha activity,
Their burden, like the great earth, supports all sentient beings.

When buddhas arrive in the world, all who see, hear, or remember them, will eventually be e happiness. Since this is also established by those gurus, they are have the same kind of bu emanations of the Victorious One, they are explained in the same way. The Great Drum Su

Do not produce any suffering, be all-joyful.
Do not wail laments, but be all-joyful.
I in later time, will emanate
In the form of the spiritual friend himself,
Producing benefits for you and others.

The Tantra of the Vajra Mirror says:

Chief of the Vajrasattva mandala,

The guru is the equal of all the buddhas.

Without sadness and weariness, like the earth, they produce benefits for sentient beings. Th see peace, the benefit for oneself, they are not concerned with it, undertaking the benefit of when it is very difficult. The Letter to Students says:

These who strive to do benefits for other persons
Those beings are attentive in their majesty;
They are noble ones who have the power to make beings happy.
Riding on the horse of the splendid, radiant sun,
Those who are bringers of light, proceed in such a way.

Though not piling up burdens, the earth supports the world;
Such, without self-benefit, is the nature of the great ones,
Regarding the tastes of happiness and benefit as one.

By heaped dark clouds of ignorance, beings are disturbed.
Seeing them fall helpless into blazing fires of suffering,
Attentively striving as if those fires flared on their foreheads,
In such matters this those persons are also very skilled.
They know how to benefit other sentient beings.

Even in the Avici Hell, full of tongues of flame,
They enter as joyfully, as if it were snow and moonlight.
As if they swam in a pleasant lake of lotus blossoms
They burn with longing for these collected tongues of flame.

Those who are skilled in Dharmic benefits for others,
Have comfort even in a grove with leaves of swords.
The company of divine maidens in a pleasure grove,
Would not produce such happiness as a moment of this.

In order that beings who cannot cross over may cross over,
Entering into the unfordable river Vaitravani
By being touched by the flowing waves of a heavenly river
They would not get the nature of such happiness.

Ornamented by such jewels of good conduct,
In luminosity radiant, with the amrita of peace
Producing the joy of joys, unremembered and hard to find,
Auspiciousness of auspiciousness, they keep the cause of peace.
The flower of speech of the Sugata is always reliable.
From the flower of that tree arises a vast fruition.
The flowers of the Sugata's speech can be relied on.
As bees on honey, they depend on producing joy.

7) The Buddhas' supreme view

The buddha-guru is a fourth to the three jewels.
The guru is Sri Heruka, lord of the mandala.
In benefits of taming beings of this dark age,
Even better than the Buddha, for beings to be tamed.
The vajra master is the root of all the siddhis.
Bow the three gates purely, without hypocrisy.

The Unified Sameness of the Continuums of All the Buddhas says:

With the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha
The guru is a fourth.

The Universal Secret says:

The heruka who is the lord of the mandala,
The supreme guru's siddhi is very great.

The Immaculate Sky Sutra says:

Ananda, though the sugatas do not appear to all sentient beings, spiritual friends have appe everywhere, teaching the Dharma and sowing seeds of liberation. Therefore, think of spiritu better than the sugatas.

The Dohakosha says:

The root of all the siddhis is the vajra master himself.

The Great Display of the Wish-fulfilling Gem says:

Thus with devotion and fear to the holy guru,
Always offering all the offerings,
By pleasing him, let us serve the truth itself.

8) the benefits attending on this service

If it is asked what other benefits it has:

Having blocked the path that leads to the lower realms,
They establish us in the fortune of the higher realms.
They benefit us within this life and those to come.
They bless our minds, and so reveal reality.
We are set on the path that ripens and frees within this life.
Therefore with a faith that is always firm and changeless
Always rely on the guru, without fatigue or regret.

They block the lower realms and teach the higher realms. They lead to the level of buddhah and are always the source of all buddha qualities without deceit or pretence, without holding reversing. If one is respectful and reverent to them, special qualities will arise within this life. The Tantra Wisdom
says:

By always being without hypocrisy
To gurus having all excellent qualities,
If even small offerings are made to them,
This life will be long, and one will have no sickness,
Having excellent and pleasant enjoyments.
Later liberation will be mastered.

The Song of the Oral Instructions of the Inexhaustible Treasury says
E ma! The secret teaching of the dakinis.
All the various Dharmas have but a single meaning.
Embodied in the teacher, the holy guru himself.
Like the lips of faith this supreme Jetsun,
With devoted mind should be received on the heads of virtuous ones.

The guru points to mind collected into one.

What is pointed out is the essence of students themselves.
By realizing all this as suffering in an instant
As for that these conquering heroes by their kindness
See the possible benefit, to actualize their kindness
We should always hold to these kings of all physicians.

From the ocean of samsara so very deep and wide,
There is no other excellent ship that liberates.
Having relied on that holy ship of excellent bliss
The motionless antidote which is esteemed by all.

By the pure rays of the light of wisdom like the sun,
Such an excellent being makes ignorance into insight.
Transforming all dharmas to bliss, like changing grass to gold
Always rely on the guru's wheel turning upaya.

By their mind like rivers dualistic views are overcome.
If we never abandon anything at all,
Unobscured wisdom will thereby fully be possessed.
Resting in uncontrived mind and its phenomena.
Arises from the amrita-presence of the guru.

What to convention is only mind and mental events
These labeled designations in the companions of yogins Undergo transformation in the guru's lotus presence.
All who abandon the tantras by conventional thinking
Will never know the secret teaching of all the Buddhas

The oral instructions are actually visible to the eye.
They completely pervade the realm of the physical senses.
If one merely touches the dust of the guru's feet,
One will later gain understanding of all wisdom.

The guru releases a thousand arrows of piercing dharmas
A thousand empty apparent transforming skillful actions.

By prajña appearances to be comprehended are seen
As for that prajña, it arises from the pure master.

The kleshas are supremely transformed by skillful means
Any tormenting thoughts that cannot be transformed
From the essence instructions are able to be renounced.
This too will be attained by the power of the Jetsun.
Therefore whatever lineage blessings we may have,
Let us always rely on them with skillful means.

b. how one should rely on the guru

There are two sections,

the teaching by example:

1) If it is asked why one should rely on such a guru:

Just as those who are ill are in need of a king of physicians,
As the people need a ruler, and travelers need companions,
As merchants needs captains, and different sailors need each other.
In order to calm the kleshas and render evil harmless,
So that birth and death will be annihilated,
So that the two benefits are established spontaneously,
So that we can cross the ocean of samsara,
Therefore we should place our reliance on the guru.

As in sickness we rely on a physician, we rely on the guru pacify the illness arising from the ordinary people rely on a king, the guru guards against harm. As travelers rely on a guide, t liberates from the dangers of birth and death. As merchants rely on a ship-captain, the guru accompl self and other. As mariners rely on companions, the guru helps beings cross the river of samsar

2) The explanation of how one should rely one the guru in relying on the guru as on a physician, first as for relying on the guru as one relies on a ph because of illness:

The physician is the guru; the medicine of instructions,
Should be applied to the sickness of our samsaric perception.
Serious effort is the way of using it.
Peace and happiness are the fruit of curing the illness.
Such a way of reliance is of higher measure than others.
Therefore, rely on the guru with these four comprehensions.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

O son of noble family, you should guard yourself from perception of disease.
Perception of the medicine of Dharma should be guarded. The perception should be produc that in diligent practice, the disease is completely cured. Perception of the spiritual friend as capable physician should be produced.
Also, son of noble family, you should produce the perception of yourself as ordinary.
You should produce the perception of fearlessness in the Dharma. You should produce the perception that in diligent practice, torments are completely pacified. You should produce th perception of the spiritual friend as a king. Also, son of noble family, You should produce th perception of yourself as a traveler. You should produce perception of the gift of fearlessnes the Dharma. You should produce the perception that in diligent practice you are liberated fr all fear. You should produce the perception of the spiritual friend as a warrior-escort.
Also, son of noble family, you should produce the perception of yourself as a merchant.
You should produce the perception of the Dharma as your wares. You should produce the perception that in diligent practice you are making great profits. You should produce the perception of the spiritual friend as your ship-captain.
Also, son of noble family, you should perceive yourself as a ship-passenger. You should perceive the Dharma as a ship. You should perceive that in diligent practice you rea the other shore of the river. You should produce the perception of the spiritual friend as a skillful friend.

Also it says there:

Son of noble family, with all reverence toward the spiritual friend, produce a mind immune to sadness like the earth, a mind like vajra, which is not susceptible to any harm, a like a student who never closes the mind against any speech, the mind of a servant who doe go against any command that is heard, and produce a mind without arrogance like cutting o the horns of a bull.

Of these the Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.102

As for spiritual friends, who are ever-virtuous
They are skilled in the meaning of mahayana
And the excellent discipline of a bodhisattva
Even to save one's life, one should never forsake them.

Within the Biography of Shri Sambhava
It is taught how we should rely upon the guru...

c.the characteristics of students that are to be accepted

There are two sections concerning

1) Students to be rejected
2) Students to be accepted.

1) Students to be rejected

There are two topics.

a) those who are bad vessels:

On the other hand, Ill-starred disciples will be the ground of all evils.
They are without shame and they are without faith.
Having no decency, they have but little compassion.
Both by nature and nurture, their behavior is ill-starred.
Their actions, thoughts, and emotions are coarsened by the five poisons.
With crazed distortions of Dharma, Adharma, good, and evil.
Not keeping their vows and samayas, they have no antidote.
Utterly stupid, all but mindless, nearly insatiable,
Their angry words and hostility are forever-increasing.
They relate to gurus with five perverted perceptions.
They see the gurus as musk-deer, and Dharma as musk.
They see themselves as hunters. Their efforts are shot like arrows.
As for the fruition of having accomplished Dharma,
They think they will profit by selling their prize to someone else.

But without samaya, they will suffer here and hereafter.

Students of bad fortune are vessels of many defilements. They have little shame or faith. T little decency or compassion. Their family and nature are bad. Their conduct and fortune ar minds
and kleshas are coarse. They reverse virtue and vice and turn the instructions upside down their vows and samayas. Not shutting the doors of the kleshas, they obscure the antidotes.

prajña,
they are hard to please. Their anger, harsh speech, and selfish attitudes always increase. T adharmic actions. They shame the Buddha. They disgrace the Dharma. Their secret mutilations of th the life of the guru. Completely unpacified, they endanger everyone. In particular, in their m

they are like hunters. They receive precepts from the loppön with this approach alone, if there ar think "
With this and that faults, they are like animals." Saying, "that Dharma is one I have heard ov
they think they are better than anyone else, and regard it as like musk. They delight in shaming o not perfect in the learning of that Dharma and especially in killing them. Because they have few sell and barter so that this life is not auspicious for them. Later they wander in the lower realms.

The commentary to the Tantra of the Presentation of Samaya says:

They disparage the vajra master of the secret mantra
They like to sell the Dharma for power, food, and wealth.
By their family nature, they do not keep samaya.
For them this life will be short, as they damage glory and fortune.
By the dakinis' retribution, they will suffer.
Later they will fall into the lower realms.

b. What occurs if there is no examining .

Also if students are ill-starred:

Some enter students at random, without examination.
At first they speak virtuously; but later they disparage.
With black-motivated mixtures of public and private actions,
They deviously slander the retinue of the guru.
In fruition they will go to the Avici Hell.

Without first examining the continuum of student and guru, a teacher may accept such stude they are newly associated, they speak reverently and respectfully. Then, angered by some blame, speak harshly, and when alone, they indulge in frivolous faults. They disparage everyone in retinue.
Some publicly make a false display of praise and respect, but mentally nurse their lack of fai
As
they revile the guru with hidden agendas and deceitful wiles, there is immeasurable harm. T

the Guru says:

In the Avici Hell and similar fearful places
Those unfortunate beings inhabiting such hells
Are those who have denigrated and cursed the guru
That they stay there long is well and truly taught.

2) students who should be accepted.

There are twelve sections about the characteristics of good students

a) Those who are special vessels:

Students of good fortune live in faith and prajña.
Diligent and careful, always conscious of evil.
Not going beyond the command, guarding their vows and samayas.
The three gates, body, speech, and mind, are tamed.
They are always very compassionate in their thoughts.
Spacious, forbearing, and generous; great in sacred outlook.

Steadfast and very devoted, the benefits of their having pleased the guru are measureless.
the Ornament of the Wisdom of Maitreya says:

O sons or daughters of noble family, some who have excellent faith, if they have reverence for the guru, have an immeasurable heap of merit more limitless than that of thos who have made offerings to all the buddhas for as many kalpas as there are grains of sand Ganges River.

The Holy Wisdom Tantra says:

Compared to offering to the buddhas for kalpas,
If part of a single body-hair of the guru is anointed with a single drop of oil,
The heap of merit is much higher than that.

This is because the guru is a special object. The Embodiment of the Intention says

More than the buddhas of a thousand kalpas
The guru should be known to be a friend.
Why? Because All of the buddhas of those kalpas Arise in dependence on the guru's virtues.
Previously, before there was a guru,
Even the name of "Buddha" did not exist.

b) Thinking of the guru's virtues, confessing, and vowing to refrain

Such students:

They are always mindful of the virtues of the teacher.
They never think of the teacher as having any faults.
Even if they see some, they think of them as virtues.
They think from their hearts that surely these are their projections, Confession and vows to refrain serve as their antidote.

If there is the slightest non-faith, they think of it as a projection with the nature of a dream. T that certainly the guru does not really have these faults. If even in a dream they do not have conduct of the guru, as soon as they awaken from sleep they confess it. The Play of the Waterfall of

If even in a dream, faults are seen in the guru,

As soon as one awakes, if one does not confess,
This will proliferate as the cause of the Avici Hell.

If such thoughts arise during the day, instantly, or within a minute or a day, one should confe for every fault in one's mind one should think of a hundred virtues. Likewise one should exp

c) Abandoning what does not please the guru and asking what is to be done

What does not please the guru and anything like it should be abandoned. One should try to pleasing:

They reject every aspect of what does not please the guru.
And try to please the teacher in any way they can.
Neither do they ever break the teacher's command.
They always treat the teacher's retinue like the teacher.
They do so even in cases where they are personally lower.
They do not take these or the teacher's servants as their students.
Instead they request empowerments and explanations of Dharma.

They abandon what does not please the teacher and accomplish what does. What is taught words must be done. The former text says:

Even if one has faults, if one's acts accord with these words There will be real benefit. Why mention this should be done? In the retinue even those who would say are below one Are treated like the guru. They are not gathered as students. Instead one asks them for Dharma-teachings and empowerments , Requesting ordinations, fire-offerings, and such.

Another text says:

The lesser ones of the guru, are treated like the guru

It is as is said here and elsewhere.

As for the discipline of bodily behavior in his presence,

d) Their behavior:

Their body, speech, and mind are controlled before the teacher.
They sit respectfully and never turn their backs
They smile and do not show any black and angry looks.

The Three Stages says:

In the guru's presence, proper bodily action
Is to sit cross-legged and never turn one's back.
Faces should be smiling, never angry or sinister.
In brief we should be mindful of our every action.

e) They control all faults of speech.

Moreover, as for frivolous speech and so forth:

They do not speak frivolously, nor utter lies and slander.
They do not tell others' faults with harsh and unpleasant speech,
Nor speak any words that are not considered or to the point.

They have nothing to do with joking and humorous banter and idle chatter, repeating rumors false words, running down other people and so forth. Even if these are true, the speaker wil unhappiness. Why so? The guru will condemn them, and there will be quarrels. By quarrel even momentarily, great damage will be produced. The same text says:

Anything connected with careless words
Should not ever be said before the guru.
An ordinary person, if he is angered,
Will fall by that into the occasional hells.

Whoever contradicts the mind of the guru
Will be boiled in deep black utter darkness
For a hundred thousand times ten million kalpas.

As for controlling wrong conceptions in their motivation

f) As for mind:

They are not covetous about the teachers things.

They sheathe the claws of any kind of harmful thoughts.
The various miracles of the guru's actions and conduct
Are not conceived to be a hypocritical sham.
They reject wrong views of the slightest faults and defects
That would be in contradiction with such a view,
By thinking, "This is not right, but the teacher still is doing it.":

They do not greedily think, "if only this which is the guru's were mine! They do not say anyth harmful about the guru's retinue, students, patrons, and so forth, since if this came to attenti himself, it would not please him. They are not hypocritical about actions done for the guru's whether peaceful or harsh, or whether or not they are in accord with worldly convention. They do no wrong," or "That is not the proper way," or that the guru's earlier and later words and action slightest contradiction. The Root Tantra Establishing Wisdom says:

Covetice for the gurus things and retinue
And refuting his close retinue is abandoned.
For sentient beings all his various actions
As beneficial upaya are great miracles.
For the limitless ocean of his intentions and actions
Put aside wrong views, since they do harm.

g) examining one's own faults

Respectfully meditating, reflections arise that because of being unmindful, such actions were through one's own faults:

Whenever they have shown any anger toward the teacher,
Certain that they have faults, they, therefore examine themselves.
Having confessed their faults they vow to abandon them
Bowing their heads in meditation, they supplicate.
Pleasing the teacher thus, they quickly become accomplished.

Anger toward true spiritual friends is not good. Since when we does evil deeds the spiritual pleased, thinking, "how did we go wrong," we examines ourselves. We confess and strongl Generally, anger at anyone certainly depends on ourselves. If we did not exist, this would n

the anger of the people of our continent Jambuling and the northern continent Kurava. Since they see other and so forth, they are like a drum and a stick. Anger is not proper. One will become the eye others'
evil deeds, and by one's own anger and hatred always arising the seed of hell will be produc Therefore, if we are angry with anyone, we should meditate on them above the head. In a fe anger and obscuration will certainly be purified. In particular when there has been improper
the guru, meditate on him on the top of the head. Having done prostrations and offerings, with c repentance,
shed tears and joining the palms saying, "Kye, kye precious guru,

For me there is no other hope but you.
I supplicate you to look down on me
With your eye of kindness and compassion.
I am oppressed by confusions of ignorance.

Why mention that the three gates are impaired
With complete remorse and repentance I confess.
My three vows have been transgressed and broken.
My mind is covered with damaging defilements

May you purify that by your compassion.
As for me, by unknowing stupidity,
Though I did not seek to, I did wrong,
Previously too I wandered in samsara.

Now by you who are the compassionate guru,
May all my obscurations be cleared away.
For such an unknowing fool as I am now
If when you have seen my abundant faults,
I am not part of your intended kindness,
What other intention could arise for me?

Former victorious ones beyond all counting Abandoned us and went to liberation.
Now the victorious ones of the ten directions

Having urged you, for our benefit,
When you have emanated as the guru,
If you reject us now and abandon us
Who live as if seduced to a fearful place,
You today will fail us terribly.
Or like a precious wish-fulfilling gem
If we make our supplication to you,
Will you grant whatever is desired?
You are very kind and skilled in means.
Why do not look on us with kindness?
Offerings are made even to flesh-eating demons.
As soon as our true words have been expressed,
If even former anger is put aside,
As for you, compassionate father of beings,
With devoted homage, overwhelmed with longing,
If I confess my faults with sincerity,
Will you not consider me with compassion?
Not all my evil deeds are purified.
If I should go on to other lives,
I shall only burn in the fires of hell.
If you do not purify these deeds,
Compassionate master, how will it be done?
Kye ma Kye 'ud these faults and evil deeds
I supplicate you, purify them all Instantly when viewed by your compassion
I will receive empowerment and blessing.
The supreme and worldly siddhis will be bestowed.
Obstructing spirits and agents of perversion
And obstacles will all be cleared away,
Establishing all my wishes in this life,
Free from suffering at the moment of death
Immediately when life has been cut off,
I will be free from the terrors of the bardo.
If I do not rectify transgressions,
There will not be this main point of the teachings.

h) Adopting pure and respectful conduct

Further, regarding conduct:

When they see the teacher they arise and prostrate.
They offer the teacher a seat or whatever else is needed.
Joining their palms they praise the teacher with pleasant speech.
Everyone arises as the teacher is departing.
To face in the teacher's direction as a way of showing respect.

They spread out the guru's seat and praise him and join their palms, and when he enters an rise and go to meet him and see him off. This is said in the Vinaya of Holy Dharma

As soon as the preceptor is seen, they should rise from their seats. If they do not rise, they will be born as serpents or creeping things for five hundred generations. This is said in hundreds of places. If they rise and serve him even moderately well they will attain the maj and minor marks.

The commentary to the Abhisamayalankara says:

By going to meet the guru, seeing him off, and so forth, they will possess the marks such as palms of the hands and soles of the feet being marked with wheels.

As for practicing mindfulness and careful attention

As for practicing mindfulness and careful attention

i) when they are with the guru:

Always mindful, very careful, fully aware
With apprehensive awe they stay devotedly,
As shy before the teacher as a new bride with her husband.
Uplifted and not disturbed by an agitated mind,
Not biased and partial, Not seeking profit or fame.
They are not deceitful nor are they dishonest.
By the same token they are not hypocritical.
They do not act differently in private and in public.
They are not pleasant to those who are close, disparaging others.

In the guru's presence, they are completely mindful. They control infractions of body, speec

Their minds watch their minds, keeping careful control so that they do not become lost in th kleshas. Tamed and peaceful like a new bride or a new monk, their wishes will be establish
Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.40

As for the drunken elephant of mind,
To the great pillar of contemplating Dharma
Tie it so that it does not escape.
With such an effort examine everything.

Keep mind one-pointed any way you can
Not losing it for even the space of an instant, Analyze just what the mind is like;
Thus the mind will be discriminated.

And also: 5.23

As for those who wish to guard the mind,
As for being mindful and aware,
May I guard them even if I die.
Thus I join my palms in supplication.

Even alone in one's own house, one should not behave carelessly. One should keep mindfu
The buddhas who have the divine eye see us even when we are hidden. The same text say

The buddhas and their sons the bodhisattvas
Have unobstructed vision of everything.
In the five eyes of these I shall remain.

Thinking that, I feel shame, and reverence,
As well as fear, and these remain with me.

Even at other times and occasions the mind should not move from virtue. The same text sa

As for frivolous talk, there are various kinds.
There are many kinds of wondrous shows.
If we enter into every one Desire for that will surely be abandoned.

Uselessly digging the ground will cut the roots
If questions and so forth furrow up the earth,
Having remembered the precepts of the Sugata,
We will surely let them go from fear.

When we want to fidget and move around
Also if we have a desire to talk,
First having examined our own minds,
We should be stable in the proper way.

When the mind has any kind of wishes
Or it wants to be angry, at that time,
We should not act and should not speak at all.
We should stay there like a piece of wood.

When we have wildness and discursiveness
If we have pride and self-infatuation,
And secret negative thoughts are cultivated,
Or if there is an deceptiveness and cunning.

When we become preoccupied with self-praise,
Or there is disparagement of others,
When we become regretful of such abuse,
We should stay there like a piece of wood.

If we desire possessions, rank, and fame,
If we aspires to servants and retinue,
Or when the mind desires to be served,
we should stay there like a piece of wood.

Wishing decrease or rejection of others' good
And cultivation of our benefit,
When a thought of speaking out arises,
We should stay there like a piece of wood.

When there is fear of impatience or laziness
Similarly of shamelessness, or nonsense,

Or mind attached to partialities,
We should stay there like a piece of wood.

Having examined thoroughly the mind
Of bitter kleshas and useless meaningless struggle,
Then heroically by the antidote,
One should hold the mind completely steady.

Completely certain and completely faithful,
Trustworthy, devoted, and respectful.
Having shame and modesty and fear,
Try to be peaceful, bringing joy to others.

Not saddened at the mutual discord
Of the desires of children and of fools,
Think, "Produced by kleshas these arise."
Then we feel kindness for these people.

Having in our mouths no senseless thing
Able to handle oneself and sentient beings,
We should always firmly keep the mind.
As if it were a selfless emanation.

"After so long this is the highest freedom,"
Thinking again and again of that attainment,
Such a mind, remaining like Mount Meru,
Should hold to that completely motionless.

Adharma should not move us from this even for an instant. Since one is devoted to the pra Dharma because of the guru, one's companions, the khenpo's instructions, fear of the lower misery of samsara; by one's effort, mindfulness, awareness, conscientiousness, and many v
The
same text says: 5.30

Through association with the guru,
And all that has been taught by the preceptor
And devotion coming from the good fortune of fear, Mindfulness will easily arise.

Having produced virtue and veneration for the guru, and eliminated partiality, desire for wea fame, hypocrisy, deceitfulness, and saying different things when people are near and far aw
be the same to everyone. Therefore one will perfect the accumulations and purify the obscurati distinction.

j) Showing reverence by the three pleasings:

If they are wealthy, they make offerings to the guru
Otherwise serving with body and speech, respect and reverence.
They abandon this life's values and please the teacher with practice.

The best is to serve with practice. The intermediate with body and speech, and the lesser w things. One should truly do any of these that are appropriate.

They reverse the strayings of others though skillful means:

If others insult the guru, they refute their words.
If they cannot, they think of his virtues again and again.
They cover their ears, but try to benefit these with compassion.
They will not gladly speak any words that do not support him.

If anyone says something bad, they reverse it through skillful means. If they do not have the so, they think of the guru's virtues, and covering their ears with their fingers, they will not att listen, or ask about it. The Tantra of the Arising of Amrita says:

If people should insult the vajra master,
By peaceful or wrathful action they reverse it.
If they do not have the power to do so,
They will cover their ears with mindfulness.
They do not pay attention or talk with them.
If they ask any questions about these things,
They will be boiled in the lower realms.

As for telling the benefits of having done this

These are the benefits:

Thus they accomplish benefits in all their lives.
They meet with holy persons and hear the highest Dharma.
They are perfectly filled with the wealth of various qualities
Of the paths and bhumis, dharanis, and samadhis,
Providing beings with a feast of happiness and peace.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

Kye, son of noble family, because one is supported by the spiritual friend, one always feels reverence, and therefore there is mindfulness. For the host of sentient beings benefit a happiness is produced. Spiritual friends are encountered. The holy bhumis, paths, and samadhis are accomplished.

D. Beings to be avoided, along with those associated with them

There are six sections.

1. the instruction to abandon evil spiritual friends.

Now there is the instruction to abandon evil spiritual friends together with those associated w

Thus by proper relationship with holy persons,
Abandon all evil people and evil spiritual friends.
A teacher without the qualities described above
Gone wrong because of faults, breaking vows and samayas,
With little kindness, compassion, prajña or learned knowledge,
Is indolent and lazy, unaware and ignorant.
Proud and arrogant, with harsh and vicious disdain,
They are coarsened by kleshas and venomous with the five poisons.
Concerned with this life only, they throw the next away.
Although they may seem to be teachers of the holy Dharma,
In fact they are of the deceitful family of adharma.
As bees are driven far away by a heap of filth,
Such gurus drive students, however many, far away.
Trusting them leads on perverted paths to the lower realms.
Whoever wants liberation should not rely on them.

Such persons break their vows and samayas and have little compassion or learning. They a they are proud. Their jealous disdain and five poisons are rude and coarse. They seek retir
and fame in this life. Even when they stay alone, a rain of distracting activities and kleshas falls everywhere. They throw concern with the next life far away. They disparage everyone but t dharmas but their own. Their language is that of the Dharma, and they make a display of be skilful, but in reality, no one's mind is benefited. Therefore, both their words and sense are in error the family of charlatans. Like someone piling up a dung heap, they collect a numerous retinue like bee they lead those who have faith and want liberation to the lower realms, give them a wide ber
the Treasury of Buddhahood says:

Worldly enemies only rob us of our lives. We only lose our bodies, and do not also fall into the lower realms. Ignorant persons who dwell on wrong paths lead those who aspire to virtue into hell for a thousand kalpas. Why so? Because practicing a Dharma of things and characteristics, they teach a mistaken Dharma.
They take the lives of all sentient beings, and when they teach their mistaken Dharma, they do great evil.

2. Abandoning friends and associates who are evil-doers

Following that is the instruction to abandon evil friends:

Evil-doer companions should also be abandoned.
The more we are their companions, the farther evil spreads.
The wholesome is obscured, and kleshas fall like rain.
The upper realms are blocked and the lower cultivated.
Holy ones are reviled with hatred for white Dharmas.
Evil is praised and there is reliance on black Dharmas.
They praise those who are equal to them in the fortune of evil.
They always lead on perverted paths to the lower realms.
Those who have sense and vision should keep them far away.

To the extent one deals with them, evil deeds increase, and evil-doers are supported and pr these people have left virtue far behind, they will fall into the lower realms, and so they must

The
Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

What are evil companions? They are those who decrease virtue and are joined to non-virtue. One should not associate with them. One should not attend on them. One should n even see them.

Also it says there:

The shravakas are those who benefit themselves.
In benefiting themselves they abandon others' benefit.
Attending them will lead to materialistic gathering.
This will never produce accumulation of Dharma.
Those are bad spiritual friends and their students bad companions.
One should abandon them, and keep them far away.

3. The benefits of abandoning evil spiritual friends and companions

Here are the benefits of abandoning and not associating with them:

By abandoning evil companions and evil spiritual friends,
Happy and virtuous qualities are established here and hereafter.
Happiness never diminishes, but always increases farther.
The path of profundity, liberation, is completed.
We will never see any persons who are evil.
But instead will see the lord sugatas, with their retinue of their sons.
Thinking of us considerately, they will give us blessings.
When we live a wholesome, life we go to the higher realms.
Having such qualities as thought cannot encompass.

The Instruction in 8,000 Lines says:

Subhuti, the virtues of abandoning evil companions are beyond the scope of thought. Virtue will always be performed. Tathagatas will be seen. Happiness will be produced durir our lives. Afterwards we shall be born in the higher celestial realms. In all our lives, we will never be separated from apprehension of bodhicitta. Unsurpassable, complete, perfect enlightenment will manifest continually.

4. The summary:

We should always relate with virtuous and holy friends.
Because of them our wholesome karma will increase.
Karma and kleshas diminish and evil will be stopped.
We reach the end of samsara, and higher things manifest.
Then what is good and true will come to be established.
In this life there is happiness, and afterwards fruition.
We are ever-successful leaders of gods and human beings.

The Vinaya says:

Conduct like that of Bhrama is holy association. One reaches the activity of Bhrama.
By the increase of virtuous roots, there will be a cause according with complete liberation.
There will be respect from those who possess life.

And along with that:

One should attend them with fear.

The Sutra on Going to Mindfulness of Dharma says:

By relying on spiritual friends, mindfulness and awareness will be completely pure.
The virtuous roots will be completely perfected.

5. The instruction to attend on spiritual companions:

By relying on wholesome companions and wholesome spiritual friends, Wholesomeness increases and wholesome fruitions are gained.
One is not afraid of samsara, having measureless benefits.
The limitless wealth of beings' two benefits is established.
A leader is emanated by the victorious one,
Having such an appearance in this time of the dark age.
Therefore, until we attain the essence of enlightenment,
We should rely on holy persons, such as these.

The Sutra on Supreme Ultimate Samadhi

O son of noble family, Moreover, in later lives, at a later time, I myself, will emanate as spiritual friends and display these samadhis. Therefore, since the spiritual friend is your teacher, until being within the complete essence of enlightenment, one should rely on the spiritual friend, offering respect and due ceremony.

6. The explanation of the virtues of properly relying on them

As for the virtues of this:

By that unbiased sacred outlook will arise.
We will be versed in kindness, compassion and bodhicitta. There will be increase of the nyams and realization.
Whatever measureless benefits for others one can think of
Will thereby be accomplished in the proper way.

The Sutra requested by Jewel-Crown says:

O son of the gods, by attending on the spiritual friend and showing him veneration, all the buddha fields will be seen. The holy samadhi of the great compassion will be attained. will become inseparable from the prajñaparamita. One will completely ripen sentient beings One will attain complete accomplishment of all hopes.

By these teaching one should know how to rely on the nature of the guru.

E. Knowing what is to be abandoned and accepted, and how the siddhis are received.

There are five sections:

1. How to practice,
2. How to propitiate,
3. The accumulation of action,
4. The particular details,
5. The benefits.

1. How to practice.

a. how, after this is known, the siddhis are received:

Here is how to supplicate and meditate:
We should constantly gather the two accumulations.
Also the two obscurations should constantly be cleansed.
By day on top of the head, at night within the heart,
Mentally offer and make supplications to the root guru,
Ornamented with all the major and minor marks,
As being non-dual with the yidam that you venerate
And with the assembly of the dakinis.
Surrounded by lineage gurus, dakas, and dakinis.

The Embodiment of Everything Precious Tantra says:

More than one who for a hundred thousand kalpas
Meditates on a hundred thousand deities
It is better to think of the guru just a little.
The merit of this is utterly limitless.

The great master Padmasambhava bestowed this teaching as an oral instruction. As to hov be done, if one continually supplicates, the unity of guru, yidam, and dakini will be establishe
there blesses. The yidam bestows supreme siddhi. The dakinis remove obstacles and are the ch
the ordinary siddhis.
Sitting on a comfortable seat, after taking refuge and arousing bodhicitta, from emptiness vis yourself vividly as your yidam. Adorning the crown of the head, on a lion, sun, and moon thr guru, blazing with radiance and splendor, surrounded by the gurus of the ultimate lineage ar Dharma connection with it. Visualize that heaps of clouds of dakinis gather. When one has elaborations, invite the jñanasattvas, make offerings and praises, and confess evil deeds. In

Guru, you who are the precious Buddha
Yidam, with the host of dakinis,
Devotedly we prostrate and go for refuge.
We make the outer, inner, and secret offerings.
We confess our evil deeds without remainder.
We rejoice in all the host of virtues,
We ask the turning of the wheel of dharma.
We ask the gurus not to pass into nirvana.
And to bestow the supreme and worldly siddhis.

Clear away geks and agents of perversion.
May complete enlightenment be established.

say that three times.

b. The manner of propitiation.

Then when one recites the mantra:

First say O_ and then the guru's Sanskrit name.
Next say AH H__, followed by what it is you want.

OM AH H__, are the primordial, spontaneous presence of the essence of the body, speech, all the buddhas. After inserting this into your meditation, recite it. If you know how to transla guru's name into Sanskrit, do so. If you do not know, having inserted the name itself, afterward say what For pacifying say SHANTI_ KU RU YE SVAHA; for enriching PUSTI_ KURU YE SVAHA; for magnetizing, VASHA_ KURU YE SVAHA; for destroying MARAYA PHAT. For example, for Padmasambhava and enriching you would say: OM VAJRA GURU PADMASAMBHAVA A PUSTI_ KURU YE SVAHA. Moreover practice externally for peaceful; innerly for semi-wrat for wrathful practice. The intention is nirmanakaya, sambhogakaya, and dharmakaya.

c. The activity practices

Within the activity practices are pacifying, cultivating and enriching, magnetizing and drawin destroying, with their visualizations, post-meditation, and signs of accomplishment.

1) Pacifying

As for the first, now from the teachings of applying the four karmas, as for the first:

To pacify sickness and döns, obscurations and evil deeds,
Visualize that you emanate white light rays everywhere.
Think that the desired siddhi has been attained,
While everything that is contrary has been pacified.

At the time of pacifying, from white gurus, from all points emanate white light rays. Gurus a yidams fill the sky. By the murmur of mantra, think that the siddhi of pacifying is attained.

2) Enriching:

For the karma that increases splendor, life, and wealth,
Visualize yellow rain that falls as all you desire.

Think of everything as yellow. A rain of wealth, life, and so forth falls. Thinking that our dwe places and bodies are pervaded, do the recitation.

3) Magnetizing:

As for the powers that can summon and magnetize,
Visualize rays of a vivid red in the shape of hooks.

For subjugating, drawing in, making enter, and all such powers of magnetizing, light rays of hooks invite whatever one desires. Thinking that they are beneath one's feet, recite the mar

4) Destroying:

For the action of destroying geks and harm,
Visualize blue-black rays, that emanate as weapons
Or a conquering wheel of fire that has a thousand spokes.

If obstructions of döns, geks and so forth arise, blue-black light rays emanating everywhere collection of weapons make the döns and geks into dust. Where you are, in the space of the wheel of fire with a thousand radiating spokes. Having heaped up and drawn in the harmful spirits them
into dust.

5) In particular:

Visualize that the billion worlds are in trembling motion,
Quaking with the vibration of the recitation of mantra.
Perform the appropriate practice of the developing stage,
To facilitate and accomplish these various desired karmas.

Visualize that by the self-existing vibration of the sound of mantra roaring like fire or water al worlds tremble and are disrupted. This should accord with the particular complete visualizat developing

stage for the individual one of the four karmas being practiced.

6) Afterward:

At the end collect the details in conceptionless emptiness.
Then you should relax for just a little while,
Dedicating the merit to enlightenment.

The external world is gathered into the form of the deity. That is gathered into oneself. One gathered into the guru on top of the head. That too rests in the conceptionless state of the r stage.
 After that the merit is dedicated to enlightenment.
At night, one meditates within the essence, so that afterwards the confused dreams of sleep luminosity.

7) How by meditating in this way signs of with the individual karmas arise:

For each of the karmas, there are particular signs of success.
This is the path of profundity, ocean of mahasukha.

The signs of sickness and döns being pacified are dreams of bathing, dripping pus and bloo white clothes, and so forth. The signs of enriched life are heaps of grain, good harvests, th rising, and so forth. The signs of increasing enjoyment are a rain of jewels, symbols of birth, harve
 The
signs of magnetizing are many people prostrating, praises and so forth. The signs of pacifyi blazing fires, sentient beings being killed and boiled, victory in battle, and so forth. In reality accords with what one wants actually arises.

4. The particular details.

There are six sections.

a. Emanating the buddha field.

Now from the explanation of the particular details, in particular, when sickness, döns, obstac premonitions of death arise:

In particular, when you encounter sickness and döns,
When obstacles arise or premonitions of death,
Visualize the guru in the space in front,
Inseparable from the Buddha, with a radiantly smiling face.
Seated on a lotus throne supported by lions,
Which arouses within one a state of fearlessness,
The guru is surrounded by the teachers of the lineage,
As well as by the dakinis and bodhisattvas.
Below the affectionate and compassionate lord guru
Are the various the samsaric beings within the six realms,
Who throughout the three times have been ones fathers and mothers.

When one sees one's death or when strong attacks of sickness or döns occur, visualize space in front of you, inseparable from the Buddha, surrounded by the lineage gurus and hosts of

Below them are the beings of the six realms who have been one's fathers and mothers, toge döns and geks. Invite the jñanasattvas. Perform abbreviated offerings and praises.

b. increasing and purifying the substances:

A syllable H__ at the crown of the head is one's own mind.
From it there emerges the body of a heruka.
Holding in his hands a razor-knife and a skull cup.
He cuts off one's skull, beginning with the forehead,
By the little tuft of hair that grows between the brows.
It is placed on a hearth that is made of a tripod of skulls,
And then it is filled with one's body's flesh and blood and bones.
From above falls a rain of amrita; below a fire blazes.
The skull fills up with amrita, that equals the billion worlds.

Visualize that from a white syllable H__ at the top of the head, which is one's own mind, em white heruka. In his right hand is a sword, and in his left a skull cup. With the sword, he cut in two, starting from between the eyes. The skull is placed on a hearth made from a tripod of skulls the body's flesh and blood. Below, from YA_, wind stirs. From RA_ fire blazes so that the conte boil.

From above, amrita continuously falls, equaling the billion worlds.

c. Inviting the guests:

One's own mind by emanating countless herukas,
Distributes amrita to all at once, from out of the skull.
When the enlightened guests have all been satisfied,
The accumulations are perfect and siddhi is attained.
When the samsaric guests have all been satisfied,
The beginningless production of samsara is pacified.
In particular when the harmful döns are satisfied,
The blockage of obstacles will be pacified.
As all-satisfying light rays penetrate into oneself,
Sickness and döns are pacified, and obstacles, just as they are.
One thinks that death is thwarted, and siddhi is attained.

Visualize that one emanates as many graceful hands as there are guests, and by making of them at once they enjoy it. The buddhas and so forth beyond the world are pleased, and sic The six lokas are pleased and karmic debts are paid. Döns are pleased and their afflictions ceas rays of the enjoyment of all these beings penetrating oneself, all sickness, döns, and obstacles are

d. The dedication:

Afterwards rest the mind in objectless meditation
In dharmadhatu, the state of mind without conception,
Let things go into their natural purity as illusion.

The guests, the offerings, and the one who offers are all one's own mind. Just so, when one all dharmas are not other than the simplicity of one's own mind, one should meditate and let into to their illusion-like state.

e. The virtues of this inner feast offering of the kusulu yogins:

By this unfavorable conditions are pacified.
We perfect the accumulations, and remove the obscurations.
Limitless blessings and realizations are born within us.
With no grasping ego, the mind renounces and focuses Everything that one has wished for has been accomplished.
Now the phenomenal world arises as the guru.
With sickness annihilated, there is clear luminosity
The realized state of the moment of death has been established.
One is liberated within the bardo-state,
And the wealth of the two benefits have been perfected.
Therefore, wholeheartedly try to establish this realm of the guru.

That is the instruction. As for other benefits, all violations are appeased. The supreme divir occurs. Since the mind of ego-grasping is removed, the destruction of the confusions of dua immeasurable.

f. The reason,

Now, to set forth the reason for these great benefits:

It has been said that remembering the guru for a moment,
Is better than a kalpa of the developing stage.

The Play of the Perfected Sphere says:

Though some person for ten million kalpas
Meditates on the bodies of deities,
One who remembers the guru, the master of all,
Is still better, so it is explained.

5. The benefits,

a. Since the guru is the ground of all virtues, there is the admonishment rely on him

This is the instruction to rely on such a guru:

This is the actual basis of splendor and of wealth,
From which arise clouds of benefit and happiness.
Whoever wants amrita-rain throughout the three levels,
Should rely on those who are compassionate.

The omniscient Buddhas are the true glory of themselves and others. By the deathless wea they protect beings, and they possess limitless good qualities. From these numerous cloud happiness in the three realms falls the rain of the three turnings of the wheel of Dharma. Th obtain this should rely on the spiritual friend. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, Those who wish to attain omniscience should rely on the spiritual friend.

The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

Why should one always rely on competent gurus?
The qualities of competence rise from them.

As for the three turnings, the Buddha Bhagavat taught these dharmas after seven weeks of The first week he merely sat in cross-legged posture. The second, he saw the field of the e enlightenment.
The third he trod nearby upon Jambuling. The fourth, he trod far away on the billion worlds.
went to the dwelling of the king of nagas, Grasping and Rejecting. The sixth he remained in the g to be liberated.

Uncompounded, profound, peaceful, simple, and clear.
This amrita-like dharma I have obtained.
There is no one who will understand it.
Not speaking, I shall remain alone in the forest.

So he said and remained there. Bhrama offered him a melon and honey, but he did not tak Four kings offered four stone begging bowls at one time, and were blessed. After he ate, he
of auspiciousness. On the seventh day, Bhrama and Indra supplicated him, and then when he for the five excellent disciples he turned the wheel of the four noble truths together with the i

on the
divine eight-fold path.
At last in the dwellings of the gods and nagas, and the cities Kumuda Saljin and so forth he wheel of the dharma of true meaning.
These three turnings were taught at various uncertain places. They were intended for those intermediate and greater powers; or for those first entering the path, while they remained on who had the final goal, the essence. The three pitakas were taught in the style of the expressor and t trainings of disciplines, samadhi, and prajña are the three subjects of learning expressed.
Some teachers say he turned the three wheels of dharma at one time, and in different appea different individual beings. That the sutras of existence and non-existence were explained in is not right. The particular great treasury of explanation, is maintained to have continued until he w years old.
The Buddha' parinirvana or passing is claimed to have been at the age of eighty years and

Chörten Gyepa says:

Three months after he was supplicated by Tsunda
I prostrated to the nirvana-made chörten.

Some other teachers maintain that it was at eighty-two. That really it was three months and is taught in many sutras. As for the eighty, the Treasury of Explanation says:

The places of the turnings,
The city of Vaishali,
Sakarchen and the heavens,
Jipasön and Kaushambhi,
In verdant Highland pastures,
By stupas and in mountains,
At Radiant Grove and Drarche
The city of Kapalivastu.
In these Buddha Shakyamuni, the most excellent of beings
Dwelt from year to year.
Two in the Blazing Cave,
Three in the Medicine Grove.

Five in the royal court.
Six in ascetic practice.
Twenty three in Shravasti.
Twenty nine in elegance.
After eighty years,
The Victorious One, the Sage,
The Supreme One went beyond suffering.
To those places of merit
The dwellings of omniscience,
Ceaselessly offering bows
In body, speech and mind, Devotedly I prostrate.

b. The instruction to do as was done formerly:

To pacify the kleshas in the space of mind,
Accustomed to their torment from beginningless time,
We should seek the dharma, as formerly was done by Sadaprarudita and Sudhana.
Abandoning sorrow and weariness, rely on spiritual friends.

Until we are without karma and the kleshas, in order to pacify these we need to attend on a than ourselves. This is because we need higher qualities. As to how this is done, in the city
of Happiness," was a master merchant Nor Rabtu Ten who had a son Sudhana who from his went to all southern places. By his always seeking the Dharma, it was prophesied that he w Prince of Jambuling and so forth, and so he was blessed by fifty-four gurus. Afterwards he fifty-
four more gurus, so he relied on a hundred and eight.
The bodhisattva Sadaprarudita when he was seeking the prajñaparamita squeezed his body in a chariot with five hundred merchants' daughters. When they had come to the eastern cit Incense he made offerings to the bodhisattva Noble Dharma. We should do such reverence

F. The dedication of the merit to sentient beings:

Wearied by the misfortune of following paths that are wrong,
Worse than those of good fortune falling to the amrita
Of the thousand stringed instrument of the lord of the gods,

Calling us to enjoyment of heavenly delights,
May the mind today come to rest in its suchness.

As for the well-arranged garland arising from the teaching-lineage of true spiritual friends wh the true meaning, the host of beings for a long time have attended bad and defective spiritua
are worn out by samsara. In the pleasure grove of the Buddha Bhagavat, the guru of gods and wishing clouds may their weariness be cured.

Attending these spiritual friends who are not genuine,
May the numerous throng who have long gone wrong in samsara.
These many beings who long have wearied their own minds,
Rely on mahasukha, the level of the Conqueror.

Possessing a glorious body like the moon in its fullness,
Beautiful in a wreath of deities stars and planets,
With a beneficial white light clearing the kleshas' torment,
May all beings come to rely on that perfect glory.

The Commentary on the Sixth Chapter of the Great Perfection, the Nature of Mind, the Ease "Going to Refuge."

That is the purpose of depending on the authentic spiritual friend, the beginning or foundatio path
of the mahayana.

VI Going for Refuge

There are three sections.

A. The stages of entering the path of mahayana
B. The particular objects of refuge
C. The dedication of the merit of going for refuge.

A. The stages of entering the path of mahayana,

Now from the teachings I have composed, there are the stages of how to enter into the path
First we should learn a bit about these:

Having properly relied upon a spiritual friend,
We should learn the stages of the path to liberation.

Why? Because it is not workable to enter all at once. If the lower virtues of the path have n
is impossible to obtain the higher ones. Therefore, if one does not ascend gradually, the highe be reached.
The Nirvana Sutra says:

Just like the steps of a staircase,
My profound teachings likewise
Should be gradually thoroughly learned Rather than all at once.

Just as for little children
Standing straight is gradually mastered,
We gradually enter this Dharma
Until it is perfected.

B. The particular objects of refuge

There are three parts.

1. The causal refuge,
2. The fruition refuge
3. The benefits of taking refuge.

1. The causal refuge

There are four parts.

a) For individual beings who take refuge, there is the teaching of the individual kinds of four their paths.

Taking refuge is the ground of every path.
Lesser people do so fearing the lower realms.
The two intermediate kinds are afraid of the state of samsara.
The greatest have seen all the aspects of samsaric suffering,
Finding others' suffering to be unbearable.
They fear the happiness of a personal nirvana.
In entering on the great vehicle of the buddha-sons,
There are three ways of taking refuge with three kinds of intention.
These are the unsurpassed, the excellent, and the common.

If we do not take refuge, the vow will not arise. If we do not bind ourselves with the vow, the path.
Therefore, it is the foundation of the path. The Seventy Verses on Refuge says:

Even if we have taken all the vows,
If we have not gone to refuge, they have no power.

Beings are of three kinds. The lesser, desiring the fruition of samsaric happiness, are afraid realms.
Such persons, when they take refuge with their gods or with the three jewels, do not enter i Even if they enter, they are not Buddhists. Even if they are included among Buddhists and have faith in they are not able to enter the path. The Sutra of the Ultimate Victory Banner says:

As for persons terrified by fear,
They take refuge on mountains and in groves,
Or in temples and stupas, or in trees.
These are not the principal refuges.
They are not the excellent refuges.
With the foundation of such refuges,
They will not be fully liberated.

It is taught that they found their path in external gods in the desire of happiness. The Vinaya

Ananda asked, "Is it explained by the approach of a bhramin's daughter taking refuge in the celestial realms?"
Then the Bhagavan spoke. "Ananda, that is not it. Such aspiration to samsaric happiness i known as the refuge of vulgar persons. Therefore, profess the true qualities of liberation.

This also explains the lesser sort of refuge in the three jewels, which has impure motivation.
As for the middle kind, those of the families of shravakas and pratyekabuddhas, afraid of sa
refuge
because they seek nirvana as a personal benefit. The Ngama Denyi says:

Whoever, at any time, should go to refuge
In the buddha, dharma, and the Sangha
Is a possessor of the four noble truths:
Suffering, and the cause of suffering,
Truly passing beyond all suffering,
And the noble path with its eight branches
That leads to the condition of nirvana.

If they produce the divine eye of true prajña,
Those will be the principal refuges.
They are the refuges that are excellent.
Relying upon those very refuges
Completely liberates from suffering.

As for the greater kind, having become afraid of peace and happiness, one goes to refuge fo others.
The Great Liberation says:

Some become afraid of personal peace and completely abandon it for the sake of those who have fallen into the river of samsara. Such refuge is known as that of excellent beings, the h

These three kinds of persons are distinguished on the basis of three kinds of mind. The Lan Enlightenment says:

By there being lesser, middle, and great,
It should be known that there are three kinds of beings.
Whoever, by whatever means is used,
Tries to accomplish only samsaric benefits
Such a being is known as being lesser.

Those who turn their backs on samsaric pleasures,

People who reverse all evil karma,
And try to attain the personal peace of nirvana,
Are those who are known as beings of the middle kind.

Those who, truly realizing their own suffering,
Wish to end all sufferings of others.
Those are beings designated as excellent.

Lesser ones, by practicing external cleanliness, non-injury, and Dharma go to the celestial re gone
to refuge with the inner three jewels, by their minimal merits, they cross to the celestial realm Second, those who do that should also act in accord with the meritorious ten virtues and pra samadhi. Otherwise they will not cross to the celestial realms.

b) The time of going to refuge

Since the beings who rely in this way, will establish their three fruitions, when they go to refu have three kinds of intention, ordinary, excellent, and unsurpassed. What are these?

The length of refuge accords with these various intentions.
Lesser ones do so until the happiness of the next life.
For the middle two it is as long as they live,
Or until they attain to the ultimate fruition
Of the path of the shravakas or pratyekabuddhas.
For the highest it is forever, or until they are enlightened, Attaining the wisdom beyond all thought and evaluation.

Ordinary people take refuge until they get what they want from their gods, and in particular u attain the celestial realms. The time is small, like the scope of their Dharma. With the middle two kind they die, or attain their final goal of becoming arhats. The great ones do so until enlightenment or attain wisdom of
buddhahood.

c. The objects of refuge,

There are two parts

1. The general teaching of the ordinary and extraordinary objects of refuge

Now, regarding the supports or objects:

The two objects of refuge are the ordinary and causal,
And the extraordinary, when there is the fruition.
As for the vows that are thus concerned with cause and fruition,
The causal vehicles have a fruition established later.
But it is held by the different divisions of vajrayana
That fruition exists right now, in the form of one's own mind.
Only the name is common with the refuge teachings
That are found in the vehicles of characteristics.

The objects of refuge are of two kinds, ordinary and extraordinary. The objects of lower and
beings
are ordinary. Those of the greater ones are extraordinary.
Why? The lesser objects involve a personal bias. Those proclaimed as the support of the n temporary, and so they grasp only a temporary ultimate. The higher ones grasp the mahayana. Its buc grasped
by the lesser and middle ones. There is the Dharma of the mahayana. There is the Sangha In the causal refuge, one is brought to the fruition. In the fruition-refuge, it is maintained that three jewels are really already established within one's being. The rites and compassion accompanying

Mahayanasutralankara says:

These proclaim a wish for the real thing, and so their compassion too should be understood.

In the vehicles of characteristics, desiring to attain buddhahood after three lives, countless li whatever, one goes to refuge. Desiring to attain dharmakaya within one's own being is the fruition refuge.
attained, one goes for refuge to the three jewels, as the transitional, temporary refuge. This is called the c because it is the cause of obtaining the other. Here people wish to take refuge temporarily in the three jewels distinguished from the ultimate singularity, the buddhadharmakaya. Rupakaya, and the dharmas of scripture and r involved in the four paths of a spiritual warrior, the two cessations of the shravakas and pratyekabuddha states of noble beings, stream-enterers etc, and the path of bodhisattvas dwelling on the ten bhumis of the ultimate objects of refuge. This is because they are relative, and have not reached the ultimate, and persons must still rely on others in attaining enlightenment.

Because rupakaya is relative, and because the dharmas of realization gathered within the b pratyekabuddhas, and bodhisattvas are other than the buddhas' realization, having human s and gain, they are deceptive. They and all the Dharmas of scripture have to be abandoned at th Having become afraid of the Sangha with its obscurations and habitual tendencies, one therefore be being dependent on the Buddha as well. The Uttaratantra says:

Since it they are abandoned, and have deceptive dharmas;
Since they do not exist, and because of having fear
These two Dharmas and the assembly of noble ones
Are not to be taken as permanent places of refuge.

Where is there such a refuge? Ultimately only in dharmakaya.
  The same text says:

The refuge is the singleness of buddhahood.
Because the Sage, the Buddha, exists as dharmakaya,
The assembly of the Sangha is also that ultimate.

The Sutra Clearing away Memory says:

The venerable ones asked, "To what Buddha should we go for refuge?
The Buddha spoke, saying, "There is refuge in the dharmakaya, but not in the rupakaya. Th Dharma should we go for refuge?" The Buddha spoke, saying, "There is refuge in the absolute dharma, but not in the relative

dharma.
They asked, "To what Sangha should we go for refuge?"
The Buddha spoke, saying, "There is refuge in the absolute Sangha, but not in the relative Sangha.

In brief, those who wish to attain the three enlightenments of shravakas, pratyekabuddhas, c within their being, proclaim one of those goals and take a casual refuge. In the sense that w accomplished by the causal refuge is the ultimate, it to can also be said to be ultimate refuge.
Fearful of the teachings of productive activity of the protector-teachers of the path, Shakyam forth, as external buddhas who arrive and are established within one's being; and fearful of the Dharm
the productive activity of the path that crosses over to fearlessness, and fearful of the Sangha, t who produce the activity of being liberated from fear, one abandons the temporary causal situation. This of establishing within one's being the establishing cause of enlightenment, the three jewels. The reason for is that if this latter kind of Dharma, also taught by the Buddha, is practiced with one's companions in the be liberated from fear.
Some gurus say that by the mahayana that which protects from subtle obscuration, and eve only
the buddhadharmakaya, so that is postulated as the fruition refuge.
In the pratyekabuddha yana, the self-arising of the three jewels realized within one's being is Then the fruition objects of refuge are established.
In the shravaka yana, whose adherents will arise as pratyekabuddhas in the future, the San postulated as the fruition object of refuge.
The fruition refuge objects of each of the three vehicles are different. The mahayana procla
is enlightened one's essence is one with the nature of trikaya. How is it suitable that the dharm should not arise?
Both the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas maintain that the two cessations are ultimately a
that their respective versions of absolute truth, supreme enlightenment and dharmakaya, come a how can the buddha and dharma jewels be non-existent for the shravakas? For the pratyekabuddha proclaimed as dharmata and enlightenment, and it is maintained that only the Dharma jewel is eliminated.

both what exists in the case of the fruition is maintained to be their particular version of enlightenment.
ultimate three jewels are attained, and these are said to be the fruition refuge. The Sutra requested by the House Drakshulchen says:

In going to the Buddha for refuge, it is maintained that buddhahood is attained. In going to the Dharma for refuge, it is maintained that the Dharma is attained. In going to the Sangha it is maintained that the Sangha is attained.

With the goal of establishing the nature of the two truths, going to the three jewels for refuge causal refuge.
The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

O monks, whether this was done for the sake of self or others, so that oneself might be liberated from fear and torment, you are persons who have gone to refuge. That and that, w wish and hope for, will be completely perfected.

As for the secret mantra, wishing to see manifestly that the nature of one's mind exists as bu
is even now intrinsic to one, one goes to refuge with the ordinary, external three jewels. Becau rests in the extraordinary nature of one's own mind, the primordial unborn.
Thus, both the three jewels of the individual tantric mandalas and the three jewels of the ger
are maintained to be causal objects of refuge. The nature of one's own mind, self-arising wisdo primordially existing three jewels. This is the object of fruition-refuge. Resting in that without accepting rejecting or defilements of artificiality is the fruition refuge. Though indeed, for the sake of that, as its cause, graspin in terms of proclamation is esteemable, since chiefly it exists intrinsically and spontaneously, resting wi without adulteration is the fruition refuge. The external causal refuges are a corresponding condition for establis Existence of Wisdom says:

All the masters of the three mandalas
Have a desire to gain that other perfection,
Therefore they also aspire to have its cause.
As for the luminous nature of the mind,
For the masters of the three mandalas,
Having realized that, they meditate
Within its one pointed equanimity.

This is truly explained as the supreme fruition.

Regarding these two ways of identifying the two refuges, in the lesser, ordinary vehicles, the supreme nirmanakaya. The Dharma is the twelve kinds of scripture of the Master of the Dha
and realization and the paths of the individual continuum, the samadhis and so on. The two Sa ordinary beings and noble ones. The lesser Sangha of ordinary beings is that of male and female ge
This is the field of merit of beings. The greater are those who have taken full ordination, the great S and nuns.
The Sangha altogether includes these four above. Among the noble ones are stream-entere nonreturners, and arhats. The main point is buddhahood.
As it is told within the mahayana, there is also the nature of the three kayas of buddhahood, two purities of nature and the incidental, the ultimate in which the two benefits are perfected. Th Mahayanottaratantra says:

It is uncompounded and self-existing
It is not realized by external conditions.
It possesses knowledge, kindness, and power.
This is Buddhahood with the two benefits.

The essence of Dharma is inexpressible by speech or thought. Its nature is the path or anti
to buddhahood. Its aspects are the characteristics of the five paths and two cessations of the meaning and the twelve limbs of the Buddha's verbal teachings. The same text says:

Without discursive thought, duality, and concept,
There are the clear and luminous aspects of the antidote,
Wherever anyone is free from all desire,
That is known as possession of the authentic two truths.
That is the Dharma. The two desirelessnesses,
Comprise the state of cessation and the truth of the path.

In the two cessations, former defilements are cleared away by the antidote. These two are:

1.) cessation of discriminating awareness without complexity
2.) cessation of discriminating awareness that rests in the natureless meaning in which defi complexities are like the sky.
On the path, there is realization of the aspects of accumulation, unification, seeing, and med Comprehending the characteristics of the two truths involves all the Dharmas of scripture an
The Sangha is the newly seen meaning of the luminous nature of mind of those dwelling on

same text says:

Because of the inner meaning of nature and extent,
Apprehended in the pure vision that is seen by wisdom,
The assembly who are non-returning through this mind,
Have possession of all the virtues that are without mind.

What is maintained about the extraordinary topic of the vajrayana, differs in the individual ta
The Kriya and Charya tantras say that the Buddha Jewel is the five wisdoms, and pure dhar the three or four kayas, along with its emanations and blessing-bestowing deities. These ar three families, tathagata, padma, and vajra. The deities of the greater and lesser mandalas poss the peaceful and wrathful accoutrements of sambhogakaya and nirmanakaya.
The Dharma Jewel is as before, adding the particular individual texts of each yana. The Sa three-fold Sangha of shravakas, bodhisattvas, and vidyadharas.
In yoga tantra the Buddha Jewel is the five wisdoms and the pure dharmata of nirvana or th

This includes the continuity of the mandala which gathers all the peaceful and wrathful appearan families and trikaya under Vajrasattva as the master of all mandalas. It also includes the ratna, padma, k tathagata families, along with their chief deities, retinues, and root mandalas with their one or many deities, divi samaya,
dharma, and karma mandalas; the four seals or mudras, samayamudra, dharmamudra, karm and all the great and lesser mandalas developed in one or more stages.
The Dharma and Sangha Jewels, are as already explained.
In mahayoga, the Buddha Jewel is the Bhagavan's great buddha activity, dwelling inseparab nature of the body, speech, and mind of all the tathagatas as the chief deity. There is also t one, many, or deity-clusters, dwelling within the monolithic abundance of Gandavyuha, and all the many e by them.
The Dharma Jewel is all that was previously taught. There is also the unsurpassable Sangh
with
the major and minor marks, whose nature is inseparable from that of the three jewels.
As to why they are called the rare and excellent three jewels, the Mahayanottaratantra says

Since they arise rarely and since they are undefiled;
Since they are powerful and ornament the world;
Since they are superior, and since they are excellent,
They are called the rare and excellent triple gem.

Because of these six similarities to precious gems, the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha, are k jewels," and said to be like precious jewels.

1) The similarity of rare occurrence

This is because even in the changes of many kalpas, their virtuous roots are not establishe encountered.

2) The similarity of being undefiled

This is because they are always free from defilement.

3) The similarity of being powerful

This is because the six consciousnesses and so forth have powerful virtues beyond the scop

4) The similarity of being the ornament of the world

This is because they are the cause of the wholesome thoughts of all beings.

5) The similarity of superiority to artificial gems

This is because they are beyond the world.

6) The similarity of being changeless by praise and blame and so forth

This is because their nature is uncompounded.

As for the three-fold classification, the Mahayanottaratantra says:

By the meaning of teacher, the teaching, and the students,
From the viewpoint of those persons who have devotion
For the three vehicles and the three activities,
The three occasions are presented.

1) the good qualities of the teacher, the meaning of the teachings of such a teacher, the ind bodhisattva vehicle trying to enter into the reality of buddhahood, and the supreme activity o from the viewpoint of those who are devoted to it, is the occasion of Buddha, the most excellent of th legs. So it is taught and presented.

2) The good qualities taught by the teacher, as the meaning of the teaching, consist of the p

through their own auspicious coincidence, since they are afterwards thought of as constituti viewpoint of individuals within the pratyekabuddha yana and those who have devotion for the production
buddhahood,
these are the occasion of the Dharma. This is because those who are free from desire are s taught and presented.

3) The good qualities of the students who enter into the teachings taught by the teacher, are they hear the meaning from others and they later understand it, they enter into it. For beings of th and from the viewpoint of those who have devotion for making the Sangha supreme, this is the occasion o these are the supreme ones of the assembly. So it has been taught and presented.
In brief, the temporary refuge is the three jewels. The ultimate refuge is the singularity of bu The
same text says:

The holy truth which is the refuge of beings
Is the singularity of buddhahood.
Because the Sage possesses dharmakaya,
This is also the Sangha and its goal.

The occasion of fruition, the ultimate goal, is like that. So it is explained.

2. The particulars of the causal object

There are three sections.

a. The general teaching of the three jewels

Now where proclaimers of the ordinary refuge have the power to take refuge, they request a they are afraid of themselves. It is explained that because they are worthy of the support of what taking refuge proclaims, its nature was therefore taught:

The causal object is the three jewels concretely conceived.
Here the Buddha means the supreme nirmanakaya.
He is ornamented with the major and minor marks.
There are two kinds of Dharma: The dharma of spotless meaning, And also its reflection in a form.
The meaning of sutras and tantras in the various vehicles.
Is a reflection in letters of the ultimate teaching.

In the great and lesser vehicles, in particular the three jewels as the support of refuge are

1. The nirmanakaya ornamented with the major and minor marks
2. The Dharma, including the words and meanings of the sutras and tantras, and all their re letters.
3. All perfect enjoyments.

b. the Dharma jewel

From the two Dharmas of scripture and realization, there are two sections

1) Scripture, the causal Dharma:

a) Sutra

There are twelve divisions of the sutra teachings
General teachings, hymns and praises, and prophecies.
Verses and aphorisms, and pragmatic narratives.
Biographical stories and former events as examples.
Stories of former births, and the extensive teachings.
Narratives of marvels, and teachings of profound doctrines,

The Noble Moon Lamp Sutra says:

There are the following:

1) Sutras or general teachings.
2) Verse summaries.
3) Prophecies.
4) Verse-teachings.
5) Exhortations.
6) Biographical tales of realization.
7) Narratives of former examples.
8) Conditional Declarations.
9) Extensive teachings.
10) Narratives of former births, jataka tales.
11) Resolution teachings.

12) Narratives of miraculous events.

1) All that is part of these various divisions taken together is known as the sutras.
2) The final summary in verse of what has first been taught in full is called verse summary.
3) The prophecies of the Buddha and others are the prophecy-teachings.
4) Verses that occur alone are verse-teachings.
5) Teachings that exhort the ones who listen to the Dharma are called exhortations.
6) Blessings by particular persons' auto-biographical accounts of their own realization, are called biographical tales of realization.
7) Teachings about former generations are called narratives of former examples.
8) When some topic is associated with its conditions, that is called conditional declarations.
9) When a topic is presented very extensively that is called extensive teachings.
10) Tales of how the Buddha was faithful and so forth in previous births are called jataka tales.
11) When after a subject is briefly taught, a commentary on that is taught, that is called resolution-teachings.
12) Wondrous teachings of the heart essence are called miraculous teachings.

b) The fruition Dharma, tantra

Moreover, aside from the sutras:

Kriya charya and yoga are the external tantras
Within the mahayoga of the inner mantra
Are included the father, mother, and non-dual tantras,
These have non-duality of prajña and upaya.
The volumes where these are written are also known as tantras.

The chief, powerful, or external tantras establish enlightenment in dependence on external p
Belonging to this class are kriya yoga, upa or charya yoga, and yoga tantra.
The inner tantras are the three in which buddhahood is established by being beyond accepti
and upaya and prajña are non-dual. All six of the above are called tantras, as are their literary m

2) The Dharma of Realization,

There are four sections

a) The general teaching of the stages of development and completion

As for the nature of the meaning:

In the dharma of realization are the paths and bhumis.
There are also the stages of developing and fulfillment.

Dharani and samadhi having the essence of wisdom.
Of the nature of compassion, their upaya is without limit.

b) the teaching of the ten bodhisattva levels or bhumis

The support of these is the bhumis:

The bhumis are Supremely Joyful, and the Spotless, Illumining, Radiant, and the Difficult to Conquer,
The Manifest, the Far-going, Immovable, and Good Intellect. The highest of these ten is kno of Dharma.

The Great Commentary on the Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

It is explained that these are called the bhumis or "grounds" from their being the ground or support of the virtuous qualities. There are eight bhumis of the shravakas and pratyekabudd ten of the bodhisattvas.

As for the first, the Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

The eight of the level of the family, seeing, restraint, desirelessness, and realization of what are known as the bhumis of shravakas and pratyekabuddhas.

The Precious Mala says:

Just as within the shravakayana
Shravaka bhumis are listed as eight Similarly in the mahayana
There are ten bhumis of bodhisattvas.

First, the path of preparation is called the family level, since it is individually described in eac these three yanas. The Prajñaparamita in Twenty Thousand Lines says:

The explanation of the bhumi of seeing the white aspect is that dharmas are seen as white.
Entering the stream, entering the fruition, continuous remaining, and remaining within the fruition, make up the eight levels up to arhatship, called the eight bhumis. Here, by being lib from the many defilements of the one bhumi of desire, the four dhyanas of form, and the fou attainments, one becomes an arhat.
The first fruition of wholesome practice includes entering the stream of seeing and resting within the fruition. These two are the bhumi of seeing.
Renouncing ones familiar relationships with the desire realm for the most part, one becomes restrained in the bhumi of a once returner. These two are called [entering into and resting in bhumi of restraint.
Free of the desire of the desire realm, one becomes a non-returner. These two are called [entering into and resting in] the bhumi of freedom from desire.
By doing what one has to do, one is an arhat. These two are called [entering into and restin in] the bhumi of realizing what has to be done.

The three levels preceding entering into being an arhat are known as the shravaka-bhumis.
differently understood within the different yanas. By the pratyekabuddhas, these bhumis are fruitions of pratyekabuddhas.

In this case, the explanation of the bodhisattva bhumis is that by the renunciations of seeing meditation
one is protected from fear of the innumerable evil spirits of the kleshas. They are called leve because one goes successively higher and higher. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Since one is without the fear of innumerable evil spirits,
Since one travels ever farther and higher than that,
These are therefore maintained to be the levels or bhumis.

Moreover, in dependence on eliminating miserliness and so forth, the ten inappropriate parti placed within the ten bhumis. The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

Kye, sons of the Victorious One, for these ten bhumis to arise, the ten inappropriate partialities must be cleared away. therefore, they are revealed by the ten perfections.
On the first bhumi, one chiefly practices the paramita of generosity, but if the others too are not practiced insofar as one can, that is not it...

Up to the tenth paramita, wisdom, the corresponding point is taught. Moreover, regarding th
the Center and Limit says:

Generosity, discipline, patience and energy,
Meditation and also perfection of prajña or knowledge.
Skilful means and power, aspiration and wisdom
These are what are said to be the ten perfections.

The ten to be abandoned by these are miserliness, broken discipline, aggression, laziness, confused prajña, unskillful means, diminished power, unsuccessful aspiration, and the obscu knowables.
As for the ten bhumis whose revelation depends on these being cleared away:

1.) regarding the first bhumi, supremely joyful, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

We approach enlightenment
And see how to benefit beings.
As supreme joy rises from this,
It is known The Supremely Joyful.

The Ratnavali says:

The first of these is called Supremely Joyful.
Since the bodhisattva produces joy,
Thereafter the three fetters are abandoned.
We are born within the tathagata family.
By the ripening of that, generosity is supreme.
We are able to move a hundred world realms.
We become great lords in Jambuling.

We view the faces of a hundred buddhas in an instant, know how to be blessed by a hundre a hundred emanations, teach for a hundred kalpas, enter into a hundred visions of wisdoms stabilize a hundred samadhis, ripen a hundred sentient beings, move a hundred buddha fields, open a Dharma, multiply our bodies a hundred times, and each of these bodies teaches surrounded by a per hundred. We are able to take birth as a lord within Jambuling.

2.) As for the second bhumi, the former text says:

Because these ten aspects are completely undefiled,
Therefore, they stay that way entirely by themselves.
The ripening of that is perfection of discipline.
We possess the seven glorious royal possessions
We turn the wheel of benefit for sentient beings.

Because of being without the ten unwholesome actions, we practice the ten virtues. We atta twelve thousand of the good qualities described above. We take birth as a universal monar system of four continents.

3.)As for the third bhumi, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

Because the great light of Dharma is produced,
It is called the Producer of Radiance.

The Ratnavali says:

As for the third bhumi, Producer of Radiance,
Since the light of wisdom arises on this level,
Meditation and higher perceptions will arise,
Since all greed and aggression are completely exhausted,
As for the perfect ripening of the exhaustion of these,
We practice with the highest patience and energy.
We become great and skilful lords among the gods.
The greed and lust of desire is totally reversed.
We will have twelve hundred thousand good qualities,
Taking birth as Indra, the king of the thirty-three gods.

4.)As for the fourth bhumi, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

Thus the Dharma that accords with enlightenment,
Is like a torch with fiercely blazing light.
Because we now possess that, as for this fourth bhumi,
By burning duality, it greatly illuminates.

The Ratnavali says:

The fourth is called, Possessing Emanation of Light.
Because the genuine light of wisdom now arises,
All accords with enlightenment without remainder.
In particular, when this fully ripens in meditation,
We become completely limitless kings of the gods.
We have the proper view of transitory collections.
We are skillful, and therefore we are all-victorious.

We attain a hundred and twenty million of the above qualities and take birth as a king of the 5.) As for the fifth bhumi, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

Because we completely ripen sentient beings,
We are also able to guard our minds,
For the wise this conquest is difficult,
Hence the name the Difficult to Conquer.

The Ratnavali says:

The fifth is called The One that is Difficult to Conquer,
Since all the maras are difficult to overcome.
Because skillful knowledge arises in our being
Of the subtle meaning of the four noble truths and such,
As for the full ripening of this good arising,
We will be born as kings of the Tushita gods.

A hundred and twenty billion good qualities arise, and one is made the king of the gods of t heaven.

6.)As for the sixth bhumi, the former text says:

Because with the support of the perfection of prajña
Samsara and nirvana both manifest at this time,
This is therefore called the Bhumi of Manifestation.

The Ratnavali says:

The sixth is called The Place of Manifestation.
Because the dharmas of buddhahood manifest.
By practice of shamatha and vipashyana,
Cessation blossoms, and by its ripening,
We take birth as kings of the Nirmanarati gods.

We have ten million times twelve hundred thousand good qualities and becomes king of the 7.) As for the seventh bhumi, the former text says:

Related to the path of crossing all at once,
This seventh bhumi is called, "the one that is far-going."

The latter says:

The seventh is The Far Going. They way in which it goes far,
Is by entering the equilibrium of cessation
By the ripening of that instant entering,
We become lords of the Para-nirmita-vasavartin gods.

We have twelve times ten hundred million thousand good qualities and are made kings of th Paranirmitavasavartin gods.

8.) As for the eighth bhumi, the former text says:

Because it is not moved by dualistic perception,
It is rightly known as The Unmoving One.

The latter text says:

Similarly the eighth is called the kumara level
It is unmoving because it is complete non-thought.
Body, speech, and mind, which are the whole of one's being,
Are motionlessness in a way beyond the scope of thought.
By the ripening of that, we are born as Bhrama,
The lord of realm whose number of worlds is a thousand cubed.

Bhrama in general is lord of the first dhyana form gods in a number of heavens. As for good see the faces of as many buddhas as there are particles in a hundred thousand thousand-fold w forth.

9.) As for the ninth bhumi, the former text says:

With good understanding that truly knows individual things
This ninth bhumi is called "the one with good understanding."

The latter says:

The ninth bhumi, "good understanding," is like a regent.
Since it truly knows individual things,
By this we attain good understanding.
As the ripening of this we are mahabhrama,
Lord of two three-thousand fold realms of worlds.
In inquiring about the wishes of sentient beings
By arhatship he is not ravished away.

As for good qualities, those on this bhumi see as many buddhas as there are particles in a h countless three-thousand-fold world systems and so forth.

10.) As for the tenth bhumi, the former text says:

Since it pervades like clouds the realm of dualistic space,
This, the tenth bhumi, is therefore known as "The Cloud of Dharma."

The latter says:

The tenth of the bhumis is known as "The Cloud of Dharma."
Because the rain of holy Dharma falls,
And because the bodhisattvas are empowered,
By the light rays of the power of buddhahood.
As for the ripening, one is a lord of gods
In inconceivably countless wisdom realms

This is the excellence of Maheshvara. As for the good qualities, every instant we see twelve buddhas as there are inexpressible numbers of atoms in the also inexpressible number of bu
forth.
In the first bhumi, by realizing that the same luminous essence of mind pervades all sentient realize
the equality of oneself and others as bodhicitta, the mind of enlightenment.
In the second, realizing the excellence of those who can realize this, we work to purify the de
the dhatu.
In the third, realizing that learning this is the cause according with dharmadhatu, going bey
three thousand fold world system, becoming a single tongue of flame, one listens to the Dharma.
In the fourth, we realize that this is without ego grasping, and desire for the Dharma is aband
In the fifth, realizing that this dhatu exists without difference in the being of oneself and other realize
equality with all the buddhas by means of the ten pure thoughts
In the sixth, realizing that the dhatu is naturally completely pure, we eliminate all grasping th
nirvana
and rejects samsara.
In the seventh, realizing that the dhatu has no differences at all, grasping of characteristics i eliminated.
In the eighth, realizing that the garbha has no faults or virtues, no decrease and increase, th patience of unborn Dharma becomes utterly and completely pure.
In the ninth realizing that within the dhatu as its intrinsic attribute is the peace of the four mo genuine individual awareness we produce the empowerment of wisdom.
In the tenth, by realizing that the dhatu is the source of perfect buddha activity, we attain aut
four empowerments. As for these four empowerments, the Center and Limit says:

The all pervasive meaning, the supreme meaning,
The excellent meaning according with the cause;
The meaning of complete non-grasping;
The meaning of non-difference;
And the meaning of non-decreasing and non-increasing;
These are the topics of the four empowerments.

If one still is asking what those might be, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

They are for the sake of transformation
Of mind, fixation, discursive thought, and non-thought.
When these become fields and wisdom pure of karma,
These are then the four empowerments.

As for these, the four empowerments
In the three bhumis of motionlessness and so on,
In oneness they are other than duality,
So each of the empowerments is maintained.

1 By transforming the klesha-mind we attain the empowerment of complete non-thought.
2 By transforming fixation, the consciousness of the five gates, we attain the empowerment fields.
This second is the eighth bhumi.
3 By transforming the mind-consciousness we attain mastery of the four modes of genuine and by attaining the empowerment of perfect buddha activity, we ripen sentient beings. This is the 4 By transforming alayavijñana, the basis of arising of concepts and the mind consciousnes bhumi, we attain the empowerment of the mirror-like wisdom. by the great buddha activity, buddhahoo activity existing in the sphere of activity become reconcilable. The Mahayanottaratantra says:

As for this manner of the bodhisattvas,
With the tathagatas in post meditation
And true liberation of beings
In the world they are equal.

In the eighth bhumi there are the wisdoms of equality and discriminating awareness. In the

allaccomplishing wisdom. In the tenth, having attained the mirror-like wisdom and fourth empo
the alaya of the basis of all the various habitual patterns is transformed in the empowerment of wisdom. Then one is enlightened. The tenth bhumi is empowerment in the great final light rays. The Mah
says:

Having attained this final familiarity,
By the great light rays we are then empowered.
By realizing the vajra-like samadhi, Indestructibility is gained.
That is the end of other transformations.
Undefiled by any obscurations
To benefit all beings everywhere,
We produce supreme accomplishment.
We attain omniscience, the highest level.

As soon as a great offering has been made to the buddhas of the ten directions by those dw bhumis, from the tuft of hair between the eyebrows of all the buddhas of the ten directions a light rays. By their sinking into the foreheads of those bodhisattvas, the vajra-like samadhi and countless thousands of others that they have not attained before are attained. The subtle obscuration of knowables purified, and then they are enlightened.

c. The outer and inner divisions

How?:

Coming after these, which are the ten levels of learning,
Is the level of total illumination, prabhasvara.
For the causal vehicles this is the level of nirmanakaya.
Vajrayana divisions go on by family and quality.
There are a twelfth and other levels beyond all measure.

For the vehicle of the perfections, at that time the former dhatus become enlightened. All dh gathered into non-defilement and the wisdom of non-thought alone. The Establishment of Trikaya say

Except undefiled suchness
And the wisdom of non-thought,
For the buddhas other dharmas
Do not exist at all.

The undefiled kaya is dharmata-svabhavikakaya. Though it has that nature, it also has aspe
of non-thought, the powers, and so forth, and this is called dharmakaya. That same wisdom, a with the major and minor marks, for the sattvas of the ten bhumis, is sambhogakaya. That same wis students as other, taming whatever needs to be tamed, is nirmanakaya. That same wisdom continuous
as samsara lasts, spontaneously doing benefit for others is buddha activity. As for svabhavikal Abhisamayalankara
says:

As for the svabhavikakaya of the Sage,
Whatever undefiled dharmas are attained
These will always be complete in purity.
These will always have the true and genuine nature

As for dharmakaya, the same text says: [see categories below]

Measureless aspects come with enlightenment.
There are all the natures of the nine dhyanas,
As well as those of ultimate liberation,
The various natures of the ten exhaustions,
And the eight-fold set of conquered ayatanas.

Being without kleshas and knowing one's aspirations,
Each higher perception is truly apprehended,
Along with the four ever-present purities,
    The ten powers of a buddha and the ten masteries,
The four kinds of fearlessnesses and the three non-guardings

As well as the three pillars of mindfulness.

Awareness of dharmata that is never-bewildered
By the true enemy habitual patterns.
There is arising of the great compassion,
And the 18 unshared dharmas of only the Sage
And the all pervading knowledge of omniscience.
So dharmakaya has been described.

As for the thirty-seven factors of enlightenment there are the four objects of mindfulness, the four correct actions, abandonment etc,

the four legs of miracle,
the five controlling powers,
the five powers,
the seven branches of enlightenment,
the eight-fold noble path.

The four objects of mindfulness are the essential recollections of

1.) body
2.) feeling
3.) mind,
4.) dharmas.

The four correct trainings, abandonments etc on the path of accumulation of the shravakas a

1.) abandoning non-virtuous actions before they occur,
2.) abandoning non-virtuous actions which occur to the mind,
3.) developing virtuous actions which have not yet occurred to the mind, 4.) cultivating virtuous actions that have already been developed.

The four legs of miracle or four stages of miraculous ability are the stage of miraculous abilit trains in the contemplation of

1.) yearning or aspiration,
2.) mind
3.) effort
4.) investigation

The five faculties are

1.) faith
2.) perserverence
3.) recollection
4.) concentration
5.) discrimination.

The five powers are intensifications of these same five.

The seven branches of enlightenment are authentic or genuine

1.) mindfulness
2.) investigation of truth
3.) effort
4.) joy
5.) flexibility, shinjang.
6.) one-pointed contemplation.
7.) equanimity.

The eight-fold noble path is

1.) right view
2.) right thought
3.) right speech
4.) right action
5.) right livelihood
6.) right effort
7.) right mindfulness
8.) right meditation

The four immeasurables are

1.) kindness
2.) compassion
3.) joy
4.) equanimity.

The eight liberations, are

1.) liberation of form possessing liberation that looks at form
2.) liberation of non-form possessing liberation that looks at form
3) liberation of what is attractive
4) liberation of the formless perception of space
5) liberation of the formless perception of consciousness
6) liberation of the formless perception of nothing whatsoever,
7) liberation of the formless perception of neither perception nor non-perception
8) the liberation of cessation.

The nine samapattis, are

1.) the four dhyanas
2.) the four formless attainments, 3.) the samapatti of cessation.

The ten exhaustions are of 1.) earth

2.) water
3.) fire
4.) air
5.) blue
6.) yellow
7.) red
8.) white
9.) space
19.) consciousness.

The eight overcomings of the ayatanas, are as follows:

1.) by those possessing inner form, viewing lesser external phenomenal forms, and overcom

2.) by those possessing inner form, viewing greater external forms, and overcoming these 3.) by those not possessing form, looking at lesser forms, and overcoming these 4.) by those not possessing form, looking at greater forms, and overcoming these;
5.) Mere inner perception without inner form of blue, and overcoming it.
6.) Mere inner perception without inner form of yellow, and overcoming it.
7.) Mere inner perception without inner form of red, and overcoming it.
8.) Mere inner perception without inner form of white, and overcoming it.

The last four are called the four seeings. By clearing away kleshas in the continuums of oth made non-existent, and by all that spontaneously arises from their being so made, there is knowle of aspiration.

The six higher perceptions are:

1.) miraculous powers,
2.) the divine ear,
3.) knowing the thoughts of others,
4.) memory of former lives,
5.) the divine eye arising from manifested formations,
6.) the higher perception of exhausting defilement.

The four individual true apprehensions are of 1.) meanings

2.) words
3.) dharmas
4.) powers.

the four purities, are complete purity of 1.) support

2.) perception
3.) object,
4.) wisdom.

The ten masteries are power over

1.) life
2.) mind
3.) necessities
4.) actions
5.) birth
6.) devotion
7.) aspiration
8.) miracles
9.) wisdom
10.) Dharma.

As for the four fearlessnesses, one can make the following proclamations without fear of suc contradiction:

1.) "I am enlightened;"
2.) "I have stopped desire and so forth;
3.) "I teach with certainty the path of omniscience and so forth."
4.) "I have exhausted defilement."

By purity of one's actions of body, speech and mind, they are rightly performed. Not having these three comprise the three non-guardings.

The three objects to keep in mind are in teaching the dharma to keep in mind

1.) what the listeners want and do not want.
2.) that with these two there are attachment and aggression.
3.) that when these two are absent, there are equanimity and mindfulness.

There are also not forgetting the benefit of sentient beings conquering all defiled habitual patterns the great compassion that desires benefit for all beings

the eighteen unique dharmas of a buddha.

The six aspects that are not possessed are

1. confusion
2. useless chatter
3. loss of mindfulness
4. non-equanimity of mind
5. perception of difference
6. equanimity that excludes discrimination

The six aspects that are not possessed with deterioration

7. resolve [to benefit beings]
8. diligent effort
9. mindfulness
10. samadhi
11. prajña
12. complete liberation

The three aspects that are preceded and followed by wisdom

13. Buddha activity of body
14. Buddha activity of speech
15. Buddha activity of mind

The three enterings into wisdom without attachment or obstruction

16. in the past
17 in the future
18 in the present

Besides those 18 there are also omniscience

knowledge of the path, universal awareness.

This great collection of twenty-one is dharmakaya.

As for sambhogakaya, the enjoyment body, the Abhisamayalankara says:

The nature of the thirty-two major marks
And also of the eighty minor marks,
Since these are enjoyed in experience of mahayana
They are called the Sage's enjoyment-body,

This is explained extensively below. Regarding nirmanakaya, the same text says:

When anyone, as long as samsara lasts,
Does benefits for limitless sentient beings
Equally, the bodies of such beings
Are the Sage's ongoing nirmanakaya.

The Mahayanasutralankara says:

There are working tülkus, and born and enlightened tülkus.
But the nirmanakaya of the supreme enlightenment
Is the nirmanakaya of the Buddha himself.
He has the great upaya which is total liberation.

Regarding buddha activity, the same text says:

Thus it is maintained that as long as samsara lasts
This karma is unbroken and continuous.

As for the secret mantra teachings, in addition to these levels there is a twelfth, Pemachen c kaya
that does not appear to bodhisattvas, but only to the great experience of omniscience, beyo always spontaneously present. Some also say that in addition there is the thirteenth level of a vajra bliss pervades the limits of the all-pervading space of dharmakaya free from all complexities. Also some te mahasukha is a fourteenth bhumi, samadhi is a fifteenth, and wisdom, the level of the guru, is a sixteenth. T immeasurable others are taught. However they can all be related to sending out light rays everywhere and the single
essence.

The characteristics of the three kayas and five wisdoms appear with their individual divisions

d. The paths

As for the previously taught paths

The paths are accumulation, preparation, and seeing;
the path of meditation and that of no more learning.
By the two stages and such, the profoundest objects of mind
Will arise, the immaculate, radiant sun of holy Dharma.

The gate of entering for beginners is the path of accumulation. The path of preparation invo

The four aids of release,

1.) heat or warmth,
2.) "peak experience" or spiritual exaltation
3.) patience, steadfastness,
4.) supreme worldly dharmas.

This level is practiced through devotion. It is the second path of ordinary beings.
The paths of seeing and meditation are the paths of the bodhisattva noble ones. All these to four paths of learning. That which is to be abandoned through seeing and meditation is accompl
The final path is that of no more learning. This is the matchless umbrella, the single chief level. In th dharani and samadhi and such profound aspects of mind, and the dharmas that are the objects of wisdo jewels. The path of no more learning is the Dharma. Associates are the Sangha. The teacher is the Buddha.
said for people of different powers of mind. Here the different but inseparable ultimate and non-ultim are all united.

c. The particulars of the Sangha jewel

It is the support of association:

The external Sangha includes the beings of the four classes And the buddha-sons abiding o bhumis.
The dakinis and the vidyadhara masters of vajrayana
Are those who are maintained to be the inner Sangha.

The four classes, stream-enterer, once-returner, non-returner, and arhat of the Sangha of sh pratyekabuddhas and the bodhisattvas dwelling on the ten bhumis are the external Sangha.
the dakinis and spontaneous arisen beings arisen from mantra and karma or buddha activity, an transcending assembly gathered under the vajra, ratna, padma, karma, and tathagata families, and the vi
on the levels of mahamudra, life-mastery, and self-existence.
In this case there are four families of vidyadharas. These are the ripening, life-mastery, mah self-
existing families.
As for the first, the ripening, practicing the developing and completion stages on the paths o
and
preparation, they have ordinary bodies, but establish their minds as the kayas of the deities.
These until they have attained the supreme dharma, nirvana, in the meantime attain the mal because they reject the body and ripen the mind as the mandala of the deity.

The Stages of Action says:

The yogin of one and many, when that level
That is to be taught is to be attained
One Approaches and accomplishes 66 months,
Until the vajra body has been attained.
By the condition of having but little power
Because of weak aspiration one will stay Within the residual body arising from concepts.
But by insight one goes to vajradhara.

If one attains the supreme Dharma, one is really connected to mastery of life. The same tex

If one is not obstructed by conditions,
One will then be joined to the vajra body.

As for mastery of life, having reached the great, supreme Dharma, by attaining the kaya of t
is without birth and death. The path of seeing mind arises. The same text says:

The final and ultimate entering of seeing the meaning
Is accomplished by the siddhi of practicing vajra feasts.
Defiled bodily elements and their birthplaces are exhausted,
Becoming a vajra body in the family of life.
The dharmas of seeing, recited, consecrate nirvana,
The level of the Conqueror where body is not rejected.
Free from fear one perfects the miracle of life.

That body which is the support of supreme Dharma remains. The Secret Essence says:

Though births of humans, gods,
And Bhrama indeed are taken,
One stays on that special level.

Emanations and buddha qualities, are the phenomena of the first bhumi. A mudra-family-ho meditation from the second until the tenth bhumi, dwells on the ninth. There body appears a
the mandala, and mind purified of defilements has wisdom without conceptualized characteristic Action says:

One's own mind becomes the mahamudra.
The kaya that manifests by meditation.
Possessing all the major and the minor marks,
Both the ordinary and supreme,
The two enjoyments are the family of mudra.

the Two Enjoyments says:

One becomes a holder of the families
Of the jewel, vajra, wheel, lotus, and sword.

In the second, third, fourth, and fifth bhumis, one is called a holder of the vajra family holder
because

one destroys the defilements of one's own level by vajra-like realization.
In the sixth one chiefly practices the prajña-paramita. By turning the wheel of dharma one b
of
the wheel family.
In the seventh one's arising like the wheel of Dharma is also skillful in means, and one is of family.
In the eighth, attaining the empowerment of the precious wisdom of non-thought, one is a ho precious jewel family.
In the ninth, without desire, by practice, and attainment one holds the lotus family.
In the tenth, producing benefit for sentient beings through perfect buddha activity, one is of t family.
Holding the self-existing family is attaining buddhahood. The same text says:

By perfecting the powers of the former families,
As explained, defilements are purified.
The three prajñas which are those of a buddha,
Bring one to the self-existing family

Some masters have said that the mahamudra goes from the first bhumi until the seventh. S explained as the three pure bhumis the eighth to the tenth. It seems they did not get the ide travelling from the level of a beginner up to the level of buddhahood one is gathering these states of th holders.

d. The actual liturgy of refuge,

1) Emanating the fields

Now from the actual presentation of the liturgy of going to refuge, as for the cause of its arisi ones fear
the lower realms and desire the good qualities of the higher realms and so forth. The shrava pratyekabuddhas are also afraid of samsara, and produce the three kinds of faith. In the mahayana, by compass wheel of dharma for others. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

That is to be understood by means of compassion.

Moreover, after one has been told the virtues of refuge by the guru, one puts one's mind in c representations of the three jewels one arranges offerings. In the space in front, the three je explained above, just from having gathering the text and offerings, approach and remain. The Buddha and so fort visualization. Visualize them in space:

Visualize these objects as being before you in space.
In particular Buddha and guru are said to be most important.

From the external viewpoint, the Buddha is most important, but internally the guru is most im

1) how to go to refuge:

Making the outer, mental, and secret offerings,
Say "I and all sentient beings, joining our hands in devotion,
Take refuge until enlightened, for the benefit for others
In the Guru and the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Sangha.
Say this again and again, from the depths of your heart and bones.

The external offerings are incense, flowers, and so forth. The inner offerings are amrita, car forth.
The secret offerings are rejoicing, equanimity, supreme enlightenment and so forth. Offering which fill the whole of space, to the guests who also fill the whole of space, say the following:

From this time until attaining the essence of enlightenment, I, [say your name], for the sake o beings, go to the guru for refuge. I go to the Buddha for refuge. I go to the Dharma for refug the Sangha for refuge.

Say this three times from the depths of your heart. This is the refuge attained from symbols resting
in a state of complete non-conception, entering into the unborn is the absolute refuge. Attai
the world-
transcending refuge.

3) Emanation of light rays

At other times, visualize that by one's having gone to refuge in this manner, these represent light and so forth as follows:

Visualize that by radiation of joy and light
Obscurations of the three gates are purified,
And that because of that the siddhis have been attained.
By that the accumulation of merits has been perfected.
And, as the fruition, rupakaya is manifest.

The Edifice of the three Jewels says:

By those beings who take the three-fold refuge
The accumulations will be completely perfected,
The level of Buddhahood will be accomplished.
The Dharma and Sangha will also be accomplished.

That completes the explanation of the incidental causal refuge.

b. The fruition refuge

There are five sections

1) The explanation of the objects of refuge:

The ultimate refuge upon the fruition is dharmakaya.
Essence of divinity, buddha, dharma, and Sangha,
One's own luminous mind, free from all complexity.

The vehicle of characteristics maintains that in the fruition refuge one attains for oneself the buddhahood. The incidental objects of refuge are the Dharma and Sangha, and the ultimate singularity of buddhadharmakaya.

As for the refuge that goes to the ultimate meaning,

That refuge is singularity, Buddhahood.

Dharmakaya is the ultimate object of the fruition refuge, because it is the ultimate three jew
In the causal refuge dharmakaya also comes into the continuities of others; but in the fruition
nature
of one's own mind, free from all the extremes of complexity, exists as the nature of the three goes to refuge with that. The Establishment of Wisdom says:

The Buddha is mind with no need of attaining purity.
Unchanging and undefiled, this is also the Dharma.
Its self-perfected qualities are the Sangha.
Since this is so, one's mind is excellent.

As to how one goes

2) The manner of going to refuge:

As for the taking refuge that makes this into the path,

Before the visualized representations, one goes to refuge,

"Having visualized that I and all sentient beings have done this, doing this for as long as the power,
with these relative visualizations we take the causal refuge."

3) The explanation of the essence:

In accord with the cause, everything is one's mind.
In reality going and goer are non-dual,
This suchness is meditational equanimity.
If we grasp the mind and object as being two,
There will never be the ultimate realization.
The refuge of fruition has no aspiration.

Oneself and all sentient beings go to refuge with the phenomenal visualizations of the three space.
Both also do so with their own minds, which in reality have not a particle of difference from t emanations.

Since the essence of all this is the space-like nature of mind that does not fall into partiality, that simplicity. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, Whoever does not conceive of even the Buddha, also does not think of the Dharma and the Sangha. This is going into the real essence.

The thought that the object, the three jewels, and the perceivers, oneself and others, are diff correspond to the way things actually are, so we need not aspire to those natures.

4) The explanation of post-meditation:

By that the accumulation of wisdom is perfected.
By that the state of dharmakaya has been attained.
Whatever may appear in the post-meditation state
It should be regarded as being a dream or illusion.

This non-conceptual emptiness is the accumulation of wisdom, and therefore dharmakaya is Sutra Teaching the Two Truths says:

Manjushri, by the accumulation of merit rupakaya is attained. By the accumulation of wisdom, absolute dharmakaya is made to manifest.

All the dharmas of the phenomenal world of samsara and nirvana, appearing while they do n regarded as being within a dream or illusion. As to how, the Vinaya says:

By the vast merit that rises up from this May buddhahood naturally rise within sentient beings.
May I liberate the host of beings
Not liberated by former victorious ones.

3. What is to be learned about refuge

a. The causal aspect,

There are four sections

1) The instruction not to abandon the three jewels

Then regarding refuge:

Of these two different learnings, as for the causal aspect,
In order to enjoy our lives and worldly actions,
We should never abandon the guru and the three jewels.

Why? Within this life these are hardly different from virtue. Refuge establishes all the virtue exalted and truly good. This is because it bridges the gap between degradation and excellence. Sh

For gaining lesser things, let us not leave the great.
We should chiefly think of others' benefit.

That is what it is like. the Vinaya says:

For life, and power or even jokingly, the three jewels should never be abandoned.

2) The instruction that refugees are worthy of homage and should not be deceived:

Anyone who has gone for refuge with the guru,
Is worthy of respect, and we should never cheat them;
And let us abandon harsh slander of the holy ones.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

By depending on the spiritual friend one is worthy of respect and should not be deceived. L us stop saying unpleasant things about the holy ones, and instead follow the holy Dharma.

3) The limits to be guarded in respect to the three jewels:
Anyone who has gone for refuge to the Buddha,
Should never offer homage to any god seen as other.
Anyone who has gone for refuge to the dharma,
Should abandon doing harm to every sentient being.
Anyone who has gone for refuge to the Sangha,
Should abandon consorting with the infidels.

The Shri Mahanirvana Sutra says:

Whoever goes to refuge with the Buddha,
Should never go to refuge with other gods.

Whoever goes to refuge with the Dharma
Should abandon attitudes of doing harm.

Whoever goes for refuge to the Sangha Should not associate with infidels.

4) The instruction to pay faithful homage to the guru and the three jewels:

Even their pictures ought to be faithfully revered.
Recalling them day and night, we should always go for refuge.

Even pictures of the guru and the three jewels should never be treated with disrespect. Rev
a way that does not tread even on their shadows. This is because they are emanations of the buddha fields.
As is said:

During this time of the age of obscuring darkness
I have emanated the spiritual friend.

The White Lotus says:

Many bodily forms are emanated.
They benefit beings by their wholesome actions.

The "Ear-ring" or Avatamsaka Sutra says:

In the last period of five hundred years
I will then exist in the form of letters.
To the mind with the thought that "I exist,"
At that time to that I will be respectful

By being mindful continuously day and night, or six times, or three, or at least once, go to re
these subsequent virtues will be established. How? Because when the virtues of the spiritual frie learns to practice them. Because the virtues of the three jewels are told, one emulates them. Behavi Meditation is the sutras. The view is abhidharma. Practicing according to these is the refuge of practicin the path.
Gathering the basis, one relies on holy beings, listens to the holy Dharma, and practices wit
This is taking refuge.

b. what is learned in the fruition,

There are two sections

1) The main subject matter:

What is to be learned in the aspect of fruition
Is to strive sincerely for equanimity.
One should not conceptualize either good nor evil,

Neither high or low, accepting or rejecting.
We should not rely upon complexities,
But rather train in the natural state of dharmata.
Let us course within the single mandala,
Where everything there is spontaneously perfected.

The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

One who desires to meditate on the prajñaparamita should learn the manner of not conceivi of any dharmas whatsoever or seeing things accordingly. What is that? This is high. This i
This is to be rejected. This is to be accepted. This is the buddhadharma.
This is the Dharma pure of all external causation. One should not analyze in such a dualisti

2) The cause of violation

Now there is the explanation of the bond to the ordinary objects of the refuge vow:

check this and commentary

We go beyond "bestowing" by proclaiming it imputation,
The defining feature is lost by arising of false views
Destroying what we should learn, we will surely fall.
Take care to be totally mindful of what we accept and reject.

The essence is buddhahood and enlightenment. If we think that one goes beyond a time of rituals,
so that bestowing is a mere label, false views arise, the three jewels are abandoned, and we
As for offering the precepts of refuge, that they are bestowed is its defining characteristic. Thinking prostrating to external deities and so forth does no harm is called going in a lower direction.

These violations like an exhausted royal lineage are not included in Buddhism and do not en a merchant deceived by his escort what one destructible. Like a picture falling off a wall, all one's learni are easily destroyed. Like common people without a protector, they are easily trampled on by afflictior who has broken the law, by breaking their promises, they will have many births in the lower realms ar that way, by conceptions that view one's infractions and violations, one will be remorseful; and after that i receives a vow, one will take it seriously. Though some want a certain fixed accounting, here there is no cer attitude of renunciation has arisen from virtue, it is because one wants it to. The Bodhicharyavatara sa

Attaining the attitude of renunciation
Is what is called the shila-paramita.

4. The benefits of refuge

There are seven sections

a. The benefit of protection in all one's lives

Now the benefits of refuge are explained. By going to refuge with external deities and so for into the lower realms and such:

Those who see that other refuges are deceptive,
Having faith in the excellence of divine compassion,
Will have no fear, but be protected in all their lives.
What greater happiness and benefit could there be?

Just going to refuge cuts off the door to the lower realms. Establishing the celestial realms, path of liberation, and wholesomeness for all one's lives, refuge is unequalled. The Expression of F Pig says:

Anyone who has gone to the Buddha for refuge
Will not have to go to the lower realms.
After they have left their human bodies,
They will be reborn in the realm of the gods.

b. The benefits of perfecting the two accumulations:

Here, when the soil of a mind that is pure as well as faithful
Has been well-moistened by the rain of merit and wisdom,
Sprouts of auspicious Dharma germinate and grow,
Ripening as a crop of perfect victorious ones.

In the ground of faith, watered by the rain of the two accumulations, the seeds of Dharmadh ripen as a crop of Buddhas. The Nirvana says:

Those who go to the three-fold refuges
Accumulating holy merit and wisdom,
By the growth of Dharma, conqueror of the world,
Will surely attain the level of buddhahood.

c. The benefit of immeasurable virtues

Moreover, when we as individuals go to refuge:

We gather the many qualities of Dharmic virtue.
Knowing how to be modest, decent, careful, and mindful.
Emerging from the covering clouds of dharani,
The brilliant sun of wisdom rises within our minds.
We see it even in dreams, and do not lose our awareness.
Keeping it in mind for many generations,
We become elegant with wealth and nobility.

The Sutra Requested by Precious Little Bird Gift says:

As for those who go to refuge with the Buddha, all their virtuous dharmas will grow. They know how to be decent. They take care.
Those who go for refuge with the Dharma are alert. They accumulate many virtues. They remember former lives. They have a share in the good fortune of the Dharma.
Those who go for refuge with the Sangha have workable minds. For them there are many doors of samadhi and dharani. They are always of noble family. Even in dreams they are in from the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha.

d. The benefit of being guarded by the gods, who are partial to virtue:

Because of the rejoicing of all sentient beings,
Both the two benefits are a spontaneous presence.
Finally we are the refuge of all who possess a body.
Befriending a host of beings, we hold the wealth of trikaya.

This is established by our being protected by the joy of the gods, who rejoice in white virtue, increase of virtuous roots. The same text says:

Moreover, we are protected by the gods, who rejoice in virtue, and our virtuous roots increas

We quickly attain the level of the victorious ones. The Nirvana says:

Whoever has gone to the three-fold objects of refuge Quickly will become an enlightened being.

Those who have gone to the Buddha for refuge will finally attain buddhahood. Those who h

Dharma for refuge will turn the wheel of the Dharma. Those who have gone to the Sangha f gathered
into the ocean-like irreversible Sangha.

e. As for the benefits being immeasurable

In brief, as for these virtues:

If all the virtues of refuge were to materialize,
Vaster than all of space, they would be limitless.

The Sutra of Spotlessness says:

If the merits of taking refuge were to take on form,
Having filled all of space, they would be even greater.

Moreover, as for clearing away all danger and harm, The Sutra of the Holy Victory Banner s

O monks, whether you stay in monasteries, charnel grounds, or in the wilderness, those wh have gone to the triple refuge will be without fear and suffering, and no one will say even "I v one of your hairs.

Moreover, there will be no fear of maras and the lower realms. The Sutra of the Essence of

Sentient beings who go for refuge with the Buddha
Cannot be killed by even ten million vicious maras.
As for breakers of discipline and disturbers of the mind,
Their births will certainly go beyond such things as those.

In brief those with the virtues of refuge are protected from kleshas, afflictions, the paths of th vehicles, samsara, the lower realms, and all such unpleasantness, while they attain all that is high an Mahayanasutralankara says:

From all the host of kleshas, and wrong-doing,
And even from old age and death itself
They are protected by the Buddha himself.

From afflictions the lower realms and untimely death
From permanent views of transitory collections
And from the lower yanas they are protected.

Therefore this is the genuine refuge.

f. The benefit of being the support of all virtues:

As refuge is the ground of all good qualities,
Why would anyone competent not rely on it?

With these immeasurable virtues, refuge is properly relied on by all those who know what th

Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Those who are competent will follow virtue.
By its power perfect benefit is established.

g. the benefit of clearing away all the continuance of samsara and nirvana:

To the friend of all who abandon evil and go to peace,
Bowing our heads in homage with the deepest faith,
I take refuge in the source of happiness,
The wish-fulfilling tree that is the most excellent leader,
Who is all that is meritorious in the three levels.

The supreme refuge for all who are in the world together with its gods is the three jewels. Th
they protect us from all faults, and are guides that lead us to the peace of nirvana. They are the t the fulfillers of wishes, and holy treasuries of virtue. The same text says:

These three jewels are worthy of homage by everyone in the world, including the gods. The worthy of salutation with joined palms. They are holy fields of merit.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 1.36

Even those who have do harm are still connected to happiness.
Let us then take refuge in that source of virtue.

Day and night six times or whatever, and at mealtimes, even if we do not want to eat, we sh three jewels before us in space. Mentally we should prostrate and make offerings, confess in merit, request the turning of the wheel of Dharma, and supplicate the teachers not to pass into nirv remembering the virtues of the three jewels, we should join our palms thinking, "May I attain this for the benef beings." Thus one builds up to the jewel of the Buddha Bhagavat and so forth. As it says in the Moon Lam

When we have expressed mindfulness of the three jewels, if we subsequently dedicate the merit, evil deeds will be exhausted and virtue will increase. We quickly establish enlightenm attain inseparability with the three jewels throughout all our lives.

C. The dedication of merit.

Now the merit is dedicated for the benefit of sentient beings:

As mahasukha is famed as the highest of qualities,
May all beings be well-absorbed in holy conduct.
Worn out by reliance on bad objects that corrupt,
May our minds today find ease from weariness.

By the thunder in the heaped clouds of merit of these auspiciously composed verses and by flashing display of the garland of their meaning, may sentient beings, who long have relied on inferio
steeds of their minds worn out by many thousands of kinds of samsaric suffering, have their weariness eas Bhagavat in supreme happiness.

Pacified through the Dharma rain of holy amrita,
May goodness in the minds of beings have great increase.
May the wish-fulfilling clouds of the level of Victory,
Always touch us with excellent, liberating wisdom.

On whomever in the ten directions of the world,
There falls the Dharma rain of the Sugatas and their sons
By the coming of benefits may they be illuminated.
With the three lower realms self-emptied, may all become enlightened.
For blind ones wandering in the world without a leader,
May the virtues of the three jewels be fully and clearly proclaimed.
When all have been fully placed on the path of liberation,
May every single one attain enlightenment.

VII The Four immeasurables

Thus having gone to refuge, from the main topic, the path of mahayana, there are the two se producing the two bodhicittas of aspiring to and entering into the supreme mind of enlightenment. With there are the ten sections of the seventh chapter on the four immeasurables:

A. The description of and the teaching of meditation on the four Bhrama-viharas
B. The particular teaching;
C. The particular objects of meditation
D. The faults of impure objects of meditation
E. The real object of meditation
F. The particular aspects;
G. How to meditate
H. Other ways to meditate
I The fruition of the meditation
J. The dedication of merit.

A. The description of and the teaching of meditation on the four Bhrama-viharas

Having gone to refuge, one meditates on the four immeasurables. Therefore, that is taught

Beings who become the vessels of dharma by taking refuge.
Cultivate their minds to benefit sentient beings.
Watered by equanimity in the cool shade of joy,
Flowers of compassion will bloom in the soil of kindness.

Here the example is a very pleasant garden-grove. In the soil of kindness green and rich

[[snga dang snub pa destroy/suppress read sngo dang snum pa]]

The various kinds of flowers of compassion open and bloom. In the cool shade of pleasant t deer are present. From the lake of equanimity, and ponds, and good springs, flow a collection of mar travelers tired out by samsara can refresh themselves. Weariness of mind is eased and cleansed aw
is arranged in ornamental forms. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, Here a bodhisattva mahasattva should meditate on kindness, compassion, great jo
equanimity.

B. The particular teaching

As for the particular explanation of this and other things:

When these four have not been joined to the path of freedom,
These sources of sanity are causes of samsara.
But when they are empowered by the path of peace,
Then they manifest as the four immeasurables
By which we can transcend the ocean of samsara.

The Supreme Essence says:

Shariputra, these four, by which, if genuine mind is not produced, it will not be produced later, kindness, compassion, joy, and equanimity, are the four bhrama-viharas. They are ac by samsaric karmic formations. They produce genuine mind. The kindness, compassion, jo equanimity that are subsequently produced are called the four immeasurables. This is beca produce the path of nirvana.

C. The teaching of the particular objects of meditation:

Their scope is universal, both with and without objects.
Encompassing both sentient beings and dharmata.

The meditation-objects of the four immeasurables are all sentient beings, in the arising of fo immeasurables with a mental object; and also the dharmata of all dharmas, with suchness as the meditation arising of the four immeasurables without a mental object. The Bhumi-Collection says:

With the support of sentient beings and dharmata respectively, the four immeasurables with and without a mental object arise.

D. The faults of an impure meditation-object

There are two parts.

1. The faults of an impure meditation-object:

The former concerns a limited number of sentient beings.
Such impure objects are the cause of the Bhrama-viharas.

The meditation objects of the four Bhrama-viharas are the arousing of these four mental phe and so forth, for a limited number of sentient beings, one, two, or whatever. Here liberated r achieved. One to one kindness, like that of a woman crossing the river Ganges with her child, produces sams as the arising of the Bhrama-viharas. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

The fruition of this attitude arising for one person
Is the Bhrama-viharas and so forth.

2. The instruction to learn the liberating four immeasurables

With the above-described awareness, these become the four immeasurables:

Directed to liberation, these become objectless.
This should be learned by those who are compassionate.
Those who are unhappy or tormented by suffering,
Or feel animosity to others, near or far,
Through being preoccupied with happiness and wealth,
Are objects of kindness, joy, compassion and equanimity

Those desiring liberation should learn to meditate on phenomena in the manner of the fo

E. The real meditation object

Now the meditation object of the four immeasurables is explained:

Those who are unhappy or tormented by suffering,
Feeling greed or hatred towards others, near or far,
Through being preoccupied with happiness and wealth,
Are objects of kindness, joy, compassion and equanimity

The sentient beings taken as the meditation object of the four immeasurables are those who are afflicted with suffering; and those who feel desire and aggression toward others nearby or fa their own pleasure, happiness, and wealth. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

The objects are those who desire happiness
And those with happiness afflicted by suffering,
And those who have the kleshas....

F. the particular aspects

As for the particular aspects:

The particular desires are that it may be workable
That all beings may be happy, and also free from suffering;
and that never parting from joy, they have equanimity.

The object of these four immeasurables should be the wish that beings be without suffering happiness; and that, not separated from joy, but leaving behind passion and aggression, the equanimity and kindness. The same text says:

I prostrate to you who are kind to sentient beings,
Intending that they should not be blocked by conflict,
Possessing as well the intention of non-separation,

Who have the intent of goodness of benefit.

The four immeasurables are free from what does not accord with the essence of each of the
says:

May the objects abandon what does not fit with sanity.
May they come to possess the wisdom of non-thought.
May all sentient beings be completely ripened.

As for abandoning partialities that do not fit with each one, the commentary of that same tex conceptualizing self and others, good or bad, happiness, suffering, and in between. Having benefit the
object, sentient beings.
As to how to enter into the object, those who merely do not have happiness are the object o
those who are tormented by suffering and possess passion and aggression there exists the cause suffering.
Therefore they are the object of suffering. The objects of joy, happiness and goodness, are into these three. That the four immeasurables have such dharmas as their objects is said in all the tre
four immeasurables that have the object of dharmata, the nature of these is realized as the unbo
the tantras
and their commentaries there is found the terminology of the four immeasurables which hav egolessness, which half-way and dualistically realize it, and those realizing two fold egolessness. The Bo
says:

That with sentient beings as object, is an object in common with heretics. That with dharma as object is in common with shravakas, and pratyekabuddhas. That with no object, is not in with anyone.

These arise with the object of sentient beings, dharmas, and with no object. Explaining the four in terms of the six aspects that do not correspond with the six paramitas, the Mahayanasutra

Kindness to the miserly, and to vicious unsuitable ones,
Kindness to the irascible, and to the unconscientious.

Kindness to whose who are motivated by external objects,
And kindness to those who are strongly inclined to wrong attachments.

Explaining the ten objects for which they are produced, the same text says:

One who comes into the power of the fiercely blazing enemy
One covered with suffering who is obscured with darkness.
All who are dwelling on paths that are difficult to travel.
Those who really have fetters that are very great.
Those attached to spiritual food that is mixed with poison.
Those who become completely lost upon the path.
Those of little energy who have gone far astray,
It is being kind to people such as these.

1.) Those who blaze with the kleshas as if they were in a fire
2.) Those for whom obstacles of Mara have arisen, even though they have entered the path
3.) Those of the three lower realms
4.) Those with stupidity and delusion about karma, cause, and effect
5.) Those who have entered wrong paths
6.) Those who are really bound by the knots of the kleshas
7.) Those who relish the taste of the bliss of samadhi
8.) Those who dwell on the paths of shravakas
9.) Those who dwell on the paths of pratyekabuddhas
10.) Neophyte bodhisattvas.

These four immeasurables arise with four conditions.

1.) The naturally existing family or dhatu is the causal condition.
2.) The spiritual friend who teaches the instructions of the four immeasurables is the domina
3.) The manifestation of one's particular object is the object-condition.
4.) Previous acquaintance with the benefits of meditating on the four immeasurables and th so is the immediately preceding condition.

The former text says:

From the causes of that happiness and suffering
Comes the kindness of the bodhisattva.

Along with those causes, from the spiritual friend
And from one's natural attitude rises compassion.

The Abhidharmakosha says:

By four conditions there are mind and mental events.
By three conditions there are the two samapattis.
Others things arise from only two conditions.

Mind and mental events are produced by four conditions, the cause, predominating, immedi object conditions. Samapatti is produced by three, the cause, predominating, and immediat conditions.
Material things arise from two, a cause, such as the seed, and a predominant conditions, su manure.

G. How to meditate

There are four sections

1. Equanimity meditation

There are thirteen sections.

a. The purpose of equanimity meditation

Now, as to how to meditate, one is purely and definitely concerned with these alone:

These do not have to be practiced in any one fixed order,
But, even so, beginners should start with equanimity.
Having developed this toward those both far and near,
Then they should meditate upon the other three.

First we should compose ourselves, putting ourselves at ease. This is because if we do not near and far into equanimity, it is difficult for the other three to arise. Therefore, first we meditate equanimity. The master
Jñanagarbha says in his Ornament of the Middle Way

Crossing with equanimity to the land of goodness,
Like a meadow covered with blossoming flowers of kindness,
Well-adorned with the cooling protective shade of compassion.
The water of joy will be pure, and not disturbed and muddied.

The Two Examinations says:

First we should meditate on kindness,
Second we should turn to compassion
Third we should meditate on joy,
And last of all equanimity.

This is from the viewpoint a teacher joined with inner divine suchness. For them it is easy fi
the arising of the other three, kindness and so forth.

b. The meditation object of equanimity

Now, to explain equanimity meditation:

Since the meditational object is all sentient beings,
We should examine our minds to how we are doing.
If we love our mothers and fathers and our friends,
But hate our enemies, our attitude is bad.

If there is any sentient being that we make our friend or enemy, this loving and hating is not

c. Remembering the kindness of the object of equanimity

In samsara:

While we have been wandering without beginning or end,
Even such enemies have been our fathers and mothers.
They were formerly friendly and gave their help to us.
Shall we now cultivate malice to return their kindness?

It is not right to repay with harm those who formerly benefited us. The Dulwa Lung says:

Returning good for good is excellent.
Returning harm or indifference is wrong.

d. Equanimity meditation on uncertainty

For many generations:

Even these friends were enemies and did us harm.
Even now that suffering is still infecting us.
How can it be right to repay this with benefit?
And those who are neither now were once both friends and enemies.
Where benefit and harm are without certainty
Loving and hating are irrationality.

If it is not suitable to benefit an enemy who has done us harm, our friends in former generati harm,
and even now, as a result, suffering still defiles us. Just this produces our loving and hating that with benefit?
As for beings who are indifferent to us now, if we think about it, whether they did us benefit
or which they will do later is not certain. Therefore we should produce equanimity for those who are far ar Prajñaparamita
in Twenty Thousand Verses says:

Subhuti, all sentient beings are mutually equal, and you should produce an attitude of equanimity.

e. The meditation on equanimity

For this reason:

Therefore, start by regarding friends and relatives
With neither love nor hate, as we would those who are neutral.
Then we should give up hatred, being neutral to our enemies.
When we do this, near and far are non-existent.

Thus we should equalize friends and enemies as indifferent.

f. Equanimity meditation to benefit sentient beings:

To be rid of the mental darkness that comes from fixating neutrality,
Eliminate habits of thinking of beings in terms of the kleshas.
Meditate on phenomena in freedom from samsara.

Subsequently may kleshas be completely pacified with regard to all sentient beings, starting and friends. May love and hate never arise. May our minds become mutually workable.

g. Equanimity about getting and losing, by meditating on them as one:

All who want happiness want to eliminate suffering.
But their ignorance courses in the cause of suffering.

Those who truly want joy for themselves do not desire what is painful. Since all beings are l can malevolence toward them be appropriate? Desire, even desire for happiness, is a cause of should eliminate
this unwholesome approach.

h. The real object of equanimity

Kye ma! If only the draining host of kleshas of sentient beings,
With all their habitual patterns, were equalized in peace.
May it come about that all embodied beings,
Tormented by their violent loves and raging hatreds,
Are free from either clinging or animosity,
For all either near or far feeling equanimity.

May all the kleshas of sentient beings be pacified. In particular, after the fires of love and ha pacified,
without near and far, may our minds become workable.

i. Expanding the object of equanimity:

Having contemplated on one being in this way,
Then going further, do the same with two or three.

Go on to a country, and then to a continent.
Then having contemplated all the four continents,
Try one or two thousand worlds--we should consider them all.
The training is complete when self is the same as others,
And enemies and friends are seen with equality.

Beginners should meditate on friends and enemies as neutral without regret. Then from one
beings
and so forth, we should go on to our whole town and then our country, its continent, and fina world
Jambuling. Then from the continent of videha and so forth go on and meditate on a thousar
all the world systems. Also first meditate on human beings, and then on animals and so forth as be

j. The measure of having trained in equanimity within one's being

Within onus's being:

The training is complete when either self or others,
Or enemies and friends, are seen with equality.

For anyone who has attained this attitude, jealousy and enmity will not arise, since they will
the arising of equality.

k. Post-meditation in equanimity meditation

Then after a session of meditating with that object:

Then go on to the equanimity without object.
Everything is mind, whose nature is like the sky.
Rest in this emptiness, the unborn absolute,
Free from complexities of mental phenomena.

The objects to be meditated upon, these appearances of sentient beings, are like a reflectio
while they do not exist, unborn by nature. Rest in mindfulness of this. Though we are attached to the s grasped

objects and a fixating ego other than these, both are false. This is like thinking that a reflect mirror is a face.
What does not exist appears, depending on the skandhas. The Precious Mala says:

Though depending on a shining mirror
Reflections of oneself and others appear,
All such vivid images as these
In actuality do not exist.

Likewise, in dependence on the skandhas,
Ego is perceived and firmly grasped.
Like the reflected image of one's face,
Really it does not exist at all.

As without depending on a mirror,
No reflected natures will appear,
If there is no dependence on the skandhas,
Ego-grasping too will disappear.

By their nature, if the skandhas are grasped as an ego, karma exists. Since from karma birt
intervals
old age and death will also exist. When we do not grasp the skandhas, all this is reversed.
says:

As long as the skandhas are being grasped at all
So long will they be grasped as truly being an ego.
If there is ego-grasping, there is also karma.
As a result of that, there also will be birth.

The three kinds of action have no beginning, end, or middle
The mandala of samsara, like a whirling fire-brand,
Has recursive causes, so it will keep on whirling.
But if the cause of that were not to be established,

Conceptions of self and other and distinctions of the three times,
The context of ego grasping would be entirely exhausted.
Therefore karma and birth will be extinguished too,
And likewise cause and fruition, will simply cease to be.

Having seen the exhaustion of these, in the world of truth
There is no thought of existence, no thought of non-existence.

Therefore all dharmas, without an I or any object to grasp, should be known to be non-existe reflection.

The benefits of equanimity meditation

The measure of being well-trained by meditating in this way, is that realization of profound p realization of the nature of all dharmas as primordially unborn equality. The All-Creating Kin

Within the unthinking enlightenment of dharmata,
By resting in non-duality, wisdom will arise.

l. The fruition of equanimity

Of this meditation:

The fruition is that for mind, undisturbed by near and far,
There is the spontaneous presence of the natural state.
This is the actual nature of reality.

When the relativity of self and other, near and far, is non-existent; the absolute, non-dual dh
be realized. When we are used to this, we should perform the meditation of primordial kindnes

2. Meditation on kindness

There are five sections.

a. Increasing kindness

As explained above:

After the mind has developed this equanimity,
Think of the happiness that you want for your mother.

Then contemplate all embodied beings in just that way.

When the mind has been equalized, just as one feels kindness towards one's father and mo meditate on all sentient beings, placing the mind in the attitude one has toward one's father

Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand lines says:

One should meditate with an attitude of kindness, not letting it be ravished away by the shra pratyekabuddhas.

b. The object of kindness

How to do this?:

The object of conceptual kindness is all beings.
It wants to accomplish for these various sentient beings,
The incidental happiness of gods and human beings,
As well as the ultimate happiness of enlightenment.
Move from meditating on a single being
Up to all beings within the limits of the directions.

When unhappy sentient beings are seen, may they meet incidentally with the happiness of g beings, and ultimately with the happiness of buddhahood. Thinking that, one should go from on all sentient beings as limitless as the space of the sky. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

When we see sentient beings who have no happiness, we should imagine to ourselves as follows, "May these sentient beings attain the god realm, where the happiness of the gods is

c. The sign of training in kindness

As for training:

The sign of success is supreme and all-pervading kindness.
Greater than a mother's love for her only child.

Whatever sentient beings are seen one is pleased and with a great kind longing, one wants

d. Kindness without object

After meditating on kindness with an object:

Then rest everything in equanimity.
This is the great kindness without a reference point.
The sign is the unity of kindness and emptiness.

The object of meditation on kindness is sentient beings, arising from the gathering together o elements.
These elements are

1.) earth
2.) water
3.) fire
4.) air
5.) space
6.) consciousness.

If these are examined their coarse atoms, subtle real nature, and pure consciousness do no things.
Meditate, thinking that they are like space. The Ratnavali says:

People are not earth and are not water.
Neither are they fire, air, nor space,
Nor are they consciousness, nor all of these.
A person is something different from this.
Since persons are gathered from the six elements,
They are not real, and here is the reason why.
A gathered nature cannot be something real.
The skandhas are not the ego, nor ego the skandhas.
Yet neither would be there without the other.

Also:

At the time when things cannot be found
At that time there is pure thinglessness

Things of form are simply non-existent,
Even space is nothing but a name.

Without arising, form is superfluous,
Therefore, even its name does not exist.
Feeling, perception, formations, and consciousness
Seem to arise and be thought of as an ego.
But without the six elements, there can be no ego.

Why does it not exist? When sentient beings appear, if we examine their bodily nature, it do Neither
the support or supported of consciousness is seen, so the "me" and the "mine" are not perce analyzed they vanish, essentially empty. The same text says:

Just as if the layers of a plantain tree
Are all destroyed, then nothing is there at all
People too, if all the parts of their nature
Should be destroyed, would likewise disappear.
All dharmas are without a self, and therefore,
That is what the victorious ones have taught.

This mere appearance of seeing and hearing is neither true nor false, since truth and falsity
correspondence
to a pattern of dharmas in the mind. The same text says:

Just by being able to see and hear and so forth,
It is taught there neither true nor false.

Also it says there:

This world transcends both truth and falsity.

Thus all dharmas are beyond truth and falsity, like a plantain or banana tree. This is also ta
Samadhiraja Sutra:

Just as with the moist leafy trunks of plantain trees
Wanting to find the essence, people tear them up,

But nowhere inside or out is an essence to be found.
All the various dharmas should be known to be like that.

The sign of good training is that while kindness arises, at the same time there arises the rea
beings,
like a plantain tree essentially have no self or nature.

e. The fruition of meditating on kindness

What is the fruition?:

The visible result is experience of pure pleasure.

Seeing sentient beings is pleasurable, and the beings, when they are seen, are cleansed of disturbances of love and hate and so forth.

The Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

Those who have an attitude of kindness meditate a great deal, and when they see the senti beings inhabiting the world, it is pleasurable. They have no anger.

Also immeasurable merit is attained. The Sutra of the Great Liberation Blossoming in the T
says:

Though someone in the world keeps discipline pure for a kalpa,
An instant of joy produced by kindness is better than that.

If one in this world does evil in body speech and mind,
Though they fall to the lower realms, by that kindness it has an end.

3. Compassion

There are seven sections.

a. Thinking about the sufferings of sentient beings

Now compassion is taught:

After encompassing all beings within this kindness.
Think of their sufferings, arousing such a compassion
As when your mind cannot endure your parents' suffering.

If our kind parents for our sake did evil deeds and were tormented by the sufferings of the th realms and so forth, we would think, "I should be compassionate to them." The Middle Length Prajñapa

If we see sentient beings who are suffering, we will think, "May these sentient beings be free from suffering."

b. How to meditate on Compassion

As for how to meditate:

Think how our parents, who were so kind to us,
Suffered by doing evil actions for our sake,
With hunger, thirst and heat and cold and even murder.
They are sinking down into the raging sea,
Of birth and old age, of sickness and of death,
Exhausted by the great variety of sufferings.

Because they did evil deeds for our sake, now they are tormented by their particular sufferin

c. The main topic of compassion

From this present suffering:

Though they want liberation, they have no peace of mind.
There is no spiritual friend to show the proper path.
How pitiable is their limitless wandering in samsara.
Having seen it, can I forsake and abandon them?

The beings of samsara are suffering and know no way of being liberated. Except for a very friends,
there is no one to teach them all the path of liberation. None of these beings who now suffe
in samsara,
formerly was not my father, mother, relative, and friend. As for just abandoning them withou

protector, they are my family, father, and mother! That is how we should think.

[[[The Letter to Students says:

For whomever has got in this situation and remains
Whoever with careful kindness receives this cautiously,
Will have no instance of suffering from these kleshas, and discarding them,
If to beings one is bad-tempered and, who is better off?

d. The reason of compassion

the reason:

Then we should think from the very depths of our heart and bones,
"May all beings be freed in a moment from their sufferings,
By means of our bodies and enjoyment of our wealth,
And any happiness that is ours throughout the three times."

Thus may all our enjoyment and happiness be transferred to other beings and having been f may they forever enjoy immeasurable happiness. One should think that from the depths of o Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

With that vast mind possessing the great compassion, all shravakas and pratyekabuddhas should meditate in this extraordinary way.

e. The sign of training in compassion

When training in this meditation, as we go from one sentient being to all, the sign is that the
beings,
arising within us, becomes unbearable.

e. The post-meditation of compassion meditation

After all sessions of meditating like this on compassion with objects:

Then meditate on compassion without a reference point.
The sign is the unity of compassion and emptiness.

If the objects of compassion, sentient beings, are examined and analyzed, they are naturele
appearance
of water in a mirage. No water is really there. That is how we should think. The Samadhira

As when the summer sun is at its peak,
Persons tormented by thirst and other beings
With their skandhas see water in a mirage.
All dharmas should be known to be like that.

The Ratnavali says:

As water in a mirage
Is neither water nor real,
Egos in the skandhas
Are neither there nor real.

That water is a mirage.
If so, then why go there?
If that water is non-existent,
Grasping it is stupid.

Existing like an illusion,
This world is non-existent."
The grasper of it is stupid,
And if so, will not be free.

Also it says there:

As these two reasons are true,
Nothing comes, goes, or stays.
So our suffering too is gone.

Also it says there:

The buddhas' teaching is deathless and never changes.

It is beyond existence and non-existence.
Therefore, it is explained to be like that.

After we understand the nature of all dharmas through meditation, emptiness and compassi is how practice is done on the true path. If either of these two is absent, one strays from the Dohakosha says:

If without compassion we dwell in emptiness
Gaining nothing we will not gain the highest path.
But if we solely meditate upon compassion,
We will never be free from dwelling in samsara.

Those who have the power of joining both of these
Will not dwell in samsara and nor yet within nirvana.

f. The fruition of meditating on compassion

Of meditating in this way:

The fruition is a mind without injurious malice,
Workable by its establishment in primordial purity.

One attains a workable mind without malice and harm. Therefore the Buddha's enlightenme established.

The Supreme Essence says:

By the great compassion the mind becomes workable, and deathless, and attains the suprem of delight.

3. The meditation of joy,

There are six sections

a. The purpose of meditating on joy

Now joy will be explained. As just explained:

After beings are steeped in compassion, and each is happy,
Then we should go further and meditate on joy.

If we see happy sentient beings, we should meditate on joy. The Prajñaparamita in 20,000

Whenever we see sentient beings joined to their particular happiness, we should think, "May inseparable from this happiness. May they possess the happiness of omniscience, beyond and human beings.

b. The object of meditation on joy

How?

The proper object of joy is happy sentient beings.
The content is thinking, "E ma! there is no need
For me to try to establish these beings in happiness.
Each of them has gained their proper happiness.
Until they attain the essence of enlightenment,
May they never be parted from this happiness."
First think of one, then meditate on all of them.

Go like that from meditating on one happy sentient being to all of them.

c. The measure of joy

As for the measure of training:

The sign is the arising of joy that is free from envy.

Ultimate joy has no envy for the wealth of others.

d. The essence of joy

After a session of meditating on conceptual joy:

Then meditate on joy without a reference point.

Meditate on the objects of joy, all sentient beings, as appearing while they do not exist, like a
The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

Just as in the midst of many sentient beings
Magicians may emanate illusory forms of things,
But the horses and chariots, and elephants that they conjure
Do not exist at all in they way that they appear,
Every dharma should be known to be like that.

The Ratnavali says:

A secret from people in general,
Is this very deep Dharma teaching
The amrita of Buddha's teaching
That the world is like illusion.

Just as illusory elephants
Appear to arise and vanish,
While in truth and reality
Nothing arises and vanishes,

Likewise this world of illusion,
Appearing to rise and vanish,
In the real and absolute truth,
Neither rises nor is destroyed.

As an illusory elephant
Coming from nothing goes nowhere;
By exhausting mind's obscuration,
It really, truly is gone.

This world, just like that elephant,
Coming from nothing goes nowhere;
By exhausting the mind's obscuration,
It really, truly is gone.

The nature beyond the three times;

And existence and non-existence,
Not realizing them all as mere labels;
How will someone possess the nature?

e. The virtues of joy:

In meditating in this way, by the joy of the natural state:

Body, speech and mind have spontaneous peace and bliss.

This is the measure.

f. The fruition of meditating on joy:

By the wealth of the fruition joy is stabilized.

The Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

Immeasurably vast, joyful mind is never taken from us. With this unsurpassable perfection we attain the heights.

H. Further explanation of the way of meditating,

There are seven sections

1. the details of meditation after this is familiar,

Now the way of meditating will be further explained. As explained above:

After this is familiar, then, beginning with kindness,
Meditate on all four, one right after the next,
Gradually breaking attachment to any of the four.

Sometimes meditate on these four in order, as an antidote to liberate them into purity.

2. How to stop obstacles to kindness with compassion:

If kindness attaches you intimately to all beings,

Compassion breaks attachment to the cause and effect of suffering.

If sometimes one becomes permanently attached to other sentient beings as one's father ar meditation on compassion will serve as an antidote.

3. How to stop obstacles to compassion with joy:

When a lesser compassion attaches to reference points,
Sadness is stopped by the joy that has no reference point.

When there is attachment to compassion as an individually characterized phenomenon, illus

joy will clear away all sadness and attachment.

4. How to stop obstacles to joy with equanimity:

When joy disturbs the mind by arousing anxiety
Then we should meditate on the great equanimity,
Free from all desire for anything near or far.

If we are sad because of longing for joy in the happiness of others, it will be cleared away by objectless equanimity.

5. Stopping the obstacles to equanimity with kindness:

When equanimity is neutral and indecisive,
Meditate on kindness and so forth, as before.
Training in that way grows stable and effortless.

If everything seems to become indifferent, arouse kindness and meditate on that.
These are the general antidotes. In particular, as an antidote for each object, meditate as ta corresponding objectless way. By meditating in that way, one will attain immeasurable peac being and quickly attain stability.

6. The way of meditating when we have become increasingly familiar:

Yogins for whom this practice is fully stabilized
May meditate in a different order, or jump about.

After the four immeasurables are stabilized, so that their benefits may arise, after kindness, meditate on the others in order, or after equanimity go back and meditate without any particular order. T meditating serially on kindness, compassion, joy, and equanimity, after equanimity, meditating on comp is the lesser. After kindness, meditating on joy is the middle. After equanimity meditating on kindr greatest. Jumping directly up and down after resting between objects is the meditation. The Middle Length Pra Subhuti, then meditate on kindness. Meditate on joy. Rest in compassion, Practice equanimity.

7. The virtues of meditating in this way

What is the purpose?

By that the meditation will gain the advantage of freshness.
Its steadiness will grow to the very greatest degree.

In particular the mind of the four immeasurables will gain freshness, unsteadiness will be ste steadiness will become supremely great steadiness.

I. The fruition

There are ten parts.

1. How the higher realms and truth and goodness are established

Now, as for the teaching of the fruition of the four immeasurables, the following words explai

There are four fruitions of doing this meditation.
By ripening we gain the exalted and truly good.
In the desire realm we have a divine or human body,
In a situation producing happiness and benefit.

Those who do not attain an exalted state attain the body of a god or a human being. They p two accumulations, benefit beings, and become inseparable from the four immeasurables. I careless or fall asleep, they will not fall prey to serious harm. The Mahayanasutralankara sa

Having the mind of these four Bhrama-viharas
We will always take birth in realm of desire.
Because these perfect the two accumulations,
They produce ripening for sentient beings.
Never separated from purity
And free from what does not accord with it,
The condition of future carelessness and mishap,
Impatience, too, will never be found there.

As the ultimate fruition, enlightenment is established. The same text says:

What is harmful is banished, and happiness is produced.
With the seed of enlightenment, and the cause of longing desire,
The essence ripens; and sons of the Victorious One
Relying on Dharma, are not far from the light.

Abandoning what is harmful is a fruition of separation.
Producing the seed of liberation is a fruition of the predominant condition of empowerment b
Because one produces happiness for others, being patient about our own trials and hardships is a produc
meditating on these four within this life, they ripen in other lives as a fruition according with the cause. The these four immeasurables always arises in sons of the Victorious One. It is born from previous familiar its objects,
and by seeing the faults of what does not conform to them. The same text says:

This kindness, having the nature of compassion
Attains the nature and discrimination
By formerly having become familiar with that
And seeing it spoiled by what does not accord.

2. The benefits of according with the cause

From the two sections of the fruition according with the cause:

a. General

From according to the cause, such action is self-performing.
The happiness attained is free from contrary experience.

By action according with the cause, we always spend our time meditating on the four imme experience according with the cause malice, harmfulness, unhappiness, passion, loving and absent. As for the benefits of the power of this

b. The decisive condition or power:

The power is birth in a pleasant, happy, and joyful country,
Where there are compatible people and amenities of wealth.

By kindness one is born in a pleasant country, by compassion in a happy one, and by joy in many flowers, medicinal herbs, and so forth. By equanimity one is born among many comp without harm.

3. The benefits of performing this

The person:

By performing this these four will grow immensely greater.
The wealth of the two benefits becomes spontaneous.

By performing this, the four immeasurables will increase immensely, growing greater and gr wealth of the two benefits for oneself and others will become spontaneously present. By the

of the karma
of meditating on the four immeasurables, happiness and goodness will be established.

4. The benefit of kindness:

When perfect enjoyment of kindness is without aggression,
Then the mirror-like wisdom will have been fully attained,
As sambhogakaya adorned with the major and minor marks.

After kindness has transformed aggression into the mirror-like wisdom, one attains sambhog
Peak says:

By kindness aggression will be purified
As mirror-like wisdom and sambhogakaya.

5. The benefit of compassion:

When compassion is desireless, there is dharmakaya,
Producing the manifestation of discriminating wisdom.
Its dharmas like the ten powers are utterly distinct.

Compassion pure of desire is discriminating awareness wisdom and dharmakaya. The sam

By compassion desire is fully purified
As discriminating wisdom and ultimate dharmakaya.

6. The benefits of joy:

When joy eliminates jealousy, there is nirmanakaya.
The holy all-accomplishing wisdom is attained.
Nirmanakaya is nothing fixed, but of various forms.
This self-existing kaya is spontaneous buddha activity.

By immeasurable joy one attains the all-accomplishing wisdom, whose nature is perfect bud
Purifying jealousy makes nirmanakaya manifest. The same text says:

By joy all jealousy is fully purified,
As all-accomplishing wisdom and nirmanakaya.
Action becomes spontaneous and excellent.

7. The benefits of equanimity:

When equanimity has eliminated pride

As well as stupidity, there is the essence of things
Through equality dharmadhatu wisdom will manifest.
The simplicity of dharmata is svabhavikakaya.

When equanimity has purified pride and ignorance, the wisdom of equality and the dharmad established. Svabhavikakaya, the unchanging vajrakaya and the kaya of the manifestation manifest.
The same text says:

By equanimity and great equanimity
Pride and envy and ignorance will be purified.
One masters the dharmadhatu and equality wisdoms.
These are the vajra kayas and those of enlightenment.

As for the nature of passionlessness, arising from the four actions of these four immeasurab
Mahayanasutralankara says:

Those who have kindness completed by compassion
If they do not desire to dwell in peace
Why even to speak of worldly happiness
Or the wish to further their lives and their careers?

As for their not desiring their own happiness, the same text says:

Compassion produces happiness for those who suffer.
After the kind produce these others' happiness,
Their own happiness is not produced like that.

As for overpowering their happiness for others, the same text says:

The suffering produced by kindness
Overwhelms all their worldly happiness.
If the benefiter is without this,
What greater wonders can be?

The Letter to Students says:

For beings with unbearable sufferings, without a refuge

Those who are happy to suffer for others' benefit,
Are said to be wondrous beings who are truly excellent.
Diligent ones who delight in striving to benefit others
How shall they ever have enjoyments in happy countries?
They will not attain to youth and happiness.
They will not have the implements of power and wealth
With no spouse or companions, not born among gods or asuras.

As for the action of samsara not arising, the former text says:

The attitude of compassion is without the nature
of egocentric suffering, the best sign of samsara.
Completely knowing it one is not a sentient being.
Nor will one be badly harmed by samsaric faults.

Holy beings who have this immeasurably will be without faults. The same text says:

Those who have desire have corresponding faults.
They will not be without them, nor beyond the world.
Those who have this attitude, by their loving-kindness
Will be without any faults and go beyond the world.

Those who are kind to their literal fathers, mothers, and children have desire. Bodhisattvas such desires in regard to sentient beings. This is because they are liberated from samsara. The

If worldly enlightened ones and the arhats
Among the pratyekabuddhas are without this kindness,
What need is there even to speak of any others?
But world-transcending ones are not like that

If one does not meditate on the four immeasurables, there will be many faults. The same te

A bodhisattva who possesses ill-will
And malice due to pain and unhappiness
And resulting from attachments of desire
Is sure to come in contact with many faults.

As for its being said that those who are born in the desire realms have the attachments of de
are born in the first two realms of desire and form are said to have samsaric desire. The Abhidh

Those born in those two realms have attachments of samsaric desire.

As for the fault of increasing kleshas, in regard to this immeasurable the former text says:

Kleshas conquer the self. They conquer sentient beings. They conquer discipline. By receiving their corruption one is lowered, and stays that way. By manifesting in that way one degraded. Do not listen to the arguments of others who will be beings without leisure. Harm attaining and non-attaining, the mind will attain great suffering.

Attainment damages the happiness of this life and non-attainment damages later happiness
benefits
of meditating on the four immeasurables, one does not have such faults, one grasps the pos benefiting beings,
and since one is not whirled in samsara by the kleshas, suffering does not arise. The same

For one who rests in kindness and the rest
The faults that have been described will not arise.
Having no kleshas, one will benefit beings,
And will not pass into samsaric birth.

As for the praise of the virtues:

Unequaled with limitless qualities, kindness and the rest
Are given the highest praise by the teacher of gods and men.

The Glorious Garland Sutra says:

Whoever meditates on the four immeasurables
Will be considered with kindness by all the tathagatas.
All the immeasurable good qualities of this
Are even more limitless than endless space itself

As for the teaching that the four immeasurables is the way of the victorious ones

As for the four immeasurables:

Any path that is without them is in error.
It is an evil path to take refuge in other teachings.
The path that has them leads to spotless liberation.
This is the way that was traveled by buddhas of the past.
It also will be traveled by those who are to come.

The Commentary of the Teacher of the Bhumis says:

The four immeasurables are the path of liberation. Others are wrong paths.

As for the teaching of how to attain the two ultimate realities.

The causal vehicles hold that as a seed produces a sprout,
Upaya and prajña are the producers of the two kayas.
The fruition vehicles proclaim these as being mere conditions,
Removing the two obscurations that veil these same two kayas.
But since upaya depends on the limitless path of compassion,
The meaning is the same: Emptiness is compassionate.
In that, both cause and fruition practice are in accord.

The vehicles of characteristics mostly proclaim that the two accumulations are the producing kayas. The Sixty Stanzas on Reasoning says:

By this merit all beings
Accumulate merit and wisdom.
Arising from merit and wisdom,
May we attain the two absolutes.

In the secret mantra, it is maintained that clearing away the two obscurations of the kayas o practicing the two accumulations as upaya and prajña, and therefore this is proclaimed to be Both are in accord, since practice having the essence of emptiness and compassion is what is establish
As for summarizing the meaning of this meditation:

The sutras say that the unborn seeds of happiness

Have existed primordially and never were created.
The mantrayana is in accord with this, because it claims
To clear away the incidental obscurations
That are the primordial obscurations of trikaya.

To summarize briefly, learned and accomplished ones
Explain that sutra and tantra are a unity,
As outer and inner aspects of a single path.

Therefore, following after the holy buddha sons,
We should strive to practice the four immeasurables.

The final teaching says that the dhatu is naturally pure and possesses the buddha qualities p
the time of having practiced the path, the buddha qualities appear to arise, and are proclaimed t
mantrayana
all beings naturally exist as the mandala, as explained below. Since these two are without c amounts to the same thing. In the path, the two accumulations of upaya and prajña are also the same. In t kayas and wisdoms are the same. Therefore former great masters like Padmasambhava have explain inner and outer. Therefore, we should strive to meditate on the four immeasurables.

The tenth part of the general meaning, the dedication of merit.

Now the merit is dedicated for the benefit of sentient beings:

Thus by the nature of this peace that was so well-taught,
When the roiling silt in the mind of all beings is pacified,
Fatigued by having strayed into wrong and descending paths,
May our minds today find ease for their weariness.

By the power of this auspicious way of presenting the Dharma, like the host of undefiled rays moon, may whatever beings are dwelling on the paths of the shravakas and pratyekabuddha
on the paths of the heretics, and those who are wearied by dwelling on paths that are less than per those worn out by dwelling on the great path of samsara, whose minds are disturbed by the roiling kleshas be pacified. In the wondrously arisen grove of liberation, carpeted with an array of various flowers, in the pond qualities may they ease themselves.

As when the full moon of autumn ornaments the sky
Having a perfectly rounded, brilliantly shining disk,
And hundreds of night-blooming lotuses open in its light
May these fully blossom in the faith of sentient beings.

Lapping the motionless Meru of a mind of sanity
Is the play of the ocean of happiness and benefit.
The four immeasurables are the ornaments of mind
As the four continents adorn that central mountain.

May happiness beautify the world to its farthest horizon.
May beings without remainder perfect their livelihood.
From the peaceful wreath of clouds of the play of the three levels,
May the heavens wondrously open with the rain of happiness
With flashing illumination and the thunder of victory
May these four immeasurable benefits reach to the end of time.

VII The Seventh Chapter, the Four Immeasurables

Thus having gone to refuge, from the main topic, the path of mahayana, there are the two se producing the two bodhicittas of aspiring to and entering into the supreme mind of enlightenment. With there are the ten sections of the seventh chapter on the four immeasurables:

A. The description of and the teaching of meditation on the four Bhrama-viharas
B. The particular teaching;
C. The particular objects of meditation
D. The faults of impure objects of meditation
E. The real object of meditation
F. The particular aspects;

G. How to meditate
H. Other ways to meditate
I The fruition of the meditation
J. The dedication of merit.

A. The description of and the teaching of meditation on the four Bhrama-viharas

Having gone to refuge, one meditates on the four immeasurables. Therefore, that is taught

Beings who become the vessels of dharma by taking refuge.
Cultivate their minds to benefit sentient beings.
Watered by equanimity in the cool shade of joy,
Flowers of compassion will bloom in the soil of kindness.

Here the example is a very pleasant garden-grove. In the soil of kindness green and rich

[[snga dang snub pa destroy/suppress read sngo dang snum pa]]

The various kinds of flowers of compassion open and bloom. In the cool shade of pleasant t deer are present. From the lake of equanimity, and ponds, and good springs, flow a collection of mar
travelers
tired out by samsara can refresh themselves. Weariness of mind is eased and cleansed aw
is arranged in ornamental forms. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, Here a bodhisattva mahasattva should meditate on kindness, compassion, great jo
equanimity.

B. The particular teaching

As for the particular explanation of this and other things:

When these four have not been joined to the path of freedom,
These sources of sanity are causes of samsara.
But when they are empowered by the path of peace,
Then they manifest as the four immeasurables
By which we can transcend the ocean of samsara.

The Supreme Essence says:

Shariputra, these four, by which, if genuine mind is not produced, it will not be produced later, kindness, compassion, joy, and equanimity, are the four bhrama-viharas. They are ac by samsaric karmic formations. They produce genuine mind. The kindness, compassion, jo equanimity that are subsequently produced are called the four immeasurables. This is beca produce the path of nirvana.

C. The teaching of the particular objects of meditation:

Their scope is universal, both with and without objects.
Encompassing both sentient beings and dharmata.

The meditation-objects of the four immeasurables are all sentient beings, in the arising of fo immeasurables with a mental object; and also the dharmata of all dharmas, with suchness as the meditation arising of the four immeasurables without a mental object. The Bhumi-Collection says:

With the support of sentient beings and dharmata respectively, the four immeasurables with and without a mental object arise.

D. The faults of an impure meditation-object

There are two parts.

1. The faults of an impure meditation-object:

The former concerns a limited number of sentient beings.
Such impure objects are the cause of the Bhrama-viharas.

The meditation objects of the four Bhrama-viharas are the arousing of these four mental phe and so forth, for a limited number of sentient beings, one, two, or whatever. Here liberated r achieved. One to one kindness, like that of a woman crossing the river Ganges with her child, produces sams as the arising of the Bhrama-viharas. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

The fruition of this attitude arising for one person
Is the Bhrama-viharas and so forth.

2. The instruction to learn the liberating four immeasurables

With the above-described awareness, these become the four immeasurables:

Directed to liberation, these become objectless.
This should be learned by those who are compassionate.
Those who are unhappy or tormented by suffering,
Or feel animosity to others, near or far,
Through being preoccupied with happiness and wealth,
Are objects of kindness, joy, compassion and equanimity

Those desiring liberation should learn to meditate on phenomena in the manner of the fo

E. The real meditation object

Now the meditation object of the four immeasurables is explained:

Those who are unhappy or tormented by suffering,
Feeling greed or hatred towards others, near or far,
Through being preoccupied with happiness and wealth,
Are objects of kindness, joy, compassion and equanimity

The sentient beings taken as the meditation object of the four immeasurables are those who are afflicted with suffering; and those who feel desire and aggression toward others nearby or fa their own pleasure, happiness, and wealth. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

The objects are those who desire happiness
And those with happiness afflicted by suffering,
And those who have the kleshas....

F. the particular aspects

As for the particular aspects:

The particular desires are that it may be workable
That all beings may be happy, and also free from suffering;
and that never parting from joy, they have equanimity.

The object of these four immeasurables should be the wish that beings be without suffering happiness; and that, not separated from joy, but leaving behind passion and aggression, the
equanimity
and kindness. The same text says:

I prostrate to you who are kind to sentient beings,
Intending that they should not be blocked by conflict,
Possessing as well the intention of non-separation,
Who have the intent of goodness of benefit.

The four immeasurables are free from what does not accord with the essence of each of the
says:

May the objects abandon what does not fit with sanity.
May they come to possess the wisdom of non-thought.
May all sentient beings be completely ripened.

As for abandoning partialities that do not fit with each one, the commentary of that same tex conceptualizing self and others, good or bad, happiness, suffering, and in between. Having benefit the
object, sentient beings.
As to how to enter into the object, those who merely do not have happiness are the object o
those who are tormented by suffering and possess passion and aggression there exists the cause suffering.
Therefore they are the object of suffering. The objects of joy, happiness and goodness, are into these three. That the four immeasurables have such dharmas as their objects is said in all the tre
four immeasurables that have the object of dharmata, the nature of these is realized as the unbo
the tantras
and their commentaries there is found the terminology of the four immeasurables which hav

egolessness,
which half-way and dualistically realize it, and those realizing two fold egolessness. The Bo
says:

That with sentient beings as object, is an object in common with heretics. That with dharma as object is in common with shravakas, and pratyekabuddhas. That with no object, is not in with anyone.

These arise with the object of sentient beings, dharmas, and with no object. Explaining the
four
in terms of the six aspects that do not correspond with the six paramitas, the Mahayanasutra

Kindness to the miserly, and to vicious unsuitable ones,
Kindness to the irascible, and to the unconscientious.
Kindness to whose who are motivated by external objects,
And kindness to those who are strongly inclined to wrong attachments.

Explaining the ten objects for which they are produced, the same text says:

One who comes into the power of the fiercely blazing enemy
One covered with suffering who is obscured with darkness.
All who are dwelling on paths that are difficult to travel.
Those who really have fetters that are very great.
Those attached to spiritual food that is mixed with poison.
Those who become completely lost upon the path.
Those of little energy who have gone far astray,
It is being kind to people such as these.

1.) Those who blaze with the kleshas as if they were in a fire
2.) Those for whom obstacles of Mara have arisen, even though they have entered the path
3.) Those of the three lower realms
4.) Those with stupidity and delusion about karma, cause, and effect
5.) Those who have entered wrong paths
6.) Those who are really bound by the knots of the kleshas
7.) Those who relish the taste of the bliss of samadhi
8.) Those who dwell on the paths of shravakas
9.) Those who dwell on the paths of pratyekabuddhas
10.) Neophyte bodhisattvas.

These four immeasurables arise with four conditions.

1.) The naturally existing family or dhatu is the causal condition.
2.) The spiritual friend who teaches the instructions of the four immeasurables is the domina
3.) The manifestation of one's particular object is the object-condition.
4.) Previous acquaintance with the benefits of meditating on the four immeasurables and th
so is the
immediately preceding condition.

The former text says:

From the causes of that happiness and suffering
Comes the kindness of the bodhisattva.
Along with those causes, from the spiritual friend
And from one's natural attitude rises compassion.

The Abhidharmakosha says:

By four conditions there are mind and mental events.
By three conditions there are the two samapattis.
Others things arise from only two conditions.

Mind and mental events are produced by four conditions, the cause, predominating, immedi object conditions. Samapatti is produced by three, the cause, predominating, and immediat conditions.
Material things arise from two, a cause, such as the seed, and a predominant conditions, su manure.

G. How to meditate

There are four sections

1. Equanimity meditation

There are thirteen sections.

a. The purpose of equanimity meditation

Now, as to how to meditate, one is purely and definitely concerned with these alone:

These do not have to be practiced in any one fixed order,
But, even so, beginners should start with equanimity.
Having developed this toward those both far and near,
Then they should meditate upon the other three.

First we should compose ourselves, putting ourselves at ease. This is because if we do not near and far into equanimity, it is difficult for the other three to arise. Therefore, first we meditate equanimity. The master Jñanagarbha says in his Ornament of the Middle Way

Crossing with equanimity to the land of goodness,
Like a meadow covered with blossoming flowers of kindness,
Well-adorned with the cooling protective shade of compassion.
The water of joy will be pure, and not disturbed and muddied.

The Two Examinations says:

First we should meditate on kindness,
Second we should turn to compassion
Third we should meditate on joy,
And last of all equanimity.

This is from the viewpoint a teacher joined with inner divine suchness. For them it is easy fi the arising of the other three, kindness and so forth.

b. The meditation object of equanimity

Now, to explain equanimity meditation:

Since the meditational object is all sentient beings,
We should examine our minds to how we are doing.
If we love our mothers and fathers and our friends,
But hate our enemies, our attitude is bad.

If there is any sentient being that we make our friend or enemy, this loving and hating is not

c. Remembering the kindness of the object of equanimity

In samsara:

While we have been wandering without beginning or end,
Even such enemies have been our fathers and mothers.
They were formerly friendly and gave their help to us.
Shall we now cultivate malice to return their kindness?

It is not right to repay with harm those who formerly benefited us. The Dulwa Lung says:

Returning good for good is excellent.
Returning harm or indifference is wrong.

d. Equanimity meditation on uncertainty

For many generations:

Even these friends were enemies and did us harm.
Even now that suffering is still infecting us.
How can it be right to repay this with benefit?
And those who are neither now were once both friends and enemies.
Where benefit and harm are without certainty
Loving and hating are irrationality.

If it is not suitable to benefit an enemy who has done us harm, our friends in former generati
harm,
and even now, as a result, suffering still defiles us. Just this produces our loving and hating that with benefit?
As for beings who are indifferent to us now, if we think about it, whether they did us benefit
or which they will do later is not certain. Therefore we should produce equanimity for those who are far ar Prajñaparamita
in Twenty Thousand Verses says:

Subhuti, all sentient beings are mutually equal, and you should produce an attitude of equanimity.

e. The meditation on equanimity

For this reason:

Therefore, start by regarding friends and relatives
With neither love nor hate, as we would those who are neutral.
Then we should give up hatred, being neutral to our enemies.
When we do this, near and far are non-existent.

Thus we should equalize friends and enemies as indifferent.

f. Equanimity meditation to benefit sentient beings:

To be rid of the mental darkness that comes from fixating neutrality,
Eliminate habits of thinking of beings in terms of the kleshas.
Meditate on phenomena in freedom from samsara.

Subsequently may kleshas be completely pacified with regard to all sentient beings, starting and friends. May love and hate never arise. May our minds become mutually workable.

g. Equanimity about getting and losing, by meditating on them as one:

All who want happiness want to eliminate suffering.
But their ignorance courses in the cause of suffering.

Those who truly want joy for themselves do not desire what is painful. Since all beings are l can malevolence toward them be appropriate? Desire, even desire for happiness, is a cause of should eliminate
this unwholesome approach.

h. The real object of equanimity

Kye ma! If only the draining host of kleshas of sentient beings,

With all their habitual patterns, were equalized in peace.
May it come about that all embodied beings,
Tormented by their violent loves and raging hatreds,
Are free from either clinging or animosity,
For all either near or far feeling equanimity.

May all the kleshas of sentient beings be pacified. In particular, after the fires of love and ha
pacified,
without near and far, may our minds become workable.

i. Expanding the object of equanimity:

Having contemplated on one being in this way,
Then going further, do the same with two or three.
Go on to a country, and then to a continent.
Then having contemplated all the four continents,
Try one or two thousand worlds--we should consider them all.
The training is complete when self is the same as others,
And enemies and friends are seen with equality.

Beginners should meditate on friends and enemies as neutral without regret. Then from one
beings
and so forth, we should go on to our whole town and then our country, its continent, and fina
world
Jambuling. Then from the continent of videha and so forth go on and meditate on a thousar
all the world systems. Also first meditate on human beings, and then on animals and so forth as be

j. The measure of having trained in equanimity within one's being

Within onus’s being:

The training is complete when either self or others,
Or enemies and friends, are seen with equality.

For anyone who has attained this attitude, jealousy and enmity will not arise, since they will
the arising of equality.

k. Post-meditation in equanimity meditation

Then after a session of meditating with that object:

Then go on to the equanimity without object.
Everything is mind, whose nature is like the sky.
Rest in this emptiness, the unborn absolute,
Free from complexities of mental phenomena.

The objects to be meditated upon, these appearances of sentient beings, are like a reflectio
while they do not exist, unborn by nature. Rest in mindfulness of this. Though we are attached to the grasped objects and a fixating ego other than these, both are false. This is like thinking that a reflect mirror is a face.
What does not exist appears, depending on the skandhas. The Precious Mala says:

Though depending on a shining mirror
Reflections of oneself and others appear,
All such vivid images as these
In actuality do not exist.

Likewise, in dependence on the skandhas,
Ego is perceived and firmly grasped.
Like the reflected image of one's face,
Really it does not exist at all.

As without depending on a mirror,
No reflected natures will appear,
If there is no dependence on the skandhas,
Ego-grasping too will disappear.

By their nature, if the skandhas are grasped as an ego, karma exists. Since from karma birt
intervals
old age and death will also exist. When we do not grasp the skandhas, all this is reversed.
says:

As long as the skandhas are being grasped at all
So long will they be grasped as truly being an ego.
If there is ego-grasping, there is also karma.
As a result of that, there also will be birth.

The three kinds of action have no beginning, end, or middle
The mandala of samsara, like a whirling fire-brand,
Has recursive causes, so it will keep on whirling.
But if the cause of that were not to be established,

Conceptions of self and other and distinctions of the three times,
The context of ego grasping would be entirely exhausted.
Therefore karma and birth will be extinguished too,
And likewise cause and fruition, will simply cease to be.

Having seen the exhaustion of these, in the world of truth
There is no thought of existence, no thought of non-existence.

Therefore all dharmas, without an I or any object to grasp, should be known to be non-existe reflection.

The benefits of equanimity meditation

The measure of being well-trained by meditating in this way, is that realization of profound p realization of the nature of all dharmas as primordially unborn equality. The All-Creating Kin

Within the unthinking enlightenment of dharmata,
By resting in non-duality, wisdom will arise.

I. The fruition of equanimity

Of this meditation:

The fruition is that for mind, undisturbed by near and far,
There is the spontaneous presence of the natural state.
This is the actual nature of reality.

When the relativity of self and other, near and far, is non-existent; the absolute, non-dual dh
be realized. When we are used to this, we should perform the meditation of primordial kindnes

2. Meditation on kindness

There are five sections.

a. Increasing kindness

As explained above:

After the mind has developed this equanimity,
Think of the happiness that you want for your mother.
Then contemplate all embodied beings in just that way.

When the mind has been equalized, just as one feels kindness towards one's father and mo
meditate on all sentient beings, placing the mind in the attitude one has toward one's father

Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand lines says:

One should meditate with an attitude of kindness, not letting it be ravished away by the shra
pratyekabuddhas.

b. The object of kindness

How to do this?:

The object of conceptual kindness is all beings.
It wants to accomplish for these various sentient beings,
The incidental happiness of gods and human beings,
As well as the ultimate happiness of enlightenment.
Move from meditating on a single being
Up to all beings within the limits of the directions.

When unhappy sentient beings are seen, may they meet incidentally with the happiness of g beings, and ultimately with the happiness of buddhahood. Thinking that, one should go from
on all

sentient beings as limitless as the space of the sky. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

When we see sentient beings who have no happiness, we should imagine to ourselves as follows, "May these sentient beings attain the god realm, where the happiness of the gods is

c. The sign of training in kindness

As for training:

The sign of success is supreme and all-pervading kindness.
Greater than a mother's love for her only child.

Whatever sentient beings are seen one is pleased and with a great kind longing, one wants

d. Kindness without object

After meditating on kindness with an object:

Then rest everything in equanimity.
This is the great kindness without a reference point.
The sign is the unity of kindness and emptiness.

The object of meditation on kindness is sentient beings, arising from the gathering together o elements.
These elements are

1.) earth
2.) water
3.) fire
4.) air
5.) space
6.) consciousness.

If these are examined their coarse atoms, subtle real nature, and pure consciousness do no things.
Meditate, thinking that they are like space. The Ratnavali says:

People are not earth and are not water.
Neither are they fire, air, nor space,
Nor are they consciousness, nor all of these.
A person is something different from this.
Since persons are gathered from the six elements,
They are not real, and here is the reason why.
A gathered nature cannot be something real.
The skandhas are not the ego, nor ego the skandhas.
Yet neither would be there without the other.

Also:

At the time when things cannot be found
At that time there is pure thinglessness
Things of form are simply non-existent,
Even space is nothing but a name.

Without arising, form is superfluous,
Therefore, even its name does not exist.
Feeling, perception, formations, and consciousness
Seem to arise and be thought of as an ego.
But without the six elements, there can be no ego.

Why does it not exist? When sentient beings appear, if we examine their bodily nature, it do
Neither
the support or supported of consciousness is seen, so the "me" and the "mine" are not perce
analyzed they vanish, essentially empty. The same text says:

Just as if the layers of a plantain tree
Are all destroyed, then nothing is there at all
People too, if all the parts of their nature
Should be destroyed, would likewise disappear.
All dharmas are without a self, and therefore,
That is what the victorious ones have taught.

This mere appearance of seeing and hearing is neither true nor false, since truth and falsity
correspondence

to a pattern of dharmas in the mind. The same text says:

Just by being able to see and hear and so forth,
It is taught there neither true nor false.

Also it says there:

This world transcends both truth and falsity.

Thus all dharmas are beyond truth and falsity, like a plantain or banana tree. This is also ta
Samadhiraja Sutra:

Just as with the moist leafy trunks of plantain trees
Wanting to find the essence, people tear them up,
But nowhere inside or out is an essence to be found.
All the various dharmas should be known to be like that.

The sign of good training is that while kindness arises, at the same time there arises the rea
beings,
like a plantain tree essentially have no self or nature.

e. The fruition of meditating on kindness

What is the fruition?:

The visible result is experience of pure pleasure.

Seeing sentient beings is pleasurable, and the
beings, when they are seen, are cleansed of disturbances of love and hate and so forth.

The Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

Those who have an attitude of kindness meditate a great deal, and when they see the senti beings inhabiting the world, it is pleasurable. They have no anger.

Also immeasurable merit is attained. The Sutra of the Great Liberation Blossoming in the T
says:

Though someone in the world keeps discipline pure for a kalpa,
An instant of joy produced by kindness is better than that.

If one in this world does evil in body speech and mind,
Though they fall to the lower realms, by that kindness it has an end.

3. Compassion

There are seven sections.

a. Thinking about the sufferings of sentient beings

Now compassion is taught:

After encompassing all beings within this kindness.
Think of their sufferings, arousing such a compassion
As when your mind cannot endure your parents' suffering.

If our kind parents for our sake did evil deeds and were tormented by the sufferings of the th
realms and so forth, we would think, "I should be compassionate to them." The Middle Length Prajñapa

If we see sentient beings who are suffering, we will think, "May these sentient beings be free from suffering."

b. How to meditate on Compassion

As for how to meditate:

Think how our parents, who were so kind to us,
Suffered by doing evil actions for our sake,
With hunger, thirst and heat and cold and even murder.
They are sinking down into the raging sea,
Of birth and old age, of sickness and of death,
Exhausted by the great variety of sufferings.

Because they did evil deeds for our sake, now they are tormented by their particular sufferin

c. The main topic of compassion

From this present suffering:

Though they want liberation, they have no peace of mind.
There is no spiritual friend to show the proper path.
How pitiable is their limitless wandering in samsara.
Having seen it, can I forsake and abandon them?

The beings of samsara are suffering and know no way of being liberated. Except for a very
friends,
there is no one to teach them all the path of liberation. None of these beings who now suffe
in samsara,
formerly was not my father, mother, relative, and friend. As for just abandoning them withou protector, they are my family, father, and mother! That is how we should think.

[[[The Letter to Students says:

For whomever has got in this situation and remains
Whoever with careful kindness receives this cautiously,
Will have no instance of suffering from these kleshas, and discarding them,
If to beings one is bad-tempered and, who is better off?

d. The reason of compassion

the reason:

Then we should think from the very depths of our heart and bones,
"May all beings be freed in a moment from their sufferings,
By means of our bodies and enjoyment of our wealth,
And any happiness that is ours throughout the three times."

Thus may all our enjoyment and happiness be transferred to other beings and having been may they forever enjoy immeasurable happiness. One should think that from the depths of Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

With that vast mind possessing the great compassion, all shravakas and pratyekabuddhas should meditate in this extraordinary way.

e. The sign of training in compassion

When training in this meditation, as we go from one sentient being to all, the sign is that the beings, arising within us, becomes unbearable.

e. The post-meditation of compassion meditation

After all sessions of meditating like this on compassion with objects:

Then meditate on compassion without a reference point.
The sign is the unity of compassion and emptiness.

If the objects of compassion, sentient beings, are examined and analyzed, they are naturele appearance of water in a mirage. No water is really there. That is how we should think. The Samadhira

As when the summer sun is at its peak,
Persons tormented by thirst and other beings
With their skandhas see water in a mirage.
All dharmas should be known to be like that.

The Ratnavali says:

As water in a mirage
Is neither water nor real,
Egos in the skandhas
Are neither there nor real.

That water is a mirage.
If so, then why go there?
If that water is non-existent,
Grasping it is stupid.

Existing like an illusion,
This world is non-existent."
The grasper of it is stupid,
And if so, will not be free.

Also it says there:

As these two reasons are true,
Nothing comes, goes, or stays.
So our suffering too is gone.

Also it says there:

The buddhas' teaching is deathless and never changes.
It is beyond existence and non-existence.
Therefore, it is explained to be like that.

After we understand the nature of all dharmas through meditation, emptiness and compassi

is how practice is done on the true path. If either of these two is absent, one strays from the Dohakosha says:

If without compassion we dwell in emptiness
Gaining nothing we will not gain the highest path.
But if we solely meditate upon compassion,
We will never be free from dwelling in samsara.

Those who have the power of joining both of these
Will not dwell in samsara and nor yet within nirvana.

f. The fruition of meditating on compassion

Of meditating in this way:

The fruition is a mind without injurious malice,
Workable by its establishment in primordial purity.

One attains a workable mind without malice and harm. Therefore the Buddha's enlightenme established.

The Supreme Essence says:

By the great compassion the mind becomes workable, and deathless, and attains the suprem of delight.

3. The meditation of joy,

There are six sections

a. The purpose of meditating on joy

Now joy will be explained. As just explained:

After beings are steeped in compassion, and each is happy,
Then we should go further and meditate on joy.

If we see happy sentient beings, we should meditate on joy. The Prajñaparamita in 20,000 l

Whenever we see sentient beings joined to their particular happiness, we should think, "May inseparable from this happiness. May they possess the happiness of omniscience, beyond and human beings.

b. The object of meditation on joy

How?

The proper object of joy is happy sentient beings.
The content is thinking, "E ma! there is no need
For me to try to establish these beings in happiness.
Each of them has gained their proper happiness.
Until they attain the essence of enlightenment,
May they never be parted from this happiness."
First think of one, then meditate on all of them.

Go like that from meditating on one happy sentient being to all of them.

c. The measure of joy

As for the measure of training:

The sign is the arising of joy that is free from envy.

Ultimate joy has no envy for the wealth of others.

d. The essence of joy

After a session of meditating on conceptual joy:

Then meditate on joy without a reference point.

Meditate on the objects of joy, all sentient beings, as appearing while they do not exist, like a
The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

Just as in the midst of many sentient beings
Magicians may emanate illusory forms of things,
But the horses and chariots, and elephants that they conjure
Do not exist at all in they way that they appear,
Every dharma should be known to be like that.

The Ratnavali says:

A secret from people in general,
Is this very deep Dharma teaching
The amrita of Buddha's teaching
That the world is like illusion.

Just as illusory elephants
Appear to arise and vanish,
While in truth and reality
Nothing arises and vanishes,

Likewise this world of illusion,
Appearing to rise and vanish,

In the real and absolute truth,
Neither rises nor is destroyed.

As an illusory elephant
Coming from nothing goes nowhere;
By exhausting mind's obscuration,
It really, truly is gone.

This world, just like that elephant,
Coming from nothing goes nowhere;
By exhausting the mind's obscuration,
It really, truly is gone.

The nature beyond the three times;
And existence and non-existence,
Not realizing them all as mere labels;
How will someone possess the nature?

e. The virtues of joy:

In meditating in this way, by the joy of the natural state:

Body, speech and mind have spontaneous peace and bliss.

This is the measure.

f. The fruition of meditating on joy:

By the wealth of the fruition joy is stabilized.

The Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says:

Immeasurably vast, joyful mind is never taken from us. With this unsurpassable perfection we attain the heights.

H. Further explanation of the way of meditating,

There are seven sections

1. the details of meditation after this is familiar,

Now the way of meditating will be further explained. As explained above:

After this is familiar, then, beginning with kindness,
Meditate on all four, one right after the next,
Gradually breaking attachment to any of the four.

Sometimes meditate on these four in order, as an antidote to liberate them into purity.

2. How to stop obstacles to kindness with compassion:

If kindness attaches you intimately to all beings,
Compassion breaks attachment to the cause and effect of suffering.

If sometimes one becomes permanently attached to other sentient beings as one's father ar meditation on compassion will serve as an antidote.

3. How to stop obstacles to compassion with joy:

When a lesser compassion attaches to reference points,
Sadness is stopped by the joy that has no reference point.

When there is attachment to compassion as an individually characterized phenomenon, illus

joy will clear away all sadness and attachment.

4. How to stop obstacles to joy with equanimity:

When joy disturbs the mind by arousing anxiety
Then we should meditate on the great equanimity,
Free from all desire for anything near or far.

If we are sad because of longing for joy in the happiness of others, it will be cleared away by

objectless equanimity.

5. Stopping the obstacles to equanimity with kindness:

When equanimity is neutral and indecisive,
Meditate on kindness and so forth, as before.
Training in that way grows stable and effortless.

If everything seems to become indifferent, arouse kindness and meditate on that.
These are the general antidotes. In particular, as an antidote for each object, meditate as ta corresponding objectless way. By meditating in that way, one will attain immeasurable peac being and quickly attain stability.

6. The way of meditating when we have become increasingly familiar:

Yogins for whom this practice is fully stabilized
May meditate in a different order, or jump about.

After the four immeasurables are stabilized, so that their benefits may arise, after kindness, meditate on the others in order, or after equanimity go back and meditate without any particular order. T meditating
serially on kindness, compassion, joy, and equanimity, after equanimity, meditating on comp
is the lesser. After kindness, meditating on joy is the middle. After equanimity meditating on kindr greatest. Jumping directly up and down after resting between objects is the meditation. The Middle Length Pra Subhuti, then meditate on kindness. Meditate on joy. Rest in compassion, Practice equanimity.

7. The virtues of meditating in this way

What is the purpose?

By that the meditation will gain the advantage of freshness.
Its steadiness will grow to the very greatest degree.

In particular the mind of the four immeasurables will gain freshness, unsteadiness will be ste steadiness will become supremely great steadiness.

I. The fruition

There are ten parts.

1. How the higher realms and truth and goodness are established

Now, as for the teaching of the fruition of the four immeasurables, the following words explai

There are four fruitions of doing this meditation.
By ripening we gain the exalted and truly good.
In the desire realm we have a divine or human body,
In a situation producing happiness and benefit.

Those who do not attain an exalted state attain the body of a god or a human being. They p two accumulations, benefit beings, and become inseparable from the four immeasurables. I careless or fall asleep, they will not fall prey to serious harm. The Mahayanasutralankara sa

Having the mind of these four Bhrama-viharas
We will always take birth in realm of desire.
Because these perfect the two accumulations,
They produce ripening for sentient beings.
Never separated from purity
And free from what does not accord with it,
The condition of future carelessness and mishap,
Impatience, too, will never be found there.

As the ultimate fruition, enlightenment is established. The same text says:

What is harmful is banished, and happiness is produced.
With the seed of enlightenment, and the cause of longing desire,
The essence ripens; and sons of the Victorious One
Relying on Dharma, are not far from the light.

Abandoning what is harmful is a fruition of separation.
Producing the seed of liberation is a fruition of the predominant condition of empowerment b
Because one

produces happiness for others, being patient about our own trials and hardships is a produc
meditating on these four within this life, they ripen in other lives as a fruition according with the cause. The these four immeasurables always arises in sons of the Victorious One. It is born from previous familiar its objects,
and by seeing the faults of what does not conform to them. The same text says:

This kindness, having the nature of compassion
Attains the nature and discrimination
By formerly having become familiar with that
And seeing it spoiled by what does not accord.

2. The benefits of according with the cause

From the two sections of the fruition according with the cause:

a. General

From according to the cause, such action is self-performing.
The happiness attained is free from contrary experience.

By action according with the cause, we always spend our time meditating on the four immea experience according with the cause malice, harmfulness, unhappiness, passion, loving and absent. As for the benefits of the power of this

b. The decisive condition or power:

The power is birth in a pleasant, happy, and joyful country,
Where there are compatible people and amenities of wealth.

By kindness one is born in a pleasant country, by compassion in a happy one, and by joy in many flowers, medicinal herbs, and so forth. By equanimity one is born among many compa without
harm.

3. The benefits of performing this

The person:

By performing this these four will grow immensely greater.
The wealth of the two benefits becomes spontaneous.

By performing this, the four immeasurables will increase immensely, growing greater and gr wealth of the two benefits for oneself and others will become spontaneously present. By the

of the karma
of meditating on the four immeasurables, happiness and goodness will be established.

4. The benefit of kindness:

When perfect enjoyment of kindness is without aggression,
Then the mirror-like wisdom will have been fully attained,
As sambhogakaya adorned with the major and minor marks.

After kindness has transformed aggression into the mirror-like wisdom, one attains sambhog
Peak says:

By kindness aggression will be purified
As mirror-like wisdom and sambhogakaya.

5. The benefit of compassion:

When compassion is desireless, there is dharmakaya,
Producing the manifestation of discriminating wisdom.
Its dharmas like the ten powers are utterly distinct.

Compassion pure of desire is discriminating awareness wisdom and dharmakaya. The sam

By compassion desire is fully purified
As discriminating wisdom and ultimate dharmakaya.

6. The benefits of joy:

When joy eliminates jealousy, there is nirmanakaya.

The holy all-accomplishing wisdom is attained.
Nirmanakaya is nothing fixed, but of various forms.
This self-existing kaya is spontaneous buddha activity.

By immeasurable joy one attains the all-accomplishing wisdom, whose nature is perfect bud
Purifying jealousy makes nirmanakaya manifest. The same text says:

By joy all jealousy is fully purified,
As all-accomplishing wisdom and nirmanakaya.
Action becomes spontaneous and excellent.

7. The benefits of equanimity:

When equanimity has eliminated pride
As well as stupidity, there is the essence of things
Through equality dharmadhatu wisdom will manifest.
The simplicity of dharmata is svabhavikakaya.

When equanimity has purified pride and ignorance, the wisdom of equality and the dharmad established. Svabhavikakaya, the unchanging vajrakaya and the kaya of the manifestation manifest.
The same text says:

By equanimity and great equanimity
Pride and envy and ignorance will be purified.
One masters the dharmadhatu and equality wisdoms.
These are the vajra kayas and those of enlightenment.

As for the nature of passionlessness, arising from the four actions of these four immeasurab
Mahayanasutralankara says:

Those who have kindness completed by compassion
If they do not desire to dwell in peace
Why even to speak of worldly happiness
Or the wish to further their lives and their careers?

As for their not desiring their own happiness, the same text says:

Compassion produces happiness for those who suffer.
After the kind produce these others' happiness,
Their own happiness is not produced like that.

As for overpowering their happiness for others, the same text says:

The suffering produced by kindness
Overwhelms all their worldly happiness.
If the benefiter is without this,
What greater wonders can be?

The Letter to Students says:

For beings with unbearable sufferings, without a refuge
Those who are happy to suffer for others' benefit,
Are said to be wondrous beings who are truly excellent.
Diligent ones who delight in striving to benefit others
How shall they ever have enjoyments in happy countries?
They will not attain to youth and happiness.
They will not have the implements of power and wealth
With no spouse or companions, not born among gods or asuras.

As for the action of samsara not arising, the former text says:

The attitude of compassion is without the nature
of egocentric suffering, the best sign of samsara.
Completely knowing it one is not a sentient being.
Nor will one be badly harmed by samsaric faults.

Holy beings who have this immeasurably will be without faults. The same text says:

Those who have desire have corresponding faults.
They will not be without them, nor beyond the world.
Those who have this attitude, by their loving-kindness
Will be without any faults and go beyond the world.

Those who are kind to their literal fathers, mothers, and children have desire. Bodhisattvas such desires in regard to sentient beings. This is because they are liberated from samsara. The

If worldly enlightened ones and the arhats
Among the pratyekabuddhas are without this kindness,
What need is there even to speak of any others?
But world-transcending ones are not like that

If one does not meditate on the four immeasurables, there will be many faults. The same te

A bodhisattva who possesses ill-will
And malice due to pain and unhappiness
And resulting from attachments of desire
Is sure to come in contact with many faults.

As for its being said that those who are born in the desire realms have the attachments of de
are
born in the first two realms of desire and form are said to have samsaric desire. The Abhidh

Those born in those two realms have attachments of samsaric desire.

As for the fault of increasing kleshas, in regard to this immeasurable the former text says:

Kleshas conquer the self. They conquer sentient beings. They conquer discipline. By receiving their corruption one is lowered, and stays that way. By manifesting in that way one degraded. Do not listen to the arguments of others who will be beings without leisure. Harm attaining and non-attaining, the mind will attain great suffering.

Attainment damages the happiness of this life and non-attainment damages later happiness
benefits
of meditating on the four immeasurables, one does not have such faults, one grasps the pos
benefiting beings,
and since one is not whirled in samsara by the kleshas, suffering does not arise. The same

For one who rests in kindness and the rest
The faults that have been described will not arise.
Having no kleshas, one will benefit beings,
And will not pass into samsaric birth.

As for the praise of the virtues:

Unequaled with limitless qualities, kindness and the rest
Are given the highest praise by the teacher of gods and men.

The Glorious Garland Sutra says:

Whoever meditates on the four immeasurables
Will be considered with kindness by all the tathagatas.
All the immeasurable good qualities of this
Are even more limitless than endless space itself

As for the teaching that the four immeasurables is the way of the victorious ones

As for the four immeasurables:

Any path that is without them is in error.
It is an evil path to take refuge in other teachings.
The path that has them leads to spotless liberation.
This is the way that was traveled by buddhas of the past.
It also will be traveled by those who are to come.

The Commentary of the Teacher of the Bhumis says:

The four immeasurables are the path of liberation. Others are wrong paths.

As for the teaching of how to attain the two ultimate realities.

The causal vehicles hold that as a seed produces a sprout,
Upaya and prajña are the producers of the two kayas.
The fruition vehicles proclaim these as being mere conditions,
Removing the two obscurations that veil these same two kayas.
But since upaya depends on the limitless path of compassion,
The meaning is the same: Emptiness is compassionate.
In that, both cause and fruition practice are in accord.

The vehicles of characteristics mostly proclaim that the two accumulations are the producing

kayas. The Sixty Stanzas on Reasoning says:

By this merit all beings
Accumulate merit and wisdom.
Arising from merit and wisdom,
May we attain the two absolutes.

In the secret mantra, it is maintained that clearing away the two obscurations of the kayas o practicing the two accumulations as upaya and prajña, and therefore this is proclaimed to be Both are in accord, since practice having the essence of emptiness and compassion is what is establish
As for summarizing the meaning of this meditation:

The sutras say that the unborn seeds of happiness
Have existed primordially and never were created.
The mantrayana is in accord with this, because it claims
To clear away the incidental obscurations
That are the primordial obscurations of trikaya.

To summarize briefly, learned and accomplished ones
Explain that sutra and tantra are a unity,
As outer and inner aspects of a single path.

Therefore, following after the holy buddha sons,
We should strive to practice the four immeasurables.

The final teaching says that the dhatu is naturally pure and possesses the buddha qualities
the time of having practiced the path, the buddha qualities appear to arise, and are proclaimed t
mantrayana
all beings naturally exist as the mandala, as explained below. Since these two are without c amounts to the same thing. In the path, the two accumulations of upaya and prajña are also the same. In t
kayas and wisdoms are the same. Therefore former great masters like Padmasambhava have explain inner
and outer. Therefore, we should strive to meditate on the four immeasurables.

The tenth part of the general meaning, the dedication of merit.

Now the merit is dedicated for the benefit of sentient beings:

Thus by the nature of this peace that was so well-taught,
When the roiling silt in the mind of all beings is pacified,
Fatigued by having strayed into wrong and descending paths,
May our minds today find ease for their weariness.

By the power of this auspicious way of presenting the Dharma, like the host of undefiled rays
moon, may whatever beings are dwelling on the paths of the shravakas and pratyekabuddha
on the paths of the heretics, and those who are wearied by dwelling on paths that are less than per those worn out by dwelling on the great path of samsara, whose minds are disturbed by the roiling kleshas be pacified. In the wondrously arisen grove of liberation, carpeted with an array of various flowers, in the pond qualities may they ease themselves.

As when the full moon of autumn ornaments the sky
Having a perfectly rounded, brilliantly shining disk,
And hundreds of night-blooming lotuses open in its light
May these fully blossom in the faith of sentient beings.

Lapping the motionless Meru of a mind of sanity
Is the play of the ocean of happiness and benefit.
The four immeasurables are the ornaments of mind
As the four continents adorn that central mountain.

May happiness beautify the world to its farthest horizon.
May beings without remainder perfect their livelihood.
From the peaceful wreath of clouds of the play of the three levels,
May the heavens wondrously open with the rain of happiness
With flashing illumination and the thunder of victory
May these four immeasurable benefits reach to the end of time.

The Commentary on Chapter Eight: Producing the Mind of Complete Enlightenment

After the mind has been well trained by the four immeasurable aspirations, we enter the ess
of
the activity of the buddha sons, our chief topic,

VIII bodhicitta, the mind focused on supreme enlightenment.

There are three general topics.

A. The teaching of meditating on the root of all dharmas, the two bodhicittas
B The extensive explanation of how actually to arouse bodhicitta
C. The dedication of merit.

A. The teaching of meditating on the root of all dharmas, the two bodhicittas

Now arousing the mind of supreme enlightenment will be discussed. As just explained:

When we are well-accustomed to the four immeasurables,
We should meditate on the root of all Dharmas, the two bodhicittas.

This is the root of all dharmas of the world and beyond the world. It is the essence of all pat the guide of all sentient beings. The steed by which one will quickly cross to the unsurpassable mansion the best of thoughts, bodhicitta. Here we shall learn how to arouse it. The Sutra Requested by Maitrey

Maitreya, if a bodhisattva has a single dharma the lower realms will be abandoned. One wil not come into the hands of evil associates. It will be the cause of quickly becoming fully, tru completely enlightened. What is this single dharma? It is the most excellent and perfect of bodhicitta.
Maitreya, if one has this dharma, the lower realms are abandoned. One will not come into t hands of evil associates. It will be the cause of quickly becoming fully, truly, completely enli

The Bodhisattva-Pitaka-Sutra says:

Since one will quickly become enlightened with unsurpassable, true, complete enlightenmer one should train in the best of wishes, bodhicitta.

B. the extensive explanation of arousing bodhicitta,

There are has ten sections.

1. The explanation of the benefits

There are six sections.

a. The benefit of leading from samsara to peace

What are these benefits?

These put an end to the kleshas and the ocean of samsara.
They clear away the fear and suffering of evil deeds.
They conquer the karma and suffering involved with the samskaras,
Leading beings away from samsara and to nirvana.

Regarding liberation from the ocean of samsara, The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

Kye, son of noble family, bodhicitta is like a great ship that liberates us from the stream of samsara. It is like a heroic guardian who liberates us from fear of samsara and the lower re

The Liberation of Maitreya says:

O son of noble family, it is like this. Relying on a heroic guardian, one has no fear of any enemies. Similarly, bodhisattvas who put their reliance in arousing the wish for omniscience fear of any evil enemy.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Like depending on a hero when there is great danger
Even after doing inexpiable evil deeds,
The instant one depends on this, one is liberated,
Why would those who are heedful not rely on it?

All suffering and evil deeds are cleared away. The same text says:

Wishing to destroy the hundreds of sufferings of samsara,
Desiring to clear away the sorrow of sentient beings,
And wishing they will enjoy many hundreds of happiness
One should never let go of the means, which is bodhicitta.

The Sutra of the Instructions of the Glorious Great Vehicle says:

The person who enters into unsurpassable enlightenment without the existence of even an atom cuts off the evil path of going to the lower realms and the eight unfree states. That per separated from the paths of gods and human beings and completely abandons them. Such not blind or deaf. All the senses are sound.

Burning the firewood of karma and the kleshas, bodhicitta is like a fire. The former text says

This, like the fire at the end of time, in an instant will certainly burn great evil deeds.

The Liberation of Maitreya says:

By burning away all faults, it is like the fire at the end of the kalpa.

Moreover, by attaining buddhahood, one is led out of samsara. The Bodhicharyavatara say

If this occurs the immeasurable host of sentient beings
Will attain the ease of the highest state of blissfulness.

b. The benefit of being a shrine for the world

For those who have aroused bodhicitta:

Even while bodhicitta is not yet manifest,
The wholesome stream of compassion is rising ever higher.
In meditation, upaya and prajña will unite.
All undertakings of body and speech are beneficial.
We become like shrines for all the world and the gods.

Those who have faultlessly aroused bodhicitta, when the mind is in non-conceptual meditati with its prajña and with absorption that never goes to sleep, loses consciousness, or gives ri perceptions of memory. Perception and feeling cease, and there is the absorption of cessation. Always co mind does not manifest the five situations below. The Thirty Verses says:

As for the arising of mental consciousness,
Mindless sleep and unconsciousness
And the two samadhis
One is always without perception of these.

When this occurs, the bodhicitta formerly aroused remains undamaged and there is continua
Bodhicharyavatara says:
When this has been grasped, the dhatus of sentient beings
Therefore will be limitlessly liberated,
Since there arises from them the mind of non-returning,
That which is true mind is actually received.

When this has been grasped, even while they are asleep
Or when they are non-attentive, still the force of merit
Which is multifarious and continuous,
As limitless as space, continues performing its function.

All undertakings will be successful. The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

O son of noble family, whoever has aroused the mind of supreme enlightenment, will be successful in all undertakings. They will always be of one taste with wholesomeness alone.

By arousing this undamaged bodhicitta all virtuous conduct and whatever neutral is done wi incidental accomplishment; it will become virtue according with enlightenment. One will bec the world.
The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

Those who arouse bodhicitta will be a shrine for all the world together with its gods.

c. The benefit that virtue increases ever higher

As for this virtue corresponding with merit:

Other kinds of happiness diminish and are exhausted.
The happiness that is established by precious bodhicitta
Rather than being exhausted, will actually increase.
It is like clear water flowing into the ocean,
Or a rich and glorious harvest, growing in fertile soil.

A drop of water flowing into an ocean will not be exhausted but will go on for a kalpa. A ses planted in good soil will greatly increase. So does the virtue of arousing bodhicitta. The Sutra Reque
says:

Manjushri, similarly if we arouse bodhicitta until attaining the unsurpassable enlightenment of buddhahood, the virtue of that will not be exhausted.
Manjushri, for example it is like this, all seeds which are a suitable source in every suitable way will grow. As those seeds will grow, the virtue of having aroused bodhicitta will vastly g

Meritorious virtue is not like a banana tree, which fruits once, and then is exhausted. The im
fruition
of temporal and ultimate virtue increases inexhaustibly like that of a great tree. The Bodhich
says:

All other kinds of virtue are like a banana tree
It brings forth fruit but once, then it is exhausted.
However the eternal tree of bodhicitta
Gives fruit that always increases inexhaustibly.

The Basket of Books Sutra says:

Manjushri, it is like this, a variety of trees, having taken in the four elements, will greatly increase. Manjushri, if the virtuous roots are dedicated to omniscience, having taken in bodhicitta they will greatly increase.

d. The Benefit of being the Root of all Dharmas.

Moreover, of all dharmas without remainder:

The root, the seed, of all is the nature of compassion.
Even in samsara it yields wholesome fruits.

Its nature is nirvana. It grows to enlightenment.
Strive to arouse this precious bodhicitta fully.

The Sutra Requested by Bhrama says:

Bhrama, what is this excellent thought bodhicitta? As the root of all dharmas, it is like a seed
From
the seed the sprout, leaves, flower, and fruit arise. Likewise from this excellent thought muc happiness is experienced among gods and human beings. And also it will reproduce omnis

The Sutra of Instructions to the King says:

O great king, by the ripening of the karma of the virtuous roots of the wish for unsurpassable true, complete enlightenment, you will be born many times among the gods and experience
You will be born many times among human beings and experience happiness. But if the po produced of always being among gods and human beings, then, O great king, the virtuous r bodhicitta will be diminished or not fully developed.

e. The benefit of Suffering being Eased and the Appearances of Wisdom Produced

The immeasurable benefits of arousing bodhicitta:

This is the excellent medicine that cures the ills of beings;
The magic vase that magnifies wish-fulfilling splendor.
This is the sun of wisdom, and the moon that soothes our torments,
With qualities like a host of stars in a spotless sky.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

Bodhicitta is the seed of all the dharmas of buddhahood. In making the white dharmas of al sentient beings increase, it is like a field. In burning away all faults, it is like kalpa fire. In exhausting
all unhappiness, it is like the wealth of the nagas. In accomplishing all goals, it is like the kin fulfilling gems. In pulling us out of the stream of the river of samsara, it is like an iron hook.
world together with its gods, humans, and asuras, it is like an offering shrine. In fulfilling all is like an excellent wishing-vase.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

This is the excellent amrita of deathlessness
That conquers for sentient beings the fearful Lord of Death.
This is the inexhaustible precious treasure source,
That clears away all the poverty of sentient beings.

This is the excellent medicine of the supreme physician
That completely pacifies all the illnesses of beings.
This is the wishing-tree that eases the weariness
Of beings exhausted by wandering on the path of samsara.

This is the universally supporting bridge
That liberates all beings from fear of the lower realms.
This is the arising of the moon of mind,
That clears away the torment of the kleshas of beings.

This is the great sun that fully bestows on beings
Elimination of the darkness of ignorance,
From churning the milk of teachings of the Holy Dharma
This is the essential butter that arises.

Beings who are travelers, treading the path of samsara,
Wish they could experience the bounties of happiness,
But now at this banquet of the ultimate happiness
These great travelers, sentient beings, will be satisfied.

f. The Benefit of vast qualities

Because these qualities are immeasurable, the mind:

This is as vast as the measureless ocean of dharmadhatu
And the supremely miraculous qualities of the Victorious One.
Within it are limitless cloud-banks of inconceivable merit.
Their nature, always produces happiness and benefit,

Thus the immeasurable dharmas of buddhahood are grasped. The Bodhisattva-Pitaka-Sutr

Shariputra, if a bodhisattva mahasattva possesses a certain single dharma, these dharmas buddhahood and immeasurable others will be completely grasped. What is this single dharr the excellent wish for enlightenment.
Shariputra, if a bodhisattva mahasattva possesses this single dharma, these dharmas of buddhahood and immeasurable others will be completely grasped.

Similarly, many aspects of Dharma will appear and be blessed by buddhahood. The Sutra o
Genuine Dharma says:

Bhagavan, This excellent wish is the root of all Dharmas. When this wish is absent, one is f from all the Dharmas of the buddha.
Bhagavan, as for this excellent wish, even if one does not enter into buddhahood, Dharma words will arise from the center of the sky, and from walls, and trees.
Within this excellent wish of bodhisattvas, from the examination of one's own mind, all the instructions and teachings will arise. Therefore, Produce the excellent wish for of enlightenr Bhagavan, its is, for example, like this. The head, though it is the first of the limbs, is not the life. Similarly, one who has this excellent wish, does not have the enlightenment of the budd

This is better than making offerings to the tathagatas.

The Sutra Requested by the Householder Glorious Gift says:

Better than persons in the buddha fields
Filled abundantly with the seven treasures,
Who offer them freely to the lords of the world,
Those who have joined their palms in veneration
And bowed to the excellence of bodhicitta
Make an offering that is more noble,
And this is not the end of what is gained.

The Noble Moon Lamp Sutra says:

In the fullness of a thousand million million fields
All the measureless offerings to the Chief of Beings
Would not equal the value of a thought of kindness

The Sutra of Training in the Limitless Gate says:

Bhrama, these three are unsurpassed by offerings and ceremonies for the tathagatas. They merit. What are these three? They are producing the wish for unsurpassable, true, complet enlightenment; grasping the Holy Dharma of the tathagatas; and practicing what one has he Bhrama, these three are unsurpassed by offerings and ceremonies for the tathagatas.
Bhrama, if there is entry into the kalpa-long measure of life of the body of the tathagata, the ripening of these offerings would be shown and that kalpa exhausted; but the benefit of the heap of r these three would not be exhausted.

Moreover, liberated from the lower realms, attaining peace, being immeasurable and inconc
forth,
one will be a worthy object of prostrations. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

The moment they arouse the mind of bodhicitta,
These wretched ones who are bound in the prison of samsara,
Will be called the sons of the tathagata
And be worthy of the prostrations of the world

And also:

The low is made high.

The same text says:

Like the excellent elixir that turns things into gold,
It makes this unclean body the body of a Buddha.
What is worthless is turned into something supremely precious,
Therefore firmly grasp this which is known as "bodhicitta."

The Inconceivable Secrets Sutra says:

The merit of bodhicitta
if this were put into form
Would fill the whole of space, Therefore it is supreme.

The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

In brief, as much as the goodness of the buddha bhagavats are the virtues of arousing bodhicitta. They are as vast as the sky and dharmadhatu.

Bodhicitta is taught because of the intention of the buddhas to do benefit. The Bodhicharya

Having intended this over many kalpas,
The enlightened sages see the benefits of this

The praise of the bodhisattvas who possess bodhicitta is like this. These bodhisattvas are a Anyone who becomes angry with them has immeasurable non-merit whose fruition is the lower realr Bodhicharyavatara
says:

Whoever to such patrons as these buddha sons
Produces vicious aggression and animosity,
As many bad thoughts as they aroused, so many kalpas
They will abide in hell, so the Sage has taught.

The Sutra of the Miracle of Attaining Complete Pacification
says:
Manjushri, as many times as they have animosity to a bodhisattva, so many kalpas will they abide in hell. Therefore don the armor of bodhicitta.

Well if one produces virtue by faith, won't one's merit increase even more? The former text

Well if someone produces the supreme mind, The fruition will be more excellent than that.

How will it increase? The Sutra of the Seal of Entering into Certainty and Uncertainty says:

Manjushri, as for its being completely and eternally grasped, for example, if all the sentient beings in all the worlds of the ten directions were given eyes, someone who did that would produce more merit. Or if all the beings of all the worlds of the ten directions were released darkness of a dark prison and established in the happiness of a chakravartin or Bhrama; if a daughter of noble family looks on a bodhisattva with faith and devotion to the mahayana, an praise, a merit countlessly greater than that will be produced.

Even those who look on a bodhisattva with the mind of the kleshas do not go to the lower re

in the higher realms, let alone those who have faith. The Noble Edifice of the Three Jewels sa

The bodhisattva Gaje of good form and pleasant to look upon was begging alms in Shravasti, when he was seen by a merchant's daughter Palyön chengyi Chok. The girl live her life tormented by a blazing fire of desire, and then was born among the thirty-three gods the children of the gods remembered their former existences, and she said, "E ma! If by loo bodhisattva even with desire, such a ripening as this arose, what would have happened if w with faith and reverence! Having thought that, they came together with their divine retinues hundred. They offered flowers and so on.

Moreover, even those who by not having faith in them go to the lower realms, finally, guarde compassion, will be liberated beyond samsara. If they are connected by faith, by having tha will quickly attain enlightenment. The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Even those who do evil to bodhisattvas, and by those actions go to the lower realms, will be liberated from there by that bodhisattva with great effort. They will be established in great enlightenment.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

By those individuals who have once seen me
Whether thoughts of anger or of faith arise,
Forever after may this always be the cause
Of establishing every benefit for them.

Also:

Even those who harm them will have a connection to happiness.
They will go to for refuge to that source of happiness.

2. the essence

There are seven sections

a. The general explanation of arising and entering

Now the essence of arousing bodhicitta will be explained. Thus for supreme enlightenment.

Arousal of bodhicitta consists of the desire
Of attaining true buddhahood for limitless sentient beings.
The two kinds are those of aspiration and entering.
Wishing for this is always joined with application
Just as volition to move is always joined with moving.

In arousing bodhicitta, one desires buddhahood for the benefit of others. The Abhisamayala

As for arousing bodhicitta, for others' benefit.
Because of that one wishes for perfect enlightenment.

Moreover since it is right that this attitude has a beneficial essence, because we discriminate particulars, by arousing the essence, the particulars will also subsequently be produced. For example by t bodhicitta of aspiring such and such particulars will subsequently be attained.
From the two essences of these bodhicittas, the bodhicitta of aspiration is the intention to att enlightenment.
Entering is putting that Dharma into practice. Aspiring and entering are like wanting to go ar going. The
Bodhicharyavatara says: 1.15-16

Briefly this excellent wish, the bodhicitta
Should be known to be divided into two separate kinds,
There is the attitude of aspiring to enlightenment
And that of actually entering into enlightenment.

It should be also be known that the difference of these two kinds
Is like that between wanting to go and actually going.
Thus by capable persons these two bodhicittas
Should be known to have this particular distinction.

Here there are many ways of dividing the classifications. There are the arousal of relative a bodhicitta. The Nirvana says:

Divided as absolute and relative,

Bodhicitta has two different types.

Also there are the arousal of bodhicitta by ordinary individuals and by the noble ones and th viewpoint of sentient beings and the internal viewpoint of the nature of mind. These are also called ar and absolute bodhicitta. The Sutra of the Great Creation of Bodhicitta says:

The bodhisattva Kashyapa asked, Bhagavan, how is such a mind aroused.
The Buddha spoke, "All dharmas are like the sky without any characteristics. Therefore they are primordially luminous and completely pure. That is called enlightenment. Giving birth to thought of being in accord with that, the precious thought which has not arisen before, is cal arousing the thought of enlightenment, bodhicitta.

There are also three kinds of arousing bodhicitta depending on the three disciplines of the th
The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

The thought that vows to be faultless, the thought of collecting virtuous dharmas, and the thought of ripening sentient beings--Earnestly arouse these three bodhicittas.

On the paths of accumulation and preparation, practice arousing bodhicitta by wishing for de first to the seventh bhumi wish for pure attitudes, on the three pure bhumis for ripening, and

buddhahood
for abandoning obscurations. Regarding these four, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

As for arousing bodhicitta, those on the bhumis
Have the wish for devotion and good attitudes
Then for ripening, and after that as well
They have the wish that obscurations should be abandoned.

There also bodhicittas of aspiring to the five paths of accumulation, preparation, seeing, med
more learning. The Prajñaparamita in Twenty Thousand Lines says:

There are beginner's bodhicitta, the bodhicitta of one who is properly-trained, the bodhicitta the Dharma, the bodhicitta of complete liberation, and the bodhicitta that is inconceivable by

Subhuti,
these are the wish that those who are entering the path may enter it; that those who have en properly-trained; that the divine eye may be produced; that one may meditate on the truth of

and that the unobscured buddha eye may be obtained.

There are also six divisions depending on the six paramitas. The same text says:

The vast immeasurable mind of the bodhisattvas possessing the six paramitas is not shared shravakas and pratyekabuddhas.

There are also ten divisions related to the ten paramitas. The Gew'i Lha says:

Thus, by proper inner resting in meditation, after meditating on the ten bodhicittas,...

According to the dividing points of the stages they are taught by twenty-two examples. Acco teachings of the Sutra Requested by Understanding Ocean, the Abhisamayalankara says:

These are earth and gold, the moon and fire;
A treasure, a source of precious things, a lake;
A vajra, mountain, medicine, and the spiritual friend;
A wish-fulfilling gem, the sun, melodious song;
A king, a treasury, and a far-reaching highway;
A steed, a fountain; echoes, rivers, clouds;
Altogether there are twenty-two aspects.

As for the respective meanings of these examples, the commentary says that they are:

1 Strong interest
2 wishing
3 lofty attitude
4 application
5 the paramita of generosity
6 ...discipline
7 ...patience
8 ...exertion
9 ...meditation

10 ...prajña
11 ...skillful means
12 ... aspiration
13 ... power and 14 ... wisdom
15 the higher perceptions
16 merit and wisdom
17 the dharmas according with enlightenment
18 compassion and clear seeing (vipashyana)
19 retention and confident eloquence,
20 celebration of Dharma
21 the path that crosses all at once 22 possession of dharmakaya.

Strong interest is like earth,
Wishing is like gold,
Lofty attitude is like the rising moon.

These three signify the lesser, middle, and greater paths of accumulation.

Application is like fire.

This is arousing bodhicitta on the four levels of the path of preparation.

Generosity is like a treasure.
Discipline is like a source of precious things.
Patience is like a lake.
Exertion is like a vajra.
Meditation is like a mountain.
Prajña is like medicine.
Skilful means is like a spiritual friend.
Aspiration is like a wish-fulfilling gem.
Power is like the sun.
The perfection of wisdom is like listening to a melodious song.

These designate the first through the tenth bhumis.

Higher perception is like a king.

The two accumulations are like a treasury.
The dharmas according with enlightenment are like a highway.
Compassion and clear seeing are like an excellent steed.
Retention and confident eloquence are like a fountainhead.

These five apply overall to the eighth, ninth, and tenth bhumis.

Celebration of dharma is like an echo.
Crossing all at once is like a river.
Dharmakaya is like clouds.

These three occur in the tenth bhumi, where wisdom and great buddha activity benefit being

Commenting on this, the Prasannapada says:

The first three include the lesser, middle, and greater levels of the beginner's path of accumulation. The next includes the path of entry to the first bhumi. The next include the te "Supremely Joyful" and so on the paths of seeing and meditation. The next five include spe The next three kinds of arousing bodhicitta concern preparation, real experience, and compl level of buddhahood. Thus, these divisions include everything from the beginner's level to buddhahood.

Some join the last three to the level of prabhasvara, but this way of explaining the scripture i Those on that level do not perceive entry into buddhahood, because they do not perceive exhausti limit. The level of buddhahood is where the arhats of the mahayana dwell.
The Mahayanasutralankara says:

The arousal of bodhicitta by the sons of the victorious ones
Is taught to be like clouds

By that, it is taught that these twenty-two go from the path of accumulation to the tenth bhum asked whether there is arousal of bodhicitta on the level of buddhahood, it is not maintained that th for attainment here, as with the arousal of bodhicitta by students. This is because buddhahood has alread Also because one has gone beyond the time of proclamation, there is no arousal of wishes for accepting o anything.

However, absolute arousal of bodhicitta exists for one who has attained dharmata, mounting without harming attainment. This is because emptiness exists without being discarded, and because compassion produces benefits. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

When I see with the Buddha-eye and what arousing bodhicitta I possess, it is beyond the nu grains of sand of the river Ganges in the eastern part of the world. I teach the Dharma in ord benefit those sentient beings who have gone into the birth-places of hell-beings, pretas, and

The glorious teacher Jñanakirti said that within the twenty-two above, the first three are aspi
later
nineteen are maintained to be entering]:

Strong interest and so forth, those three divisions
Are the three aspects of the bodhicitta of aspiring.
As for what is called the bodhicitta of entering,
It is explained to have nineteen aspects.

Though he says that, it should be maintained that each of these has two aspects, of aspiring Aspiring is intends to realize enlightenment. Entering puts it into effect by engaging with it.
necessary in each case.
As the support of arousing bodhicitta, according to the mind-only school, making what at firs attained
be attained, one of the seven families of individual-enlightenment, whichever is appropriate, of the Path of Enlightenment says:

The seven families of the pratimoksha
Always have vows of achieving this as other;
However it is not seen as other for those Who have the good fortune of mahayana vows.

According to madhyamaka, those in whom bodhicitta is aroused and practiced should not be only those who have the free and well-favored body. The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Now to explain the scope of those who have this dharma, countless gods, nagas, asuras, sk bellied ones produce bodhicitta, the wish for unsurpassable, true, complete enlightenment.

These two systems are not understood to be contradictory. Thus, at the time of arousing bo
one has not been imputed with the name of the pratimoksha vows, since one must be able to tak meaning, not to cut off life and so forth, one will certainly have a similar support. That from t their goal a wrong attitude will arise is certain. If one is not able to take the appropriate version of the pr vow, nothing at all will arise. This would contradict the very wish that was being aroused. In brief, for a being v practice this, gathering its bases is the bodily support. Having the particular attitudes of faith and so forth support of thought.

The Sutra of The Palm Tree of the Three Jewels says:

Because one has faith in the Conqueror and his Dharma,
One also has faith in the highest enlightenment.
If one has faith in the practice of buddha sons,
One will have the attitude of the wise.

As for the support of place, wherever one is born while the cause that damages bodhicitta d that is the place.
The three causes of arousing bodhicitta are faith with the Buddha as its object, compassion
beings
as its object, and hearing the benefits of bodhicitta. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

From the power of friendship and from hearing Dharma,
From the cause and roots and from being accustomed to virtue,
There is the Unstable and that which arises stably.
Stabilized by others is arousing bodhicitta.

Relying on true friends, or being urged by the spiritual friend, and having heard the Dharma arousing the unstable bodhicitta of aspiring, which is the first kind to arise. Arising subseque cause of

one's becoming accustomed to virtue and awakening the proper cause, and awakening the stable arising of the bodhicitta of entering. The passage says that there are these. The essence o bodhicitta is entering into an attitude of aspiration inseparable from the desire to attain complete enlightenment fo others. What is included in this becomes the essence of the six paramitas, The Gandavyuha Sutra says:

This bodhicitta also sets out to do benefit for others. It is this nature of aspiring and enterin the six paramitas.

Also the two bodhicittas and the three controlling disciplines of a bodhisattva are of one natu wish to benefit others and good conduct, there is aspiring and entering. The master Sherab Jungne of the Sage's Intention says:

Neither of these bodhicittas goes beyond desire for unsurpassable, true, complete enlighten benefit of sentient beings.

By self-control there is 1) the discipline of control. Since from that benefit for others is produ is 2) the discipline of performing benefit for sentient beings. By increase of the two accumulations ar there is 3) the discipline of gathering virtuous dharmas. Since all these control unwholesome aspects of o they are taught to be the controlling disciplines of a bodhisattva.
For example, like a wishing-jewel that cures plagues, makes arise what is needed and desir and so forth, here there are different aspects of one essence.

In the extensive explanation of the individual natures

b. the essences of arising and entering are explained:

Aspiring has the essence of the four immeasurables.
And entering that of the six paramitas, it is maintained.

The Sutra Requested by Manjushri says:

Manjushri, that which aspires to the benefit of others is the great kindness, the great compassion, the great joy, and the great equanimity. That perfect conduct is also the six pa

Now so that what occurs by means of the individual benefits of these two may be known, let about

c. the benefits of the bodhicitta of aspiring:

For beings:

Though some may worship the Buddhas to the limits of the directions
For many millions of kalpas, caring only for their own good,
This will not match even a fraction of the merit of aspiration.

The Glorious Account of the Dharmas of Complete Great Nirvana says:

Whoever offers all their lives to all the buddhas
The seven precious substances and the requisites of life And immeasurable offering of the

[?]

More excellent than that is aspiring to enlightenment
For the sake of sentient beings, for just the space of a moment.
The excellent virtues of doing that are limitless.

Moreover:

Whatever being, for even the space of a moment,
Meditates by arousing bodhicitta,
As for the heap of merit of doing that,
It cannot be reckoned by even victorious ones.

d. An example of what it is like:

As for showing its suitability:

Aspiring to lighten even a little the sufferings of beings
Even if this arises only for an instant,
Brings us liberation from the lower realms.
And limitless happiness among gods and human beings.

A friendly ship captain's daughter having given four kasharpani coins and eight and sixteen by kicking her mother's head, wounded it. On an island in the ocean, she was welcomed by fo and eight and sixteen and thirty two, and when her good actions were exhausted, in the south she wa house, and in the instant her head was being drilled she thought, In Jambuling many have struck women's these will certainly come here, but may I substitute for them so that they are not be born here. In the i thinking this, the remaining time of punishment by drilling was over. After that lifetime was done, she was bo god.

e. the explanation of the benefits of entering

Though by the bodhicitta of aspiring great benefits are attained, the benefits of entering are more than
that:

And yet the rewards of entering are infinitely more.
Because there is always a real and actual application,
All excellent minds that apply themselves thus for even an instant,
Are said to bring together the two accumulations,
Which otherwise would be the task of many kalpas

By lofty attitude, one is entirely elevated. Because the benefits of an instant of application a immeasurable, even the benefits of an instant of aspiration are therefore immeasurable. The Sutra of the G Moon says:

If from just the thought of helping others

the benefits will be immeasurable,
Why even speak about really doing this?

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 1.27

If merely thinking about performing benefit
Is much nobler than making offerings to the buddhas,
Why even speak of really exerting ourselves
For the happiness of all sentient beings without remainder?

In accord with that, Minag Dungthungchen Sepa, for a period of forty thousand kalpas did pu forest and as the bhramin child "skar ma la dga' ba" did so for twenty thousand years. Then a city to beg alms, he was seen by the daughter of a merchant, who thought, if I don't ask for him as a hu
To save her life, by abandoning the pure conduct, collected over twenty thousand kalpas association and so the Sutra of the Skill of the Great Secret Path of Upaya.
Aspiration does not have a fruition of continuously arising merit, but the merit of entering has distinction of continuously arising. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 1.17

Though from the bodhicitta of aspiration
There is a great fruition in samsaric life,
The merit of this does not continually arise
As it does with the bodhicitta of entering.

f. how by the power of mind, accumulation is combined

Now, by accumulation every instant explaining how many are combined, subsequently the w
of inferior minds ceases. As for the reason:

So whether all that has been taught to take three countless kalpas
Is completed quickly or after a very long time,
Or there is liberation within a single lifetime,
Actually depends on the power of the mind.
Whatever is done by efforts, means and the highest prajña,

Is in reality done by this unsurpassable power.

Bodhisattvas of very dull powers need thirty-three innumerable kalpas to attain enlightenme accumulation and preparation take three. Each of the ten bhumis takes three. Those of mi seven. Each of the paths of accumulation and preparation takes two. The path of seeing takes one, the p two. Those of sharp powers take three. The Precious Lamp of the Middle Way by master Bhavya says:

Those of sharp powers take three innumerable kalpas to become completely and perfectly enlightened. Those of intermediate powers take seven; those of dull powers take thirty-thre

As for these three degrees of sharpness, The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Perfected in three innumerable kalpas,
They will then complete their meditation.

The great commentary on the Prajñaparamita in Eight Thousand Lines says: 545.6

In the first innumerable kalpa they begin the path of accumulation, and go as far as the first bhumi. In the second, they go from the second bhumi "the spotless one" up to the seventh.
they go from the eighth bhumi "the motionless one" up to buddhahood.

The Bodhisattva-bhumi says:

For the paths of accumulation and preparation they take one, from the first to the seventh bhumis they take one, and for the three pure bhumis they take one.

As completing the paths of accumulation and preparation brings us to the first bhumi, the pr way of explaining the number of innumerable kalpas is of one meaning with that of the Bhumi-co account of innumerable kalpas those of sharp and dull powers are distinguished, and though those of s three innumerable kalpas for the gradual stages of the two accumulations, this is from the point of final gathering into union.
Also since it is explained that for great power of mind every instant combines many kalpas, t necessarily need three countless kalpas. The secret mantra says that from the viewpoint of sharpest powers, by their great powers of mind every instant combines immeasurable kalpas, and by continuous able to be liberated quickly within a single lifetime and so forth.

After they attain abhisheka, their dwelling in meditation on the two stages of development ar called the lesser path of accumulation. Then if they strive with great effort and skillful means taught that within that very life they attain the path of seeing. For those who have attained the path of seeing there or death, so within that very life, they complete the path of meditation. This is attaining enlightenment.

Also having attained the path of seeing, if they wish, they can establish enlightenment within The Prajñaparamita in Twenty Thousand Lines says: {{547.1}}

These great bodhisattvas, having attained with respect to dharmas the dharma eye, if they wish, in seven days, can be completely enlightened with unsurpassable enlightenment.

The measure of benefits of this is that of the wealth of autonomy, in which whatever we desi accomplished and there is only what we like. Whether on the shravaka, pratyekabuddha, or bodhisattva y that this body of the noble ones is made to manifest. Therefore, not many can be reckoned as suitable for a single lifetime in the style of secret mantra.
In mantrayana, with its profound skillful means many quickly attain the path of seeing. Up to seeing, they enter into the particulars of means and effort. Beyond that bodhisattvas of very sharp p vidyadharas of mantrayana are without distinction in the time of traversing the bhumis. Mantra-practitioner ones are more quickly liberated than the duller ones. With exertion, great skillful means, and a life of prajña are quickly established in the world. By ordinary ones they are not established, but the example has inc understood, and after one life they do not travel to another. Though the inner luminous nature of mind is not funda established in existence, merely from abandoning defilements, getting close to it is established. {{548.2}}

g. How joy is produced in these being newly born ultimate bodhicitta:

This possess the essence of the wishing tree of compassion
As for its bearing well the heavy burden of beings,
In this world even Bhrama and so forth,
Even for themselves have never dreamed of this
Let alone seeking this bodhicitta for other beings
So joy is created in this which has never existed before.

The Madhyamakavatara says:

Intermediate shravaka buddhas and the being the Lord of Sages, All these Buddhas take th
bodhisattvas,
It is the mind non-dual with the mind of compassion
Bodhicitta, which is the cause of the buddha sons.
Therefore first of all compassion should be praised.

In that way, the wishing tree of compassion bears the burden of the flock of birds of limitless
beings.
these as for that ultimate bodhicitta, father mother and so forth wishing benefit for themselve lords Bhrama
and so forth even those are without is and even for themselves up to now caring only for this attitude, previously unborn, should be rejoiced in. {{549.0}} That is what it is saying. The Bodhichar 1.23-5

Even if we include the love of father and mothers
Who has such a beneficial attitude?
Even those who are gods and highly accomplished sages
Or does even Bhrama have anything like this?

If before now none of these sentient beings
Had such an attitude even for their own benefit,
If it was not dreamed of even in a dream,

How would such benefits ever rise for others?

This attitude of benefit by bringing joy to others,
Which does not arise even for oneself
This specially precious thought of benefiting beings
Is an unprecedented wonder which is born.

This wondrously arisen attitude accomplishes the benefit of both self and other. It is the sup to the tathagata. The same text says: 6.127

This itself is pleasing to the tathagatas
This itself accomplishes our true benefit
This itself removes the sufferings of the world
Therefore by me this always should be done.

Instructing us to arouse bodhicitta, even if we do not attain buddhahood, the Bodhicitta Com

As for bodhicitta, not producing it
One will never attain the level of buddhahood.
In samsara for doing benefits for oneself and others
No other skillful means exists but this alone.

3. The liturgy of receiving

a. the preliminaries

Collecting the concordant conditions,

There are six sections

b. The object of receiving

Therefore, since arousing bodhicitta is within our power, in the space front visualize an asse
and bodhisattvas. Do as is explained in The Sutra Describing the Virtues of the Field of Manjush the liturgy

below. Moreover, the Lamp of the Path to Enlightenment says:

If one does not find a guru,
In receiving the vow from another,
The ritual is said to be valid.
So in former lives Manjushri
By becoming Amwaraja
Aroused the bodhicittas.

The buddha field of Manjushri
As explained in the Ornament Sutra
Is also clarified here.

With the five eyes of the protectors Perfect bodhicitta
Is produced and provided
For beings as a lamp,
To liberate from samsara:

Hostile and angry attitudes
Miserliness and jealousy
Keeping hold of them from now on,
Until supreme enlightenment,
We will not perform them.

Pure conduct should performed
Evil deeds and desire abandoned.
Rejoicing in the disciplines
We will train in buddhahood

We ourselves will not quickly
Proceed into buddhahood.
While even one sentient being Remains outside in extremes

The measureless buddha fields
Inconceivable by thought
May they be completely abandoned

Grasped from labeling names and Fragmented phenomena
Within the ten directions
Their karma of body and speech
Let us purify it all.

Karma of mind is also to be purified.
Unvirtuous actions are to be done.
In that way bodhicitta should be aroused

a) Receiving from a guru

If one does not have the power to do this oneself or one wants to receive it from a guru, as f precious
attitude:

This also arises from the spiritual friend.
As a rain of all desired falls from wish-fulfilling things,

From a jewel falls a rain of all that is needed or wished-for. So too spiritual friends support t of all good dharmas and the birth of bodhicitta. How? By possessing bodhicitta and being compe it, they are able to accept students. The Twenty Vows says:

Since they have the power they should accept them.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Competent in the meaning of the great vehicle,
Excellent in the discipline of bodhicitta,
Never is the spiritual friend to be let go
Even for the sake of preserving one's life itself.

The Lamp of the Path says: {{552.1}}

Receive the vow from a good guru
Competent in the liturgy of the vow

Who is a master dwelling in the vow.

Grasping its benefits and possessing compassion.
Such a one should be known to be an excellent guru.

b) Creating pure vessels

Such a one:

By a guru who is free from faults having all the virtues,
As for the fortunate student producing joy,
Seeing the faults of samsara and liberation's benefits,
The good dharmas of the provisional and ultimate vehicles,
And the limitless praises of bodhicitta are told.

To teach this again, seeing the faults of samsara and praising bodhicitta, the guru transforms the mind.

c) Arranging objects of worship and offerings {{552.4}}

Then of arousing bodhicitta

In a clean and pleasant place that is beautified by offerings,
Gather practice articles pleasing to gods and human beings.

Arrange offerings of lights, incense and so on, and gather implements pleasing to gods and

d) The host of buddhas and their emanations {{552.6}}

Then as symbolized by the representations in front, in front:

Visualize space as being filled with an ocean of buddhas
Together with their sons, like heaped up banks of clouds.

Visualize, as is taught in the Moon Lamp Sutra that they are summoned by the feast of incen joining the palms, saying the following three times:

We arouse the vast and excellent bodhicitta.

May all these beings without remainder be enlightened.
May there be no sentient beings who are not vessels.
Approach! Approach! Divine ones who possess the ten powers.
By the power of your timely kindness
May you, the three jewels, care for the welfare of beings.
With mental offerings and those arranged here,
We supplicate the victorious ones and their retinue.

By that from the buddha fields of the ten directions the three jewels approach. Visualize tha whole of space.

e) establishing our suitability to do this{{553.4}}

How suitability is established for what is visualized really approaching:

It is taught that this really happens, just as we visualize,
This is because of the unspoiled power of our minds,
And also the compassion of the wise and considerate masters.

The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Whatever victorious ones we may have visualized
Remain in front of us, and always grant their blessings.
They completely liberate us from the arising of faults.

By possessing the wisdom that knows the buddhas, we supplicate and intend to invite them kindness and compassion, they see us. By their accomplishing buddha activity, they really approach instant.
Why? Since from the viewpoint of the buddhas, sentient beings have no benefits, they do th producing benefit for us. If they come such a long way merely for the food offerings, the merit of bodhi suitable for the guests really to approach.

f) Inviting, and offering baths, and adornment

Visualize that they listen eagerly and closely and approach in the space of the sky:{{554.3}}

Then, with joined hands full of a double handful of flowers,
We invite them to be seated, and then we should offer to bathe them,
Also offering garments, ornaments, and the rest.

Produce the excellent visualization that all the three jewels are in the sky, along with their di from all the three-fold thousand worlds, whose own place is right here. Invite them to be seated on l jewel, sun, and moon seats. The Supreme Insight says:

Without exception you who are the lords of sentient beings,
Divine ones who irresistibly overpower the hordes of maras, Knowing all things without exception exactly as they are,
We supplicate the bhagavans and their retinues to come to this place.

When this is said, they approach and in a bath-house many divine youths and maidens was precious jewel-ornamented vases and with immeasurable bath-offerings. After these offerin with towels.
Visualizing that we offer them clothing, say these words:
[I think this is the same one in VYS, but I don't have that page here] 555.1

In very fragrant excellent bathing-houses
With brilliant floors that shine like spotless crystal,
Whose pleasant pillars are blazing with precious jewels,
Whose hangings and tapestries are brilliant with pearls,

Are the tathagatas and the buddha sons
With precious vases filled with perfumed water
And an abundance of good and pleasant songs
With joyful music we ask to wash their bodies.

Their external bodies are lovingly anointed
With matchless perfumes, pure and excellent-smelling.
Then for these Sages, with colors that are well-dyed,
We offer them fine garments of matchless fragrance,

Excellent clothing, fine and soft to touch.
And hundreds of excellent ornaments, for all these
The noble ones Samantabhadra and Manju
Avalokiteshvara and others

A fragrant odor fills the billion worlds
The supremely fragrant bodies of the sages.
Blaze with light as they are being anointed,
As if adorned in refined and polished gold.

Having said this, in their dwellings they take their individual seats.{{555.6}}

2) The seven-fold service,

a) The main topic of the seven-fold service,

There are seven sections.

i) prostration

has two sections.

a)) The main topic

First as for the limb of prostration:

Then we should join our palms just over the crowns of our heads,
Like a rising lotus beginning to bloom in some pleasant pond.
With melodious praises, emanating countless bodies,
We should prostrate to those great lords with devotion.

As for joining the palms like a lotus, the Great Liberation says:

Like a lotus that is just beginning to blossom,
We should join the palms of the hands at the crown of the head.
Prostrate to the buddhas of the ten directions.
With their immeasurable bodies like a mass of clouds

The Irresistible Action says:

With the power of aspiration for good action,
Holding all the victorious ones vividly in mind,
We bow with as many bodies as there are atoms in the universe,
We prostrate to all the victorious ones.

b) The benefits

As for the merits of this: {{556.4}}

The merits of this are as many as the atoms of the earth,
With all that are to be found in its many oceans and mountains
Until we have had the body of a universal monarch
As many times as there are atoms in Indra's world,
And finally attain the level of supreme peace,
We would find no such merits in the whole of the three worlds.

As to what the merits of prostration for the sake of arousing bodhicitta are equal to, there is n
in the three worlds. This is because, if we prostrate, trying to do only good, much merit is obtained of the Vinaya
says:

O monks, If you prostrate with faith to a stupa containing a hair of the Tathagata's head or a
the ripening of that, as many actions as Bhrama does without the arising of anger, as many as t reaching up to the golden ground of Indra, that may times we will experience the happiness universal monarch, and go among gods and human beings.

ii) Offering.

a)) The brief teaching

As for the second limb:

Material wealth and offerings emanated by mind
We shall offer them offerings unsurpassably vast.

b)) The extended explanation

has two sections concerning

real offerings
those emanated by mind.

1)) real wealth {{557.3}}
As for arranging real offerings:

Let there be flowers and incense, lamps and food and waters;
Canopies, tasseled umbrellas, and exquisite musical sounds Victory banners, yak tails, clay drums and so forth;
Body and wealth, and all possessions we cannot part with,
All these we offer to the gurus of sentient beings,
The highest teacher of beings, the Buddha jewel himself,
Along with his retinue of Buddha-sons.

As for offering an immeasurable array of these, the Bodhicharyavatara says: 2.15-17

To the lord of sages, the supreme recipient
We offer such pleasant flowers as the jasmine and lotus,
Utpala and so forth, all those of pleasant fragrance,
Pleasantly arranged in skillfully woven garlands.

The finest incense there is full of pleasant fragrance,
We offer billowing in fragrant offering clouds.
Sumptuous food accompanied with a variety of drinks
Nourishment fit for the gods we offer to these lords.

I offer rows of lamps, finely set with jewels,
Which have been arranged on golden lotus buds...

Also it says: 2.19

Precious parasols with handles made of gold.
Having edges that are pleasantly adorned,
Well-shaped and well-carried by attractive bearers,
We will always offer to the kings of sages.

As for the five sections concerning

2)) Offerings emanated by mind,

a))) The offering of compassion

As for those emanated by mind, the enjoyments of the thirty-three gods and so forth:

I offer pleasant palaces, decked with nets of jewels,
All that there may be in the worlds of gods and elsewhere,
Where cymbals, dances, songs, and praises fall like rain,
Adorned with hundreds of the finest ornaments.

Visualizing all the divine palaces in all the world realms, filled with songs of praise, and a rai flowers, we offer them to the holy objects of homage. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 2.18

Palaces of the gods with pleasant songs of praise,
With brilliant hangings embroidered in precious gems and pearls,
All these ornaments, as limitless as space,
I offer to those who have the nature of compassion.

b))) The five unowned offerings

1))) Moreover, in completely pure world realms:

I offer precious mountains, forests, and lotus ponds,
Rippled by the paddling feet of mother swans.
Here fragrant airs arise and medicinal incenses.
Their ravishing perfumes waft from wish-fulfilling trees,
That bow with myriad offerings of fruit and flowers.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 2.2-3

As many delightful fruits and flowers as there may be
And whatever kinds of health giving medicines,
As many precious jewels as there are in the world
And whatever refreshing clear and pleasant waters,

Likewise mountains made of precious substance Delightful groves and solitary peaceful places
Adorned with ornaments of exquisite flowering trees,
And trees whose branches are bending down with excellent fruit.

2))) Moreover:

Holding bees in a thousand undulating petals
like a bracelet made of white night lotuses, Opened by sun and moon beams in a cloudless sky
I offer lovely blue and other lotuses.

3))) And also:

Blissfully perfumed air, scented with sandalwood,
Caressing the flower buds with cool and fragrant breezes,
Caves and rock-faced mountains, meadows of heath-giving herbs,
I offer ponds that are full of fresh and cooling water.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: II.5

Lakes and ponds that are adorned by lotuses
With the fascinating music of the wild geese

Harvests that need no sowing nor effort of cultivation
And other ornaments for those that are worthy of worship.

4))) And also:

I offer the ornaments of this world of four continents,
The white moon of an autumn night, with its rabbit's image,
Garlanded by the constellations of its path,

Auspiciously free from adverse influence of the planets,
And the sun, the beauty of the bringer of day,
With its blazing necklace of a thousand rays.

5)) And also:

The billion worlds, from central mountain to outer circle,
The whole array, with all their wish-fulfilling wealth,
All of the buddha fields throughout the ten directions,
Whose number is as many as all the sands of the oceans,
Having received them into my mind, I offer them,
To all the lord buddha sages together with their sons.

3)) The offering of things that are owned:

Wish fulfilling...

Magical vases and wish-fulfilling trees and cows,
The eight auspicious substances and seven royal treasures.
The seven personal treasures, the silken boots and all the rest
I offer the holy patrons, the great compassionate ones.

As for these mental offerings that fill the whole of space, the seven royal treasures are the p wheel, jewel,
queen, minister, excellent steed, elephant, and general.
The eight auspicious substances are white mustard, durva grass, wood apple, vermilion, cu bezoar, a mirror, and a conch shell coiling to the right.
The seven personal treasures are silken boots, cushion, carriage, bedding, throne sword, ar used as a rug. All these are offered.

4)) offering the ocean of samadhi,

a)) As for the samadhi offering, by presenting good conduct and clouds of offerings and so forth, visualize that they are immensely great:

Filling the space of the sky by means of the mind of samadhi,
I offer the outer, inner, and secret offerings,
Great oceanic heaps of clouds of offerings.

b))

1)) From the three aspects, as for the first:

A blazing arbor like floating clouds of beautiful flowers,
Heaps of clouds of amrita, with medicinal herbs and incense,
Clouds of shining lamps, along with food and music,
I offer to the accompaniment of melodious praise.

As to how this is done, the Sutra of the Palm Tree of the Three Jewels says:

A canopy mostly made of various kinds of flowers
Emitting rays of light from the array of brilliant flowers This with its array of various kinds of f
We offer to the mahatmas and the buddha sons.

In the palms of our hands are offerings beyond thought
As we offer these to one of the Victorious ones,
We do the same to all of them without exception.
The miraculous emanations of the rishis are like that.

This is also like what is said in the Avatamsaka Sutra and also the Good Action says:

These oceans of inexhaustible praises
With all the ocean of the different sorts of song
Fully expresses the virtues of all the victorious ones.
Thus, we praise all the sugatas.

2)) The two extraordinary offerings

As for the inner and secret offerings, of mind:

Emanating various clouds of offering goddesses
Of grace and garlands, precious gems and songs and dances

Having limitless clouds of the practice offering Pleasing all the Victorious ones as well as their sons.

Visualize a host of the eight offering goddesses Vajra Form, Sound, Smell, Taste, and Touc Producer-of-appearance, and the goddess of Flowers, each with her respective offering, filli making offerings. That is the offering. This body which is held so dear is also offered as a servant o jewels. The Bodhicharyavatara says: II.5

Reaching to the limits of the vastness of space
All this, which is the property of nobody at all

Having been brought to mind, to these best of beings the sages
Together with their sons, if these have been well-offered,
May the holy patrons with their great compassion Accept these offerings and look upon us kindly.

I, possessing no merit, am utterly destitute.
I do not have any other wealth that I can offer.
As these lords intend the benefit of others,
For my benefit, may these powerful ones accept it.

To the victorious ones, the buddhas and their sons
In all may lives, I shall always offer all my bodies.
May I be accepted by these excellent spiritual warriors....

iii) Confessing evil deeds

Throughout our lives:

Let us confess the evil deeds that cause samsara.
Arising from the habitual patterns of karma and kleshas,
That we have been accustomed to from beginningless time.

Here from the four aspects of confessing evil deeds, first there are the six gates to what is to abandoned, evil deeds. These are body, speech, and mind; and passion, aggression, and ignorance. Towa

and mother, preceptor, master and so forth, from beginningless time until the present, we have r deeds,
having the nature of the ten unwholesome actions and so forth, and if these are renounced, subsequently we should give food and so forth. The Excellent Action says:

Whatever evil deeds we have committed
Due to passion, aggression, and ignorance,
Through body, speech, and likewise mind...

There are evil deeds done by oneself, which one has made another do, or which one has no one rejoices. Because evil deeds obscure the celestial realms and liberation, they produce the lower realms. The second method of application is the antidote four powers. There is 1) the powe remorse which greatly repents the bad action. When we having done something bad, by trying again power of conduct with good conduct as an antidote. Having accepted a vow, 3) the power of control doing evil deeds. As by having relied on the three jewels and bodhicitta evil deeds are exhausted, the of support.
The Sutra Teaching the Four Dharmas says:

Manjushri, if bodhisattvas possesses these four dharmas, all the evil deeds which have bee performed and accumulated will be overcome. What are these four? The conduct of compl repentance, the conduct of the antidote, the power of control, and the power of support.
As for the first, if we do an unwholesome action, we repent it greatly. Second, if we do an unwholesome action, we try very hard to do a wholesome one. Third, if we genuinely receiv we attain control over not doing evil deeds. Fourth, we go to refuge with the Buddha, Dharm Sangha, and do not give up bodhicitta.

Third, within the way of application there are the preliminaries, the main topic, and what follo preparation we should think of the immeasurable buddhas and bodhisattvas and go to them the main topic, we should remember all our evil deeds and by confessing and repenting of them, all th oneself and others, are visualized floating blackly above one's tongue. By confessing them, from betwe buddhas and bodhisattvas light rays arise. Visualize that they are immediately purified. Then, after many have arisen, visualize that all evil deeds are purified and the body becomes like crystal. As for the words Bodhicharyavatara says:

II.27

Dwelling in all the quarters of the universe,
Complete and perfect buddhas and the bodhisattvas,
You who are possessors of the great compassion,
To you I join my palms and make this supplication.

Here within samsara, from beginningless time
Within this life, and also in may other lives
Though I did not seek to do so, I have done evil deeds
Or though I did not do them, I had them done by others.

Confused by ignorance, I was overcome;
And therefore I rejoiced in all these evil deeds;
But now that I have seen they were pain-producing errors,
Sincerely I confess them to the protecting lords.

By me to the three jewels, the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha,
To my father and mother, to the guru, and others
Because of having the kleshas, I have done great harm,
By actions of body and speech, and also in my mind.

By a multitude of wrong-doings I have engendered faults
The evil deeds which I as an evil-doer have done
And which I could not keep from doing in spite of myself,
I confess them openly to the guides of the world.

After that, the essence of whatever evil deeds that have been recognized is purified by bein meditative equanimity like space. The Sutra of the Blossoming in the Ten Directions says:

Whoever wants to repent and purify Should be straightforward and see things as they are.
Those who are true will therefore view things truly.

Those who see things truly will be free.
That is supreme repentance and purification.

Faults of evil deeds are perceived by the master. Contemplating the master, prostration and done.
Hanging the upper robe over one shoulder, say. "We supplicate that evil deeds may be aban supplication, take refuge and arouse bodhicitta. Then, having mentally visualized our evil de tongue, we say,

"Whatever evil deeds we have done to the three jewels, to the master, our parents, or other beings, by the power of ignorance, we repent and purify all these."

By thinking this forcefully, the bodhicitta in the five eyes of all the buddhas and bodhisattvas
the ten directions will completely grasp us. For the purpose of attaining the enlightenment of the bu times,

"We confess these. From now on we shall try to control ourselves."

After that, enter for a little while into emptiness meditation. Then, from the heart centers of t representations, white light rays arise. Visualize that body, speech, and mind are purified.
Then in the sight of the master, request the vow. Afterwards the students give thanks, Here
the liturgy with "I," for oneself. Later "we" is said in practicing with others.

Fourth, as for producing knowledge of being able to train in these, the Sutra of the Great Lio Requested
by Manjushri says:

The karma of evil deeds which we have done because of unawareness should be confessed by recognizing and confessing our faults, we shall not remain associated with that karma.

The Revelation of Instructions says:

Those who produce bad karma through evil deeds,
By virtue can put an end to that bad karma,

Like the sun appearing, rising out of clouds,

The Sutra of the Treasury of Buddhahood says:

Even those who have murdered their parents or a buddha, By meditating on emptiness are liberated.

The Revelation of Instructions says:

Those who have done intolerable deeds,
Those who are blocked by having disparaged me,
By fully confessing and controlling themselves
By this will be fundamentally released.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Whoever was careless, then has become careful
Will be as beautiful as the cloudless moon,
And as happy as Angulimala
Was made by attainment of the joy of seeing.

iv) rejoicing in virtue

As for the fourth limb:

May we always rejoice in the limitless stores of merit
That have been accumulated by sentient beings.

If we meditate with rejoicing on our sincere and natural wholesomeness, we will attain the ro equanimity, and the merit will be immeasurable. The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

To weigh the Mount Merus of the cubed thousand worlds
And total up the measure is logically possible.
But this cannot be done with the goodness of rejoicing.

Sincerely rejoice like that, and say these words about the arising of good conduct:

All the merits of beings in the ten directions
Once- and non-returners, and pratyekabuddhas,
The buddha sons as well as all the victorious ones
As many as they may be, we rejoice in them.

v) Urging to turn the wheel of Dharma

As for the fifth limb:

So that all beings without remainder may cross over
We ask that the unsurpassable wheel of Dharma be turned.

The Buddha Bhagavat, after becoming enlightened, did not teach the Dharma until Bhrama supplicated him. Similarly, visualizing that we are in the presence of the gurus, we supplicat

All those who are the lights of the worlds of the ten directions,
Who have unobstructedly gained enlightenment and awakening,
We urge those protectors for the benefit of all beings
To turn the unsurpassable wheel of the Dharma

By that obscurations of abandoning Dharma are cleared away. From then on, from generati being will always inseparably hold the holy Dharma.

vi) Requesting not to pass into nirvana

As for the sixth limb:

From now until the ocean of samsara is emptied
We supplicate the buddhas and the buddha sons
Always to remain, not passing into nirvana.

Just as formerly our teacher supplicated the spiritual friend Tsanda not to pass into nirvana,
buddha
bhagavats as dwell in the world and guru spiritual friends who in their last morning intend to nirvana, we supplicate to remain until samsara is emptied:

The teachers who intend to pass into nirvana
We request you with palms joined
To remain for as many kalpas as there are atoms in the universe
For the peace and welfare of beings.

By that evil deeds that bring about short life, untimely death, and other dangers to life are pu immeasurable life is established.

vii) Dedicating the merit to enlightenment

As for the seventh limb:

By this merit may we, as well as all sentient beings,
One and all without exception become enlightened.

We dedicate it so that the virtuous roots of ourselves and others may have the goal of comp
enlightenment,
and so that that transformation may be the cause of others arousing bodhicitta:

By prostrating, offering, confessing,
Rejoicing, requesting to teach, and asking to remain,
Whatever trifle of virtue we have accumulated,
We dedicate for the sake of enlightenment.

As for the cause of dedication, we are connected with all of the virtue of ourselves and other
the three times. The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

All the virtue as that sentient beings may have
That was and will be, and now is being produced,
The purity of all the goodness there is,
All that goodness is in each of us.

Dedicating the merit of this should be done only by buddhas. The Middle Length Prajñapara Subhuti, these virtuous roots, are to be dedicated only by the buddhas. They are not to be dedicated by shravakas, pratyekabuddhas, and those on other levels.

The purpose is so that all sentient beings may attain enlightenment. The same text says:

It is dedicated for the sake of all sentient beings, and not merely for one's own complete attainment. This is because, by so doing, one would fall to the level of the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas.

All dharmas are non-existent yet apparent, like dreams and illusions. In dedicating merit, we that merit too is like a dream or illusion. The same text says:

Subhuti, all dharma are like a dream, like an illusion. Merit too should be dedicated as being completely like a dream, like an illusion.

The Sutra Requested by Bhadra says:

Whoever does not perceive a gift that is given
As being a gift, or being given by anyone,
By this same equality of giving,
May goodness become complete and be perfected.

If, on the contrary, through conception or attachment, one thinks of the virtuous roots as rea existing,
that is not good. The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

Just like eating good food that is mixed with poison
It is taught that the whiteness of dharma is overcome
By being mixed with discursive thoughts and conception.

Also it says there:

Why so? When there are no characteristics, there can be dedication to enlightenment. But when there are characteristics, there can be no dedication to enlightenment.

Therefore, we should be without conception or attachment. The Abhisamayalankara says:

When this has the aspect of being without characteristics,
Then it has the characteristic of being right.

As for the essence of dedication, by directing the virtuous roots to enlightenment, the mind is and its power is bound by these particular words.

The Display of Qualities of the Field of Manjushri says:

All dharmas, having been conditioned by these,
Are consecrated by the dedicated roots.
Whoever puts forth such an aspiration,
Such a one will surely establish suchness

As for the difference between dedication and aspiration, words and vows of aspiration after t wholesome causes have been dedicated, are dedications. Wishes which are merely wholes aspirations.

Moreover, dedication and the power of the words transform the aspiration of the giver into e
so forth. What teachers of today say is said from a viewpoint without certain knowledge. More is personal testimony, the guru and the Sangha, if they follow those words, accord with establishing me
When the words are taught to be truly established up to the first bhumi, they do not follow properly. Vi as witnesses of our establishing dedication in the sky in front, buddhas and bodhisattvas are heaped up like Becoming as kind as the Victorious Ones in former lives, when they gave their own flesh and blood to evil has been taught:

By this merit may all attain omniscience.
May it defeat the enemy wrong-doing.
From the stormy waves of birth, old-age, sickness, and death,
From the ocean of samsara may we free all beings.

Some say that after this we should expand into empty space, but this is completely improper
but isn't what they have done conceptionless? Phenomena appear without intellectual understa a dream.

The one who collects it is like a dream. The practitioner is also like a dream. Though non-a three spheres
as truly existing is called objectlessness, empty meditation is nihilism without any merit at a understand
this to be a bad tradition and abandon it.
In general, whatever merit is produced, the preliminary preparation of excellent bodhicitta h accomplished; the main basis, excellent prajña without conception or characteristics, has be
and the conclusion, the dream-like dedication has been accomplished. Connection with these three called "merit in accord with liberation." There is no other cause of the path of buddhahood than this. If this accomplished, "that which is in accord with merit," in the sense of accompanying the fruition of particular merits, known as being exhaustible.

b) How one's being is purified by this

As for the purpose of the aforementioned seven limbs, for example:

Just as, in a piece of cloth that is cleansed by washing,
The colors with which it is dyed shine through in clarity,
Within the mind that is trained by these preliminaries, Supreme and actual mind will shine through in one's being.

If defilements hinder the arising of genuine mind, it will not arise. If these hindrances are pu will arise.
Just so, a filthy cloth that is no longer colored needs laundering is to make its colors be as t

c) How those that have this foundation are immeasurable

Those who produce the seven limbs:

And so the limitless fruit of this meritorious practice
Encompasses the whole of space like dharmadhatu.

The Sutra Requested by Glorious Secret says:

Whoever, having visualized the buddhas
Of the ten directions and three times,
Joins the palms, prostrating and offering Rejoicing in merit, confessing evil deeds,
Urging to teach, and asking to remain,
As for the heap of merits of doing this,
It always arises filling the whole of space.

b. the actual arousing of bodhicitta
{{574.3}}
Now as for the actual main ritual, after doing the preliminaries:

Therefore, after having three times gone for refuge
To the Buddha and Dharma, and to the excellent Sangha, Supplicate the lords and their sons to consider us.

Just as the former buddhas together with their sons
Dwelled in the practice of arousing bodhicitta.
So from now on, in order to benefit sentient beings
May I dwell in the practice of arousing bodhicitta.
So that those who have not crossed over may cross over,
So that those who have not been liberated may be liberated,
So that those who are not released may be released.
May we establish all sentient beings within nirvana.

And also:

From this time on, taking this name which has been given to me, I so and so, until attaining t enlightenment, go for refuge to the buddha bhagavats, the supreme ones among those who supreme
ones among those who are without desire.
To the holy Dharma, the supreme ones of collections, and to the Sangha of those who are n

they are noble ones, to those three and to all the buddhas dwelling in the ten directions I sup supplicate the great bodhisattvas dwelling on the ten bhumis. I supplicate the vajra-holder gurus. Just as forme bhagavats and bodhisattva-mahasattvas aroused the mind of great enlightenment, so I, [the name that was

that sentient beings who have not crossed over may cross over, and those who have not been li liberated, and those who have not been released may be released, and those who have not gone complete go beyond suffering, from this time on until reaching the essence of enlightenment, arouse the enlightenment.
(Say that three times)

Also, as it is said in the Bodhicharyavatara, after one has previously done the supplication to objects of supplication [as above] : 3.23-4

Just as formerly the all sugatas
Aroused the wish for supreme enlightenment,
And, having done so, dwelled upon the bhumis
Of the training of a bodhisattva

So, for the liberation of all beings,
I shall arouse this wish for enlightenment,
And I shall train successively in the bhumis
Of this training, just as they have done.

Say that three times.

c. Afterwards, as for the short teaching of exertion in the two bodhicittas,

Now that this sequence of stages of bodhicitta has been established, guard the learning and its natural benefits. As for the ritual:

Therefore, let us try to arouse these two bodhicittas,
Recite the liturgy three times every day and night.

Cultivating bodhicitta, supplicating, and so forth have many purposes.

4. The purpose of the three recitations of that ritual

The first arouses the bodhicitta of aspiration
The second arouses the bodhicitta of entering.
By the third these two become stable and are purified.

The Ocean Cloud says:

By the first, second, and third recitations, aspiring, entering, and both are made stable and excellent.

Aspiring and entering have a single essence and are not different things. Though in the ritu joined as if they were different and three different characteristics arise from the three recitations, they different in essence.
This is because their nature is a single mental substance, a single time, and a single action.
Bodhisattvabhumi says:

Since these two, aspiring and entering, are inseparable in nature, they are a unity in produci benefit for others. It should be known that they are not different in nature.

5. as for meditation on joy {{577.3}}

Now that we have aroused bodhicitta:

Now we are the remedy for sentient beings.
We have a bodhisattva name as the Buddha's child.
Within samsara we fearlessly benefit sentient beings.
We are always concerned with their benefit alone.
Thus there is a meaning to samsaric human life.

From the instant bodhicitta is aroused, it is held. Those who have this mind unimpaired are samsaric world as bodhisattvas. If we do not impair the virtue of our own family, but increas meditate in immeasurable joy. Directly or indirectly, we benefit sentient beings. If we cannot, still we as so. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 3.25

Thus by those who are intelligent,

Having aroused this excellent bodhicitta,
Having entered into and expanded it,
Mind will be ennobled and uplifted.

Today I have the fruition of my life,
I have gained the meaning of human existence,
I am born into the family of the Buddha
I have become a child of the Buddha.

Whatever I may do from this time on,
I will try to act in accord with my family.
I will try to act so as not to trouble
This family which is so faultless and noble.

Like a blind man finding a precious jewel
In a heap of filth and discarded rubbish,
Just like that, and seemingly by chance,
Bodhicitta has been born in me.

How many terms are there for bodhisattvas? There are sixteen. The Mahayanasutralankar

They are known as bodhisattva, and mahasattva,
Wise ones, and the excellent luminous ones,
The buddha sons, the ground of victorious ones.
Buddha producers, or the buddha sprouts,
Skillful ones, and excellent noble ones,
Ship-captain guides, and the supremely renowned,
Compassionate ones, and those who have great merit,
Noble lords, and possessors of the Dharma.

These words are said to spread the benefit of bodhicitta to those who have not yet aroused enlightenment, These words are said to spread the benefit of bodhicitta. The forty-fourth Ch
Gandavyuha
Sutra tells how Sudhana, after Manjushri aroused in him the wish for enlightenment, went e
to seek this learning. At the bank of the southern ocean, in a tower called "having an essence ornar Vairochana"
surrounded by a retinue of many hundreds of thousands of bodhisattvas, Maitreya was teac

Sudhana
saw him from a distance of five hundred pagtse. He was glad and rejoiced, and did ecstatic Having seen him, Maitreya extended his right hand, and placed it on Sudhana's head. To the retinue he expressed Sudhana's praises:

Look now, how with thoughts that are completely pure
This Sudhana, who is born of stable, enduring riches,
Seeking the practice of supreme enlightenment,
This knowing and capable one has come before me now.

Also it says there:

Welcome, you who are kind as well as compassionate.
Welcome to the vast mandala of Maitreya
Welcome to that which viewed, completely pacifies,
And which is not exhausting at the time of practice.

This and so forth was taught. Sudhana joined his palms and requested. "Noble one, if I trul unsurpassable enlightenment, please teach how I shall earnestly seek the practice of a bodl
The answer was, "O son of noble family, You have been completely accepted by the spiritua Why so?
Son of noble family, bodhicitta is like the seed of all buddha dharmas. It is like the growing f white dharmas of all beings. From the essence and benefit of that up to the examples, Sudhana having prope
these benefits and immeasurable others.

What is taught here is extensively presented in the sutra.

6. the three aspects that are always to be trained in to take advantage of the opportunity.

a. The brief teaching

After arousing bodhicitta, there should be the stage of serious training in it. This is how to ta advantage of the opportunity.

Having germinated these seedlings of the two bodhicittas
Within the good soil that is the mind of sanity,
Try hard to keep them and increase their purity.

By arousing the luminous mind of bodhicitta repeatedly, things become purer. As for maras which we have not able to cut. The Sutra of the Ten Dharmas says:

The precious jewel by nature
Is a source of blazing light.
If we accept and reject,
That beauty is torn in two.

So even having the gotra
Realization of bodhicitta
Must be free of dualistic extremes
So that maras do not arise.

After the sprout of this attitude has arisen, grasp it without deterioration. Purify defilements only in means of increasing virtue. These are established chiefly by the practice of guarding the su
Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.18

Thus as for this attitude of bodhicitta
I should hold to it and try to guard it well.
Aside from this practice of guarding the mind of enlightenment
What is the use of the many other practices?

Also it says there: 5.1

Those who have the wish to guard this discipline
Should keep and guard the mind, using their fullest attention.
If we have not trained in the discipline of mind,
We shall not be able to guard and keep that discipline.

By letting the elephant of mind go free,
It will produce the harm of the unremitting hell.
But in this way a mad elephant, who is unrestrained,

Will not do such harm as an uncontrolled mind can do.

If the elephant of mind is truly tied,
On all sides by the rope of constant mindfulness,
We shall be in a state that is without all fear
And everything virtuous will come into our hands.

b. The extensive explanation of exchanging self and other and so forth,

Here is the extensive explanation of how is it grasped, purified, and cultivated:

I shall take in all the suffering of sentient beings.
May my happiness become that of these beings.
May we never be separate until they are enlightened.
Let us practice such sending and taking in our thoughts.

I shall meditate on the four immeasurables,
Which are cultivated in the case of aspiration.
Abandoning whatever does not accord with this,

Thereby let us guard the mind of bodhicitta.
That which is cultivated in the case of entering,
Is said to be the practice of the six paramitas.
Try to abandon whatever does not accord with this,

Resting in the nature of aspiring and entering is said to be grasping the mind of enlightenme what does not accord with this is abandoned, our effort becomes purified.
Cultivating the exchange of our own happiness with the suffering of others is called "cultivati bodhicitta." Thus, we can cultivate a great deal joy and happiness, and while we always hav we ourselves bear the burden of sentient beings, and equalize self and other. That self and oth exchanged is the collective instruction of the sutras. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Without discouragement I should gather the supports
And making a great effort, I should master myself,

Seeing that there is equality of oneself and other,
I should therefore make an exchange of self and other.

Here as the first topic, when the immensity of the task of benefiting sentient beings and the i realizing enlightenment is heard, without discouragement, thinking, "How could I do that?" c do so. This is the fundamental point. Moreover, if lower sentient beings attain the human body, if I from effort, they will be established in enlightenment. If these lower ones having looked at the teachings of a enlightenment, think that it is difficult, the Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.17

If I say, "how shall I be enlightened," Discouraged, I will not accomplish it.
That is the reason why the tathagata,
The one who teaches truly, taught this truth.

Gnats and flies on meat and honey bees
Likewise mosquitoes and other bugs and worms
Even these by great enough force of effort,
Will gain enlightenment so difficult to attain.

One Like me with the gotra and human birth Recognizing benefit and harm,
If I keep to bodhisattva conduct
Why should I not attain enlightenment?

The Sutra Requested by Laksang says:

Laksang, Moreover, a bodhisattva should train in this way, thinking, "If even those who have become lions, tigers, dogs, jackals, vultures, cranes, crows, owls, worms, bees, and carrion attain enlightenment, those like me who have become human beings, because of that life, w we not make an equal effort at attaining enlightenment Laksang, moreover a bodhisattva should train in this way, thinking, "If a hundred people or a thousand have realized and attained buddhahood, why should I too not realize and attain it?

The Display of the Basket Sutra says:

Then the power of Avalokiteshvara arose from Singha Ling. In the country Destructible Rea great city "Place of Excrement and Urine," from a place where there were a hundred thousa insects, at that time, an emanation arisen from the power of Avalokiteshvara arose in form o of the insects, saying, "I prostrate to the Buddha.
These insects afterwards remembered "I prostrate to the Buddha." Having conquered the twenty-peaked mountain of the view of a transitory collection, all these became a bodhisattv Fragrant Perfume, who was born in the world-realm of Sukhavati.

There are two ways in which we should make an effort to liberate the limitless sentient being
our fathers and mothers. Even if we have made no effort at all in regard to the suffering of dwel if we accomplish enlightenment, it all will be conquered. If we have not previously accomplished samsara. Since samsara will occur, we should make an effort to do that. If one will not bear any suffering of others, since in the womb one will certainly bear limitless suffering, which is hard to bear, one should be wit discouragement. As for this,
The Precious Mala says:

For the benefit of measureless sentient beings,
Desiring a measureless enlightenment,
One produces a merit without measure.
From this state of immeasurable enlightenment
By the accumulation of the four immeasurables
We shall not be obstructed and kept off far away.

If we do this, there will be obtained
What is known as "Limitless merit" And "limitless wisdom. "
By those the fearful sufferings of body and mind
Will be quickly cleared away and cease to be.

By one's having a body in the lower realms due to evil deeds,
Sufferings of hunger, thirst, and so forth will arise.
Not made by evil deeds, but by merit,
There is no other samsara.

As for the mental suffering due to stupidity,
Arising from craving, fear, desire, and so forth,
By the wisdom that does not depend on them,
These and that suffering will quickly be abandoned.

By such suffering of body and of mind,
If we thus have been untouched and completely unwounded,
If we have reached the end of our time within the world,
How will we be led by the world, so that we are sad?

If suffering were going to be short,
Why speak of its being long and hard to bear?
If we were happy because there was no suffering,
How could we fall into harm for a limitless time?

Here, if we did not have any bodily suffering,
How could there be any mental suffering?
As for this because of compassion in the world,
We remain here, staying for a very long time.

Thinking in this way, we will not be discouraged,
Having the attitude that buddhahood is far off.
Having exhausted defilement, for the sake of virtue,
One should always strive to attain that blessed state.

If one thinks, "how could one bear to remain thus for a long time within samsara for the bene beings?" that is not how it is. Since bodhicitta exists, one is happy, and since in that sense suffering, one can bear it. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.28ff

By merit the body will be in a state of happiness.
And when because of knowledge the mind has become happy,
Though they remain in samsara for the benefit of beings,
How will those who have compassion then be sad?

As for this, because of the power of bodhicitta,
Having exhausts the power of former evil deeds,
One will therefore gather up an ocean of merit.

This is explained as better than the shravakas.

Therefore, mounted on the horse of bodhicitta,
Which clears away all weariness and desperation,
One will go from happiness to happiness.
Knowing bodhicitta, who could then despair?

All sentient beings have the nature of illusion, whose painting-like phenomena and space ap primordial unborn. Therefore, in truth there is nothing that needs to be done, and we should Spiritual Letter
says:

As for mind it should be understood
Like paintings done with water, earth, and stone.

The Edifice of the Three Jewels says: 586.5

For example, though the space of the sky has been there for more kalpas than there are gra of sand in the river Ganges, it has no sadness or depression. The space of the sky is not bo destroyed, burned up, or separated.
Why so? Because the space of the sky is not a real thing. Similarly, for the bodhisattva who knows that all dharmas are not real things, the attitudes of sadness, weariness, and depress be produced.

We need not be concerned with establishing enlightenment and performing benefits for othe also are thought to arise according to the oral instructions of the mahayana. We should esta varieties of benefit. What are these? All sentient beings are equal in having been our fathers and mothe again, are equal.
As at that time by their kindness there was only benefit, one should return their kindness an sentient
beings. The Noble Sutra of Complete Nirvana says:

This great earth has been made merely as a lump the size of a pea. If one counts the single sentient beings who have not been my father and mother, though this great earth is exhaust count of a even single sentient being who has not been my father and mother will not be exh

Moreover, if we count the times we have been benefited by sentient beings, it is a greater bu than we can keep in mind, so that we shall be overcome. To clear it away, we should also benefi
The Lung
Namje says:

Plains and mountains and oceans are not my burden;
My great burden is unacknowledged deeds.

Moreover if sentient beings are happy and well-off, though indeed we do not need to benefit
us
they formerly did evil deeds, if they are oppressed by the sufferings of samsara and the lowe order to clear away the faults done by us, we should benefit sentient beings.
Moreover, sentient beings as one wish happiness and do not want suffering, but, because th
this is obscured for them, they are tormented by suffering alone, and in order to eliminate this, w sentient
beings.
Moreover, though immeasurable sentient beings were led by the former buddhas of the past uplifted and those buddhas were not able to tame them. If these are not led by us, the gotra family will be broken. Sentient beings will be without refuge or protector, and so we should benefit them.
Moreover, by the force of I and ego-grasping, they are blown about by the wind of the klesha
have gone wrong, if I speak an aspiration that I will make an effort in order to tame them, what be done for others?
Moreover, though all dharmas are empty and egoless, sentient beings who do not realize th dream, should inspire our compassion. If they are not guided, since compassion in particula also we should do benefit.

Moreover, though we wander here in samsara, sentient beings giving rise to kleshas of rese arise. Now, even if the object of establishing personal enlightenment becomes more attracti beings, still I should benefit them. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Many who have pleased these sentient beings
Have reached perfection by their doing so.

Moreover, by having really performed benefit for others, because the power of benefit for on established,
also one should benefit them. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

What truly establishes self-benefit is also this itself.

Moreover, if one performs benefit for sentient beings, since the buddhas will be pleased, als perform benefits. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 6.119

Unless sentient beings are made to rejoice,
There is no other way to please the victorious ones.

Moreover, though bodhicitta may be aroused, if benefit is not established for sentient beings
into the state of shravakas and pratyekabuddhas, and therefore we should benefit sentient beings.
In brief, while even one sentient has not been liberated from samsara, until then remaining i should do benefits. Day and night without sadness and weariness, if I try for ten hundred m know that within the being of one sentient being happy mind will arise for an instant, I should try with g mind. The Mahayanasutralankara says: 590.4

The buddha sons rely on making supreme exertion.
If they completely ripen the host of sentient beings,
In order that one other mind may be rendered happy,
They will be happy to work for ten thousand million kalpas.

That is how benefits should be performed. The supporting troops are of four kinds. The Bo
says: 7.31

Devotion , steadiness, joy, and release.

First, the troops of devotion. Since one is devoted to the beneficial qualities of bodhicitta, ha established and unhappiness is rejected. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.31

Devotion is produced by fear of suffering
And thinking of its beneficial qualities.

Second, the troops of steadiness. If I do not arouse bodhicitta, I am just giving up. Having a means of sending it forth, even thinking, "this will be bad," we should persist and not lose it. The
Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.46

Then with the observance of Vajra Victory Banner Undertaking that, one should meditate with pride.

First examine the situation's possibilities
  Seeing whether it should be undertaken or not.
It is better not to undertake it at all
Than that having once begun, we should then turn back.
{{591.2}}
Third, the troops of renouncing. Sometimes not harming sentient beings depends on the mi
discipline
as explained being given to equanimity. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.42

As for relating to fear and celebrations and so on,
If one cannot do it, then one should just relax.

Fourth, the troops of joy. By enjoying and rejoicing in benefiting sentient beings and practici discipline,
one enters into it. The Letter to Students says:

Whoever for the benefit of others cuts off their heads
Is like a lotus, the rejoicing eye opening treasury of vision For its own benefit by a white para
The divine level too should be thought of like a sharp sword with whetted edge.

The wholesome is what we should devote ourselves to or since it is the cause of the celestia liberation, it should always be done. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

In spacious fragrant coolness in the heart of a lotus
Made brilliant by the food of the teachings of the Conqueror

My excellent body rising as the Sage's light makes it blossom, Remaining before the tathagata, By virtue becoming his.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.42

Wherever and they go, there by the merit of that They will be presented with the worship of fruition.

In terms of the viewpoint of sentient beings, since of all sentient beings none has not been o
mother, and relative, we should benefit them. By becoming a field establishing enlightenment, from benefit them; and since buddhahood produces joy also from that viewpoint we establish benefit. Th says:
6.113

Sentient beings as well as the Victorious Ones
Likewise make buddhadharma be established in us.
So why do we not have such respect for sentient beings
In the way we do for the Victorious Ones.

Also it says there: 6.125 {{592.4}}

In order to bring rejoicing to the tathagatas,
From now on, with true comportment serve the world.

Meditating on self and other as equal explains what is done in the ordinary equality meditati extraordinary, first producing the perception of one like an enemy as one's mother, see it as for oneself
and if ultimate good is established, rejoicing, since these are without distinction, meditate thi may I establish this person's benefit?" From one sentient being, one should meditate up to those as limitles
As for exchanging self and other, from the training on that, whatever happiness and merit or one completely gives forth thinking, "by that merit incidentally may they attain the higher realms a buddhahood,
may I be covered with the suffering of their bad karma exchanged for that, and having receiv ripening within my being, for their benefit, may I experience many sufferings in the lower realms."

From the depths of the bone core of the heart, having trained the mind in such an exchange being, one should go on to them all. By that, because of beginningless very powerful evil de experience the lower realms and so forth, much karma will be exhausted, and much happiness will be attain Bodhicharyavatara
says: 8.131 593.5

My happiness and the sufferings of others,
If these situations are not truly exchanged,
The state of buddhahood will not be reached,
And in samsara I will have no joy.

Here some say: "All dharmas are similarly conditions of this. At the summit of aspiration the consecrated."
If one says that, it is not proper. This is because oneself would always be falling into samsa something unmeritorious has been done, since one is aiming at enlightenment, if one so dedicates it, it meritorious, since there is dedication to this special aim. Though in so saying words of Mara have indeed bee nevertheless such an answer should be explained. If for the sake of others one aspires to later remaining withi so wandering
in samsara, then it follows that even Manjushri is wandering there. His prayer says:

For the sake of every sentient being May I later remain within extremes.

and that would send him there. Even if one exchanges self and other, there is no real excha
beings.
Even when there is, it is completely exhausted, since there would be immense merit. Since exchanged sentient beings and oneself are both one's own mind, the suffering of others will not ripen wi
own happiness will not go forth to others. Thus, it is taught that no karmic effect is transferred. T Actions says:
{{594.5}}

What is done by oneself is not transferred to others.
And the karma of others likewise is not ours.
If the share collected by one were to be effective
Sentient beings would be obscured by darkness.

As for evil deeds, since they are not virtuous roots, it is not suitable to dedicate them as a ca than the lower realms and suffering, they are not the cause of anything else.

The Lung says: {{595.1}}

These virtuous roots are dedicated to unsurpassable enlightenment.

From that, it is therefore taught that the roots of evil deeds are not dedicated to unsurpassab enlightenment.
Therefore, virtuous causes are what is dedicated by aspiration, and though this is done, uns not also dedicated, just as space is not dedicated to enlightenment. Therefore, do not think in such a this should not even be heard, what need to speak of proclaiming a view that accords with it? As purifying a will be explained below, they are not elaborated here.

c. How one should rely on mindfulness and awareness,

In this way, day and night:

Always mindful, ever-aware, and being careful,
I will abandon what is unwholesome, creating an ocean of virtue.

Thus by those three meanings, the chief of disciplines is guarding one's own mind from the a kleshas.
Moreover the mind should be guarded by mindfulness, awareness, and, carefulness. Here their beneficial qualities and disadvantages of their degeneration one will not be harmed, an one's own essence, should not be allowed to degenerate. Like the string of a tensed bow, its being jus important. Why so?
If mindfulness and awareness degenerate, the wholesome degenerates, and the non-whole instant.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.27 {{596.1}}

The bandits of non-awareness are following
After the degeneration of mindfulness;
Though merits have been fully accumulated,
As if they were snatched away by a thieves and robbers,
One will have to go to the lower realms.

As for the kleshas, this pack of thieves and robbers,
They are seeking their chance to get to us.
When they have found their chance, they ravish virtue.
Even lives of the higher realms are overcome.

Therefore we should keep hold of our mindfulness
Never letting it go to turn into somewhere else.
If it has gone, there will be harms of the lower realms.
Thinking of that keep a close track on mindfulness.

Mind should be guarded with completely pure awareness of discipline, its beneficial qualities disadvantages of its degeneration, the faults and virtues of samsara and nirvana, and so forth. For exampl generations of the world by being aware of many good and bad natures, put aside evil actions and entered into likewise into the Dharma. By being aware of all virtuous aspects day and night, they actually established their three gates they examined virtue and non-virtue as they arose, and counted the little pebbles of th aside non-virtue and entering into virtue, they guarded awareness. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.18

The situation of the body and mind
Ought to be examined over and over again.
Just doing this, to tell the situation briefly,
Is the definition of guarding one's awareness

Thus mindfulness and awareness are what is chiefly guarded. The same text says: 5.23

As for those of you who wish to guard the mind,
Guard your mindfulness and likewise your awareness
Even if in doing so you lose your life.
I thus join my palms in my beseeching you.

Also guard the mind by being careful. With self-control comes, there is self-respect in not pr
kleshas.
Having had to be ashamed before others, one is conscientious about guarding against non-have the essence of carefulness, and by that one guards against the kleshas.
Moreover, by being careful there is elimination of the kleshas and the virtuous activities of lib
The
Compendium of Abhidharma says:

What is carefulness? When having tried to live with non-passion, non-aggression, and non-ignorance, we meditate on virtuous dharmas, and guards the mind against all defiled dharm possess the karma that completes all the perfections and fully establishes them.

If carefulness exists, all goodness and virtue will be established. If it does not exist, they wil is also taught to be the root of all he dharmas of buddhahood.
The Spiritual Letter says:{{598..}}

Carefulness is the place of amrita. Without that care,
It is taught that one achieves the place of death.
Therefore, in order that virtuous dharmas may increase,
Always act devotedly with carefulness.

The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

Generosity, discipline, and likewise patience and so on,
As many virtuous dharmas as anyone may mention,
The root of all of these virtues is this carefulness.

The Sutra Requested by Jewel-Crown says:

What is carefulness? It is just that which establishes virtuous dharmas. By the carefulness the bodhisattvas, the essence of enlightenment is made beautiful. It is the root of the dharm enlightenment. It is the place of the dharmas that establish wisdom. The main support {{59 virtuous dharmas is individually grasped. Formerly heard dharmas do not go to waste. Dha should be gathered are gathered. Dharmas of obscuration are not gathered.

Thus if mindfulness, awareness, and carefulness are not accomplished, what we have forme degenerates. Though mere faith, hearing, and effort exist, they are covered with fallen mud they are impure, there is no liberation from samsara and the lower realms. The Bodhicharyavatara says:
{{598.e}}

For one who has a mind without awareness,
Hearing, contemplating, and meditating
Will be like water in a leaky vase.
They will not remain in memory.

Even in those who have heard any things,
Faith, and any genuine perserverence
Will be transgressed like falling in the mud
If there is the error of non-awareness.

On all occasions examine the mind, and whatever distractions there may be, if we have to e
what is on the side of virtue and accords with that, with its retinue, we sincerely devote ourselves proliferation, and that non-virtue should not increase. When the virtuous exists alone, dhyana and so forth will ent virtue, and produce equanimity without remainder. Whatever and wherever something is to be produce imperfections should not also be entered into. This is because they are hindrances to estab

Thus, at the time of generosity, even if there is supreme discipline, except for merely not tra
effort
in it is rested in equanimity, and we must put our effort into generosity. At such times, giving hindering by knowing how to distinguish higher and lower is important. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.42-4

Thus at the times of generosity,
Let discipline rest in equanimity.

Whatever is intended, act on that.
Do not think of anything other than that.
By always thinking of that very thing
It will in a little while be accomplished.

In that way all good will be produced.
Otherwise neither one will be accomplished.

The Tsanaka says:

If with the former unfinished, one practices another,
One will be exhausted and neither will be produced.
If we do not keep one foot set steadily,
Lifting the other will be a cause of falling down.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

For the sake of the small, do not lose the great.
Chiefly think of the benefit of others.

The Compendium of Instructions, Shantideva's commentary says:

A medicinal tree must always be kept alive. If it is alive, it will be associated with benefit for Just so, this body
should be kept and not given up, until one attains the bhumis of the noble ones. The Bodhic 5.87

Because of impure notions of compassion
The body should not be lightly given up.

In such cases, small virtue may be accomplished, but if former great virtue is lost, the lesser left behind. As the virtues of the paramitas are trained in and gathered they become progressiv exalted. As the higher are produced, the lower are made into equanimity. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

The paramitas of generosity and so forth
Are progressively more exalted than the last.

The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Though some person with a joyful mind
Gives generously for even a hundred years,
One who keeps pure discipline for a day
Is much nobler than that other person.

Guarding by knowing the proper occasion is important. Moreover, the details of daily Dharm details of eating food and so forth, and actions of conduct should be briefly told. First, on ari after remembering the three jewels and bodhicitta, if even in dreams we have done evil deeds, they should be c away, and if there was virtue, that alone should be rejoiced in. This is because both day and night the ha of mind are the same. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Shariputra, if one meditates daily on the perfection of prajña, it will increase. By meditating in dreams, it will also increase. This is because daytime and dream are without distinction.

Then with the previously taught liturgy take the vow of arousing bodhicitta. The aspects of c should not deteriorate at all, so that they will be enhanced and increased. Then whether or not we remembering the three jewels, offer one of the four parts. One is left to be given to those who may unexpecte pinch and so forth is offered as a torma. One part is eaten by ourselves. Also one part may be given to t one to the protectors, and one to ourselves. The leftovers are offered to bhutas who are able to receive Compendium of Action says:

Food should be divided in four parts.
The first is offered as pure food for the gods.
After that one to the guardian protectors.
Very large tormas are to be presented.

Remaining from one's personal food and drink
The leftovers are given to the bhutas.

According to what is taught in the vinaya of the holy Dharma, of three parts the first is offere three jewels, the second left for monks, brahmins or kshatriyas who may happen to come by, the t
At the time of eating, eat with the attitude that food is unclean, the attitude of sadness, and t that one is benefiting a city of the family of worms and that for a little while one should dwell in a great s to the essence, enlightenment. However, do not eat with any attitude that increases desire and greed.
Also of the four parts of the body, one is empty, two are food, and one is drink. The Eight As

Two parts are food that is eaten
One part is said to be drink
One part is of air and so forth.
Those complete the four parts.

Or also according to its arising from the basis of food, there are three parts, two of which are drink, and one of which is empty. If there is starvation, a host of worms will harm one, certain illnesses and one will not be able to undertake actions. If one is very full, in consequence many illnesses will arise, ar that there are the faults of samadhi becoming unworkable and so forth. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.85

One should eat no more than what is sufficient

That is how one should eat. Then the subsequently-impermanent mind establishes the dedi explained in the scriptures:

The patron king and
The host of other beings,
also living in cities
May they always gain happiness.

Then if one is going somewhere, looking ahead just a yoke's distance to examine the path fo one's mind will not be deceived. The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

Look for just a yoke's distance, and in going one's mind will not be confused. Also look with eyes cast down and if someone comes smiling say, "It i dangerous times
look in all directions. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

As for giving in to useless distraction,
We should never aimlessly look around.
Keeping my mind always true and resolute
We should always keep the eyes cast down.

However simply for the sake of comfort
Sometimes one should look to the directions.
If some should then appear before one's eyes.
One should look at them and bid them welcome.

To watch for dangers on the path and so on Look again and again to the four directions.
For comfort, having turned the head around,
One should look and check the path behind.

Having examined both before and behind,
One should proceed and either come or go.
Thus on all occasions one should act
by because of having knowledge of what should be done.

Then, sitting under trees and so forth, perform what is good, meditating, reading, and so fort if one wants to listen to the Dharma, one should see noble persons. Never speak haughtily and ro speak as is taught in the Moon Lamp

Before a great being like you, how could I not be confident. You have great prajña.

That and so forth is how one should speak. If someone wants to hear the Dharma, it is expl should examine whether they are a vessel. If great things are explained to those of small mind, the Dharma and go to the lower realms. The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

When they hear, those of small mind will abandon.
Having abandoned, they will be without refuge,
They will go to the unremitting Hell.

Likewise small things should not be told to great people. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.90

Those who are suitable vessels of the vastest Dharma
Should not be joined to teachings meant for lesser beings.

Explaining the Dharma to a woman alone without a companion is inimical to pure conduct, a the object of slander. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.89

Nor to a woman without some other person there.

The White Lotus says:

The wise, when at any time
They explain the Dharma to women,
Should not go alone.
They should not stay and joke.

Moreover the path of conduct should not be explained to those who do not respect it and so
Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.88

Do not explain the Dharma to those with no respect.
To those who wrap the head, like people who are sick
Who carry a sword or staff, or have a parasol
Or anyone who wears a hat upon the head.

Then in a spacious place ornamented with lion thrones and so forth, without personal desire veneration, and so forth, one explains the Dharma with an attitude of benefiting others. The
says:

In a clean and pleasant place, on a spacious seat,
Excellently arranged and carefully-spread,

Well painted with the finest excellent colors,
Well-dressed, wearing a good clean Dharma robe, Always without the least desire for these,

Eating and drinking any food and drink,
Not having a wish for one's clothes and for one's seat,
One's robe, and medicines for curing sickness,
Not receiving anything from one's retinue,

Skillful in respect to others, may I always Establish these sentient beings in buddhahood.
To benefit the world, may I think of the Dharma,
As the total requisite of my happiness.

That is how it should be done. Whatever sorts of persons one meets with and whatever the without disrespect smilingly give the teachings in pleasant speech. The Moon Lamp says:

Smiling like the waxing moon and gentle
To the older generation and the younger
One should always speak with sincerity.
And be without pride in everything that is done.

The pleasant conversation of the world
One should speak properly in a timely way.
A variety of distracting words of chatter
Because of fear one never ought to speak.

Pleasant speech and praise may be used when without loss for oneself they make the mind
The
Bodhicharyavatara says:

To all of those that we hear who may have spoken well
We should tell them so and say to them "well said!
If one sees persons performing meritorious actions, praising them creates supreme and excellent joy.

If they are hidden, good qualities should be spoken of.

And if they are spoken of, we should repeat that later.
If someone talks about our own good qualities,
Think that virtue in general is known and understood.

All undertakings are done so that we can be happy
This is rare for even those who have the price.
In view of that, let us be happy at finding joy
In any virtuous deeds that may be done by others.

Nothing will be lost by acting in this way,
And in the coming life we have great happiness.
But faults will make us here unhappy and miserable
And in the life to come we have great suffering.

When speaking we should be relevant and to the point
Keeping the meaning clear and speaking with pleasing speech.
We should have abandoned both passion and aggression
Speaking softly and only for a moderate time.

Then by this rejoicing, excellent ones are perceived as teachers, middling ones as companio ones as retinue, old ones as fathers and mothers, young ones as children. Those of the same age a brothers and so forth, and by that they are made devoted. The Sutra of the Ten Dharmas says:

By body, speech, and mind being separate from receiving evil topics perception is produced preceptor as teacher. Perception of the preceptor as master is produced. Behaving purely middle, and young generations, they are so perceived, and devoted reverence is produced.

Generations of Beings says:

Holy ones will never pamper their bodies.
The spiritual friend relies on a gentle manner.
If one is near them a particle of their virtues,
Even if one does not practice, is established.

Hidden transgressions and subtle improprieties should not be done. The same text says:

As for unseen evil deeds that may be done,
As with poisonous food, how will there be happiness?
That by the gods and the purified eyes of accomplished yogins
These will not be seen is quite impossible.

Thinking how the freedoms and favors are so difficult to obtain and how the arising of a budd
and so forth, be conscientious. The Sutra requested by Guarder of the Horizon says:

A buddha, a great sage who benefits the world
Only arises once in a thousand million kalpas,
Now that they have attained the holy freedoms and favors,
Those who want liberation should abandon unconscientiousness.

This body, to guard the Dharma, should be guarded from sickness and döns. Thinking of it reject its food, clothing, and so forth. We should not torture ourselves with useless mortifica ascetic practices.
The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.70

Even as a mere support of coming and going
The body should be thought of as being like a ship.
In order to establish benefits for beings,
The body must become a wish-fulfilling body.

The Four Hundred says:

Though this body indeed is seen as an enemy,
Properly regulated, it lives for quite a long time.
From that a large amount of merit can be attained.

Also it is impermanent and the mind that aspires to enlightenment should be produced. The Realization of the Seven Princesses says:

Samsaric bodily life is a dewdrop on the grass.
If one is long accustomed to not depending on it,
One will always attain the state of mahasukha.

Life is also guarded because of its bestowing wealth. For the sake of the great Dharmas of

bodhicitta
and so forth, life must be guarded without deprivation. The Sutra of Instructions to the King

By me, the bestower of wealth, the body, is guarded.
Bestowing wealth and the body, life is guarded.
Bestowing wealth and body, as well as life,
The Dharma especially is to be guarded.

The mind should be examined. By eliminating faults that are seen, the kleshas will not beco entrenched. The Request of Bhrama says:

If one completely knows the faults of mind,
The faults of mind will not be stabilized.
If mindfulness is good within the mind,
One will attain the place of faultless peace.

Moreover, a tooth stick, spit, excrement and so forth should be disposed of in a solitary plac frequented by people, where it will inconspicuous. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.91

Personal refuse such as tooth cleaning sticks and spit
Should not be thrown away where they will be visible.
It is vulgar for persons to urinate and so forth
In water or on good land that is used by other people.

The Vinaya also teaches that defiled things should not be thrown away in usable water and mealtimes, the Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.91

We should never eat with a mouth that is full of food, Noisily, or with talking, or with an open

Wherever we are, and particularly with the guru or among many people, indecorous bodily b lying, stretching the soles of one's feet forward, rubbing ones hands together, and so forth, s done. Be straightforward. Everything should be done gracefully. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.92-3

One should not stretch the soles of the feet toward other people,
And likewise not rub the hands together in their presence.

One should never travel lying in a bed
Nor be alone with women who are committed to others
Having seen and asked the conduct the world approves,
One should abandon anything that will be offensive.

Sloppy worship, laughing at the view, flirting, and all such unpacified aspects body, speech, above all be completely controlled and tamed. The Flower Garland of Vinaya says:

Songs, and dances, and jingling ornaments,
Any seeing and entering into them
As well as the evil of having directly transgressed,
Are causes of straying from the life of discipline.

So doing necessarily leaves one far from enlightenment. The Sutra Requested by the Guar
says:

Uncontrolled, and wild and arrogant;
Disrespectful and proud, with much desire;
With rigid kleshas and overcome by them,
Such people are far from supreme enlightenment.

As those who do not tame themselves cannot tame others, first we should make ourselves p
The Compendium of Limitless Good Qualities says:

Some, while they have not tamed themselves speak the words of noble enlightened beings.
Acting in contradiction to their own words, they cannot tame others. When we have realized placing all beings in our hearts, we should try a little to tame what is untamed in ourselves.

The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Those who have not crossed cannot bring others across.
Those who are not liberated cannot liberate others.
Those who are blind cannot show the path to others.
Those who are liberated can liberate other beings.

Those with eyes can show the path to those who are blind.

The Ten Dharmas says:

Just as I make an effort so that all sentient beings may cross over, make an effort so that all sentient beings may be liberated, make an effort so that all sentient beings may enter into pe gentleness; since by not taming, pacifying, and guarding myself, this will not be my lot, I sho pacified, tamed, and guarded.

Similarly, if by others benefit is received and harm arises for myself, let it be a cause of good enlightenment. Among all like one who endures sadness and weariness from others by prod mind or outcast-like {{612.2}} perception, become gentle, do what needs to be done, and remember be heedful and conscientious. Disparaging others and behavior because of desire and aggression sho dreams.
Daily, morning, noon, afternoon, and night, and again late at night, at midnight, and early in there should be threefold accumulation of prostrations, confession of evil deeds, and dedication of merit.
chanting the Three Accumulations, and confessing falling away from enlightenment. The Bodhicharyavatara sa

Three times in the day and also three at night
Chant The Sutra of the Three Accumulations.

Moreover in all actions and behavior one should spend one's time in virtue alone. The Maha
says:

As in the activities of the buddha sons
They formerly entered into the various realms of the senses,
Just so by words according with my family,
What they formerly did for beings I too shall do.

That is the idea. It is taught extensively in the Completely Pure Realization of the Flower Ga
Buddhahood:

When bodhisattvas enter into a house, they arouse bodhicitta, thinking "May all sentient beings attain the city of liberation." Similarly, When they go to sleep, they attain the dharma the buddhas. When they dream, they realize that all dharmas are like a dream. When they awaken from ignorance. When they arise, they attain the body of buddhahood. When they fire, the fuel of the kleshas is burned. When it blazes, the fire of wisdom blazes. When they attain the amrita of wisdom. When they eat food, they attain the food of samadhi. When the they are liberated from the city of samsara. When they descend stairs, they are entering sa benefit sentient beings. When they open a door, they open the gates to the city of liberation they shut a door, they shut the gates of the lower realms. When they set out on a path they path of the noble ones. When they go upwards, they bring all sentient beings into the happi celestial realms. When they descend, they cut the continuity of the three lower realms. Wh meet sentient beings, they meet buddhas. When they step forward, they are going to do be sentient beings. When they lift sentient beings, they are bringing them out of samsara. If t persons who possesses ornaments, they will attain the major and minor marks. If they see without ornaments, they will possess the qualities of purity. If they see a full vessel, it is fille buddha qualities. If they see an empty one, faults are emptied. If they see people rejoicing, rejoice in the Dharma. If they see them sad, they will be sad about compounded things. If t happy sentient beings, they will attain the happiness of buddhahood. If they see sufferings, sufferings of sentient beings will be pacified. If they see sickness, there will be liberation fro

If they see returning of kindness, they are returning the kindness of all the buddhas and bo
If they see it is not acknowledged, they are not acknowledging wrong views as kindness. If t disputes, they can eliminate all the disputes of the fathers. If they see praise, all the buddha bodhisattvas are praised. If they see discussions about the Dharma, the confidence of the b attained. If they see bodily form, they see all the buddhas without obscuration. If they see a become a stupa for all sentient beings. If they see merchants, they will attain the seven arya
If they see homage, they arouse bodhicitta, thinking, "May the world along with its gods atta non-manifestation of the center at the crown of the head.

Moreover, for all who are uselessly disturbed, with sadness and fickleness of mind, doodling babbling, thinking discursive thoughts and so on, when distractions arise, until they have ab
mindfulness
and awareness, may all the actions of body and speech and the thoughts of mind be caused
When
they go to sleep at night, lying on the right side, may they sleep with their heads in a norther Remembering
death and recollecting the three jewels, may they sleep resting their minds in dharmata like
Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.96

As the Lord slept, passing into in nirvana,

So should we sleep in the desired direction.

Day and night aspire to the activities of the excellent noble ones, or sing the meditation song masters, the Seventy Aspirations and so forth, performing them before statues, stupas, and so forth. Her taught by the
"Twenty Verses" The Precious Mala says: {{616t}}

1To the Buddha, the holy Dharma, and the Sangha,
And also to the assembly of bodhisattvas
Always paying homage and going to them for refuge,
Let us prostrate to those who are worthy of veneration.

2We should bring evil deeds to a state of total extinction
Completely accomplishing all that is meritorious
As for the merits of the host of sentient beings
We should rejoice in any merits that they have.

3Having bowed our heads and joining our palms together, 616.2
For the sake of their turning the wheel of the Dharma
And so that they will remain among beings in this world,
We therefore make supplication to the perfect buddhas.

4By the merits of having performed this liturgy
Whether it is performed or not performed by me
As a result may sentient beings without exception
Possess the unsurpassable attitude bodhicitta.

5May sentient beings have perfect spotless faculties
Their lives transcending any lack the excellent freedoms
And have complete control over all their actions
And be well nourished having all their needs fulfilled.

6May all embodied beings abiding in the three realms
Have jewels in their hands as a sign of ultimate wealth
May all the requisites be utterly limitless
And in samsara may they be inexhaustible.

7Always having all that is indispensable
May they become supreme and turn into excellent beings.
6May embodied beings have all the required knowledge
And the ability to do what must be done.

8May they have excellent color, and excellent healthy bodies.
May they be exalted and brilliant in their presence,
May they be without any illness and suffering,
And may they have tremendous power over life.

9May they all be capable in the ways of upaya,
Free from any kind of fear of suffering,
May they be diligent in relation to the three jewels,
And possess the great wealth that is the Buddha and Dharma.

10May they be joyfully kind and very compassionate Resting all the kleshas in equanimity,
Adorned with generosity and discipline,
Along with patience, exertion, meditation, and prajña.

11May they completely perfect the two accumulations.
May they be glorious with the major and minor marks.
As well as the ten bhumis, which are beyond conception;
May they attain the various powers and masteries.

12May we and other sentient beings, whoever they are
Be adorned by virtues such as these above,
And be liberated from all our various faults
Like the kind and excellent being known as Maitreya.

13May we be the hope of every sentient being.
Completely having perfected all good qualities;
And always may we have the power to clear away
The suffering of all embodied sentient beings.

14In all the various worlds whatever beings there are
Who are afraid of anything, may all those beings
Who even hear so much as the sound that is our names

By having done so, later become completely fearless.

15May beings by seeing us and by remembering us
And even by their only having heard our names
Be sure of the natural state that is free from all disturbance
And so attain complete and perfect enlightenment.

16And in all succeeding generations of beings
By means of having gained the five-fold higher perceptions.
Always for any sentient beings that there may be
May we continue to do such benefits as these.

17Whatever beings there may be within the world of samsara
Desiring the performance of any evil deeds
Nevertheless may even these be without harm, Reversing evil action once and forever after 18The physical elements, earth and water, fire and air,

Are like a field full of health-giving medical herbs
Or a forest of trees that grows in the wilderness.
They ceaselessly provide what people naturally want.

19Though the lives of sentient beings are impoverished
May I become even poorer by making this exchange:
May their evil deeds all ripen in myself.
May all my share of happiness ripen in other beings.

20All the sentient beings who remain in the world of samsara
Who are not liberated, may as many as that
All without exception be completely transformed Attaining the unsurpassable state of enlightenment.

Saying this three times, three times a day brings inconceivable merits. The Bodhicharyavata

Therefore, in the presence of a representation
Or otherwise as it may be appropriate,
Say these twenty verses from the Precious Mala
Three times every day and three times every night.

Also this was taught by the Buddha Bhagavat:

If the merit of saying these words were given form,
As for being more numerous than the sands of the Ganges
Even the realm of the world could not contain it all.

Moreover as the sutras and the Bodhisattvapitaka say, devote day and night to training. Wh freedoms and favors are only there for an instant. They are impermanent like a bubble in wa have them
we do not set out on the path, we cannot do so later.

7. The explanation of the twenty downfalls, together with the associated qualities:

Train in keeping these two bodhicittas without harm.
Five downfalls like wrong view are said to be like a king.
Five like staying in cities are like his ministers.
Eight are like his subjects, and two are common to all.
Altogether, twenty is the number of these.
It should be known that what accords with these is harmful.
Not having them, one avoids the harm of these downfalls.
It should be known that practicing this accords with goodness.

This follows the Essence of Space Sutra, where altogether nineteen root downfalls are taugl characterized as being like a king, are: 619.4

1 appropriating the property of the three jewels,
2 inflicting punishment of a monk who possesses discipline,
3 drawing a renunciate away from discipline, 4 committing one of the five inexpiable actions, and 5 holding to wrong views.

Those which are characterized as being like a minister are staying in 1 villages,

2 their vicinity,
3 cities,

4 towns and
5 their environs.

The eight characterized as ordinary are

1 teaching emptiness to those of untrained mind,
2 turning back from dwelling in the mahayana
3 having abandoned individual enlightenment, to join the mahayana, 4 to fixate the shravak pratyekabuddha vehicles and enter into fixation
5 for the sake of possessions and veneration to praise oneself and disparage others;
6 and to speak of one's own profound patience.
7 to cultivate and take the property of the three jewels
8 to give the wealth of shamatha to recitation.

As for those common to all, abandoning the mind of entering makes nineteen, on top of whic
Three
Jewels says

abandoning the mind of entering, not uniting with the wholesome, making twenty. The Moon Essence Sutra and the Akashagarbha Sutra also explain abando as a downfall.

If these downfalls arise, since this is unsuitable for a bodhisattva, one should try to remedy t
Twenty
Vows four root downfalls are taught:

1 For the sake of possessions and veneration praising oneself and disparaging others,

2 To those who are suffering and without a protector not giving goods and dharma because

3 not hearing confessions storing up anger,

4 Abandoning the mahayana and teaching a facsimile of Dharma.

The four root downfalls, they are intended being like being conquered.

By desire of possessions and veneration Praising oneself and disparaging others,
And those who suffer without a protector
Stingily not giving wealth or dharma
Not hearing confessions of other people
But rather heaping up anger at others,
Leaving the path of mahayana
Teaching facsimiles of the Dharma.
{{621.2}}
According to the teacher Asanga and his followers, four root downfalls are explained and als receiving bodhicitta is explained as arising from pure mind, depending only on homage and asking whether one's being has been defiled with obstacles, they will have very little ripening, and l
the precepts,
If any of the four root downfalls have arisen, the way of remedying them is that the twenty vo taken again, during which ones defilements should be confessed three times to one's superiors be maintained.
This should not be accepted more than three times, as it is explained in the Bodhisattvabhumi.
The followers of the master Nagarjuna explain the way of receiving as karma arising in pure producing the seven limbs. The ocean-like assembly does not ask about former obstruction about later training. What is to be guarded against is the nineteen or twenty root downfalls.
The way of remedying in the Akashagarbha Sutra is that after supplicating, one remedies th
as many times as the downfalls received. As for these two traditions, the mind only and madhy different.
Now the associated factors are explained. As for the factors associated with these downfall associated with wrong view is the obscuration of mere devotion. From this fault, one should them all.
The virtuous attitude and so forth that abandon wrong view are said to be without the fault.
obscured by the association, one is also said to be without the fault. All that is associated with virtue is said t one should train in.
In particular what is connected with benefiting others is the real thing that should be trained

8. The individual ways of guarding aspiring and entering,

a. The way of guarding aspiring has two sections.

1) The brief teaching

Now the individual ways of guarding aspiring and entering will be explained. Now as to how guarded by accepting and rejecting, as many things as are to be trained in the details of thos

Briefly four black dharmas ought to be avoided.
Four pure white ones should earnestly be performed.

2) The extensive explanation,

a) The instruction to abandon the four black dharmas. {{ 622.5}}

In detail, as for the first four:

These are the four black actions that are to be avoided:
Cheating any persons who are worthy of respect,
Feeling regret for things that should not be regretted,
Speaking unpleasant words to those who are holy ones,
Behaving deviously toward sentient beings in general.

Since these are the four black dharmas, they should be abandoned. The Edifice of the Thre Requested by Kashyapa says:

Kashyapa, if one posses these dharmas, bodhicitta will be forgotten. What are these four?
Slandering the guru and those who are worthy of respect. Producing regret in others for thin should not be regretted. To bodhisattvas who have aroused bodhicitta speaking with the fau angry mind. Behaving deviously and deceptively to sentient beings.

b. The instruction to practice the four white dharmas

As for the four white dharmas:

These are the four white dharmas in which we should place our trust:
Relying on holy ones and giving praise to their virtues,
Encouraging sentient beings to do what is truly good,
Arousing the perception of the teacher within the children.
High-mindedly do goodness and benefit for beings.

Abandoning what is false has the ground of the virtue of benefiting sentient beings. As for p perceptions of bodhisattvas as teachers, they become special companions on the path. Dw excellent thought of non-deception is symbolized by relying on the holy ones and praising them. This is the cons virtues. As for establishing all sentient beings on the path of mahayana, having particular purity, first produ is urged. The Edifice of the Three Jewels says: {{624.1}}

Kashyapa, if one has these dharmas, bodhicitta will not be forgotten. What are these four?
Conscientiously not speaking falsely, producing perception of bodhisattvas as teachers, dwe excellent thought of not behaving deviously and deceptively toward sentient beings, and trul establishing all sentient beings in the mahayana.

As for guarding by means of what is to be stabilized, the Shri Samadhiraja Sutra says:

O prince, if one has four perceptions, bodhicitta will be stabilized. What are these four? the are perception of true spiritual friends as buddhas, perceiving the Dharma taught by them as perceiving those who practice it as companions on the path, and perceiving all sentient bein only child.

b. Guarding the Mind of Entering

As for explaining the details of guarding the bodhicitta of entering:

Considering others' welfare as more important than ours,
This is the practice trained in by the bodhisattvas.
If they benefit others the seven evils of body and speech,
Are actually beneficial, when they can be performed,
However, the three of mind are never to be done.

and also:

By desiring peace and happiness for one's own benefit
Even goodness is a downfall for the buddha-sons.
For the benefit of others, even that which is evil,
Ought to be practiced, the Victorious One has taught.

There are three aspects.

1 One should learn to abandon what is to be abandoned.
2 One should learn to know what is to be known.
3 One should learn to practice what is to be practiced.

{{625.2}}Within the first is the way of guarding the mind from the root downfalls, the kleshas, of useless activity. From the four ways of training in knowing when to give and hinder, the first spoken of above.
As for the last, if there is an opportunity of giving through the ten non-virtues of body and sp will be for others' benefit, know that it should be done. The greatness of one's own virtue will not be obscured top of that, having observed an occasion for the three increases mahasattvas should perform the sever
the benefit? Minak Dunguchen, having seen many persons killed by selfish desire, the guide, b order that there may be liberation from limitless samsara, seems to cut off life.
Some though there is wealth, by miserliness will not give.
When there is a time of famine, if it will save lives, for the benefit of both, what was not giver rich is taken, to give to the poor.
The bhramin's child skar ma la dga' ba is tormented by the desires of others. By desiring th reversing the certainty of death, wrong activity seems to be performed. In order that those who will certai may be liberated, there seems to be false speaking. Having deceived the companions of the evil-doer, for the reversing them from being led into the lower realms, there seems to be slander. In order to purify the suffer who have

suffering, making up and telling various stories, or telling jokes, there seems to be frivolous s order to reverse those who will certainly undertake evil deeds, they seem to speak harsh words. These thing the purpose is virtuous.
The three evil actions of mind, should never be done, because they are only bad. Though s
is an opportunity of doing them, the vow is total. Manjushri having reversed the first ones, by c the Hindus,
when he was taming Kuntu Gyu, he is taught not to have fallen into accepting the wrong vie though such a teaching is thus practiced, thus, by that in body and speech, to Kuntu Gyu he taught rising of wrong view, but when wrong view arose in their minds, to these by and by he expressed the jewels, so how would this come about? Therefore he never performed these actions of mind.
Well by doing unvirtuous actions of body and speech, he transgressed. Isn't it like eating po mind, as in mantra, by grasping poison is without fault. The Twenty Vows says:

If these are done with compassion and for the sake of kindness
It is virtuous mind and the act is without fault.

But the Objects of Mindfulness says:

Though it is taught that a sentient being who cuts off one life will be tormented for an intermediate kalpa in the ephemeral hells, and though it is taught that an evil deed is always one thinks that; because the Buddha's word is intended for the minds of sentient beings of c capacities, that sometimes one and sometimes many and sometimes certain and sometimes are taught should be known not to be contradictory.

The Praise of the Teachings says:

Because of what is given and what is being held back,
Sometimes the words to you are "it is one and certain.
Sometimes "it is not certain" also has been said.
Therefore these are not in mutual contradiction.

In such a way there is provisional meaning and true meaning. Having the intention and wha to have the four hidden intentions, is very much in contradiction.

These divisions will be explained extensively below. As for training in the means of knowing
Mahayanasutralankara says:

As for any not known by the buddha sons,
Such knowables as these do not exist.

Contemplation and learning should be earnestly undertaken in the worldly topics or sciences world-transcending dharmas there are. This is so that omniscience may be obtained. If one there are five divisions to keep track of; arts, crafts, the art of reasoning, the reasoning of Buddhists, a reasoning of non-
Buddhists. The same text says:

If there is no effort with the five topics of reasoning, Even the supreme noble ones will never omniscient. Cut off other pursuits, strive for your own omniscience.

In particular when the details of the vow of training are known, it is very important to guard th Moreover, in the way previously taught, downfall and non-downfall, associated qualities, what is to be trai reason why this is done should previously be known. There are twenty root downfalls. Because these c absent, we are joined to virtue and there is no downfall. Moreover when we enter into meaningless speech and so forth;
if passion and aggression are produced, the fault of having kleshas will be produced. Even produced,
when one enters there is no need to grasp them, and by mindfulness and awareness, mean produced. If we enters into passionless for the sake of others, there is no downfall. If we enters into desi the fault of that. It is associated with it. If one enters simply the joy of others, it is the same. One should learn and so forth that the antidotes are impermanent. When one has seen transgressions, confess and renew the vo reasons
not connected with virtue, we dig up the earth, we commit faults of uselessly cutting roots ar

the same thing is done for the sake of virtue, there is no downfall. While we does not remember that it is us the associated fault of doodling in the sand. One should learn that this should be accomplished with mindfu awareness.
Having remembered what is to be learned, it will be renewed, and our vow will be renewed.
body, speech, and mind should be known to be joined to that. If there is transgression, from also knowing aspiration is transgressed it can be cured. Moreover, as for the conditions of transgression, discouragem procrastination, and entering into other paths; as for discouragement, if we thinks that we cannot produce the be we can one's own benefit, we get discouraged. As for the antidote, because we have attained the freedor this time of arousing bodhicitta, discouragement is abandoned. As for the praise of confidence, the Mah says:
{{630t}}

Sentient beings become human
So that every measureless instant
They can try to gain perfect enlightenment.
So let us not be discouraged.

As for procrastination, not seeing the benefits of the path, and having seen the faults of asce antidote
to that, having been taught the benefits and joy of it, as for the instruction in patience, the
Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.30

Therefore, having mounted the horse of bodhicitta,
Which clears away all weariness and discouragement,
One goes on from happiness to happiness.
Knowing bodhicitta, who could then despair?

If one grasps the paths of the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas as being better than the mah
be sent into them, so as an antidote, from the two meditations on transgression and benefit, as
and

pratyekabuddhas being far from perfect enlightenment the Manifestation of Enlightenment o

The paths of the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas are eighty-thousand great kalpas away fro unsurpassable fruition.

As to the immeasurable benefits of the mahayana, the Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.29

As for this, because of the power of bodhicitta
Former evil deeds will completely be exhausted.
Because a heap of merits is accumulated,
It is nobler than the path of the shravakas.

The Precious Mala says: 630.6

There is no looking at the benefit for oneself
The benefit of others is joyful as one taste.
The arising place of virtues in the mahayana.

If mind is sent outward one is far from enlightenment, and the sufferings of samsara and the immeasurable. As for the way of curing, before statues and so forth with remorse and reper take the vow. Also this arises by practicing as before. The number required is uncertain.

As for the method of remedying the bodhicitta of entering, conditions of defilement are three
of aspiring is lost; The opposing root downfalls arise; the condition of abandoning training is of
As for the faults of defilement. If formerly accumulated merit manifests, by its being degrade will have no happiness, we will not meet with the mahayana, and by breaking one's vow our pla degraded. By the heaviness of defilement, we will wander for a long time in the lower realms. The Letter t

Those even when alone will truly examine their minds Producing an association with genuine karma
On the earth, at the center they become principal holy ones.
These excellent students will respect the guru
Modest, producing a host of virtues, noble people.
Supremely motionless, they follow the view of kindness

For even those brilliant ones rejoicing in truth and tradition,
Life is easily lost and there are no promises.
For a while all beings have faults and evil deeds
That will send them all into unbearable hells Throwing away the natural state, indeed they suffer.
For the wise on earth what suffering is worse than this?

Whoever receives the sages' life-granting Dharma path
Like a great ship, having received it, they throw it away again.
In the midst of the ocean of samsara like dancers
Think the deceptive thought that their joy is assured.

Therefore, the Bodhicharyavatara says:

Though merit is easily defiled
Mind is never defiled.

dge ba gzhan yang nyams bla yi sems ni nam yang nyams mi bya

If one breaks the session, if it is lost, with repentant mind having confessed as before by pra rite three times it will be renewed. The count is uncertain. By the mahasiddha Nagpopa three means taught. Lesser ones by the power of grasping things as solid, having apprehended them in their minds, con before others.
By subsequent vows, as they are gradually distanced from those faults, rising from the down
The middle ones, having pleased the deities of vidya mantra and secret mantra, the bodhisa and so forth, having attained the blessing of the deity, arise from that downfall.
Some who are excellent, when someone says they have a downfall, remain effortlessly with how, it is taught in the Noble Mahayana Sutra Teaching that all dharmas are Without Arising Manjushri, the bodhisattva who knows no-action and no-arising attains complete purity from obscurations.

Here, "we should follow this" is well-thought. Those of inferior mind do so before the bodhis
a special object. They supplicate having performed the seven-fold service, or should renew th such and such a mahasattva to consider them:

For I, so and so, such and such a downfall has arisen. This for the sake of all sentient being and supplicate it be made pure.

Say this three times, and because of others:

These transgressions I see as transgressions and from now on I will control and vow well to 633.6

Let that be vowed. By saying that one is liberated from faults, according to the Bodhisattvab between perserveringly doing the developing and fulfillment stages of the deity before their respective having done
the seven-fold service, by confession and having retaken the vow, they remedy the downfall vidya mantra in general is Shri Akashagarbha. If one wants to confess before him, one should co day and night. From the time one arises this is done. In the later part of the night to all the buddhas bodhisattvas of the ten directions, and in particular Shri Akashagarbha, call by name and prostrate, and continuousl confessions of one's evil deeds of transgression. When dawn comes, say this:

Please do what I ask. For Shri Akashagarbha, if I confess my transgressions, having purified them, by consider, quiet them and grant your blessings.

Say that three times. When the sun rises, in view of purity of transgressions, body and minc than before, and even the sun arises more gently. The air is pure, and good dreams display then taught.
Some excellent beings, sitting cross-legged, first call by name whatever dream and illusion-l transgressions
there are. In the space in front are the buddhas and their sons. After confessing to them, id essence of these very transgressions outer, inner, and in between, by having examined their color, shape, and so arise from anywhere, do not abide anywhere, and do not go anywhere. Knowing them to be in nature within that state, one will be liberated from all transgressions. The Extensive Sutra of the Great liberati Directions says:

If the bodhisattva has four dharmas, all will arise separated from degeneration of discipline and the faults of the kleshas. What are these four? Because dharmas have no coming, dha ceaselessly seen, because dharmas arise interdependently through causes and conditions, they are empty of nature. If they have these four, there will be no arising of degeneration of and faults of the kleshas

The Dharmaraja Sutra says:

One sentient being, if one knows non-duality, all obscurations will completely be abandoned
For example, as on a mirror a with a thousand years accumulation of dust, there can later be particle, this too is like that. For example, in a dark empty house, dark for a thousand years darkness has lasted for a thousand years, a lamp will make it non-existent. So by the mind the genuine truth of essencelessness, the evil deeds of countless kalpas will instantly be rem

The Sutra of Entering into the Absolute says:

The son of the gods White Lotus asked, Manjushri, "How should karmic obscurations of be abandoned?"
He replied, "Son of the gods, as for karmic obscurations, if one knows that karma itself is pri unreal, it will effortlessly be cleared away. That is like wiping with a cloth a conch that is cov charcoal. These are guarded against by means of knowing their objects, it has been taught

9. The teaching of the stages by which beings should practice this

Now, by means of practicing what is to be practiced, guarding is taught. From the two sectio individuals
by whom it is practiced and how it should be practiced, as for the first:

As for the buddha-sons, there are three kinds of them.
Those who have freed themselves and desire to free all beings,
These are the bodhisattvas, who are like a king.
Those who want liberation for both themselves and beings

These are the bodhisattvas who are like a helmsman.
Those who free beings and then desire their own peace
These are the bodhisattvas who are like a shepherd.
It is taught in the sutras that these are liberated,
In thirty-three measureless kalpas, in seven, or in three,
Respectively, in accord with their powers of gaining it.

This is called arousing the great desire of bodhicitta of a bodhisattva. After first having beco enlightened ourselves, later we free beings; for example, as a king, having attained a kingdom, desires t subjects in happiness. Arousing such bodhicitta like Manjushri is explained in many sutras.
The desire to liberate oneself and other beings equally is called "arousing the bodhicitta of tr
The
boat-passengers and oneself equally want to go to the other side of the river. First having li sentient beings, desiring to liberate oneself primordially, is called the arousing of bodhicitta of which there is Shepherds of sheep, goats, and oxen, when they see narrow defiles and fearful places, or else when in fro have entered them, make every one come out again. This is arousing bodhicitta for sentient beings like th
and Shakyamuni. Here those of dull powers take thirty-three and the middling seven, and the sh lifetimes to perfect unsurpassable enlightenment. The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Those arousing the bodhicitta of the great desire will be liberated from samsara in thirty-thre countless kalpas. Those who arouse the bodhicitta of genuine wisdom will reach it in seven arousing the unexampled bodhicitta, they will become completely enlightened in three incon kalpas. Why so? Because they have powers that are small, middling, and great. For exam like a universal monarch, the pilot of a ship, and a parent.

Thus, and so forth it is extensively taught.

10. from the two methods of training in what should be practiced, the activity of the victoriou

a. The brief teaching of the six perfections

The buddha sons must train themselves in everything,
But chiefly in the practice of the six perfections.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Generosity, discipline, patience, and exertion
And likewise the paramita of imponderable prajña,
By that treasury of powers of the Victorious One
One reaches the other shore of the ocean of samsara.

One trains in what is explained. From the common and individual natures, the common also Without conceptualizing the three spheres of actor, action, and object, the thought of giving possessions to another, along with the seed of virtue, is the perfection of generosity. Its action is to pacify t of others.
Without conceptualizing the three objects, thoughts of abandoning the faults of samsara and with their seeds, are the perfection of discipline. Its action is to eliminate obstructions.
Without conceptualizing the three objects, bearing harm and weariness and not being afraid the perfection of patience. Its action is agressionlessness.
Without conceptualizing the three objects, joy in virtue is the perfection of exertion. The acti merit increases.
Without conceptualizing of the three objects, one-pointed mind is the perfection of meditatio is that the kleshas are pacified.
By not conceptualizing the three objects, realization of the nature of dharmas becomes the p prajña.
The action is that knowables are realized and, that one is liberated from samsara.
These paramitas have four virtues. By envisioning enlightenment as the benefit for others th establishing true goodness and loftiness, they are precious. By transcending the world, they materialism. By the increase of merit, they are inexhaustible. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Vast and not materialistic,
Precious and inexhaustible,

Of generosity and the others
These four virtues should be known.

In three inconceivable kalpas or more depending on the first paramita, loftiness is establishe
kleshas
abandoned.
the count of six paramitas is fixed. The same text says:

Enjoyment and the body are both completely perfected.
By perfect acts and retinue one is elevated.
One never again will be in the power of the kleshas,
And anything one does will always be correct.

Second, in terms of doing benefit for others, with a view to accomplishing benefit for oneself six is fixed. The same text says:

Not impoverished and completely not injurious,
Patient with injury and not growing weary of action,
One has an excellent reason for one's feeling of rejoicing:
The benefit of others is one's own benefit.

Third from the viewpoint of the three trainings, as for the count of six paramitas being certain
text says:

Of the six paramitas of the Victorious One,
When they are classified from the viewpoint of the three trainings
The explanation is that the first has three divisions
The second has two divisions, and the third has one.
One includes all three, with three divisions described.

The first three are gathered under the training in supreme discipline. Generosity is the caus
the essence, and patience the particular expression.
The next two are gathered under training the mind in meditation.
Prajña is gathered under the discipline of prajña.
Exertion alone gathers them all together, being associated with them all.

Describing them as being understood in stages, the same text says:

The later depend on the earlier
Since they are lower and higher,
And since they are fine and coarse,
They are taught to be in stages.

Since they arise in successive order from earlier to later, these are stages of cause and fruit discipline is more excellent than generosity, there is a gradation from worse to better. The earlier they a they are, and the easier to understand and realize. The later they are, the subtler and more difficult they a are gradations of fine and coarse. They are described from those three viewpoints.
As for the way of practicing, practice generosity with no hope of complete ripening. Again a samsaric realm guard discipline that does not aspire to the higher realms. To endure everyt meditate on patience. Exertion gathers all these virtues together. Meditation eliminates ideas of the form Prajña should be established non-dually with upaya. The same text says:

Generosity without hope Discipline not desiring Samsaric agitations.
Patience bearing everything,
Exertion gathering virtue,
Dhyana that is not formless,
Prajña possessing upaya,
These are the six paramitas.
By their stability
We are united with truth.

As for the ascertaining features the same text says:

Removing poverty, obtaining coolness, and bearing anger,
Union with passionlessness, and grasping of the mind,
Are said to be done for the sake of knowing the absolute.

Removing poverty is generosity. Cooling the torments of the kleshas, and guarding against discipline.
Forbearance of inner anger is patience. Union with the level of buddhahood is exertion. On grasping mind is dhyana. Knowing the nature of dharmas, absolute truth, is prajña.

b. The extended explanation of the individual natures of the perfections,

1) Generosity,

a) Identifying the object,

Now from the six explanations of the individual natures, as for the nature of generosity:

Seeing that sentient beings are tormented by poverty,

b) The general teaching on the nature:

They give them limitless gifts of desirable articles,
Like food and clothing, horses, wagons and oxen.
Greater are such gifts as one's own sons and daughters.
But greatest is to give one's head and eyes and such.
This establishes worldly and spiritual benefit.

c) The benefits of generosity:

Thus we will conquer all our avariciousness.
Consequently giving rise to wealth for others.

Material generosity perfects the accumulation of merit and Dharma-generosity the accumula Without avariciousness, the continuity of birth as a preta is cut off. Actual wealth arises for t of others. The world of the noble ones is grasped. The Sutra Taught by Questions says:

By material generosity the accumulation of merit is perfected. By Dharma-generosity, the accumulation of wisdom is perfected. These two establish omniscience. What is material generosity? It is like this. There is giving, great giving, and supreme giving. Giving is of foo clothing, chariots, and elephants to others. Great giving is of sons, daughters, and spouses giving is of things difficult to do. Heads, eyes, arms, legs and so forth are given.

What is Dharma-generosity? The lesser is giving pens, ink, and books. The greater is givin teachings, of the shravakas, of the pratyekabuddhas, or of the supreme Dharma, according fortunes of beings. To enter into grasping unsurpassable enlightenment and display the inc Dharma like the sky is the supremely great.

Householder bodhisattvas practice chiefly material generosity, and renunciates Dharma-ger

the Mahayanasutralankara says:

Bestowing benefits,
And depending on mind, the root,
Perfect both action and mind
Accepting these two and perfecting
While being without stinginess,
Giving dharma and things without fear.

Having known such generosity,
There is genuine accomplishment
For those who are capable.

The essence is being without miserliness. The cause is pure, generous thoughts. The fruiti
of body and enjoyment. The action is taking care of both oneself and others, and perfecting th accumulations.
As for distinguishing the qualities, the same text says:

Buddha sons, when they meet with students, give even their lives.
Even if they receive compassion from other beings
They take no care of fruition of human hopes and wishes.
Generosity brings all beings to the three enlightenments.
By the wisdom of generosity having been perfected,
They are placed in the inexhaustible realms of purity.

2) Discipline,

1) Explanation of the nature and expression of praise

As for the explanation of the perfection of discipline, since externals are non-existent, the inn

enlightenment:

By controlling ourselves with the highest discipline,
Peace and happiness of mind will be attained.
By prajña we will gain perfection of the two benefits.

2) the brief explanation of what is to be trained in and the instruction to guard it:

The vows and accumulations of Dharma and benefiting beings,
Buddha sons will always guard these three disciplines.

3) The divisions of individuals who guard it and the explanation of the root as bodhicitta:

Householders take the precepts of a lay disciple.
Renunciates take the vows of monk, shramanera, or novice,
And the discipline of guarding both the two bodhicittas

Here, in addition to whichever of the seven pratimoksha, or self-liberation vows may be appr the vow of the bodhisattva discipline, including vows of arousing the two bodhicittas of aspiring a The single bodhisattva vow has no divisions corresponding with the seven families of personal enlighte families are the male and female genyens, getsuls, and gelongs, and the lay disciples. Counting ma observers of the precepts for a day there are nine families. On the side of householders, the vows of genyen are divided into two. On the side of renunciates, there are getsuls, genyens, and fully ordained gelongs that on top of these the vows of arousing the two bodhicittas are possessed. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

As for those who dwell on the side of the renunciates,
They have an amount of virtue that is immeasurable.
With regard to householders industrious with their vows

They are more excellent than even those bodhisattvas.

That explains the renunciate bodhisattvas. The sutras say:

Householder bodhisattvas and renunciates,
Those who have the forms of females and of males
Supremely many billions and millions have one means.

Of the two kinds of genyens, as for genyens who observe a few precepts, there are the "roo who keep the four root precepts, and abandon wrong objects of sexual desire. Genyens of pure basic four and also abandon impure conduct.

As for the getsuls, the Radiant says:

Renouncing cutting off life, and taking the goods of others,
Impure acts and false speech, alcohol and so forth,
Dances, garlands and such and sitting on high seats,
And receiving food, gold, or silver any time after noon,

Because of taking these ten precepts, the mind is also guarded from the associated faults.
For women there are also the twelve renunciation producing antidotes of not touching anyon
Since women have greater kleshas, they are studied for two years to see if they can keep th they are stable.
For gelongs there are four basic rules involving expulsion from the Sangha, the additional th
and
the thirty of abandoning, which if they are broken one must abandon the object involved and precepts in all.
Gelongmas, fully ordained nuns, have 364 or more. This is according to sarvastivadins, ma sthaviras and many others in the collections that they individually revere regarding training in different disc Bhumi
Collection says:

When in addition to the precepts of renunciation, they have those of arousing the bodhicittas of aspiring and entering without corruption, this is said to be bodhisattva renunciation. Thos have this discipline have a discipline that binds their being away from corrupting activity. Th called the precept of supreme discipline.

In terms of the merit of the attitude of renunciation these are together with Bön. The Bodhic says:
5.11

Attaining the wish for renunciation of such things
Is what is explained as being the perfection of discipline.

Restraining natural degrading activity, the vows of personal liberation bind non-merit. In sa must take human bodies in order to attain the happiness of the benefit for oneself. Not only care of others, but accomplishing benefit for them is only is taught within the bodhisattva discipline. As for discipline, in addition, the karma and kleshas involved in ordinary grasping are abandoned, and in the tw meditating in the stages of development and fulfillment, one is made into a worthy vessel.

At the time of the vows of personal liberation there is no opportunity of properly committing f
nature
of the ten non-virtues. In the bodhisattva vow seven can be committed to benefit others. M the skillful means of non-abandoning or non-renunciation. As fire arises from wood, this cause of the a produced
only by that profound path.
Within the continuum of a single being, the single essence exists with different aspects. If o choice occur simultaneously, the higher ones are preferentially guarded. The lower part is gathered into i seems to be complete contradiction with the lower part, the essence is not lost, and so there is no real co
For example, in tantric practice drinking is not a violation, even though drinking liquor is taug downfall by the shravakas, and by the bodhisattvas said to be an associated fault. At that ti must not be consumed by the practitioner as a monk or bodhisattva. But when the deities are visualized Things must become intoxicating liquor. By mantra, mudra, and samadhi, they are transformed into amri supposed to enjoy them. Perceptions and thoughts must become many other things, transformed into pe mandalas. By their becoming amrita and faultless divine offerings, feast practice is perfecte meditating with the accompaniment of view and samadhi, the good qualities become exalted, and in such a way precepts will all be known.

In brief, however faults are produced, they are stopped. The good qualities if goodness is p bestowed. Generally, to know this clearly by visualizing is very important. The Precious Ma

Generally it is done by visualizing
Therefore this is praised in all the shastras.

In brief, guarding the mind from harmful behavior for the benefit of others is the vow of discip
two accumulations and the six perfections, an assembly of good qualities which have not previou
produced.
Increasing this arising is the discipline of gathering virtuous dharmas. They are chiefly gathe discipline of mind.
Those skilled in upaya, whether real or from one's mind, accomplish the benefit of sentient b four bases being gathered, others are made joyful, their situations uplifted, and good and virtuous seed certainty planted.
 Such caring for the happiness of others is the discipline of producing benefit for sentient bei
By these three disciplines, the three disciplines of the path are accomplished. Having perfec accumulations, one becomes enlightened.
1) By the discipline of the vow, one attains perfect abandonment of the two obscurations an patterns. 2) By the discipline of gathering virtuous dharmas, perfect realization is attained c extend, and so forth.
3) By the discipline of benefiting sentient beings, one attains perfect buddha activity, taming needs to be tamed along with the spontaneous arising of the two benefits. The Edifice of the Three J

Kashyapa, this bodhisattva discipline has three aspects. There are the discipline of the vow the discipline of gathering virtuous dharmas, and the discipline of accomplishing benefit for s beings. By the discipline of the vow, the mind is guarded from what is unwholesome. By the discipline of gathering virtuous dharmas, the virtuous roots are established. By the discipline accomplishing benefit for sentient beings, one devotes oneself to the benefit of others.

The Mahayanasutralankara says:

These six accomplish peace by having wished for it.
They will give the gift of life in the higher realms,
They are the supports of peace and fearlessness
By them one will possess the accumulation of merit.
One attains the nature of the symbolic signs.
One has the topics that are contained within the vow.
Having completely known a discipline like that,
Those who are capable will really establish it.

The essence has seven limbs. These are the topics of discipline. Bound by the vow of pers enlightenment,
are

1). The perfect procedure
2). The sphere.

Only the subtlest faults are viewed as topics of fear. The bases of the precepts are genuine
They are learned.
So it is explained on the level of the shravakas.

3). As for the cause, it makes one attain peace, nirvana.
4). As for the fruition, one exists in the higher realms.
5). As for the action, it produces the support of all the good qualities. The kleshas are pacif is made fearless
about oneself and others.
6). As for the good qualities, it possesses the accumulation of merit.
7). As for the divisions, there is that arising from receiving the harvest of genuineness, and by dharmata.
The first, is personal liberation. In attaining dharmata, both samadhi and spotless karma ari the mind of actual samadhi and the path of seeing and so forth, the undefiled level of the noble ones. T Abhidharmakosha says:

It is called the vow of personal liberation
Spotlessness and samadhi will arise as a result.

These disciplines are undefiled. They are not changeable by downfalls. They are not mixed liberation of the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas. The sutras are not lacking, since they are mahayana. Having those four aspects, they should be produced as the support of good qualities. The Spiritual

Your discipline is undefiled, and indeed not lacking.
Not mixed, and unchangeable, it is a pure reliance.
Discipline, whether at the levels of cause or causeless
Is taught as the ground and support of all good qualities.

As for these virtues of discipline, The Mahayanasutralankara says:

The buddha sons always receive discipline of the nature of the vow and effort. Though they have no desire for the celestial realms, they genuinely attain them even though they produce for them. By this discipline, all beings are also established in the three enlightenments. By of discipline being completely accomplished, they are inexhaustibly established in the pure r

3) Patience,

a) the general teaching on the divisions, {{652.3}}
Then as for the perfection of patience:

Three kinds of patience also need to be established.
One gives no thought to how much suffering is involved
In the various kinds of outer and inner injuries.
Because of compassion one has devotion to the Dharma.
Third there is that of compassion that has no reference point.

Not getting angry at harm or injuries produced by externals is the patience of fortitude. Endu
in liberation and in establishing the dharma for oneself and others, this patience does not care suffering is involved.
Compassionate patience is being tireless in benefiting others.
Not being afraid of the profound meaning of emptiness is the compassion having no referen

As for the meaning of these, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

Fortitude knows but does not care how much it must bear.
As for compassion, patience depends upon that dharma.
As for the five benefits, they are truly explained.
They are the producers of the two benefits.

Having the main thing and all the ascetic practice
There is the patience that aspires to those three things.
When patience such as that has been completely known,
By the wise it is said that it is truly established.

The essence is not being angry with others and bearing adversity. The cause is compassio benefits
are the fruition. The sutras say:

1 There is not much resentment and discord.
3 There is much happy and blissful mind.
4 There is no regret at the time of death.
5 The body abides in peace,
6 and one will be born in the bliss of the celestial realms.

Their result is to produce benefit and happiness for both oneself and others. The Mahayana

The buddha sons bear all the harms of human beings which is very hard to do. Since they cannot care for the celestial realms, they are not afraid of not going there, and do not care a benefits. By that same patience they establish all sentient beings in enlightenment. By the patience being completely accomplished, they place beings inexhaustibly in the pure realms

b. The way of meditation
{{653.6}}
As for the brief teaching of meditating on patience:

Just as no greater evil exists than that of aggression,
No merits are so difficult as those of patience.
By strenuous efforts in these various kinds of patience,
Let us strive to quench the great fires of aggression.

The supreme good is enlightenment. Moreover, the merit established by patience is greater greatest suffering is hell. Since this is produced by aggression, and since there is no greate that, by various means, it should be joined to austere meditation on patience. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Just as there is no evil which is as bad as aggression,
No austerity is so difficult as that of patience.
Therefore it is proper that we should strive earnestly Meditating on patience in various different ways.

The Spiritual Letter says:

There is no austerity like that of patience
Though we cannot do away with occasions of anger
By abandoning anger, there is irreversibility.
By this being attained, buddhahood is promised.

c) Many objects are tamed by taming mind alone

If each of many objects of anger has to be dealt with, it will never be accomplished and they pacified.
As for the means of bearing them:

The uncontrolled harm of things is entirely limitless.
We can never succeed in pacifying them all.
When mind alone is tamed, then everything will be tamed.
So guard the diligence of keeping mind subdued.

The Bodhicharyavatara says: 5.12 {{655.1}}

Unruly sentient beings are as limitless as space
It will never be that all of them are subdued;
But if thoughts of aggression alone have once been overcome
That will be like conquering all our enemies.

d) How harm is a condition of establishing patience:

The good of patience comes about depending on harm.
Such qualities as kindness and compassion rise.
Enemies, like teachers, are friends to enlightenment.
Rely on them patiently, feeling respect and joy.

Just as masters and preceptors are beneficial to renunciation, if one has no enemy, patienc
and therefore we should put up with enemies. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 6.103-5 {{655.3}}
If we do not endure them in a patient way,
The cause of gaining merit will thereby be prevented.
It is only we who are our own obstruction
Hindering what is the cause of gaining merit.

That which if it there another comes to be.
that is the vary thing which is called the other's cause,
That on whose occurrence something comes to be
How can that be called a hindrance to it?

The timely appearance of a beggar seeking alms
Does not produce a hindrance to generosity
Calling those who are bestowers of renunciation
Obstructions to it is equally unsuitable.

Times of harm, conditioned by minor suffering of unhappy mind and so forth condition the ar compassion and sadness and so forth, and therefore we should bear them. The same text s {{655.e}}
Moreover as for the virtues arising from suffering,
By sadness, it clears away arrogant haughtiness
For those within samsara compassion will arise.
Evil is avoided and we rejoice in virtue.

Those without merit can attain it by meditating on bearing angry thoughts. They can feel joy devoted to them like the teacher. The Uttaratantra says:

With Joy and devotion like that for the teacher.

Also it says there:

Therefore if we have a completely angry mind
And patience arises only in dependence on that Since that is the very thing that is the cause of patience,
It is worthy of homage like holy Dharma itself.

e) The thought that the condition of anger arises from oneself.

This will never be accomplished without ourselves,
Just as an echo arises from mutual dependence.
This mass of terrible harms that one has turned to evil,
Proliferates due to karma and incidental conditions.
So it is to be expected that this would come about.
The only means by which this karma can be exhausted
Is taming the mind and therefore we should strive for this.

If we were not there, our anger and contention with others would not arise. Anger and conte depend on each other. If we do not harm others, harm to ourselves will not arise. Therefor to do harm, and certainly it is proper to bear it. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 6.106

Thus if we do no harm to any other persons,
There will be no one who will then do harm to us.

Therefore not established with work and weariness
This is like a treasure appearing in our house.
As they are associated with enlightened activity
Then I should rejoice that I have enemies.

When some little condition to harm me is produced, that arises from my own former karma proper to bear it. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 6.46

Being summoned to action by my personal karma,
Those who do harm to me arise within my life.

If I am angry, with what actually harms me, that materialistic anger is properly directed at sti forth or at unpleasant words. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 6.41 657.4

Though actually it is done by the stick that he is using,
If it is to the user that I address my anger,
As he as well as I is motivated by anger
It is all the fault of anger--I should be angry at that.

In particular, if we are angry when unpleasant words are spoken by other people, not being source, one's own ear, but being angry at the external speaker is illogical, because it produc

If one thinks like that, fame and praise are harmful, and drive us to the lower realms. Patience is the opposite Bodhicharyavatara
says: 6.100

As for me who am devoted to liberation
I should not be bound by possessions and social position.
Why should I be angry at the very persons Who are producing liberation from this bondage

When they wish for me to be in suffering,
It is actually like a blessing by the Buddha,
I will go by that to the level without outflows.
Why should I be angry at the occurrence of that?

Also: 6.103

If it is merely because of obstruction by my faults
That I will not be patient with this enemy
It is only I who will be hindering
That which is an occasion for and cause of merit

If harm is a prerequisite for patience, anger is not the right response. If harm comes from or
it is not the enemy that harms us. If it is nonexistent, even generosity will not help. Having let it everything becomes like waking from a dream. The limitless purposes of beings and harms of wealth are bondage.

Since worldly possessions are producers of hindrance,
If I do not want these hindering blockages,
I should throw away these troublesome possessions
Lest the evil of my deeds be stabilized.

It is even better if I die right now.
There is no profit to living long in wrong livelihood.
Even if I should live for a very long space of time
There will always be the suffering of death.

Supposing that one person awakens from a dream
In which was experienced a hundred years of happiness,
And another person awakens from a dream
Having experienced happiness only for an instant.

For both these persons, who have woken from their dreams,
That happiness they dreamed about will not return.
Likewise whether life is either long or short
At the time of death it is over just the same.

Having great possessions, and great abundance of wealth
Even though I live happily for a very long time,
As if I were ravished by a conqueror
I shall go forth in nakedness with empty hands.

Being angry about being disparaged and insulted makes no sense. Fame is just words. Suc material things without the least benefit. The same text says: 6.90

As for veneration and honor, praise and fame
Coming from these there is no merit and no life,
There will be no more strength, and sickness will not be absent.
Nor will the body be better off than it was before.

If we truly know what is to our benefit,
What is the benefit of things that are such as these?
If we wants only a little nominal happiness,
Let us rely on gambling, liquor, and so forth.

The benefit of fame takes away one's wealth,
Or If we should be killed in the pursuit of honor
How will anything be done by these mere words?
If we die, then who will have that happiness?

If their castles of sand collapse and fall to pieces,
Children start to cry, hurt by the pain of that.
Thus when there is damage to my praise and fame,
My own mind is like the mind of a little child.

Some think that because of unpleasantness, there is anger. If we become angry and say ur not be angry at our own words? We may wish to say them, but nothing requires us to be an
are arrogant. Since we are unhappy, anger that our own mind is angry is what is suitable. We a unhappy with ourselves. Others' words are formless and do not transfer to us, but we eagerly assimilate t therefore, become unhappy. If we were not unhappy, there would be neither harm nor benefit. All happiness a
the preceding instant have ceased, like the definite appearances of yesterday morning. As last not return, is not perceived, and is without nature, then equally there are no feeling to be the ground of appearances of today, and the dream of last night are similar. Neither is worthy of attachment with joy and s existing.

f) The thought about fabrications existing or not:

If sudden unwished-for events unpleasantly occur,
If such fabrications exist, then why should they be unpleasant?
If they do not why bother to be concerned with them?
Therefore let us try to be patient with conditions.

When desirable and undesirable things arise, if these fabricated things are there, in an effor there will be unhappiness, so skillful means are no use. If they are not there, there is no making or n unhappiness. That there is unhappiness, cannot be reversed. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

If such fabrications as these the fabrications exist
Why should we be unhappy because of such an existence?
If the fabrications are actually non-existent
What is the sense if we are made unhappy by them.

Therefore, sentient beings each performing their own actions, know relationships of mother,
on;
For the benefits of samsara and so forth these should not be put up with. But for the sake of preceptor, guru, and the three jewels, we should not be angry with others. If there is such a harmful misfortu reversed. If there is not, it will not be produced. By the praise and blame of others immense benefit or h therefore not result.

The teaching of the nature of anger as emptiness.

g) What is the nature of this unpleasantness and harm:

If examined, they depend on a nature like empty space.
Happy and sad and joy and sorrow, good and evil,
Grasping these dualistically has no use or meaning.
Try to see everything with equanimity.

Harm-producing forms and one's own form are without a particle of difference, and so doing harmed do not exist. The minds of both are not perceived at all externally or internally. The if examined have no nature at all, and so the one who harms, harm, and the object of harm are empty of and non-joy, good and bad, nothing is ever lost at all. For even the appearance of harm no essence These phantoms and mirages etc. are like the eight examples of the confused relative. In the absolute, medit like space, The
Bodhicharyavatara says: 6.32

If thus we knows these apparitions as phantom-like,
There will be neither subject or object for our anger.

Also, if we consider primordially unborn emptiness, The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Thus for things like that which are completely empty
What is there to gain, and what is there to lose?

and also the Bodhicharyavatara says:

What joy is there to be found, and also what non-joy?
If one tries to examine these and look for them
Everything like this is like the space of the sky
It should be grasped as being completely like the ego.

Thus, if one meditates with many skillful means, patience will be established without hindran
Bodhicharyavatara says:

If we are thirsty, they will not easily be at hand.
These are things do not exist in any way at all.

By familiarity with that, in this life we are on friendly terms with everything, and by things bei we are happy. Later we attain the special celestial realms and enlightenment. The same text says:

Arising from the cause of rejoicing by sentient beings,
May we see in the future attainment of buddhahood.
Why do we not see that in this very life
There could be great splendor, glory, and happiness?

By the patient endurance of samsaric life,
There are lack of sickness as well as beauty and splendor.
There is support of life that lasts for a very long time
And the bliss of becoming a universal monarch.

4) Exertion,

a) How it is for individuals who have it

Now there is the explanation of the perfection of exertion. For beings..

Joyful in the wholesome nature of this effort,
Wholesome dharmas are not exhausted, but gather like clouds.
Or bees within a cluster of fragrant lotus flowers.

The scriptures say:

By exertion enlightenment exists,
But by non-exertion it does not.
By exertion happiness is gathered.
By exertion good qualities increase.

b) The incompatible aspects:

What does not accord with this is the three kinds of laziness,
Attachment to bad actions, discouragement, self-contempt,
Not accomplishing good is the ground of every evil.
What is excellent is damaged and troubles will increase.

With laziness, faults increase, virtue is obscured, and our wishes not accomplished. To give

Laziness attached to bad actions concerns acts that hinder holy Dharma, and agitate the mi counting our goods and so forth.
Seeing difficulties, joining ourselves to the thought "Surely it can't be done," is the laziness o discouragement.
"Someone like me couldn't do it!"-- such a discouraged attitude is the laziness of self-deprec
Bodhicharyavatara says: 7.3

There is the laziness of attachment to bad actions
That of discouragement, and that of self deprecation.

c) The measureless good qualities

As for the good qualities of the opposite of laziness, exertion:

Whoever has exertion is praised by all the world.
Whoever has exertion, accomplishes human wishes.
Whoever has exertion, their virtues will increase.
Whoever has exertion will pass beyond suffering.

To summarize the immeasurable benefits of exertion, we will be praised by worldly ones and
the goals of our aspirations. Good qualities will increase. Buddhahood will be attained. The sa 7.1

That only with exertion enlightenment exists,
Is like there being no motion without the wind element.
So without exertion no merit will arise.

d) The instruction that one must have exertion as a means to these benefits:

Whether in the highest dharmas of worldly goodness,
Or in those of the path that leads beyond the world,
There are dharmas of defilement and those that are without it,
What is bad is abandoned and what is good accomplished,
So let us make strenuous exertions, and truly stay with them,
So long as buddhahood has yet to be accomplished.
Going ever-higher to greater and greater truth,
Let us strive that long without any slackening.

For as long as we have not attained buddhahood, we should try to attain its superior qualitie
we should rejoice in virtuous actions. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Who without exertion enjoys happiness.

As for the divisions, the armor of exertion is practicing virtue as a cause of overcoming the f
The exertion of preparation completes the ten paths. Having formerly done that the exertio accomplishes
the goals of sentient beings is the cause of completing the goals of oneself and others.
There are the also three exertions in the dharma by exertion in body, striving in speech, and mind. Also the Compendium says:

There are the exertions of armor, preparation, absence of despondency, irreversibility, and never regarding as enough, with the mind completely joyful.

Or the Lankavatara Sutra says:

With exertion is that by which there is striving in the upper and the lower parts. Having seen accords with yoga, exertion in order to eliminate discursive thoughts, is the perfection of exe

The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Truly rejoice in virtue
Rely on faith and on zeal,
Increase the virtues of mindfulness,
As an antidote for the kleshas.

Its quality is passionless;
As for the seven kinds
Having known such exertion,
The wise will truly accomplish it.

Joy in virtue is the essence. Faith and zeal is the cause. Increasing mindfulness, samadhi a fruition. A happy mind without the three poisons is possession of the quality.

If it is divided, in each of the three precepts, it is always produced and is devotedly produced
speech,
and mind respectively. With armor-exertion that makes seven kinds. As for the qualities, th Mahayanasutralankara
says:

The nature of the exertion which is without example
Is the armor-application of the buddha sons.
Having destroyed the hosts of their own and others kleshas,
They attain the fruition of ultimate enlightenment.
By this very exertion, all beings are established
In the possession of the three enlightenments.
By the wisdom of exertion being completely accomplished,
They are established inexhaustibly in the three realms.

5) Meditation,

a. The cause establishing meditation,

Whoever has the wish to cultivate meditation
Should abandon all the distractions of various entertainments.
Pleasurable objects, like clouds in an autumn sky,
Ephemeral in their nature are no more stable than lightning.
Enjoyments are no more lasting than illusory palaces.
They are untrustworthy, and we should abandon them.
Instead we should rely on the peace of leafy forests.

All compounded things are impermanent. Wealth is fickle. Life is impermanent. Since all th essenceless, we should try to meditate alone in peaceful forests. The Personal Liberation s

After they have heard much,
Abiding in leafy forests,
Their lives slip away in happiness.

The Talk of Solitude says:

In cloud canopies of enjoyment,
Displays like flashes of lightning.
Are destroyed by the winds of this life,
Like lotuses floating on water.

Quickly seeing the deceptions
Of youthful embodied beings,
The wise will therefore establish Meditation and samadhi,

Turn quickly to the practice
Of the ultimate yoga.

b) The concordant qualities:

The presence of desires will only produce a struggle.
In seeking, collecting, and guarding them there is suffering.
Arrogance, craving, and greed, increase our stinginess.
We are led to the lower realms, and kept from the higher ones.
Therefore be content, and let desires be few.

External amenities are the source of much unhappiness of seeking, guarding, endangering, craving, arrogance, hypocrisy and so forth. Since they make one fall into the lower realms, t abandoned.
Nagarjuna says:

By the suffering of seeking, guarding, and gathering,
Wealth should be known to be a limitless destroyer.

"Therefore be content, and let our desires be few." The Spiritual letter says:

Knowing how to be content among all wealth,
Is said to be the best teaching of gods and human beings.
Let all know content. If they know that excellence, Even possessing no wealth, there will be genuine wealth.

i) Things as a cause of suffering.

With many things there are also many sufferings. For example:

Though by bodily wounds we may be full of suffering,
The suffering of riches is even worse than that.
Those who cut down their possessions have limitless happiness.
There will be less danger of being persecuted.

There will be no fear of thieves and enemies.
Praised by everyone, we stay upon the path.
Duties will be few and mental karma less.
So let us always train in having few desires.

If our desires are few, we are praised by all. If we have no wealth, we do not have to guard
and thieves. With few actions and body and mind at ease, we will practice samadhi, with little hy forth, and with many good qualities. The more the wealth, the more the suffering for those who posses have many snake-like heads, they have much suffering. The Spiritual Letter says:

As many as the possessions are the sufferings.
However, those with few desires are not like that.
As many as the heads of supreme kings of the Nagas,
So many are the sufferings rising from possessions.

Great desire for external things produces suffering. Internally, the desires of sentient beings immeasurable faults. By contention, passion, and offenses against pure conduct, the lower concerned are degraded and so forth. Since these arise from grasping desire and craving as pure, this abandoned. The Precious Mala says:

Sexy bodies of women
Are mostly in the mind
Their bodies in reality
Are really no so nice.

The mouth has rancid saliva.
Garbage sticks in the teeth.
In the nose are pus, and mucus.
The eye is a glass of tears.

The torso is full of filth,
And buckets of lungs and livers.
Fools who have not seen women Desire their bodies most.

Like an ignorant person craving
A bucket of shit as a bauble
Such are these fools of this world
In their ignorant lust for women.

Also:

Whether bodies are good or bad,
Whether they are old or young,
If the bodies of women are nasty,
How will desire arise?

What is filthy, though secretly
It may have good color and form,
Is not worthy of desire,
Such is the form of woman.

The inner bones are covered
With an external skin.
There is a decaying stench,
That seems quite unbearable.

When what is unseen is like that,
This pretty skin is unclean.
A container of filthy heaps,
How could it ever be clean?

A jar full of shit is degrading
To even its outer brightness.
This body so full of shit,
How is it any different?

And more:

However you wash the body,
it shows the dirt it is.
If that does not teach impurity,
What good will a lecture do?

Of this body so received
To make a graceful display
E ma, how thoughtless and foolish!
E ma, how worthy of shame!

ii) The faults of worldly people and companions:

Limitless evil comes from gladly suffering fools.
The increase of evil deeds is the source of unhappiness.
Good decreases, giving rise to strife and kleshas.

We become ungrateful and are hard to satisfy.
There are many frivolous actions and distracting entertainments.
As we would from fire or snakes or vicious beasts,
Let us give a wide berth to all the attentions of fools.

In particular in sentient of the present dark age, who were not liberated by seven generation buddhas and so forth, ultimate wildness, evil deeds, and kleshas increase. Virtue and peace are aba return benefit with harm. They uselessly afflict others in body, speech and mind. They disparage holy dha individuals associated with it. They have many purposes and many actions. With many occupations ar
kleshas
naturally arise. Like living among carnivorous beasts, fire, or poisonous snakes, they are ha
The Entering into the Sphere of All the Tathagatas says:

As we will never be joyful
Among fierce ravenous beasts,
Likewise dealing with fools,
There is no happiness

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

If we acts like those with the fortune of fools,
We will certainly go to the lower realms.
Letting ourselves be led by those of unequal fortune,
What will come of associating with such fools?

For a moment or two they may be our companions,
Then within an instant they turn into enemies.
They become angry even when things are going well.
Ordinary people are difficult to please.

If we speak of their benefit, they get angry at that,
They go on to reverse our benefit as well.
If we do not go along with what they have to say,
Because they get angry, they will go to the lower realms.

Higher ones they envy, competing with their equals.
Arrogant to inferiors, or when they are praised,
If something unpleasant is said they give way to anger.
What benefit can be expected from these fools?

If one associates with them, it is impossible that passion, aggression, and empty chatter will
The same
text says: 8.13

Whenever one associates with fools like these
They always praise themselves and denigrate anyone else.
With talk of their rejoicing in samsara and so forth,
Some sort of unhappiness will certainly arise.

The suffering of those who so depend on their own partialities of desire and attachment bec burden. By such real bonds, our minds are bound. By associating ourselves with their thou will be damaged. If we are with them, there is no devotion. If we are separate, there are immeasu unhappy torment. The same text says: 8.7-8

If for sentient beings we have produced desire,
That which is genuine is entirely obscured.
Even the thought of being sad at samsara is destroyed.
In the end we shall surely know the pains of suffering.

There by thoughts that are concerned with only this
This life will pass away in futile meaninglessness.
By our associating with impermanent friends
Even the eternal dharma will be destroyed.

From the desires of foolish individual beings, comes our own non-completeness. the Dharm is not established because of depending on these. Instead, first staying alone in forest and solitudes, not meeting with human beings, we should meditate. The same text says:

By these one's benefit will never be accomplished.
Since for oneself this benefit will not arise,
For a long time we will be distracted by these fools.

That is how one should think about it. Moreover, even if the oral instructions have been hea gurus, if they are not kept familiarly in mind, one will not be liberated from samsara. Therefo important to become familiar with them.

iii. The instruction of resorting to solitary places

As long as the mind has not attained stability,
So long will we be seduced by the wiles of external objects.
So let us stay in the joy of secluded forest places.

That is how mind and the oral instructions are mixed into one taste. Until one attains stabilit beginner should rely only on solitude free from occupations. The Basket of the Three Jewels says:

Beginners, in order to fully pacify the mind
And completely tame it, should stay in solitude.

iv) The instruction to remain in solitude all one's life

Once one is in a solitary place where no one is, isolated from all beings and fears, one is urg

Until this body is hoisted by four pallbearers,
And turns to smoke upon a crackling funeral pyre,
Strictly keeping to peaceful places of meditation,
Conquer the enemy of sidetracks of body and mind.

Thinking of the impermanent nature of life, one practices samadhi in a peaceful place. The
says:

Until this body by four persons
Is hoisted up upon a litter,
For so long strictly solitary,

Samadhi's peace should be my practice.

This is also taught in the Bodhicharyavatara 8.34

v) the praise of forest solitudes.

Now the virtues of the forests are explained:

In forests clear water, flowers, and fruits are plentiful.
There is excellent housing in mountain caves and sheltering rocks.
In solitudes graced by the shade of overhanging branches,
Many birds and deer dance by the river banks,
Exquisite with colorful flowers and the songs of bees.

Forest solitudes in shady valleys are the best. The ground is covered with verdant grass, ac myriad of flowers. It is full of sounds of cool waterfalls and the songs of humming bees. In the face mountains, under sheltering rocks are many fine natural houses. Clean water adorned by flowers and leaves

Accompanied by birds and wild animals, one has happy companions. Living with them in th
our aspirations from the beginningless past will be joyfully fulfilled. The Bodhicharyavatara says

Trees and birds and various wild animals
Who dwell within the forest make no unpleasant sounds.
There is happiness if they are one's companions.
Therefore, may we always stay together with them.

When we am staying in caves or in empty temples
Or we make my dwelling by staying under trees,
May we never look back, but instead of that May we always cultivate passionless detachment.

In places on the earth for which we have no grasping
Which are by their nature wide and unconstrained,
Acting autonomously and without desire
May we always stay in places such as these.

Also:8.37

Therefore very bright and joyfully content,
Happy in a pleasant forest with few thoughts,
All agitations will vanish and be pacified.
Therefore may I always remain in solitude.

Also: 8.85

Contention and kleshas are emptied in these peaceful forests.

In the fortunate, cooled by moonlight in groves of sandalwood,
Whose fine and joyful houses are tremendous slabs of rock
Fanned by the soundless motion of the forest wind
The wish to help other beings is naturally engendered.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Adorned by the waxing disk of the moon
Great rain clouds pile up, as if buckled at the waist
By seeing mountain forests there is passionlessness
The nature moves like wind touching one's life with fortune.
With the crowd of capering wild animals seen in the forest
All is very delightful, and one is full of happiness.

This forest where one does as one likes goddesses secretly Arriving come to visit one in one's rock shelter.

vi) How it arises in solitude with impermanence.

In those places fragrant with juniper trees and various kinds of sandalwood, with the scent o flowers
arising, with the aroma of incense and medicinal herbs:

Meditation naturally grows in pleasant solitudes.
Sweet with the fragrances of incenses and herbs.
Enjoy the four seasons, as they turn in a lotus pond,

The heat of summer, fall and winter, and the spring.
Let your sadness grow along with the gradual change,
As you contemplate the impermanence of life.

Filled by the fragrance of incense and medicinal herbs, pleasantly scented like ponds of grea breezes softly rise. By the example of the passing seasons, impermanence and strong sadn being.

Relating to no one, there is neither passion and aggression. There is no need for mental gra people are not viewed and need not be. One need have nothing to do with the struggles of life. Without de discouragement arising from others, happiness is autonomous. Even by the powers of the gods this is not attained.
Bodhicharyavatara says:
{{677.1}}
8.87-8

In Empty houses, under trees, and in natural caves, Abiding in such places for as long as we wish Abandon all the suffering of grasping and guarding Without dependency, and acting as we will.

Passionless because of acting autonomously,
Without the least relationship with anyone Knowing the contentment of such a happy life,
For even powerful lords attaining this is hard.

The Spiritual Letter says:

On the shores of forest streams of pristine water,
Blissful solitude is full of happiness.
As if daughters of the gods were swaying their fragrant censors of fragrant smell.

Bearing as ornaments continuous garlands of flowers,
Overpowering, as if it were divine,
The trees are perfect in root and fruit and leaves of green.
In forest independence fall cooling mountain streams,

Flowing in a place where there is no desire.

Beside its wide rivers fruit and flowers fall as ornaments
We are free and delightfully unseduced by a hell hole house.
In wide mountain valleys without any people very happy,
With vast experience of waving garlands of blue forest growth

At the waterside pleasant waterfalls, sounding like a drum,
Not a place for kleshas, so travelers proclaim.
Conquering our relationship with desires and the three worlds,
Shown as illusion, mirage, the moon in water, or waves.

vii. In those places how the mind becomes workable:

In some of those peaceful places:

See how bones are strewn about in a charnel ground,
Think how our bodies will be scattered in that way.
As we see the futile compounds of samsara,
Any joy we feel vanishes in the distance.
Always at peace, because there are no strife and kleshas,
Let the happiness of our minds be workable.

There are limitless good qualities such as samsara's sadness, contention, and kleshas being pacified.
The Gongpa Zhupa says:

By devotion to places of mountains and forests,
The source of good qualities will be increased.
By resorting to solitary places,
The five desires will be completely abandoned.

Therefore living unprofessionally
Remaining with that which is not spoken by words
Having virtuous dharmas must not be harmed
By mutual confusion and talkativeness.

Peaceful empty solitude, is praised by the buddhas.

Therefore let aspiring bodhisattvas
Always put their reliance in solitude.
Do not produce desire in the cities.

viii) The benefits of relying on solitude

As for these groves or excellent qualities:

Victorious ones have praised such forest groves as these.
Saddened by samsara they keep to solitude.
The merits of making seven steps in their direction
Are such that the heap of merit that we would accumulate
By making offerings to the buddhas for a kalpa, Buddhas as many as the grains of sands in the Ganges,
Would never equal the hundred-thousandth part of them.
Therefore let us keep to these forest places of peace.

If someone worships the buddhas with material things for a kalpa, if with the mind of sadnes seven steps to go forth into the solitude of forests, charnel grounds and so forth, that has a r merit. The Shri
Samadhiraja Sutra says:

If one person offers flowers, incense, food, and all the articles related to happiness to all the a kalpa,
and another with completely sad mind keeping to solitude, takes only seven steps, the heap immeasurably greater than the first.

Completely abandoning any view of body and life,
Meditating in the highest peace of emptiness,
The mind with exertion and with supreme exertion
Like a wild animal should stay in solitude.

ix) The divisions of how to meditate, together with the qualities

Now as for the explanation of how to meditate. In the forest:

Therefore, taking a cross-legged posture on our seats,

Meditate with a one-pointed mind without distraction.
Practice the attitude of a child in a temple;
Then the perfect discrimination of reality;
Then the holy meditation of the happy tathagatas.
We should know the names of the three kinds of samadhi,
Experienced by the noble ones who have entered the path;
As well as the four-fold dhyanas and four-fold formless attainments,
The experiences of those who have yet to enter it.
The mind that delights in desirable things will be abandoned.
Insight, samadhi, and higher perceptions will manifest.
There will be the five eyes and the four legs of miracle.
The mind will be transformed, becoming autonomous.

The essence of dhyana is that the mind one pointedly grasps a good object, whatever it may
the Path says:

On whatever object may be suitable
The mind should be well-placed.

Sit on a seat. When the mind is placed in meditative equipoise, the complexities of appeara
we undertake to make apparent objects of one taste with the eye of dharmata, they do not beco become ungrasped phenomena. Thus in one's own time, seeing apparent objects is like opening the at once.

Sir or madam when the eyes are closed,
Such is the mind that is poised in meditation
Sir or madam when the eyes are open,
Such is the attainment of subsequent knowledge.

Meditation on the single nature is shamatha. Post-meditation is vipashyana. These two hav essence, one time, one object, and are one in their action of abandoning obscuration. The S
says:

The pure world, having the aspect of completely not grasping subject and object, includes t subsequent mind as a fruition in accord with itself, reversing perception of form and so on.

The appearances of meditation do not block appearances, but they are pure of concepts. A on, the ordinary objects of the five senses, are worldly and are so labeled. But since at that without the aspects of grasping and fixation, they are also non-conceptual mind. The very mind of appe time, labeling appearance and emptiness as equal, is included in subsequent mind. Meditation and the su mind are one, so meditation naturally abandons grasping and fixation. Accordingly post meditation is with the dharmas of form, feeling and so forth. It has abandoned perception attached to them in term fixation.

Post-meditation purified by meditation is called "letting loose" attachments of grasping and fi on.
As for meditation and post-meditation being of one nature, everything exists at the time of m samadhi until the seventh bhumi, and this letting loose of existence. Up to then individuals do not exist as a s The Uttaratantra says:

The mind always accomplishing actions
Blazing like fire,
Peaceful samadhi and absorption
Are always equalized.

There are three divisions to the extensive explanation. The formless dhyanas of samadhi in someone not dwelling on the path, are called "the samadhi of a child's enjoyment." For those dwelling the samadhis of the paths of accumulation and preparation produce the path of liberation. Completely revea this is called the samadhi of completely revealing the meaning. From the first bhumi onward, the samadh are called the spotless samadhi or the joyful samadhi of the tathagatas. The Lankavatara Sutra says:
{{682.4}}
The samadhi of child's enjoyment,
Fully revealing the meaning

And the samadhi of the tathagatas.

The stages are as in that passage. As for the fruition, the Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

By samadhi, lesser desirable qualities are rejected
Insight and higher perception with samadhi are established.

As for the meaning of these, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

As for mind, it dwells, and rests internally.
Mindfulness and exertion are what are depended on.
By that the production of bliss is subsequently produced.
One is empowered with the objects of higher perception.
Then the three chiefs of dharmas come into existence.
Having known such samadhi, skillful ones fully establish it.

The essence is grasped within the mind. The cause is continuous mindfulness and exertion
text says:

Having realized a flash of this with agitation,
 One should do this repeatedly again and again.

The action is production of bliss. This is the support of establishing miraculous ability. The establishment of the higher perceptions, miraculous abilities and so forth. Among the divisio samadhis of abiding in happiness within this very life, the establishment of all good qualities, and perforn for sentient
beings.
{{683.4}}As for the first dhyana, as good qualities arise from inner dhyana, one attains joy a
the stage of access, and in having barely attained the main part there are conceptual thoughts scrutiny.
The main body in particular has no conceptual thoughts and only sustained scrutiny.
The main parts of the second, third, and fourth dhyanas, have mental apprehension without analysis. These dhyanas of which the earlier ones are preparations for the later, are explair Bhumi-Collection.
The samadhi that establishes all good qualities when the six pure perfections and so forth a
the

samadhi of one-pointed mind.
The samadhi establishing benefit for sentient beings, focuses one-pointedly on the benefit o
the main body of this samadhi, one produces the benefits and so forth of what is desired and wh interested in.
As for the good qualities, the Mahayanasutralankara says:

The sons of the Victorious One have many samadhis, establishing all samadhis. The samadhis exist by invoking bliss, and by the arising of compassion they support lesser being very samadhi all sentient beings are established in the three enlightenments. By the wisdom samadhi, when this has been completely accomplished, they are inexhaustibly established i worlds.

6) Prajña that realizes the natural state also has three sections.
a) The extensive explanation of the nature of the three prajñas

Then as for the perfection of prajña:

There are three stages as we develop in prajña.
These are hearing, contemplation, and meditation.
By vipashyana the host of kleshas will be abandoned.
By completely knowing the natural state of dharma and dharmin,
From living within samsara, we go to the peace of nirvana.

Hearing is the producer of knowledge of the nature, the natural state of all dharmas as they
By contemplating what has been ascertained, and producing liberation from the ocean of sa

it is maintained to be prajña, which means supreme knowledge or awareness. The Small C

Its sources are hearing, contemplating and meditating, or the union of samadhi. By the praj from the main body of meditation and post-meditation..."

Prajña is called vipashyana or clear seeing. It is more excellent than the other perfections.
prajña
arising from hearing on the level of an ordinary being is also important, because someone w one cannot contemplate and meditate. The Uttaratantra says:

Practice of generosity is the establisher.
As discipline meditates on the celestial realms,
Defiling kleshas are completely abandoned.
Prajña entirely abandons all kleshas and knowables.
By that there is supremacy caused by hearing.

Also:

Prajña is supreme. As for its ground
It is hearing, so hearing too is supreme.

In this case, wishing to know the nature of all dharmas is resolved by hearing. Here the pres follows the Precious Key that Makes One Meet and Evaluating the Treasury of Holy Dharma. From the first, as for the presentation of provisional meaning and true meaning, the dharmata of all dharmas i naturally pure space, the nature of mind, in naturally pure luminous realization. Changeless, it transcends
and destruction. Its essence is the space of the sky. This is the true meaning. Words of the Bu shastras that teach this are included within the true meaning.
The dharmin is things that appear. this includes arising and ceasing, coming and going, pur details of the skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas and so forth. This is the dream-like appearar evaluated by the details of speech, thought, and expression. All these teachings of exaggeration are the pro All words of the Buddha and shastras that teach this are included within the relative.

For example, saying or thinking, "The nature of the mind is like the sky." and becoming haug relative. To say, "That which has the nature of the absolute is the true meaning," is as it sho Praise of the Madhyamaka Inconceivable by thought says:

The emptiness of dharmas is the true meaning, so it is taught.
What arises and ceases, the life of beings and so forth,
Is taught to be the provisional meaning and relative.

The Shri Samadhiraja Sutra says:

As the Tathagata, who is the teacher, formerly taught,
There are particular sutras distinguished as the true meaning.
Those which teach sentient beings who are ordinary people,
All such dharmas are those within the provisional meaning.

The Sutra Taught by the Noble One Inexhaustible Intellect says:

If it is asked which sutras are sutras of the provisional meaning? Which are sutras of the tru meaning? Those sutras which are teachings for the purpose of entering into the path are ca provisional meaning. Those sutras which are taught for the purpose of entering into the fruit called the true meaning. Those sutras are called the provisional meaning which teach a self beings, life, persons, individuals, the arising of emotions, and an ego who owns the emotion
a doer and a feeler, explaining these in a variety of words, and teach being egoless and hav
Those sutras are called the true meaning that teach emptiness, marklessness, wishlessness uncompoundedness, the unborn, the non-arising, no things, no ego, no beings, no life, no in and no self, and that the gate of complete liberation is unobstructed.
It is said that one should rely on the sutras of the true meaning and not on the sutras of the provisional meaning.

In brief, the natural state, and the sutras that teach it are called the true meaning and the su
true meaning. The many means for entering into the nature, involving confused, impure dharma minds of sentient beings, and all the teachings of their divisions and so forth, are known as the provis and dharmas of the provisional meaning. This is how it is explained in the Mirror of Viewing the Aspects of D First Key of Revelation. In order to explain these and so that the intended meaning may be realized, fro explanations of the intention and the concealed intention, first, as for the intention, explaining with a little exagge these teachings have a manner which is not completely straightforward. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Equality and other-meaning
And similarly other times,

And the thoughts of individuals
Should be known as the four intentions.

The intention of equality has the intended meaning that dharmakaya is equality, saying "at th completely see the tathagatas." It is like that.
As for the intention of meaning as other, having intended the three naturelessnesses, "all dh natureless," is taught. Thus, the characteristics of false conceptions are essenceless, since established as real at all. The arisings of paratantra are essenceless, since, their arising is not established from four extremes:
They do not arise from themselves, because for these arising and an instant in which they a contradictory. They do not arise from something else, since if the essential marks of these others are analyzed, established. That they arise from both would be doubly contradictory, so that is not established. They do not a cause, as that is impossible.
The mere arising of whatever appears, mere interdependent arising like dream or illusion, is what does not exist. The Sutra of the Appearances of Wisdom as the Ornament says:

Manjushri, as for dreams, what appears there does not exist. Similarly all dharmas are appearances of what does not exist.

From that they are taught to be illusion, mirage, a city of the gandharvas, the moon in water,
and magical emanations in space. In true reality, they have no absolute essence. This is the ab because their nature is impure and so forth and their complex essence does not exist. The commentary A Intention of the Sutras says:

Characteristics are essencelessness. Birth is essencelessness. The absolute is essenceles Having realized that, I taught that all dharmas are essenceless.

The intention of other times, it is like saying, "by merely grasping the spotless moonlight of th Tathagata's marks, buddhahood is attained." This is not attained in isolation, but having gathered the fo these, one will always become enlightened by them.

As for the intention of thoughts of individuals, for some attached to the view of grasping supr discipline, it is like praising generosity as a lesser discipline.
Second, the hidden intention is so that those who delight in external things can grasp the ge meaning. "Spotless moonlight," doesn't depend very much on what has that name. While a phenomenal style, a non-according meaning is explained. The Mahayanasutralankara says

The hidden intention of making one to enter,
The hidden intention of other characteristics
The hidden intention of the antidote
The hidden intention of a transformation.
Shravakas and the essence
Thus tame faults and as for profound expression
These are the four called the hidden intentions.

As for the first, the hidden intention of making enter has the goal of making enter into the ma
the family of shravakas who do not enter because they have been frightened by emptiness. To form exists.
The hearers, understanding that it really exists, enter. The actual intention of the explainer appearances exist
like a dream.
The hidden intention of characteristics is so that the essenceless natural state may be know that all dharmas are essenceless. The three essencelessnesses of parikalpita, paratantra, and par already been explained.
As for the hidden intention of the antidote, some say Shakyamuni's body and length of life
the intention of implying that he was less than other teachers. When it is said, "At this time I bec tathagata Vairochana," the hearers understand that he is equal to rupakaya. The explainer intends th the completed accumulations, attainment of dharmakaya, and the benefits done for sentient beings. The A

As for the assembly of all the enlightened buddhas

In the sense that all the buddhas go to dharmakaya
Their body and the like are said to be equal to this
It is not that their bodies and families are literally so big.

As for the hidden intention of transformation, this dharma may be easy to understand, and in the fault of people thinking that a dharma which is actually easy to understand is less than other so that it is very hard to realize. For example, the Shrine Room of Telling the Reason Why says:

Father and mother are to be killed
The king is doubly cleaned, and If one conquers the country
Together with its surroundings,
Those people will become pure.

Here "father and mother" are craving and grasping at samsaric formations. Alaya is a "king, support of the various habitual patterns. The bhramin's view of a transitory collection and di training in virtue and grasping supreme asceticism are those who have the two purities of nature and the incident and surrounding regions" are the eight consciousnesses having the inner ayatanas of grasping a "Conquering" them means that if they are purified, one becomes enlightened.

Here two secret intentions, whichever is appropriate, make of one nature what is particular a As for the distinction of these two, Lotsawa Loden Sherap says that another meaning than what is speaker is understood for the speaker's words by the hearers. This is the intention. The meaning unde speaker, but not understood by the hearers is the secret intention. So it is explained and the Thekpa Dukyi D says:

This intention, is only mentally presented in mind, and from the viewpoint of the external grasper it is not openly proclaimed. The intention is secret to this viewpoint of the external g

These two should be known to be without contradiction. Someone may explain that it has su aspect, and intending that it does not depend on whether it is in fact grasped or not grasped by the other asked by another and so forth. Since not all proclamations of the teachings are complete, the rest of intended is the real intention. In order to bring benefit to others, to some degree depending on a double meanin according with their appearances, it is called secret intention.
Understanding depends on the other understanding what is said by the sayer, as completed

Therefore it is merely not false. These are the two keys of the view of scripture. Thus word intention, and the purpose of the occasion since they are of many kinds, knowing that the sutras and tantras a manner is very important.
That two meanings are evaluated from two presentations of the Dharma treasury, first, as fo
the style of the two truths, The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

The buddhas having taught the dharma
Properly depends on two truths.
These are the worldly relative truth
And the truth of the ultimate meaning.

The Sutra of the Meeting of Father and Son says:

The truths of those who are skilled in the world are just these two.
You have received no others, nor were they seen by me.
These are the relative truth and the absolute truth
Besides them there is no third truth of any kind at all.

Here the mere nature of so called dharmas is made into a basis of division. Then the way th called the relative truth and the way things are is the absolute truth. These two are divided. Also, things appear,
there are the confused and non-confused. The first is the nature of speech, thought, and ex time of existence

as a sentient being. This is all and everything that arises as confused appearance, grasping This is also all that is delusive, changeable, miserable, and so forth. It is the appearance of objects to a mind. They are the labels of speech, thought and expressions of the minds of sentient beings. As the imputed l mind, they do not touch the reality of buddhahood, and are called confused. The appearances and unders depend on dualistic appearances of incidental truth and falsity, the true and the false relative. These h effective power according with appearances. They arise from causes. They are isolated by examination. T accordant way. Collected under earth, water, fire, and air, with the knowledge of what is intrinsic to the the true relative.
 Appearances that have no effective power, like the appearance of two moons if we put pres
the false relative. The Two Truths says:

They appear to have an effective power,
By whether they really have it or do not,
They are distinguished as being true or false.
These divisions of the relative are made.

Both of these, when their nature is examined, are equal. They are equal in arising from hab confusion. They are equal in appearing to the individual senses. Though temporarily from t confusion

they are effect-producing appearances, all the objects viewed by the eye-consciousness an equally natureless.
The non-confused relative is two. There is the non-confusion of fruition, the wisdom of the g with the buddha qualities, and the previous impermanent, called non-confused from the view over to the nature. The commentary to the Uttaratantra says:

All truths of the path are compounded. All compounded things are deceptive.

This is taught because such things necessarily change and develop. However the compour deceptive are not the same. By attaining the fruition, alone with knowledge of the rupakaya these dwell in Akanishta. This is changeless. It is permanent and self-existing. It is the treasury of perfec qualities. As the great appearance of the mandalas and so forth, it is perfected mastery of the wisdom of exte appearance it is called relative, since it is inseparable from dharmakaya, it abides changelessly like the sky. extensively explained below.

Nirmanakaya is composed of the appearances of students. By the compassion of the buddl spontaneously present. From the viewpoint of the minds of those who are to be tamed there but in reality no change exists. Like the moon in water, from the condition of vessels it appears to real thing, whose characteristics are not established, is changeless. Just so, though a body appears to be tamed, its essential characteristics are not established. These three kayas are of one nature without g separation. This is because dharmakaya is changeless. Moreover, just as the moon in the sky though establisl water is not of one nature with it, similarly, though emanations spontaneously appear from the state sambhogakaya is really changeless, and nothing is really established. Though from the viev are to be tamed there appears to be change, none of the things that change are established. Therefo appearance, pure and impure, are gathered under relative truth.
Absolute truth is the nature of things as they are. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

Not known from another, and peaceful,
Not complicated by complexities.
Without discursive thought and different meanings.
These are what are called its characteristics.

All the dharmas of samsara and nirvana are primordially natureless. They transcend all obje thought. Not realized by concepts, they are not classifiable by mind. They have no proclam and difference. The same text says:

The buddhas, the protectors of the world,
Are also the amrita of the teachings.
The meaning is not one, nor is it different.
It is neither nothingness nor eternal.

From the viewpoint of mind, the phenomenal world of samsara and nirvana is labeled with d and bad. However, since everything is primordially pure as the nature of the sky, there are n both, or neither. "It is completely pure" means it is beyond this sense presented by the mind. The s

All is not true and not not true
It is not both true and not true,
It is not neither true or not true.
That is the teaching of the buddhas.

The viewpoint of the nature is beyond all proclamations. This is because it is beyond all ide essences. Though, "It is like this," has been proclaimed, this is the view of ego and so forth.
statements fall into the extremes of eternalism and nihilism. The Sixty Verses on Reasoning says:

If it is proclaimed that this is a actual thing
Passion and aggression will arise from such a view.
It will be impatiently and unsuitably grasped.
From that contention and controversy will arise

Since the nature is without assertions, it proclaims no objects, has no proclaimer, and is not anything at all. This is why it is said, "It is faultless." The Elimination of Controversy says:

If I had any assertions,
Then I would have these faults.
But since I have no assertions,
I do not have these faults.

The natural state or naturally pure essence of all dharmas is profound, peaceful, and free fro extremes of complexity. It has no assertions or proclamations. It is the purity of primordial space. Thou is inseparable, if one divides it in terms of mental exaggerations, there is birth and the unborn. Though thes everything else are established by the mind as emptiness, as complexities of the unborn there are the unliberate absolute and the unaccountable absolute liberated from all the complexities of born, unborn and so forth. The

Though birth and so forth are hindered by proper reasoning,
They are explained in a way according with the real
The birthless where all complexities are pacified,
Is given the merely symbolic name "the absolute."

Here if one explains the divisions according to the oral instructions, from the sphere of dharm alone is classified as the ground, come the apparent aspects, like illusion, mirage, the moon forth. Since the nature of what appears does not exist, this is called relative truth. The Sutra Requested

In the surface of a spotless mirror,
Just as the moon may seem to be appearing,
Even though its nature is not established,
So the forest of dharmas should be known.

Ordinary people see appearances as really truly existing, but yogins see them as uncertain, dream.
Elusive and evanescent, tenuous and diaphanous, they are simply unexaminable. Knowing appearances to be unexaminable is realizing relative truth. They are not harmed by the conditions of appea
is attainment, these appearances are established as the beginningless miracles of beings and proclaimed as anything at all, whatever appears is natureless; mind reaches it without any differentiating of one attains this wisdom of the noble ones, the buddha fields and so forth appear, and since there is no attac true existence, this is called the true relative. All conceptions and appearances of a mind attached to their t are the false relative. The source of arising of lack of attachment to true existence and all its appearance relative.
In the absolute too, there is no attachment to the nature of mind, the natureless way things a dharmas included within that nature like the moon in water. Confused appearances are kno natureless

as groundless mere appearance. Liberation of existence and non-existence and such men space is realization of the natural state. Realization of that nature as the absolute is called mind that absolute. The Praise to the Mother by Rahula, one of the sixteen sthaviras, says:

Prajñaparamita inexpressible by speech or though Unborn, unceasing with a nature like the sky,
Only realized by discriminating awareness wisdom.
I prostrate to the mother of the victorious ones of the three times.

According to that, discriminating awareness wisdom is absolute. Realizing that is realizing t
The
two truths are not different like two horns on a yak. When the way things are in the relative i moon in water, the apparent form of the moon is the relative. The moon's being without true existence is the ab single nature of these two, appearing as what does not exist in the water of a pond, are the inseparably unite Mind that realizes the two truths.
The dharmas of appearance, form, sound, smell, taste, and touchables, along with mental c assert and deny them, are all confused appearances like the eight examples of illusion. Realizing t does not exist is called setting out from the monastery of samsara on the path of liberation.
If one mentally analyses, what does not bear analysis is relative. What does is absolute. Th
the conceptual are found to be only relative. How so? That which bears the analysis of mind ei does not depend on the mind. What does not is not classified conventionally as bearing the analysis.
whether or not mind bears the analysis, these two are not a single aspect, since the mental examination is is only an object of mind. Therefore it is relative. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 9.2

The absolute is not within the sphere of mind.

It is maintained that mind is merely relative.

That is how it is explained. In brief, the complexities of mind and the appearances of compl viewpoint of the relative. The non-existence of complexities, the mind in which grasping and dissolved, and the appearances of such a mind are known to yogins as the absolute. Since the two truths a relative
therefore may also be absolute, as different aspects of a single essence.
According to what is proclaimed here, though the essence has no singularity or difference a
to worldly usage it is said that the two truth are of one nature. According to what is proclaimed what appears according to the relative, and should appear either according to the relative or not appearing the relative, therefore has the fault of also not appearing according to the relative. The Commentary Asc Intention says:

As for the compounded and the marks of the absolute,
These have separate marks of one and different
What is characterized as being both one and different?
This has not been properly dealt with up to now.

Though it is taught to be without the division of one and different, it is really non-dual. Of the Miraculous
says:

Inseparable absolute and relative
Is the great mandala of truth.

Moreover, regarding the differences used in presenting the two truths, there are:

1. The difference of two aspects of one essence,
2. Difference of essence,
3. The difference that refutes one, and
4. The difference of different distinctions within one meaning.

From those four differences, this is the first, making distinctions of aspects within a single es
It is not a distinction merely of conventional names, since there are different characteristics a

The
essence is not different, because the essence does not exist, and because the two truths ar merely conventionally. It is not merely the difference that refutes one, since there are no individual within it, and since the single ground would have to be divided. Therefore, merely conventionally, it is like wate in water, different aspects of a single essence. The Commentary on Bodhicitta says:

As molasses has many natures
And the nature of fire is heat,
Therefore of all dharmas
The nature is emptiness.

Also:

The relative is explained as emptiness.
Because it is produced and impermanent,
Emptiness alone is relative.
If it does not exist, it does not arise.

Also the Five Stages says:

The relative and the absolute,
Are individual aspects.
What is true is mixed.
This is explained as union.

In the absolute there is no distinction of one and different at all. The Sutra Requested by Ma

The inexpressible space of compounded characteristics is neither these themselves nor som

In the true account there are:

1. other extremes are hindered,
2. existence of/as things, and
3. the true account depending on purpose.

Of those three, it is the first. Certainly being liberated and not liberated from things is really contradictory. By refuting a third heap, the partialities of asserting and negating, these two are a valid account.
Since objects depend on the perceiver, when they are postulated, objects are confused min reached the ultimate, and ultimate non-confused mind does not go beyond duality. {{703.4}} Here samsara and nirvana are all confusion, and since dharmata is the non-confused object, that for the power are two objects is certain. The causal power is something like the high points of art in relief. The Prajñapar says:

By seeing all things as being true and false,
Things are grasped as having a dual nature
Seeing what objects are is the absolute.
False seeing is taught to be the relative.

If one divides according to the different doctrines, the shravakas analyze the absolute as ins awareness by mind and things that cannot be harmed by being broken up by a hammer and so forth. C and coarse things are relative things that are really instantaneous. The instantaneous partless a things are maintained to be absolute. The Abhidharmakosha says:

Whatever is said by the Bhagavan to be other than mind
That does not enter into being the same as mind.
Like water and a vase such things are relative,
Such existence is other than absolute existence.

Some Sautrantikas according with reasoning say according to the Complete compendium o

That which has a productive power is absolute
What is otherwise exists as the relative.
So the general definitions are explained.

In the mind-only school the object and perceiver of dualistic appearance are relative truth. N knowledge is maintained to be absolute truth. The Compendium of the Essence of Wisdom says:

So-called parts of things do not exist,
Therefore it follows that there are no atoms.
Conceived appearance of individual things does not exist in experience like a dream.
Liberated from grasping and fixation,
Consciousness alone is absolute.
This perfection of the ocean of mind
Is famed as the tradition of yogachara.

For svatantrika madhyamaka whatever appears is relative, and is like illusion and so forth. I absolutely established, like space. The Conquest of Illusion says:

The conceptual relative, like the absolute,
Is liberated from conceiver and conceived.

As for the prasangikas, what appears is relative and emptiness is the absolute; but what is c without difference, dharmata transcending all sameness and difference, free from all the extremes o
the time it appears this is rightly maintained to be unborn, unceasing, and without coming and going. T relative alone is refuted. The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

While you maintain paratantra to be real
I do not proclaim the relative.

This is saying: If you think, "These appearances, are indeed established to arise and so fort
non-arising, establishment and non-establishment are external labelings of mind, so how will the However,
though your doctrine is refuted, mere appearance is not refuted. Aryadeva says:

Just as appearances are not refuted,
Because they arise in mutual interdependence;
In this repeatedly becoming suffering,

Conceptions of true existence are cleared away.

Appearance in this case is appearing as if non-existent. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says

Form, sound, and taste and touch
And smell's arisings are only
Like a castle of the gandharvas
Like dream or like illusion
Like an illusory person
And like a mere reflection
Pleasant and unpleasant
Even if they arise,
Where and what are they?

Here what is grasped is that all-inclusive all-good aspect of natureless appearance. When e aspects is joined to its own attachment to true existence, they become very silly bad doctrines.

As for the distinction between these two truths, the nature without speech, thought, or expre absolute truth. Appearance and what is imputed, being said, thought, and expressed by mind is relat
If it is asked whether this absolute truth is realized or not realized by mind, the essence of th transcends realized and realizer, and is not classified as being realized. The Edifice of the Three Jewel

Kashyapa, what is the absolute, emptiness? It is not viewed by anyone. It is not actualized is not accomplished. It is not attained.

Well don't the noble ones realize it? "The mind arisen in accord with the absolute," is a strin words.
Chandrakirti says:

For the person with a mind in accord with emptiness, "Emptiness is realized," is said, but rea no such thing as realization of emptiness.

For example, by realizing that the sky is accommodating, the sky itself does not become an
of the mind. The Diamond Sutra says:

Those who see me as form
Those who know me as words
Are dwelling on wrong paths.
These persons have not seen me.
What is meant by the buddhas
Is the view of dharmata.
The leaders are dharmakaya.
Dharmata is not a knowable,
So consciousness cannot know it.

At the time of enlightenment, since the absolute and buddhahood are not different, realized non-dual. The time of seeing the truth of the noble ones, is also the time of seeing the nature of wisdom of actuality as non-dual. Since realizer and realized are non-dual, becoming exhausted in a st realization and non-realization is meaningless. By saying that the essence of the absolute is without realiz it follows that it will not be realized by individuals. But since this is not connected with the meaning, there the explanation.
"This fire is hot and burns." By saying this, it follows that it was not done by the acts of pers should think of the former expression as also like that. Though space is beyond the extremes of thi conception, it is still encountered by persons. Just so, the absolute beyond the expressions of complexity is enc What's more, it liberates from suffering and manifests the ultimate luminosity of mind. It is genuine, right.
Moreover, if one does not know the nature of the two truths, one does not the profundity of s Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

Whoever does not completely know
These divisions of the two truths,
These also do not completely know,
The profundity of the Buddha's teaching.

As for the good qualities of knowing this:

Those who put their reliance on these two-fold truths,
Glean the accumulations of enlightenment.
These will cross from samsara to the perfection of wisdom.

Moreover, as for all dharmas being the appearance of what does not exist, insofar as they a contained within the play of emptiness they are suitable, and otherwise they are not suitable Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

Whenever emptiness is suitable
Then everything will be suitable.
Whenever emptiness is not suitable,
Then everything is unsuitable.

Also:

Though these emptinesses are entirely proper
Non emptiness is not proper in the least.

In brief, impure, confused dharmas, the dream-like relative are not true, deceptive, a childis between. Except as mere evanescence, they have no nature or identity. The luminous natu
the profound peace and simplicity of the natural state of wisdom, is changeless, self-existing, in dharmata.
In relative truth, the accumulation of merit is hollow like dream and illusion. The accumulatio
of absolute truth is dharmata like the sky. By meditating on that as a fruition, the holy rupakaya dharmakaya are both made to manifest.
With that, the first storehouse, the presentation of the two truths, has been taught. Now the all dharmas as dependent arising will be taught. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

There are no dharmas
That do not arise interdependently,
Therefore there are no dharmas,
That are not emptiness.

In explanation of this, the nature arises interdependently. Samsara arises interdependently.

interdependently. From these three, as for the first, the dharmata or nature of samsara and come from anywhere. It does not go anywhere. It does not abide anywhere. Since the dharmin depen dharmin, from the very time of appearing to arise and cease, is free from all the extremes of complexi abiding, and destruction. This is the nature of the middle way. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

What arises interdependently is explained as emptiness.
It is classified in dependence on that relationship.
That itself is called the path of the middle way.

The Lankavatara Sutra says:

Abandoning eternalism and nihilism,
Free from partialities of existence and non-existence,
Total realization of the middle way,
This very thing which is known as the path of the middle way,
Has been explained by me and also by all the buddhas.

All impure appearance and the awareness that grasps it is the dimness of hairs floating in th
the very time of their seeming appearance, they do not exist at all. The same text says:

No nature, no apprehension,
No reality, no support,
This corpse-like foolishness
Is labeled as wrong knowledge.
These errors float like the hairs
That are seen by persons with floaters.
Likewise conceptions of things,
Are wrongly imputed by fools.
The three worlds are mere imputation.

The confused appearances of dream do not exist before sleep and after waking, but in betw appear. These present appearances of the six realms are non-existent within the primordial the first nature of mind. Since the nature of mind is completely pure of these present confusions, there is n a time when it becomes enlightened. In the middle these appearances appear while they are non-existent abiding, and destruction does not exist, and therefore in their essence there is neither birth nor destructio now, and later they have no arising in space. The Subsequent Tantra of the Creator of All says

Since later space is changeless,...

To explain, confused appearance is a mere labeling with names. Its nature does not exist lik the son of a barren woman. If that nature is realized, one is liberated:

There is no worldly birth or destruction
Like a flower in the sky.
By your prajña and your compassion,
Do not conceive of existence
Nor yet of non-existence.
All dharmas are mere illusion.
Abandon mind and consciousness
With eternity and the void.

Moreover, the eight consciousnesses depend on the alaya of the various habitual patterns, a habitual patterns of appearance as external objects. All this is false conception. It is temporary, with apparent though it does not exist, and ignorant. Confused thoughts that grasp at ego and ego-fixation rendere benefit. As for suffering within this dreamlike attachment to true existence of sentient beings, the Song of th Treasury
says:

The game which I have made,
Fools grasp and solidify.

At the time of appearance, from the very time when memory and understanding arise, they a empty, beyond all the extremes of complexity. The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

The sons of the conquerors are destroyers of everything.
Samsara is primordially empty of existence.
A partial emptiness is that of the extremists.
The wise do not dispute with any fools like these.

Existence and non-existence, having or not having a certain quality, true and false, pure and mind-created doctrine and therefore false conceptions. They should be cast away. The sar

Those with conceptions impute existence and non-existence.
By such examination suffering is not pacified.
Both existence and non-existence are extremes.
In the same way, pure and impure are mere extremes.
Those who are wise do not abide in the middle either.

Also, the Sutra of the Irreversible Wheel says:

Existence is one extreme.
And non-existence a second.
One as such mere extremes
Are ego and non-ego
And eternalism and nihilism.

As for people being bound by their respective conceptual doctrines, the Lankavatara Sutra s

Words that know things are grasped
Like proliferating insects.
Fools unskilled in relationships
Are bound by inferior doctrines.

All dharmas whatever and whenever arise interdependently. They are unborn, unceasing, w going, not single things and not different things. They are neither nothingness nor eternal.
nature in which all complexities have been completely pacified. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

What arises interdependently
Is ceaseless and unborn
Neither nothingness or eternal

Without any coming or going
Not different things nor one thing.
Pacifying complexity
Is the teaching of peace
To the perfect buddhas who said this,
To those holy ones I prostrate.

In brief, the nature of all dharmas is primordially pure. This is the nature or ground of interde arising.
Now, the interdependent arising of samsara will be explained. What appears as external ob apparent objects, appear in the form of mountains, walls, earth, water, fire, air, and space, c symbolized as forms, a roll of cloth, the combined strands of a rope, single strands of long yak hair woven i phenomena of things arising from causes and condition, and that and that being produced of similar and dis
All these are called external interdependent arising. They arise one depending on another, and therefore external appearance of material things. Compounded from ignorance up to old age and death, there interdependent arising. The Lankavatara Sutra says:

Mahamati, just as from a lump of clay a pot arises, similarly from threads come cloth, from individual hairs weaving, from seeds a sprout, a stalk and so forth, from people churning dili curds of butter, so Mahamati, in external interdependent arising, from earlier to later they ari Internal interdependent arising is like this. Arising from the dharmas of ignorance and craving and so forth, has been given the name of internal interdependent arising.

Not recognizing primordial individual and personal wisdom is the great ignorance. From tha produced, and from consciousness up to old age and death the nidanas arise in an unbroke connection
from one to the next. The Spiritual Letter says:

From ignorance comes formations, and from that consciousness, Then there is name and fo the six ayatanas, Then contact, taught to enable the source of everything.
From contact there comes feeling, which is the source of all.
From the ground of feeling, craving will arise.
From craving, comes clinging, from that is birth from life to life.

If birth exists, there is suffering, sickness, and old age
Loss of what is desired, death, and destruction and so on.
Suffering and the skandhas thus become very great.

From the twelve extensive treatments of the divisions of this, as for 1) ignorance, first there i natural state, the primordial purity of dharmata, the essential nature, and the dharmas exhibited by that B knowing these, because of formations of samsaric karma, patterns of conditioned 2) formations arise. Here mind, obscured by ignorance, are not in accord with what is wholesome and meritorious. The ten non-virtues and the three neutral actions are formations.
By these virtues the celestial realms are attained and by the non-virtues the lower realms. T associated with these two are like non-virtue. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

From the obscurations of ignorance there is therefore rebirth.
The three formations and manifestation of formations,
These are the karmas go into our being beings.

By the karma of formations, there is that which is produced and one enters into the correspo

The awareness so-produced is 3) consciousness. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

Having the condition of formations there is consciousness

By consciousness entering into ones own happiness as a sentient being. The red and white consisting of gathering prana and mind, come feeling, perception, formations, and consciou
the four skandhas of name. Form is frozen by being established as the skandha of form. This is cal form. The
same text says:

If one enters into consciousness,
If there is name and form, there will be desire.

In the mother's womb from entering into consciousness, name and form are established. Th the embryonic stage of an oval and so on to the completed body. At that time by the arising nose, tongue body and mind, there are the 5) six ayatanas. The same text says:

As for name and form, if desire arises,
Then the six ayatanas will arise.

Then by gathering together objects, the senses, and mental attention, 6) contact arises. For
from bringing together form, the eye organ, and the eye consciousness, the eye-awareness arise name, form, and consciousness, in the mother's womb, contact arises. The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

In dependence on these six ayatanas
After that true contact will arise.
In dependence on name and form, and production of memory
There can only be arising or birth.
Thus depending on name and form,
Consciousness will arise.
From name, form and consciousness
That which is gathered together is known as contact. From that contact...

From contact arises 7) feeling. From objects being pleasing, displeasing or in between there feelings of pleasure, displeasure, or neutrality. The Spiritual Letter says:

Feeling is the source of all.

From feeling, 8) craving proliferates. The child in the mother's womb by feeling pleasure, an has a craving for happiness and, from feeling pain, and wanting to get rid of that, has a craving to unhappiness. From the neutral there is craving for equanimity. These three arise. The same text says:

By the condition of feeling there is craving
The object of one's feeling will be craved.

That which is desired from craving will be the object of 9) clinging. The same text says:

Because of craving there is also clinging.
There are four different kinds of clinging.

The Prasannapada says:

Thus there is attachment to feelings, and as for that desire, from having the condition of craving, there is the cause of being impelled, desire, and discipline, and view, and practice, complete grasping to the four kinds of expressions of ego.
Also at the time of craving there are according, non-accord, what is between the two, and clinging to oneself, those four.

From clinging there is 10 becoming srid pa As for the five skandhas, form, feeling, perceptio and consciousness, since they are becoming, that arises. The same text says:

When close clinging to this object exists
Of the clinger becoming will arise.
If there is no close clinging to the object,
One is liberated with no becoming.
That becoming therefore is the five skandhas.

What is first generated from that, is that future 11) birth arises. The same text says:

From becoming there is birth

Having been born, growing up, 12) aging and dying, with the cessation of life, arise. The sa

Old age and death and fearful suffering
And pain together with cries and lamentation
Unhappiness and quarrelsome discord
All of these arise from having been born.

The sutras say:

From that birth old age completely ripens
In death, the decrepit skandhas are destroyed.

As for suffering, while one is a sentient being, while dying, because of delusion there is torm heart together with desire. As for lamentation, through suffering such expression of speech is mo Suffering is harm within the five senses. Unhappiness happens when unpleasantness occurs. Quarrels arise suffering and unhappiness.
From these interdependent arisings from earlier to later comes what is called causal arising.
consciousness
of inner earth, water, fire, air, space is produced by gathering together the six dhatus, the fo arise from them as a condition. The Noble Rice Stalk Sutra says:

Similarly the causes for the two inner interdependent arisings arise. What are these two?
They are the cause and condition. What is the cause of inner interdependent arising? This conditioned by ignorance there are formations. Conditioned by formation, there is conscious
What is condition of interdependent arising? It is the gathering together of the six elements.
What is that like? It is like this. The gathering of the dhatus of Earth, water, fire, air, space, consciousness is viewed as the condition of inner dependent arising.

This is from the viewpoint of the mahayana. According to the shravakas, the skandhas are i is the karmic action of kleshas from former lives. These five skandhas are formations when obscuration from the karma of former lives. The five skandhas are consciousness on the occasion of entering a w skandhas are

name and form in an oval embryo and so forth, before the five senses have developed prom skandhas are the six ayatanas from the time the gates of sense have developed, and the five skandhas un perceive objects. The five skandhas become contact after one is able to perceive and grasp objects, not yet know the particulars of pleasure and pain. The five skandhas are feeling from the time when one particulars of pleasure and pain, but cannot copulate. The five skandhas are craving from when one gras copulate but has not accepted an object of desire. the five skandhas are clinging on the occasion of acce of desire. The five skandhas are becoming while subsequently collecting karma. Then in the beginning of the five skandhas arise from the mother's womb, that is birth. Then in the name and form of the nex nidanas of the six ayatanas, contact, craving, and feeling age and die. The Rice Stalk says:

What are the ayatanas of name and form?
They are what is subjected to age and death
From feeling up to birth is similar.

The Abhidharmakosha says:

The first ones and the last ones, two and two
Have eight more between completing them.
Ignorance is the occasion of former kleshas.
As for formations it is the five skandhas
Unified with the karma of former consciousness.
Name and form it continues from that time
Until the six ayatanas are developed.
From there until the three collections is contact.
Until feeling knows the causes of pleasure and pain.
From feeling to copulation is called craving.
When one desires the act of copulation
That is the activity of clinging.
Because one has attained it, very quickly
Its fruition, becoming, will arise.
The resulting action also is becoming.
Actually being reborn is the stage of birth.
While one has feeling, there is old age and death.

There are two ways, instantaneous and gradual, of exhausting these twelve links of interdep origination.
From the instantaneous viewpoint, by the power of self and other, it is impossible that there life is cut off. Therefore doing evil deeds is ignorance. The aspect of entering into karma from do formations.

The awareness at the time of producing karma is consciousness. Then there are the name ayatanas of oneself and others. Then being pierced by the weapon of desiring happiness for oneself others is contact. The pleasure and pain of that is formation. From that entering further and further i craving.
Remaining into the later arising of that is clinging. Possessing the five skandhas of that is b present and future aspect of that is birth. The aging and death of that is completed in the instant of comp action.
Involved in this there are three kinds of instant. First is the smallest instant of vividly enterin knowledge of knowables. Then there is an instant of action, which is a hundred and twenty times that. Fr action is begun until it is completed is called an instant of completing action. If the continuity is count mind only school maintains that one cycle of cause and effect is completed in two lives. In a former lif causes are completed.
 In this the six fruitions are completed. By that one goes to the next life. The six causes are formation, consciousness, craving, clinging, and becoming. The six effects are the rest.
According to the shravakas, one round of cause and effect is completed in three lifetimes. D cause of the ignorance and formations of the former life, the fruition in this life is the five con and so on. In dependence on the cause of the craving, clinging, and becoming of this life, the fruition in th birth, and old age and death. As to the purpose of knowing these the Abhidharmakosha says:

By those between the earlier the and later extremes
Ignorance can completely be eliminated.

With that the explanation of interdependent arising within samsaric existence is completed.
the two kinds of interdependent arising of nirvana. These are those of the path and the fruition.
As for the path, the root of entering into the twelve manners of samsaric interdependent aris ignorance.

That is reversed by the insight of wisdom. By familiarity with the three prajñas, hearing, con meditating,
the first root, ignorance, is eliminated. By eliminating that, the others depending on that are one after another.
 By exhausting the cause of entering into craving, one will cross over from abiding in samsa
Letter says:

By the cessation of birth, all of these will cease.

The Mulamadhyamakakarikas says:

As soon as ignorance ceases
Formations will not arise.
On cessation of ignorance,
By knowledge one meditates.
By the ceasing of that and that
That and that will not manifest.
Suffering and skandhas alone
In that way really cease.

Yogins who aspire to liberation from the cause should not collect the confused karma of sam fruition is that later there will be no samsaric arising, and therefore formations will have been blocked.
says:

The root of samsara is conditioned formations.
Therefore the wise do not produce formations.

As for the interdependent arising of the fruition, after buddhahood, the production of benefits
like dream or illusion. This will be extensively explained below. As this knowledge of the inclusi dharmas under interdependent arising is itself included within the absolute truth, one passes beyond sufferi
The same text
says:

Whoever has seen interdependent arising
By that has seen the truth of suffering,

The cause of suffering, and its cessation,
And the path to that is seen.

These are called the two storehouses of the great teachings of the Buddha because all dhar within them. Among things that should be known they are of the highest importance.

b) The teaching of appearance as unborn, the explanation of prajña itself,

The meaning resolved by that:

These appearances have been unborn primordially.
Being without an essence, they are like reflections.
Nevertheless, they still appear as variety.
Having seen the interdependence of the pure nature,
We quickly contact the highest level of non-dwelling.

Thus all the appearances of outer and inner dharmas are like the reflection of the moon aris
What is without an essence appears as variety. The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

When at night there seem to be moons in water,
Though these appear in clear and untroubled lakes;
The moons in water are empty, hollow, and essenceless.
All dharmas should be known to be like that.

Meditate like that, knowing that the dharmas of samsara and nirvana are natureless. Things external variety are actually within the insight of non-existent arising. If the mind lets these t without emanation and gathering, not perceiving any dharmas other than that, the mind enters into a sky-like s absolute space of subsiding is the perfection of prajña. The Bodhicharyavatara says: 9.34

When things and non-things
Do not exist before the mind,
Then without phenomena as other Without conception, there is perfect peace.

Saraha says:

Liberated from meditation and meditator,
Not moving from that is what is called meditation.
Mind does not exist at such a time.
Mahamudra has no hope of fruition.

The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Revelation of true and excellent knowables
Depends on the samadhi of meditation.
It is completely free from all the kleshas.
Prajña well explains the livelihood.
They are the highest dharmas of fruition.
The existence of these is said to be three-fold.
Having completely known this kind of prajña,
Capable ones establish reality.

The essence is that knowables are realized. The cause depends on samadhi. As fruition, o
from the kleshas. The Prajñaparamitasamgatha says:

By prajña, when the nature of dharmas has been completely known, one is completely relea the three worlds.

As for the action, with pure livelihood, after the Dharma has been well explained, doubts are same
text says:

The herd-bull of men, as he turns the precious wheel,
Teaches Dharma to beings so that suffering will be exhausted.

As for the qualities, by prajña one reaches the city of liberation. The divisions are hearing, contemplating, and meditating. The preliminaries, main body, and post-meditation of samadhi are the three pra virtues, the
Mahayanasutralankara says:

The buddha sons know all aspects of what phenomena are. Why even mention that they ha passed beyond suffering, and that they are the retinue where attachment of mind is complet

c) Summary of Prajña

By this same prajña all beings are established in the three enlightenments of body, speech, wisdom of prajña being completely grasped, one is inexhaustibly established in the pure wo prajña one will not have the fortune of liberation:

Having prajña, we will be set free by upaya.
Just as saying a mantra can stop the action of poison,
If there is no prajña, upaya will put us in bondage.
Tormenting us like a medicine that itself becomes a disease.
Therefore, arouse the prajña that sees the natural state.

The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Kashyapa, those who possess prajña are completely liberated by upaya. Those who do not possess prajña are completely bound by upaya.

The Dohakosha says:

Those who dwell in emptiness, separate from compassion
Never will attain the path to supremacy.
But if one meditates on compassion alone
These too abide in samsara, and do not attain liberation.

Those who are able to join the two of these Have an abode in neither samsara nor nirvana.

Also:

By that which is a chain for binding fools,
Capable ones are quickly liberated.

Knowing the nature of all dharmas, if one strives to the utmost, one will quickly be liberated.
Sutra

Showing the Arrangement says:

Those who with great earnestness and exertion fully practice this dharma; the unborn, unce utterly profound emptiness; will quickly become conversant with the dharmadhatu of the boc
They will have perfect retention and confident speech, completely gather the unsurpassable be praised by the buddha bhagavats, and abide in completely pure discipline. Having attain completely pure patience, unsurpassable exertion, meditation without conception, and the g they will quickly become completely enlightened. By being in the heart of enlightenment, wi parasols borne by the four great kings, they will be supplicated to turn the wheel of Dharma.
the great light for gods and human beings, they will fully establish them in enlightenment.

7) Summarizing the meaning of these six perfections

Now, for the concluding summary, from generosity to prajña:

When we are in the practice of the six paramitas
We should know that we are beings like illusion.
Not perceiving their three-fold division in samsara,
By the wholesomeness of the two accumulations
We attain the peaceful level of the Victorious One.

Thus by the collective wholesomeness of these six perfections, from the moment of perform attachment to the true existence of the ego of a doer, an object of action, and a virtuous act, attitude of an emanation or illusion-like action, one will quickly attain buddhahood. The Sutra of the Cloud Jewels says:

Whoever does not conceptualize virtue or anything that is done, will gather the two accumulations of merit and wisdom with non-conceptual perfect exertion. These should be with the attitude that they are like a mirage, an illusion, or an emanation.

If by prajña there is pure view, and by upaya there is pure action, one will not stray from the Flawless
buddhahood will be established. The siddhis of flying in the sky and so forth will be accomp
says:

Thus if the view is completely unobscured
And the action is completely pure,

One will not go upon the path of straying,
And will go to the place of Akanishta.

c. The dedication of merit for the three general topics

Now the merit is dedicated for the benefit of sentient beings:

Thus by the rain that falls from these clouds of auspiciousness,
The crop of sanity grows within the minds of beings.
Impoverished by the host of evils of samsara,
May the weariness of mind today be brought to rest.

The virtuous roots of intellect and the pure space of the spotless fields, arising as the natura up as thick clouds. By the cooling rain of Dharma amrita continuously falling, for all beings, when exertion in the supreme virtue of Holy Dharma has been established, may the poverty of samsara and a poverty mentality be pacified. May they be satisfied by the virtues of the essence of enlightenment.
weariness be eased.

In the assembly of tormenting fires of suffering of this world
By the continuous falling of the rain of Dharma amrita
After all beings have realized the absoluteness of mind,
Cooled and refreshed, may they attain the ocean of wisdom.

In this beautiful ocean filled with lotus buddha qualities,
Relying with sincere devotion on the paths and bhumis,
Moved by the shining waves which are the six perfections
May they swim in the sea of vastness of the two accumulations.

Having seen all dharmas to be like dream and illusion
May the mind of attachment to true existence vanish.
May the state like emanation produce the accumulations.
May the entire phenomenal world of samsara/nirvana
Be revealed as total purity in a single instant.

Chapter IX: UNIFYING THE DEVELOPING STAGE AND THE PERFECTING STAGE

After training our being by the paths of the ordinary vehicles, comes the path manifesting the within one lifetime. The ninth topic of the main subject is the chapter on the Practice of Unif
Developing Stage
and the Perfecting Stage. The general topic has three sections,

A. Resolving the view
B. Practicing the meditation
C. Dedicating the merit.

A. Resolving the view,

There are nine sections

1. The instruction to train in the vajrayana, the essence of the teachings:

When the excellent mind of bodhicitta has been aroused,
We can enter into the stages of developing and completion,
As they occur in the outer and inner secret mantra.

As just explained, after being taught how to enter according to the vehicles of cause and cha
the fruition, there is the instruction to enter the vehicles of secret mantra. The details of these ve the current topic.

2. Why mantrayana is more noble than the stages of characteristics.

Why?

Here there are many means and also no difficulties.
Though the meaning is one with that of the other yanas,
There is no confusion about the means of entering.
Those of the sharpest powers are empowered in these four,
Kriya, Charya, and yoga, and also anuttara.

Though the buddha taught inconceivably many vehicles in accord with the minds of sentient

all included within three. The mahayana is taught to have the duality of cause and fruition. The are taught to be the means of first entering. Their fruition is taught to be the vajrayana. The Net of Mirac Manjushri says:

By the skillful means of the various vehicles,
Having the divisions of the benefit of beings,
As for the definite outcome of the three vehicles,
It exists as fruition, the single vehicle.

These vehicles are also ascertained as two. Since individuals in the mahayana have two fa taught that there are two kinds of skillful means or paths. Individuals who have little craving for desirabl or who have renounced these desirable qualities, and wish for liberation, are taught the bodhisattva vehic unable to abandon desirable qualities, there is the skillful means of the stages of secret mantra.
These two families train in their two paths until the path of seeing arises. The time when thi called the path of seeing by the bodhisattvas. This same wisdom of complete non-thought is designat siddhi of mahamudra" by mantrayana. The time until this arises, using the individual methods of the respectively
long and short.
In the vehicle of characteristics, apparent aggression is abandoned, and by kindness alone means, the attempt is made to gain the one benefit or goal, establishing the fruition. There a agonies of asceticism.

 It is not skillful in profound means of practice. Since it is a means of practice for those whos relatively dull, all this is practiced by dualistic abandoning and antidotes. Since the aspect to be abandone to the path,
half of what there is never becomes part of the path. This is a narrow path and a lesser cau enlightenment.
The tantras reject those methods. When apparent aggression is produced, there are many
with
it. Here too there may be kindness, or in the developing stage it is seen as illusion-like, or in completion stage as the wisdom of non-thought, or by working with that very aggression, it becomes the mirror-like w

forth.
Asceticism of body, speech, and mind plays a minor part. When the single goal is establish that means beyond the scope of thought are possessed, it is established with certainty. Having been pr of sharpest powers, kriya, upa, yoga, and the great yoga of anuttara-tantra are taught. The Lamp of the
says:

Not unintelligent about the single goal,
Having many means and therefore not ascetic,
Having been produced for those with the sharpest powers,
The mantra vehicles are especially noble

3. Why those to be tamed are taught

Why are these four tantras taught?

They are graded by time and caste, and powers of the mind.
The yugas are krita and treta, dvapara and kali.
Bhramins and kshatriyas, vaishyas and shudras are the castes;
The powers are dull and average; sharp and very sharp.

Kriya chiefly teaches baths and cleansing rites.
Chary teaches that actions of the body and speech
Are equal in importance with meditations of mind.
Yoga teaches that meditation is most important.
Actions of body and speech are just accompaniments.

Annotator is free from actions of the three gates.
There is no conception of separate subject and object.
Their ultimate concern is the luminous nature of mind.
Cleansing rites are few, or even are discarded.

In regard to time, kriya is completed in one kalpa. Since there will be no cause of manifestin of a sentient being, like the humanoids of Kurava the northern continent, kriya yogins do not dep

discipline,
or virtuous antidotes of mind. Purificatory rites of body and speech and actions alone becon
In regard to the four castes, the bhramin or priestly caste is tamed by means of rites of purifi asceticism, without engaging in others. Those of dull powers who do not understand the gre mind, can see this Dharma of actions of body and speech, and enter into those. Depending on those t are taught tantras chiefly teaching washing, rites, and purification, Amoghabasha, and Supreme Insigh
the Appearance of the Three Worlds, etc.
Also, this is most taught in the first krita yuga, because little secret and stealthy desire arises
cause of manifesting kleshas.
In the times of enjoyment and light karma of the treta yuga, actions of body and speech are objects of purification and rites become one of two goals, for those of the warrior-ruler kshat are not so entirely devoted to purification rites. Having realized things realizable by middling powers, t upa tantras, the Lotus Peak and others with their three families of deities. Acts of body and speech and mind are equally taught.
In the dvapara yuga, kleshas are coarser, and meditating according to mental activity and so
the goal. The merchant vaishya caste is widely devoted, and this is taught for those who are ca powers, chiefly with mental meditation, with those of body and speech just as an accompaniment. In abandon the lower realms and are taught the Vajra Space and so forth.
In the kali yuga, when lives are about a hundred years, the dark age, the time of indolence o stupidity, the goal will come about only by means of mind. Tribal people or the shudra caste purificatory rites at all, but great ascetic discipline. This is to be realized by those of very sharp powers, from al body, speech, and mind not being conceptualized with grasping and fixation, accepting and rejecting, asserting and fear and so forth, but being realized as non-dual. Since the nature of mind, the greatness of prim buddhahood is self-existing, there is the great dharma that seeks for no other buddha than that, anuttara yoga ta of Miracles with its short explanation of peaceful and wrathful deities, Chakrasamvara, Guhyasamaja ar taught. The Secret Establishment says:

Since students have the time
And the fortune of being tamed
The four great styles of mantra
Are famed throughout the world.

4. The three from kriya to yoga

These individual stages are explained:

The Sage has said that the tantras of kriya, chary, and yoga
Are the tantras of action, total comportment, and mental union.

Kriya is the tantra of action, upa that of comportment, and yoga that of yogic union. These t tantras were taught by the Sage. They resemble the vehicles of external marks in having rites of pu vows of activity.
The Sage called them the tantra or continuity vehicles.

5. How these are classified as the external secret mantra

As for these great tantras:

These are the outer mantra. One cannot meditate
On yab yum deities, united in sexual union.
There is no teaching of the five meats and the five amritas.
They remain entirely in rites of purification.

In kriya and upa tantra there are male and female sattvas. These deities of vidya mantra an remain in the manner of master and servant and companion respectively, and there is no un yoga tantra
the great four-fold arrangement of the mandala is taught as sambhogakaya, but there is no u meditating
successively on upaya and prajña, the developing and completion stages are separated. Th five meats and five amritas as samaya substances. These are grasped as defiled objects to be purified the Play of the Great Power says:

Clouds of enjoyment of upaya and prajña
Are the principal means of establishing wisdom.
As for the five meats and the five amritas
And the highest play of mahasukha
These wonderful ways of being are absent here.
Those with the lesser fortune of tormenting rites
Of purity do not have such things as these.

6. The divisions of the three inner tantras

As for the divisions of the three inner tantras:

There are three divisions within anuttara tantra,
These are the father and mother and the non-dual tantras.
Respectively each of these has as its emphasis
The developing and perfecting stages and their union.
These three yanas are known as maha, anu, and ati.
The deities may unite, and in holy substances
There is no distinction of what is clean or defiled.
Rather it is taught that all is of one taste,
Regarded as the play of a single mandala.

The Guhyasamaja and the Yamantaka and such yoga tantras are mahayoga, the aspect of the developing stage. the completion stage of mahayoga chiefly teaches prana. These incl Vajrakilaya,
Chakrasamvara, Hevajra, and so forth.
 The prajña mother tantras are called anu yoga. Chiefly the completion stage of prajña is ta completion stage also chiefly works with the elements of bodhicitta and bindu, desiring the c non-conceptual wisdom of bliss and emptiness.
The non-dual tantras, The Great Net of Illusion and so forth, are called ati yoga. This chiefly
essence

of prajña and upaya without adding and taking away, the union of the developing and fulfillin completion stage from prana, nadi, and bindu are created bliss, luminosity, and non-thought, and the in luminosity of the great wisdom. Each of these three, as a symbol of the union of upaya and prajña, visualize yab yum.
Since the meaning of this is being without accepting and rejecting, denying and asserting, c and such accepting and rejecting of good and bad, there is a play of samaya substances such as mea forth, and it is maintained that all dharmas are one in the enlightened mandala of primordial buddhahoo tantras that ascertain the suchness of the secret essence The Great Net of Illusion says:

Since it is the characteristic of all dharmas that they have a single essence with primordial b they are inseparable from it.

7. How these are individually maintained

As for the way of maintaining these tantras:

In kriya we are inferior and the gods supreme.
We are like servants and the deities are the masters.
By practicing in that style, the siddhis will be received.
In Chary we view ourselves and the gods as being equal.
We are samayasattva, the deity jñanasattva.
The deity occupies the space in front of us.
Siddhi is received in the style of two friends.
In yoga while the two are actually non-dual,
The god is summoned to union and afterward dismissed.
Siddhi is received like water poured into water.

In kriya tantra, the jñanasattva deity is said to be like a king. We as servants hope to receiv
The Tantra
of Receiving the Siddhis of all the Families says:

The lord is viewed as a king,
And we see ourselves as servants.

Siddhi, the essence of tantra,
Is excellently received.

As for upa tantra, in front of the samayasattva, our visualization of the deity, we receive sidd jñanasattva deity, visualized as a friend or companion. The Razor of the Three Families say

With the deity as friend or companion
Ultimate siddhi is to be received.

In yoga tantra, we meditate on ourselves in union with the deity. The jñanasattvas of union dissolve into us. By sealing with the four mudras and so on, even when the offerings, praise and so forth have been finished, one still supplicates. When non-duality actually occurs, siddhi is said to arise Jungwa says:

We receive non-dual dharmadhatu and
The highest ultimate siddhi.

We are blessed with the tathagata, padma, and vajra families of the external mantra, sealed dharma, karma, and maha-mudras.

8. The ways in which the highest three are the principal ones

As for mahayoga-tantra:

In maha, the chief means is prana and the developing stage;
In anu the dhatu and prajña in the completion stage;
In ati it is the wisdom where everything is non-dual;
But in all of them all dharmas are eternal equality.
The practice is done in the style of knowing that this is so.

Since all dharmas exist as primordially unborn emptiness, the nature of mind is known to be
the
sky. As for the practice, the Secret Assembly says:

Since these things are primordially unborn,
There are neither dharmas nor dharmata.

They are natureless like the space of the sky.
This is the way enlightenment is taught.

This was explained above. The Miracles of Fierce Lightning says:

E ma'o! free from all dharmas of things,
Free from skandhas and dhatus, and ayatanas,
We completely abandon grasping and fixation.
Since all dharmas are natureless equality,
One's own mind is also primordially unborn.
This is what is called the nature of emptiness

When this is known, the stage of visualizing the mandalas of the father tantras of upaya bec pranas of the five elements are completely purified. Luminosity/emptiness, the wisdom of co non-thought, is the main point. By that the supreme and ordinary siddhis are established.
In the mother tantras of prajña, complexities of the developing stage are minimized. The dh
bliss,
the space of speech, is the mandala of the bhaga or womb of the syllables. In the stages lea enlightenment,
another's body is the prajña or mudra, and in one's own body, depending on upaya, mahasu
enlightenment
by the wisdom of the four joys.
In the non-dual tantras, as distinguished from both these stages, luminous dharmata, the g without one and many, is the main point and enlightenment is established. There is the three-fold lu bliss, clarity, and non-thought. First from the workable dhatu self-existing samadhi arises. From that, suprem pervades the whole of space, filling it with undefiled bliss. In the central channel the great essential cl the other two luminosities occurs. By the power of the inner five pranas, the motionless luminous clarity o in the four dhyanas. Externally the five lights of the five wisdoms, appearing as kaya, bindu, and shinin the whole of space. The Net of Miracles of Manjushri says:

This vivid shining of the light of wisdom

Is the lamp of wisdom which is the light of beings.
This, the great brilliance, is luminosity.

Also:

To view possession of the garland of brilliance is sweet.
The blazing light of goodness is the glorious knot of eternity.

As the radiance of the five lights enters into the central channel, when the essence of the ea enters, mind rests within it. As external yellow light illuminates Ratnasambhava, pride is transmuted of equality is revealed. We are empowered with the samadhi of the ground of exhaustion, crossing to t family pure land, Ratnakuta.
By the essence of the water prana entering the central channel, within it the essence of undi illuminated. Externally, by white light by illuminating Akshobhya, the mirror-like wisdom is re Hatred is purified. We are empowered with the exhaustion-water samadhi, crossing to the eastern va Abhirati.
By the prana of the fire essence entering into the central channel, within it the blissful heat a Externally by red light illuminating Amitabha, discriminating awareness wisdom is revealed. We cross to t family
pure land, Sukhavati.
By the prana of the air essence entering into the central channel, within the movement and i
is attained. Externally, by green light illuminating Amoghasiddhi, the all-accomplishing wisdom Envy is purified. We are empowered with the exhaustion-prana samadhi, crossing to the northern k
of,
Karmaprasiddhi.
By the prana of the supreme non-conceptual space essence, universal dharmata, entering i channel, within there is complete non-thought. Externally, by blue light illuminating Vairocha dharmadhatu wisdom is revealed. Ignorance is purified. We are empowered with the exhaustion sky-real Gandavyuha,
the pure land of Heavenly Enjoyment. The Great Net of Illusion says:

Thus the fortunate yogin
Has the five lights of the wisdoms.
The five kayas cross to their lands.
The five exhaustions are gained.

9. The way of meditating on all dharmas as the nature of the mandala

Now as for the teaching that all dharmas, as the complete perfection of buddhahood, have t three mandalas:

Since we and all other beings are primordially enlightened,
The style of meditation involved in the two stages
Sees the dharmas of skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas
As being the luminosity of a single mandala.

All dharmas should be known to be of the nature of the three mandalas of primordial buddha mandala of the nature of the ground as spontaneous presence, there is conviction about the mandala of the path as profound samadhi, one practices meditation. Within the mandala of the fruition a enlightenment, the two benefits are perfected.
Within the first there are two divisions. These are the pure ground, the natural state, and the ground, the way of confusion. The first is the primordially empty nature of mind, the essence of dharmal as the luminous nature of sambhogakaya is the source of nirmanakaya. It is open and accommoda is luminous like the sun and moon. As with a wish-fulfilling gem, all that is desired is self-arisin kinds of kaya, speech, mind, quality, and action exist primordially as the intrinsic qualities of buddhahood.
Essence says:

Emptiness is the mind of self-awareness.
This is primordial knowledge of egolessness.
There is neither concept nor conceiver.
Therefore the fixated memory is transformed.

Wondrous body and speech and the field of qualities
Are the same and not other. That is how it is.

Also the All-Creating King says:

Kye! listen to me mahasattva:

The nature of me, the doer of all, enlightenment
Is a self-existing nature that does not need to be sought.
This is trikaya, the essence of all the victorious ones.
My uncreated nature exists as dharmakaya.
My uncreated essence is sambhogakaya.
My manifested compassion is nirmanakaya.
No fruition established by seeking has been taught.
Primordial self existence, it does not need to be sought.

Above what is referred to by such passages was called the dhatu or essence. This exists pr
the spontaneous presence of the buddha qualities.

The impure ground, the way of confusion, is as already described. The Secret Essence say

E Ma'o, from out of sugatagarbha
Comes the confusion of karma, our discursive thoughts.
Variety, mind, and action, existing, suffering and such;
The "me" and the "mine" are grasped as being individuals.

Also:

It is faulty concepts that are the root of samsara.
These have their arising when there are thoughts of self.
The powers of sense, birth and destruction, body and action,
The infernal machine of existing, suffering, and so on;
Is nothing whatsoever except a misconception.

From the individual rounds of beings within the six lokas, in particular for human beings, at t
of their confusion, when they are grasped by existence in a womb, at first the two eyes and the

the navel
develop. Then the body is produced from the essences which will become the sense-faculti three nadis.
Within them are the three syllables OM AH HUM. Externally these produce the three suppo
and mind. Internally, they produce the three supports of passion, aggression, and ignorance. S produce the supports of enlightened body, speech, and mind.
The central channel reaches above to the aperture of Bhrama, and below to the secret place nadi and red Kyangma are to right and left of the light blue central channel. In enlightened b and mind they are the three-fold existence of mahasukha.
Mutually and continuously they have twenty-one knots. These are the chakras of the nadis: emanation chakra has sixty-four nadi petals. The throat enjoyment chakra has sixteen. The has eight nadi petals. If they are joined with the four kayas and the different wisdoms, in additio the crown of the head, there is the chakra of great bliss with thirty-two nadi petals. From the viewpoint of the self-existing kayas, in addition to these, in the secret place, is the chakra of guarding bliss with seventy-two nadi p has the powers of the essential elements.
If the six chakras are listed in order, the secret center is the chakra of wisdom. The throat c chakra of enjoyment-activity. The central channel is the chakra of mahasukha. The crown of the hea
the realm of space. The heart is the dharmachakra. The navel is the chakra of emanation.
According to The Net of Illusion, they are the seeds of purifying the impure six kinds of senti
The
purifiers are the six sages of the six realms. When they are purified by the six perfections, t wisdoms, the usual five wisdoms plus the inconceivable wisdom, are attained.
Each chakra with the first knot between each one makes twelve. Completing these at the e thirteenth is maintained to complete the bhumi of the great wisdom.
The Kalachakra has six chakras and six nadis between them. These have twelve kinds of ej associated with the twelve nidanas. The power of not ejecting bindu, turning it back above t wisdom chakra, is said to be a sign of the first bhumi. One kind of ejection of prana is stopped. One nidana is

Similarly, between that and the space of the sky chakra twelve levels are crossed. Twelve kinds of ejection of p stopped. Twelve nidanas are purified. By the bindu reaching the sky realm chakra, it is maintained that one is According to the Root tantra of Miracle there are two chakras. These are the peaceful heart wrathful crown chakra. Within these the coarse nadis are equal to the number of deities. Th 58, 100
altogether. The fine nadis are countless. The Great Illusion says:

Roma, Kyangma, and Kundarma.
Are between the chakras like pillars.
The branching petals are countless.
As for elements and pranas,
The descending wisdom nadis
Are a thousand in number.
As the square of seventy two,
There are twenty thousand
And 600,000 pranas.
These have been maintained to be the great moving ones.
There are 84,000 others.

The Five Hundred Thousand says:

The associated nadis
Spread and fill the body
These 72,000 nadis.
In the body are goddesses.

Also:

Of the 72000 nadis,
the different kinds are explained.

In one day there are said to be 620,000 actions of prana. They make up a "horse" to carry t moving ones, whose number is equal to that of the false conceptions and kleshas. When kl about, it is maintained that an equal number of these pranas are moving about. By nature the male pra dwells above, and the female prana, "downward voiding," dwells below. As for the mother, if the I p "equally-abiding" co-

exists, the three existences are explained.
As for the pranas in the nadis there are the following:

1 life-holder,
2 equalizer,
3 fire,
4 upward moving,
5 downward voiding.

As said above. The actions are

1 maintaining life,
2 bodily existence,
3 making heat,
4 the exhaling and inhaling of the breath,
5 going, staying and casting off impurities.

These are called ordinary and the five external pranas.

The five internal pranas are the five pranas of the five elements. These are:

the yellow earth prana,
the red fire prana,
the white water prana,
the green air prana,
the blue space prana.

As for their functions, they exist as a support for the inner skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas.
they are the ground of proliferation of the five poisons, and when pure of the five wisdoms.
The five secret pranas, the five wisdoms, have no coarse forms.
The great essential elements are two, the white and the red. From roma and kyangma they
of the individual nadis. For women, left and right are reversed. In particular, the moon, roma, above at the crown of the head. The sun, kyangma, rises from the A below in the secret place.

In a man's kyangma and woman's roma at the bottom there is a knot, so that the red and wh drip. As the knots in the nadis are released, the virtues of the paths and bhumis are perfect knots in the central channel are released, two by two, each of the ten bhumis are perfected. In attaining the goo those, each of the essential elements and prana elements seem to enter them.
For example, as the first two nadi knots are released, the two essences enter into the centra
the four great nadis of the navel emanation chakra are released, the qualities of the first bhumi a
 When the
nadis of the four chakras are released, the four kayas are attained and the four wisdoms ma
Now in the ordinary nadi knots the red and white essences exist as the embrace of the hero veins are like water pipes, and the elements like the water inside them. Prana is like pressu and coming when moved by that, constitute the vajra body. This is the support of the great wisdom.
In particular in the Mahamaya Tantra, in the empty center of the heart, the essences go into nadis as if they were being licked up. There are three dharmata nadis, one wisdom nadi, three auton quality
nadi. The Secret Drop of Vimala says:

The way they exist is known to be eight-fold.

The commentary says:

In the empty center of the heart, the essence in the nadis goes into the eight subtle nadis as being licked up. There are three dharmata nadis, one wisdom nadi, three autonomy nadis, and o
These eight should be known like that.
The central three are the support of the unchanging dharmata of trikaya. In front the nadi of mirror-like wisdom produces the support of the four wisdoms. Behind and to the right are th qualities producing the support of the arising of the buddha fields, palaces and so forth. To the three poisons autonomy nadi, confused appearance of the individuating characteristics o realms is produced.
Moreover, in the sheath of the dharmata nadi, in the midst of drops of yellow light, the letters of the ground of purification, SU and TRI, are the seeds of asuras and animals. The is the essence of the kayas and wisdoms. The intrinsic light of the syllables is like a brocad

the square sheath of the blue wisdom nadi, is the purifier HUM and the ground of purificatio of gods and human beings A and NRI [with backwards kiku] They have white, red, and blue
In the red semi-circular sheath of the autonomy syllables the purifier is AH and the ground o purification is the seeds of the pretas and hell beings PRE and DU. Also at the time of impu habitual patterns produced by karma and kleshas are collected above the six syllables. The created by anger, resentment, and so on are collected above the DU; by desire above the P above A and NRI; by envy above SU; and those created by ignorance are collected above t the time of realization, the virtues of the intrinsically-existing power of wisdom are collected a three syllables of body, speech, and mind.

Meditations on forms of the deities and so on connected with body are placed above OM. T mantra recitation and so on are above AH. Meditation on non-thought and so on are above that are the ground of purification and all the habitual patterns above them are purified. The same text s

In the dharmata-nadi a yellow light dwells. The shape is spherical. It is like flowing mercury.
 The essence is OM. The seed is SU and TRI. The colors of these three are like a brocade Within the wisdom nadi is a blue light. Its shape is square. It is like a noose or coiled snake
It is like a lump of violet amethyst crystals. The essence is HUM. The seeds are A and NRI
In the autonomy nadi is a red light. Its shape is a red semi-circle. The style is of illusory refreshing-cleansing water like the brilliant arising of dawn. The color is the red of molten co
The essence is AH. The seeds are PRE and DU.
At the time of non-realization, with A NRI and so forth, it is the cause of samsara. At the time of realization, there are TE O and so forth. Mixing these two is called "quasi-mixing, since b is as before."

The four nadis are the natural state of consciousnesses. The same text says:

The four aspects, and six particulars, in the middle of eight...
Four refers to the dharmata, wisdom, autonomy, and quality nadis. As for the particulars, there is yellow light existing as alaya consciousness, blue light existing as the mind conscio light existing as klesha-mind, and dark red light existing as the five sense-consciousnesses.
At the side of the yellow light are OM SU, and TRI. Covered by the blue light are HUM A and NRI. Covered by the red light are AH PRE and DU. The dark red light has the faults ar
A and NRI cause corruption of the breath. SU and TRI cause corruption of the nadis. PRE and DU cause corruption of the blood.
As for the arising of gods and human beings, by producing the mind consciousness, the see
A and NRI are embodied.

As for the arising of animals and asuras, by producing alayavijñana, the seeds SU and TRI a embodied.
As for the arising of the pretas and hell beings, from producing the five consciousnesses and klesha mind, the seeds PRE and DU are embodied.
Thus all the sentient beings of the six lokas individually exist.

In the center of the eight nadis in the heart center, is the essence of the nadis, like white silk very fine, like twisted single hairs of a horse's tail. The mixed essence of blood and breath, is very subtle, dharmakaya
bodhicitta having light of the five colors, the luminosity of dharmata. The Description of the

The splendid knot of eternity of excellent blazing light.

In the heart palace of the dharma field of Akanishta, the buddha embodying the tathagatas o families,
Samantabhadra, remains continuously for all time. The Two Examinations says:

The great wisdom has its dwelling in the body.
Conceptions are abandoned in the truth.
Universal wisdom pervades all things.
Embodied existence does not arise from the body

Also:

This is also known as great sugatagarbha.

The Uttaratantra says:

Because the perfect buddha kaya radiates
Because of being inseparable from suchness,
And because of having the gotra, all embodied beings,
Always have the essence of buddhahood.

The Dohakosha says:

Though there is something somewhere, in a certain place,
That does not entail that it must always be seen.

It is explained by the shastras of the capable ones,
That buddhahood in the body is not realized.

Buddhahood is the wisdom nadi. When all the essences of prana and mind are gathered to nirvana, spontaneous appearance, the house of light, the wisdom-lamp of the bardo, arises.
completely pure field of Akanishta called Gandavyuha. If yogins make an effort, all the essences of prana ar perfected there. The aspect of appearance, the five lights, and the aspect of emptiness, dharmakaya, one taste. The two accumulations of the path will be completed. As the two kayas manifest we become "er Akanishta."
The light of wisdom in the central channel and the nadis are one with this, in the sense that mind is the support of luminosity. How is this explained? From the central channel, in the center of comes very subtle light like ten separately divided single hairs of a horse's tail transparently existing, connectin pranas.
If it is made into a support, some masters say that this is the true central channel, so that the need not be combined in the central channel. Though they explain it that way, since as all the pranas central channel, the essence of the prana of the central channel must enter into the wisdom nadi, it is suitable fo connected.
At the time of death all the essences and pranas collect in the central channel. The pranas
the central channel are gathered into the ultimate essence, and from that luminosity is maintaine kayas and fields of the five families are taught to arise by the essence of this during five days of dhyana bardo. Therefore this essence is the very secret great ultimate secret. The Commentary of the Secret Drop says:

"In the center of the eight,"

They are therefore one. Thus the essences of the nadis go into the eight subtle nadis as if t licked up. Their shape is said to be like eight twisted cords.
The eight main essences, the ultimate nadi essences, are like white silk cords, with a shape cords.

In size, they are like ten divided hairs of a horse's tail. Within these, which are like white silk goes the blood essence of a vibrant vermilion like the mother's essence. Within that the essence of breath gold in a brocade, curls like steam. Within that the breath essence is light of various colors. The inte light is called the center. "Na," in, has the meaning that they abide within it.
In the center of that light abides the great bindu, bodhicitta. It is like precious jewel anthers i of molten gold or filled full of the white precious stone kekeru. It abides there with a color like the risin Since that is the essence of dharmadhatu, the cause of the absolute and relative, "I prostrate to that."
Since this luminous nature of mind is all-pervading, all beings are primordially enlightened.

are wandering in samsara, that mind does not move and is not harmed or degraded. By the it is no better than it was before. The Uttaratantra says:

Later as before,
Changeless dharmata.

The Fierce Lightning says:

Clouds of bodhicitta spread and pervade everywhere, as oil pervades sesame seeds.

Then also this is taught:

E Ma'o, Primordial Dharma completely pure.
Though it appears as variety, conceptually it is secret.
This is because its essence is inexpressible.
It is hard to teach to those who are not vessels.

E Ma'o, In the primordial purity of the three-fold world,
By faulty conceptions conceiving of ego, the root of samsara,
Beings who have aimlessly wandered over a very long time
Grasp at inappropriate objects of joy and sorrow.
By the power of errors of their wrong conception,

They wander among the turning wheels of samsara.
Without things of wrong conception there is bodhicitta.
Even that hellish machine is its inexhaustible ornament.
The five degenerations are places of happiness.
The five skandhas are completely perfected as the kayas.
The root of samsara itself, all our faulty conceptions,
Is explained to be the essence of enlightenment.
The outer and inner vessel and contents of the world
Are thus the father and the mother of the enlightened state

By that it is taught that all dharmas exist as bodhicitta. With that the teaching of the way of c impure
sentient beings is completed. Now there is the teaching that all is primordially enlightened.

The five skandhas, though apparently impure, have the enlightened nature of the five fathers elements
have the enlightened natures of their five consorts. All concepts are enlightened in the man bodhicitta, and there is not even an atom of dharmas other than that. The Secret Essence says:

E Ma'o,
As for the five-fold limbs of the vajra skandhas,
They are known as the five perfected buddhas.
The many dhatus and ayatanas
Are the various bodhisattvas appearing in person.
Earth and water are Lochana and Mamaki.
Fire and air Pandaravasini and Tara.
The space of sky is the consort of the Lord.

Everything in the three realms is the Dharma.
Without remainder this is the buddha field.
Dharmas that are other than buddhahood
Never will be found by buddhahood.

In particular, buddhahood is the luminous nature of mind. The Kunje says:

As for there being a buddha who is other than the mind,
This has never been taught by the King, the Doer of All.

It will not be taught later and it is not taught now.
Therefore we should know that mind is buddhahood

The Secret Assembly says:

External to the preciousness of mind,
There are no buddhas and there are no sentient beings.

The Establishment of Wisdom says:

Ultimate luminosity of mind,
Total purity of buddhahood,
Self-arising, unmade by anyone,
Having existed from all eternity.

In brief, all appearances are the mandala of body. All sounds are the mandala of speech. A apprehension is the mandala of mind. These three should be known. The Kunje says:

Kye! the teacher of teachers! The doer of all, the King,
Makes a display of the essence mandala of body.
Thus all the dharmas of appearance and existence
Have been displayed as the unborn state of dharmadhatu.
For the sake of their inmost meaning, “No accepting, no rejecting,”
This too is displayed by me, the doer of all, the King.

Kye! the teacher of teachers! The doer of all, the King,
Makes a display of the essence mandala of speech.
Thus are all dharmas, resounding with the voice of meaning,
Revealed to be the spoken word of unborn space.
They embody the inexpressible heart of speech.
This too is my display, as the doer of all, the King.

Kye! the teacher of teachers! The doer of all, the King,
Makes a display of the essence mandala of insight.
All concepts involved with knowing and remembering
Are seen as myself, the unborn, the doer of everything.
The body, speech, and mind of me, the doer of all,
Are mandalas resting in uncreated naturalness.

Having realized the meaning of this state
Perfected in a moment, without any need for arrangement,
One enters the essential heart of the self-existing.

Thus the appearance of variety is produced. Since it is natureless, it is exhaustion/perfectio mandala of the fundamental meaning should be known to be without producer or produced. Regarding mandala,
the same text says:

Kye, as for the mandala of me the Doer of All,
It is taught as a perfect self-arising mandala.
By perfecting the essence of all without remainder,
There is no birth and there is no proliferation
The uncreated mandala is perfect all at once.

Kye, in the center without error, essence of the meaning,
Samsara is perfected as the bliss of samsara/nirvana.
That is the mandala that is the root of all essences.
Realize that all mandalas are included in that.

Kye, the mandala of me the King, the Doer of All,
Is the perfect mandala of all without remainder.
By whoever perfects it, that will be realized
Learn the meaning of the uncreated mandala.

Kye by me the teacher of teachers, the Doer of All,
By the unborn mandala of bodhicitta,
All-pervading, without any coming and any going,
By realizing that one enters the meaning of the unborn.

Therefore, vajra beings, you as well as I,
Should realize the meaning that does not exist in the world.
Anyone who has the realization of that Will be empowered as the King, the Doer of All.

All the skandhas, dhatus, ayatanas and so forth, the viewpoint of everything that appears, a

the nature of the deities. There are no good and evil, or accepting and rejecting. From the view dharmata,
complexities of existence and non-existence are completely pacified. This is the fundament spontaneously present nature. By realizing that, all the dharmas of the phenomenal world o nirvana are known as the mandala. Whatever appears is cherished as wisdom. The Secret Essence sa

By the yogin who realizes the great perfection,
The origin of suffering is realized as the mandala.

By these the teaching of first resolving the view is completed.

B. the explanation of meditation practice, together with its action of ripening and freeing.

1. The brief teaching of how to do the meditation of the developing stage

There are five sections

a. Meditation in the style of being born from an egg

Second, within the practice of meditation, there are the stages of the power of ripening the g stages of developing and completion that liberate the path. From the three sections of extensive ex actions
associated with these and with the associated samayas, now there is the brief explanation o meditating in the developing stage:

There are four styles of practice that match with the four births.
To cleanse habitual patterns of being born from an egg,
By going to refuge and arousing bodhicitta,
And briefly doing the practice of the developing stage,
Complete the offerings that invite the field of merit.
And also by meditation on the absence of self-nature,
Previously completing the two accumulations,
Extensive meditation, through their being primordial,
On both the stage of development and the stage completion,

Is like an egg from which a bird will then be hatched.
Perform the short and elaborate development and completion.

In this first stage of secret mantra, in however many samadhis of visualized deities as we m patterns of the four modes of birth are trained and harmonized. These are taught as four. T

says:

There are four modes of birth that are to be purified.
Therefore, visualization has four different stages.
These are the greatly complex and the complex,
And those without and completely without complexity.

This is explained as it was clearly presented by the great master Vimalamitra. Those who a egg are as if twice-born. When one meditates on the samadhi of great complexity, first one goes arouses bodhicitta. One instantly visualizes oneself as the chief deity and consort. In the space in fr invites the mandala of the deities. One makes offerings and praises to that mandala, confesses evil deeds, rejoice turning of the wheel of dharma, supplicates for desirable qualities, and dedicates the merit. Then after on go to your own places," or meditates for a while in objectless meditation, one gathers the two accu merit and wisdom. This is the brief meditation.
Then, arising from emptiness and meditating on the mandala of the individual deities is the e meditation.

b. Meditating in the Manner of being born from a womb

From that, there is a brief treatment of meditation with few complexities:

In purifying vasanas of being born in a womb,
There is refuge, bodhicitta, and the seed from emptiness;
The symbol, then the body with its rays of light and such.
Then the extensive stages, as they were done before,
Development and completion do not have the brief version first;

As from prana and mind, and both the red and white bindus
Come oval, oblong, lumpy, becoming solid and so on,
Until at last the completed body has been born.

Just as for those who are born from the womb the body is born after being gradually comple
of development meditation first one goes to refuge and arouses bodhicitta. Then with the svab emptiness,
just as the red and white bindus gather together to constitute consciousness, there is the se the deity, for example HUM. Like the development of the embryo as an oval and oblong, from HUM com oblong and solidification, from the vajra as a cause of the body comes a mass of the five lights, and like Vishnu's body manifesting as a fish and a tortoise, from the light comes the body, and the meditation stage is completed.
Sometimes, from the seed comes a mass of light and syllables, from which the body is main
As
the brief developing stage and offerings to the field of merit are omitted, there are fewer com

c. Meditating in a way like birth from heat and moisture:

To purify patterns of birth arising from heat and moisture,
After refuge and bodhicitta, just from speaking the name
The luminous deities will arise from emptiness.
Then one meditates on development and completion.
As life can be born from a combination of heat and moisture,
And thus its birth will be accomplished with great ease,
There is no need for complexities of seeds and symbols.

Just as birth from heat and moisture is easily established, having gone to refuge, and arouse just from saying and remembering the name of the deity it is visualized from emptiness. Here th
from the seed syllable up to the body are omitted.

d. Meditation in the manner of spontaneous birth:

To purify the vasanas that lead to spontaneous birth,
Development and completion are clear instantaneously.
As what has spontaneous birth will be born in a moment,
Meditation in the stages of development and completion
Need not come gradually from the name [of the deity.]

As what is spontaneously born is instantly established, on remembering the deity the medita clear and complete. The deity is visualized from the name alone and complexities are unnecessa

e. Which style should be chiefly used:

Thus when we deal with these four styles of meditation,
Chiefly in meditating in these ways which are summarized,
In order to cleanse the vasanas, meditate on them all.
In particular the beginners should use the birth from an egg.
When there is some steadiness, use the birth from a womb.
When steadiness is great, use birth from heat and moisture.
When we are truly familiar, becoming perfectly steady,
Then we should use the instant style of spontaneous birth.

Persons should train in all the styles of meditation. Chiefly we should use the style of womb Beginners
should meditate from stage to stage, training in these ways of meditation as summarized. M meditated
many times on the developing stage, one should then chiefly train in the completion stage.
respectively should precede the first, second, third, and fourth of the four ways of meditating in the comp

2. the ways of entering into the completion stage,

From the four sections

a. The ways with and without appearance.

Now we shall enter into the completion stage:

From the time they appear, their nature is simplicity.
As for the stages of unwavering form-meditation,
Beginners should stop attachment to the developing stage.
Mere appearance will remedy attachment to true existence.
Stabilized ones should break attachment to completion.
Emptiness will remedy fixating characteristics.

Thus, having gathered in gradually there are nada and bindu, and very fine life letters like a divided hairs of a horse's tail. That dissolves into dharmadhatu and rests there. Beginners meditate completion stage. By that conceptual attachment to the individualizing marks of things of the developin overcome. In the developing stage, rest in motionless mind without emanation or gathering. The arising of th clarity, and non-thought is the completion stage with appearance. As the object of meditation for those familiarity or stabilization, it produces the antidote to one-sided attachment to emptiness.

b. The way of arising of developing and completion without gathering or separation.

Of this meditation:

Later whatever appears is the means of development.
Awareness without a grasper is the prajña of completion.
There is never anything added or anything taken away.

Here as before, by becoming very familiar and stable, all activities become appearance/emp sound/emptiness, insight/emptiness. This is prajña in which natures are not truly existent. naturally non-conceptual shamatha is the completion stage of the pure nature. The completion stage of m tantras is taught in accord with this. This is from the general viewpoint. Some mahayoga texts have five sta

1). a self-blessing stage
2). a vajra variety stage
3). a jewel fulfilling stage,

4). a jalandhara (net-holder) stage,
5). an inconceivable stage.

In the first, to produce shamatha, meditate in the developing stage, within the heart center v bindus as globes of light.
Externally the motion of prana arises. After the time of the colors of the five elements has pa
meditating
in that way, all external sickness, dons, evil deeds, and obscurations are purified.
At the time of entering internally, similar to attainment of the buddha qualities and so on, in t
the heart
center, mental grasping is quickly uplifted by establishing the wisdom of non-thought.
As for attaining the ordinary and supreme siddhas, the Five Stages says:

Always there within the heart,
The single bindu has no arising.
For the person who becomes familiar with that Wisdom will certainly arise.

Bindu has already been explained.
Second, in the vajra variety stage, the pranas are united. In the center of the five chakras m five symbols of the five families. In the head is a wheel, in the throat a jewel, in the heart a vajra navel a lotus, and in the secret space a sword. During the meditation, the buddhas of the ten directions and so fo the respective symbols. By meditating that the mind grasps them, shamatha arises.
Third, in the jewel fulfilling stage, by the play of coemergence or great bliss, from within the f
the wisdom of the four joys is produced and wisdom is recognized.
Fourth, in the jalandhara stage the symbols of the five families become the bodies of the dei descent of amrita from the place of union of the deities and their consorts, the body is filled. By the b fire of tummo burning the HAM syllable, the mind is focused on bliss. By the firelight of wisdom of tummo
the tathagata is burned and consumed. The Dakini Ocean says:

As tummo burns at the navel
All the joints will be consumed.
As the eyes and such are burned
By that the bindu drips.

As it goes to the ends of the nadis
Of which there are 72,000
Like threads woven into in a net
By its passing the taste is experienced

By that there is realization of union and the focus of samadhi increases.
As for the inconceivable stage, In the center of the globes of light in the heart, from visualizin the individual seed syllables of the deities, light is emanated. It touches all of samsara and nirva and beings, all the realms of the animate and the inanimate, melt into light and dissolve in the light in the he The body dissolves into light. The light dissolves into the HUM, and that into the shabkyu. That disso body of the syllable, then into the head and the crescent, the crescent into the bindu, and the bindu into non-conceptual space which is the source of bindu.
In emanation, from emptiness, expand that these proliferate from one to another and are as meditating that they dissolve again, the meaning is inconceivable dharmata, as the union of shamatha.
Having attained that is enlightenment.
Beginners meditate stage by stage. Having done that training, they train as the stages arise not necessarily in the order they were taught.

c. The process of meditation in the developing stage and completion stage.

What is accomplished in these ways of meditating in the developing and completion stages?

Development stops attachment to appearance as truly existing.
Completion abandons the thought that it is just illusion.
When there is no attachment to appearance or emptiness,
Then there is the pure nature that is without duality,

Between the stages of development and completion.

The developing stage meditates on the external environment as the palace. Grasping the o
of objects as individuating characteristics of earth and rocks and so on is abandoned. By med inhabitants, sentient beings, as gods and goddesses, attachment to the individuating characteristics of s desire and hatred toward them is abandoned. A clear view of one's own skandhas, dhatus, and ayatan that this is primordially so. By that obscurations of rupakaya are abandoned. The collection of merit is arising of
the samadhi of shamatha and so forth has many purposes.
In the three tantras of external mantra, yoga tantra and so forth, the developing stage is sea mudras. There is meditation on the four objects of mindfulness body, feeling, mind, and dha illusion-like, and the gathering together of meditation and post-meditation. Though these occur, the profoundest absent in these vehicles.

In anuttara tantra, prajña and upaya beyond the scope of thought are taught. By meditating stage, there is little attachment to the previous developing stage. All dharmas, like illusion, a abandoned. Free from all conceptual thoughts of "this and that," having purified the obscurations of dharmakaya, one natural state.

This is realization of mahamudra.
Here the nature is the primordial existence of the ground, the nature of the vajra body. Havi
the nature of mind and the essence of reality, one becomes familiar with them. Here one deper
as the upaya and the body of another as the prajña or wisdom-consort. One's own body is used in body, dream, luminosity, bardo, transference and so forth. These completion stage practices establish en through effort in one's own mind without dependence on another.
When using the body of another, the yogin goes to the pith of prana, nadi, and bindu, and m
the path. As for the purpose, by abandoning attachment to the developing stage, the divine nat and by the particular means employed, bliss, emptiness, and non-thought arise. By everything being b whatever appears arises as dharmata. By realizing the wisdom of co-emergence, doubts are washed beyond

measure.

As for the teaching of the nyams, the experiences, of buddhahood:

Here the vajrayana reaches its ultimate end.
Those persons who are sharp in the powers of their minds
Will attain to perfect buddhahood within this very life.
Then in every world where there are beings to be tamed,
Their various buddha activities will be spontaneous.
This secret path of directness is utterly profound.
It is the path that is taken by countless vajradharas.
It is the path that should be used by fortunate ones
Who want to be liberated within this very life.

This path liberates those of sharp powers of mind within this very life, so that before long the
of a buddha spontaneously arise for whatever beings there are in the world to be tamed. The Ta Secret says:

As for the siddhi of unsurpassable mantrayana,
When someone practices totally using the highest effort,
There is enlightenment within this very life.
Then the teacher acts within the field of beings.
This is the ultimate path directly to enlightenment,
As it was formerly traveled by countless vajradharas.

Those of good fortune who desire liberation should depend on this path, and strive appropri effort.

d. The power of ripening the ground,

There are three sections teaching the stages

1) As for its being received in general and in terms of our own tradition

Now as for the teaching of the stages of the power of ripening the ground, mantrayana:

Using whichever of these tantras arouses devotion
Let us establish the state of perfect enlightenment.
First consider the precepts taught in each tradition
Of initiation, permission blessings, and empowerment.
By doing so our minds will be completely ripened.

"Abhishiñca" occurs when defilements are washed away, and by powers being established " arises. Because defilements in the being of students are purified, powers are produced of la enlightenment of buddhahood and meditating on particular incidental paths. After the details of the initiator permission blessings, empowerments, and so forth of the various individual tantras have been explaine practice.
In the initiatory rites and permission blessings of kriya tantra, depending only on the mandal
are empowered by the water of the vase and merely by the mantra permission blessings being b suitable
vessels for meditating on the view.
In upa tantra, by the empowerments of the five abhishekas of insight, six with the discipline a disciples
become suitable vessels.
In yoga tantra, preceded by the five abhishekas of insight, when the vajra master abhisheka
completely bestowed, students become suitable vessels. Here the empowerment uses a sand-painting cloth, one of flower clusters, or the body mandala. By the lesser empowerment there is a mandala middle one uses only heaps of flowers or symbols of the deities and so forth. The highest, the body ma depending on the body, speech, and mind of the guru. The Ghanta says:

Though from two created essences

These students desire empowerment,
These beings are non-dual
With the self-existing mandala.

2) How the four unsurpassable empowerments are completely received

In these ways:

Within the excellent, secret path of the mahayoga,
There are the four empowerments producing ripening,
and development and completion, that bring us liberation.
The vase empowerment is that which purifies the body.
The secret one the speech, and prajñajñana the mind.
The word empowerment is that which cleanses habitual patterns.
Also by this empowerment the siddhis are conferred.
The first three of these complete the accumulation of merits.
The fourth empowerment completes the accumulation of wisdom.
The obscurations of kleshas and knowables are removed.
So through the ripening of gaining the four empowerments,
Cultivate liberation through development and completion.

In the tradition of mahayoga there are the well-known four empowerments:
1) The vase empowerment purifies defilements of body. One is empowered to meditate in t
2) The secret empowerment purifies obscurations of speech. One is empowered to medita chandali.
3) The prajñajñana empowerment purifies obscurations of mind. One is empowered to med emptiness, the wisdom of complete non-thought.
4) The precious word empowerment purifies all defilement. One is empowered to meditate natural state.

By the first three the accumulation of merit is completed. Obscurations of the kleshas are pu fourth the accumulation of wisdom is perfected. Obscurations of knowables are purified. If they ar paths and bhumis, the vase empowerment is the path of accumulation, the secret empowerment is the Prajñajñana is the path of seeing. By the empowerment in mahamudra the path of meditatio completing these four empowerments one is ripened. By meditating in the developing and c is freed.

3) The peak of all the yanas

Now from the teaching of the stages of secret mantra in general, in particular the peak of all entered according to the Non-dual Tantra of the Great Illusion:

Whoever wants to enter the vision of ati yoga,
Receiving full empowerment, possessing the samayas,...

First, in the stages of empowerment, Lesser ones use a sand mandala, and supreme ones e of the body of the vajra master. The great bliss mandala uses the mandala of the two bodie mother, and the details of the five families as depicted in the sand mandala. The Secret Tree says:

As for the mandala of mahasukha,
There are two ways of dividing and also five.
If those who have faith have also completely entered,
Desire and pleasure become equanimity.

Here the ten empowerments of benefit and the five empowerments of power are completed.

according to the same text they are those of the:

1). head ornament
2). crown
3). garland,
4). armor
5). victory banner
6). mudra,
7). parasol
8). vase,
9) eating the five meats
10) drinking the five amritas.

The second five are:

1). The empowerment of the listener, the student
2). The empowerment of the explainer, the teacher
3). The empowerment of buddha activity for the benefit of others
4). The empowerment of the universal word of a vajra king
5). The empowerment of the supreme secret

These fifteen are divisions of the four empowerments. The ten including the vase empower to the action of the vase and are collectively called the vase empowerment. From the secre

supreme
secret and prajñajñana empowerments arise.
As for the word empowerment, after the empowerment of the universal word of a vajra king
the
explainer and buddha activity empowerments are the action of this.
As for the listener, since upaya is increased, it is included within these. If the way of inclusio differently, the benefits will not arise, so do not proceed in that way.
If these empowerments are completed or also if other unsurpassable empowerments like the one has the good fortune of practicing the path of these.

e. The details of the associated practice and samaya are explained as additional points.

Now from the two sections on the practice of mantra and samaya,

1) the samayas connected with the empowerments will be explained.
a) The essence of samaya is the particular excellent thought of guarding without faults the g
of entering into mantra.
b. The divisions are the root and branch samayas.

a) The essence of samaya

Within the first are the three samayas of body, speech, and mind.

1) The body samaya

In the body samaya one meditates on the bodies of the deities, and refrains from unwholesc such as cutting off life, taking what is not given, dirty deeds, and all their aspects.

2) The samaya of speech

In the samaya of speech one recites mantra and eliminates the four unwholesome kinds of s aspects.

3) The mind samaya

In the mind samaya, one meditates in profound samadhi and refrains from the three unwhol mind and all their aspects.

In brief, in bodily practice of ordinary aspect of body, speech, and mind, does not contradict
true
body, speech, and mind. If one divides these rather briefly, the Wheel of Entering into the D Array of Samaya says:

From beings' thirty-three ripenings,
There are three samayas of mantra.
To fix the particulars,
Of body, speech, and mind,
Each of these has nine.
They are known from the aspects
Of entering and action.

Samayas of body, speech, and mind exist because beings exist primordially as buddhas. S attained
from not transgressing these, they ought to be kept. The threefold samayas of body that ou outer, inner and secret. Each of these is again divided into outer, inner, and secret

1). In the outer of outer one abandons taking what is not given 2). The inner of outer is aba deeds
3). The secret of outer is abandoning the cutting off of life.

The Mansions of the Vajra Essence Tantra says:

The outer samaya of body
Is divided into three.
By taking what is not given
The external is transgressed.
The limbs of the sign of transgression
Are outbreaks of disease.
An unbearable variety
Arises in the body.

Dirty deeds are the inner
As a sign of transgressing this
There will be diseases
Arising in the senses.

Cutting off life is the secret.
As a sign of transgressing this Disease of the vessel of meaning
Will be experienced by yogins.

Regarding the means of keeping these, the Tantra of Unbroken Samaya says:

By a yogin who has the signs,
For outer of outer activities
Seven clay sculptures and drawings, will liberate evil deeds.

Samaya is guarded by making colored statues and paintings of the gods seven times. Also

The way for the inner of outer
Is sculpting seven statues
By consecrated efforts
And offering them to the guru.

One should make seven statues of the deities of mantra and offer them to the guru. Also th

If the sign has arisen
Of secret of outer transgression,

Nine or eleven vajras
Or bells should be offered the guru.

As for the outer, inner, and secret of inner, the Golden Mansion Tantra says:

As for outer of inner, relatives
And their fathers and mothers,
As well as one's own body
Should never be degraded.

The inner of inner, in general,
For the greater and lesser vehicles,
Is desiring to enter, and entering and as for entering,

Degrading or trying to harm
The grasped reflection of body,
If the ornament is degraded,
The body of buddhahood
Redeems it a hundred times.

For the secret of inner,
Because one's personal body
Is the mandala of deities,
Eat medicine and food
That have been mixed with poison.
Even if stabbed by weapons,
Be without the path of defilement,
Or receiving a hundred bodies,
Later they will experience
the torments of the hot hells.

In amending these violations, confess with remorse. As for the three of the secret of body, t Edifice
of the Sun and Moon Tantra says:

If with vajra brothers and sisters
One defiles the body ornament,

Offending with striking hand
If another enters into it
This will increase the cause
Of the unremitting Hell.

Within it greatly mixes
And widely proliferates.
Even just as a joke
Striking or trying to strike

If even in a dream,
One so endangers one's consort,
Until one has confessed it,
This equals the actual deed.

The secret of secret, the guru
Do not defile even his shadow
In Guru's pure presence also One should never grasp a weapon.

Do not extend hands and feet
Or lie down in his presence.
Sit properly cross legged
And do not turn the back.

Shoes, and seats, and mounts
And elegant ornaments
Such things as parasols
Ought to be left behind.

In the guru's pure house also
One should never hold
Or keep within the hand
A weapon or a stone.

100,000 times worse
Is disrupting the teacher's house,
And doing any evil deed

That makes a mock of his body.

Such limitless evil deeds
As carelessness with the guru
If one does not scrutinize them,
Will have limitless consequence.

Even if one had attained
The supreme kayas of fruition
The ripening of this Would be indescribable.

Evil deeds involving the guru involve karma a hundred thousand times heavier than others. confess them continuously for a whole day. Even if they were not actually done, anything in should be confessed before him.
The samayas of speech are three times three in a similar way.

1). In the outer of outer, abandon speaking falsely.

The Edifice of the Wheel Tantra says:

By devoted practice of mantra,
Beings are purified.
By having spoken false words
Because of selfish desire

And having taken delight
In the speaking of such words,
We will lose the ability
To recite mantra genuinely.

With others our speech will be impotent.
By harming our own speech
The tongues of other beings
Will descend on us like vultures.

With a body covered with moles.

We will live in the north.
We will experience suffering
In various lower realms.

2). The inner of outer is not speaking slander.

The same text says:

Those beings who dwell in mantra
But tear at others with slander,
When they teach the dharma
Will never gather a retinue.

Whatever they do goes wrong
If this is not analyzed,
They will make many enemies.
Who stab their bodies with weapons.

Having died and been reborn,
They will have bodies with claws.
Then they will experience
A succession of lower realms.

3) The secret of outer is not speaking harshly of others.

The same text says:

Speaking harshly builds up karma
Both earlier and later
Beings without kindness are angry
Even with their friends.

They overturn even the Dharma.
When they die and transmigrate
These very arrogant people.
Will go to the lower realms.

As for the inner:

4). If one reviles those who speak the Dharma, that is the outer. 5). If those who practice, t inner.
6). If those who meditate, that is the secret.

The Array of Samaya Tantra says:

Those who glorify and denigrate
And speak reviling words
Of those who are abiding
In the discipline of mantra,

And of those who teach the Dharma
And of practitioners,
And those who meditate,
Diminishing others' discipline,

Diminish their own possessions
Certainly forgetting
And totally overthrowing
The Dharma for themselves.

Against their expectations
They will then experience
Sufferings without limit
Within the lower realms.

7. The outer of secret is reviling and denigrating one's vajra brothers and sisters.
8. The inner is to speak disparagingly of the guru's consort and close retinue.
9. The secret is denigrating the guru. The Chagya Nyijor Tantra says:

With Vajra brothers,
the consort and retinue,
If they violate in speech
Within the three lower realms

For a hundred million kalpas
They will suffer especially

Harshly and unendurably.

Beings who experience this
As a later sign
Of what they formerly did,

In their successively experience.
By former deeds, during this life,
Their station will be low,
Even if formerly high.
As soon as they are reborn
They will experience this.

As for the karmic destiny
They have produced by that,
In this life as servants
The karma of speech they hear

Will come from the tongues of the retinue and other lesser beings
The stream of speech which is pure
Of the incidental will cease.

With the guru's wife and children,
And whomever is close to him,
If one violates the command and transgresses in one's speech
The karma is twice the former.

Of the guru in particular
If root and branch violations
Are spoken in one's speech,
If one has speaks exaggerations
Or denigrating words,
It is a thousand times worse.

The ripening is unbearable.
By gradations one becomes separate,

Torn away from the holy guru,
This occurs at once.

The samayas of mind are also three times three.

1). As for the outer of outer, ill-will is abandoned.

The Tantra of Receiving the Essence says:

Those who to vajra holders
Either others or themselves Harbor malicious ill-will
Their bodies will have lesions.
For every time they have done this,
Receiving 5000 bodies,
They will certain be born in hell.

2). The inner of outer is abandoning craving and malice.

The Meteoric Iron Blazing Like Fire says:

If for an ordinary being,
The mind of ill-will arises
Their evil deed will be equal
To an ordinary person
Who has cut off 300 lives.

If possessing signs of a teacher Embodied ones go wrong, with one who abides in mantra
It is a hundred times that;

With vajra brothers and sisters
It is seven times more;
With a guru of tantra
Still a hundred times more;
And with one's own root guru
A hundred thousand times.

3). The secret of outer is perverting the doctrine of oneself and others.

As for a person who does this, the Great Array says:

Of either the doctrines of oneself or others
If one makes a wrong path which degrades the Dharma,
One violates this root samaya of mind.
In the earthly realm the sufferings of fire
Will be experienced for a very long time.
By one's own wrong views of doctrine arising,
There will be no way to be free from hell.

From the three of inner mind,

4). The external is wrong action,
5). The internal is wrong meditation
6). The secret is wrong view.

What is wrong is to be abandoned. The Tantra of the Crystal Palace says:

Wrong view, meditation, and action
These are the great wrong path.
All the sufferings of beings
Will ripen within the mind.

As for the three secret ones,

7). The external is not paying attention to the meditation and action.
8). The inner is not paying attention to the yidam deity.
9). The secret is not paying attention to the guru and one's vajra brothers and sisters.

The Cast Lotus Expanse says:

One whose action of mind is frivolous Transgressing in the dharmas of attention
Who has not properly turned the mind to them,
With destroyed and violated intention

Will experience suffering in the Avici Hell.

Remedy violations of every aspect of these and try to confess them. That completes the tea samayas.

2) The five times five branch samayas,

a) The samayas of the five things to be known.

Since all dharmas are primordially enlightened, it should be known that:

1). the five skandhas are the five fathers,
2). the five elements are the five consorts,
3). the five consciousnesses are the five bodhisattvas,
4). their five objects are the five female bodhisattvas,
5). the five collections of thoughts are the five mandalas.

The Array of the Three Samayas says:

First as for the samayas of things that should be known:
The five skandhas, elements, and consciousnesses
The five organs, and their objects, and such things
Are in nature the deities and the mandala.

It is also explained like that in the Kunje.

b) The five samayas that are to be performed

These are the great samaya. By those who are capable, when they are performing benefits be cutting off life, taking what is not given, impure conduct, and false speaking. The same text says:

As for the samayas to be performed
Tana, gana, taking what is not given Dirty deeds, and false speaking,
As for its five aspects those wise in skillful means if they see that harm will come from not performing them
They will do them.

Also the Bodhisattva pitaka says:

For those who have great skillful means,
The kleshas are the limbs of enlightenment.

In accord with that explanation, without being bound up with one's own benefit, acting when opportunity to benefit others is as taught previously.

c. the samayas of the five things to be accepted,

Excrement, urine, rakta, white bodhicitta, and human flesh are the five essences. The form

As for the five samayas,
Of the five to be accepted
They are excrement, and so on, the five samaya substances.

Regarding their qualities the Vajra Tent of the Dakinis says:

Yogins who are relying
On immovability
Will abandon all diseases.
And always have great brilliance.
As for the vajra sun
It never will grow old.
Relying on vajra Dharma,
One has all one needs.
Creatures' bodily vajras
Are the king who possesses the meaning.
All splendid goals are accomplished
That yogin will go to peace.

By drinking the immovable Sustained 5000 fold.
One's throne will then express
Ten million vajra suns.
Times beyond all measure

In countless numbers of lives.
As limitless as space,
Being drawn by seven horses,
With two limitless vajra suns,
Are the roots of gathering a retinue.
If yogins depend on these,
They are equal to those of good fortune.

d. The samayas of the five things that are not to be abandoned

The five poisons or kleshas should not be viewed as enemies, as they are by the shravakas nature of wisdom, they should be brought to the path. The former text says:

As for the five samayas
Of not abandoning,
The five poisons of the kleshas,
Passion, aggression, and so forth,
As the great secret vajra samaya,
The five kleshas are transformed,
Becoming the five wisdoms.
These five poisons are not abandoned
But accepted as the five wisdoms.

If the five poisons are exhausted by skillful means they are not abandoned because:

1). They become associated with the path,
2). They are of the nature of wisdom,
3). They are primordially unborn space,
5). All dharmas are of the nature of equality without accepting and rejecting.

These are called the samayas of not abandoning. The ordinary forms of the five poisons are path even in vajrayana. In reality, when they are exhausted by skillful means, and bodhisatt into the path,

the purified kleshas are gathered into one.

e. The five samayas to be established

One makes an effort to establish the previous five topics within one's being. The same text

As for the five samayas
Which are to be established,
The five skandhas and five elements,
The consciousnesses and objects,
Are established as the mandala.

Perfecting the three samadhis
And the five aspects of ritual.
The mandala of the five families
Of victorious ones is established.

Our minds should therefore strive
In these samadhis and rites.

The three samadhis are:

1 the suchness samadhi
2 the all-illuminating samadhi
3 the cause samadhi

The five rites are:

1 visualizing the deities
2 reciting mantra
3 meditating in samadhi
4 abiding in samaya
5 offerings and torma

In general according to the Miracles of Secret Mantra the Secret Essence has five root sama samayas, and four great samayas, nineteen altogether. The root five are

1 not abandoning the three jewels
2 reverence for the guru
3 not cutting short mantras and mudras

4 being kind to those who genuinely abide on the mahayana
5 not speaking the secret to others

The same text says:

Not abandoning the matchless,
Reverencing the guru,
Not cutting off mantra and mudra,
Being kind to those Who abide on the genuine path,
Never telling the secret
To those who are outsiders.
These five are the root.

Within the ten branches are the five samayas of not abandoning. The same text says:

Ignorance and passion,
Aggression, pride, and envy
These are the five samayas
That are not to be abandoned.

As for the samayas of the things to be accepted it says:

The red and white essences,
Human flesh, and excrement
Are the pure vessel and essence
And should not be rejected.

The four great samayas are the fundamental four, regarding cutting off life and so forth.
In new translation mantra, samayas to be guarded and samayas to be performed are disting first, fourteen root downfalls and so forth are explained in their particular traditions. As for th knowing the nature of the five meats and five amritas, one should enjoy them.
The five meats are those of the cow, elephant, dog, human, and horse. The five amritas are semen, blood, and brains. and so on. As for the benefits of eating these, the Shri Guhyasar

As for the high samaya

Of eating human flesh,
The excellent three vajras
Will be established by that.

As for the high samaya
Of eating human shit,
One will be the leader
Of all the vidyadharas.

By the high samaya
of eating the flesh of cows,
One has the five attainments
Of the higher perceptions.

By the pure samaya
Of eating the flesh of horses,
One becomes a master
Of invisibility.

By the high samaya
Of eating the flesh of dogs,
All the host of siddhis
Are perfected and established.

By the high samaya
of eating the flesh of elephants,
One becomes supreme
A solid vajra sender.

Also:

The flesh of cows and horses
Should be eaten as food
If we eat no other food great minded bodhisattvas
And buddhas will be pleased.

also:

Excrement and semen,
Blood and all the others,
Should be offered to deities.
When this is done the buddhas
And bodhisattvas are pleased.

If one does not have them, make food in their form or visualize eating them. The same text

As for pure human flesh
If it is fully visualized,
One will gain all the siddhis
That are part of the secret body,
The secret speech, and mind.

also:

If none of the meats are there,
One can visualize them.
Performing this vajra union,
One will be blessed by the buddhas.

By practice of these actions like those of worldly degraded people, liberated from all attachm
have the virtues of being without good and evil, pleasing the dakinis and mahasiddhas, and so for
4) How to guard these samayas

They are guarded by means of mindfulness, attention and conscientiousness, by being uprig and reverence.
As for mindfulness, not forgetting the details of samaya, and what is permitted and prohibite them in mind. Day and night one makes vows of bodhicitta and confessing and vowing to refrain.
As for conscientious attention, having examined to see whether the three gates abide in sam anything that one does goes against samaya, one abandons it. What does not go against it As for being careful, as one is careful about great enemies and friends, when samaya is har danger of going to the lower realms, hold it very tightly.
As for shame, if ones samayas proclaimed before the guru are transgressed, thinking that n oneself, one should exhaust or avoid the slightest fault of the root and branch violations dep oneself.

As for decency the guru, yidam, dakinis, and great beings are decent individuals. If one thin been
agents of degradation, depending on others, one should guard against that.
As for guarding fear, having thought of one's faults of transgression against samaya, we sho
it
even if we die.
As for guarding devotion, inspired by the great benefit, devotedly guard samaya.

5) The meaning of the word, "samaya," dam tshig in Tibetan, has two meanings. If what is
is guarded, non virtue is burned away, "tshig." Also, if one transgresses what is holy in body, s one will be damned and burned in the fires of hell. The Tantra of the Array of Samaya says:

SA, in producing that level
If, MA, it is not transgressed,
All the siddhis will be bestowed.
YA, if this is weakened
DAM, it must be restrained
If this should be let go
That is called transgression,
TSHIG, if that is transcended,
We experience fires of suffering.

As for the benefits of guarding samaya, within this life all our wishes will be established, eve pleasant to us, all the dakinis will bless us, all the accumulations will be gathered, and no ob arise. Even if our effort and powers don't go the distance, as long as samaya is not transgressed, in seven live will certainly be liberated, attaining ultimate buddhahood. The Secret Essence says:

By abiding within the samaya of equality
The equality of the great perfection will be gained.

The two bad consequences of transgression within this life are that everyone will be unpleas

will be many diseases and obstacles. What we want will not be established. Even if it rains, little w forth-- everything we do will go wrong, and various kinds of unpleasantness will arise. Not to ment next life, we will go to hell. The same text says:

Those without root defilements
Need not struggle to cure them.
An instant of denying them
And faults will not arise.
But if there is transgression
Of the major root samayas
All practice will go wrong.
Various unpleasant fruitions
Are gathered in spite of ourselves.
If there is transgression
Of the branch samayas,
Without attaining fruition,
We fall to the lower realms.

The Two Examinations says:

Snakes who tell the secret
And thieves who steal the dharma,
Set fires all over the earth.

Also:

Plagues and calamities
And various obstacles,
Kings and fires and serpents
Floods, dakinis, and bandits
Vicious attacks of Döns
And agents of perversion.
Destroyed by such assassins
Beings will go to hell.

6) Means of confession

Now the means of confession are explained.

a) Divisions

Divided by time all transgressions are of four kinds:

1). Going against samaya is not longer than a day.
2). Less than a month is a fault.
3). A breach is more than that up to a year.
4). Up to two and three years is severance of samaya.

Transgressions up to these, if they are confessed with great exertion, are purified. It is taug confessions of those which cannot not be purified will not be received by one who is like the guru. The Tan of Samaya
says:

Generally for the different samaya transgressions
The division is distinguished by the time.
Going against samaya is violation
Which has lasted not longer than a day.
If one makes confession of the object
It is fully remedied by that.

A fault of samaya lasts up to a month.
It is remedied by strong remorse.
If one breaches samaya for a year
Uninterrupted confession will remedy that.
A longer time of up to two or three years,
Is said to be a severance of samaya.
It is repaired with immensely strong confession.

More than three years, is simply incurable.
If it is received, both master and student burn.
Certainly in the subterranean realm
They will only suffer continuously.

Transgressions are classified either depending on the essence or on time. Those known by transgressions of the root and branch samayas described before. For those depending on t transgression depends on how soon it was confessed. By teaching these, the divisions are fully explained amend, the
same text says:

Going against samaya is confessed
With the performance of a ganachakra.
Transgression is remedied by one's possessions.
Breaches are repaired with spouse and children,
With possessions and acts of body, speech, and mind.
Severance is remedied with one's life.

Faults up to a day are remedied by a ganachakra. Having joined one's palms before the gu say:

Guru, great vajra holder please consider us. For us by the power of confusion such and suc errors have arisen. These, which we purify by confessing, we supplicate you to purify.

Say this three times, with lamentation and remorse. Later commit yourself to keep trying no things
again. By the gate from which the transgression arose, as an antidote do homage and so fo
For violations up to a month, offer your cherished possessions to the person who was the ob with a ganachakra as before.

For those up to a year, in addition to that, impoverish yourself, and offer your cherished spou children.
Up to three years, also with strong effort accomplish heavy deeds of sacrifice for the sake of
and so forth.
Moreover, transgressions done in dreams, and bad lapses of slandering others should be to see what was said of others in speech or mind, even in fun, all these should be confessed. The

To the guru and close retinue
To vajra brothers and sisters,

Not the smallest evil
Of spoken words should be said,
In nuance or reality.
Or just in dream or mind,
They all should be confessed.

If actual and mental faults,
Remain ungrasped by memory,
Passed by and not confessed,
Pulled down by that halter
One goes to the lower realms.

When one has done these, one will be liberated from the transgression by: Performing feas
and service to the guru in body and speech, requesting empowerment, in the four periods doing mantra,
offering mandalas, trying to establish the ten virtues such as furthering life, reciting sutras ar
and so forth, expressing the virtues of others, telling one's hypocritical transgressions to all tantrikas in th directions, wishing for virtue, and pleasing those who rejoice in it, and meditating in samadhi and on kindness and immeasurables, etc.

To confess and remedy offenses worthy of hell, if this is done on the eighth day of the lunar transgressions up to that time will be remedied:

b) The Liturgy

In the space in front visualizing the guru, yidam, and assembly of deities of the mandala, pro offerings, and confess the evil deeds.
Then, from their body, speech, and mind, there arise red, white, and blue light rays. By thei into one's own body, speech, and mind, all transgressions and defilements are purified. After th obscurations
of all sentient beings are also purified, they become light and dissolve into the heart center o
Here, while the mind rests in equality like the sky, as one does the dedication, it is excellentl
that all transgressions will be purified.

As for the measure, if the obscurations have been purified, in dreams one will be dressed in reach the peaks of mountains, the sun and moon will rise together and so forth. That completes th samaya.

7) the conduct accompanying that

a) General

the benefits of the view and meditation, and the special qualities are established. As for the after one meditates in samadhi, guarding the experience in post-meditation brings the benefit of mixing meditatio
meditation.
Moreover in terms of the lesser conduct of shravakas and the supreme conduct of bodhisatt
for oneself,
by pacification and taming one binds non-virtue of body and speech. As the benefit for othe conduct of the six perfections.

the four teachings of the vast and extensive secret mantra for:

i). Beginners ii). Those for whom a little experience has arisen iii). Those with a little stability iv). Those who have attained great stability.

i). As for the first, chiefly activities between sessions are done. There are the yogas of food making tsha tshas, water offering to the pretas, mandalas, prostrations, and reciting sutras; seven fold se offerings of writing and such, the 10 dharma activities.
As for the practice, the preliminary part is arousing bodhicitta. The main part is the unborn. complete by dedicating the merit. As for the ten dharma activities, The Tantra of Realizing a of the Oral Instructions says:

Transcribing, doing pujas, giving, and listening;
Reading and comprehending, explaining, and reciting,

Contemplating and meditating on these things.
These ten acts of dharma have limitless merit.

ii). When a little experience has arisen through these, it is called the practice of Samantabh
the second topic, the practice of those for who this has arisen somewhat, the experience arising becomes of equal taste with post-meditation, joined with all the self-appearances of the senses. As with meditation of the developing stage, when one is meditating on the mandala of the yidam deity; in post-medita appearances are viewed as the illusion-like divine mandala. Become familiar with that. Within the meditation completion stage, whatever experiences of the nyam arise are joined in equal taste to all the self-appearances post-meditation. In brief, when the practitioner rises from meditation, and when various objects are experienced, at th form, sound, smell, taste, and touchables, all these are known to have the nature of the deities. T known as one's own mind. The mind is known as emptiness by the deities' divine realization and activity. B the divine offering of the play of wisdom. Practice this as dharmata dissolving into dharmata. All the s appearances of post-meditation become associated with the path. One's own five skandhas are OM, the five fath forth, their five objects are SUM, the five consorts. Obscurations and so forth are HUM, the offering de practices by visualizing these. The Secret Essence says:

The senses, and the limbs and consciousness,
Become the completely ripened syllable OM.
Meditate on the perfect mandala
And on the mandala of the wrathful ones.

Form and sound, smell and taste and touch
Become the completely ripened syllable SUM.
Meditate on the mandala of the consorts.
And on the mandala of the wrathful consorts.

Clothes and ornaments, eating, drinking, and songs,
Verses and dances, heaped-up clouds of feasting
Are known as HUM, when they are fully practiced.
The wondrously risen mandala is attained.

These are known as secret or insight activities. Whoever does them between sessions will beneficial experiences, and by relying on non-harming, harm will be abandoned.

iii). In the practice when experience is slightly stabilized, since these same experiences are
the discipline of insight should be practiced. This is with, without, and completely without compl

1))) The practice with complexity is undertaken by those who are young in age with much vi prajña. In a retreat house, doing sadhana, they do a ganachakra and confession. Have col yoginis, complete in their ornaments, equal to the number of deities, and having meditated on the de completion stages, at the end while doing songs and dances, manifest desire without clinging. In six mo it takes,
siddhi will be attained.
2))) The practice without complexity, is to be done by those of middle age, prajña, and vigor other before, practice alone with an authentic consort or perhaps two or three together.
3))) The practice supremely without complexity is done by those who are old with little vigor
prajña.
In solitary places like charnel grounds, abandoning physical consorts, they unite directly with co-emergent
wisdom herself, and do kusulu practice.
Except for eating, sleeping and voiding waste, they abandon all other activities, and practice
Moreover since these are practices of taming the kleshas by wisdom, these words are said.
there are many emanations and gatherings of insight, finally the various activities of "cutting the co
the city" of samsara will be completed, and the primordial activity of doing nothing at all will be establish the benefit off
these practices. The Song of the Oral Instructions of the Inexhaustible Treasury says:

Sometimes abiding in charnel grounds the "lamps" are practiced.
With fearless mind one sleeps in places haunted by pretas.
Associating with outcasts, the wheel of taste is straightforward.
There is no "who does what" and no grasping the proper rules.

There is an assembly of sacred celebration
Yogins come together with many songs and dances,
With flutes and other instruments, they make delightful music.
The assembly sing and dance with the six dances of heruka
Their minds are so uplifted that there is no sadness at all.

Wearing robes on their backs and ornamented with copper,
With wheels in the topknots clinging to their heads.
All their limbs adorned with ornaments of bone,
With elephant and tiger skins tied above and below,
Carrying khatvangas and sounding the bells in their hands.

They excellently perform the actions of the great secret,
The delightful celebration of intoxicated insanity.
Forbidden activities that are shameful to perform,
Like drunken elephants plunging hugely into a lake,
Performing degraded acts, they are freed like a flying arrow.

This is the called the "activity of all the protectors." The Guhyasamaja says:

All the acts of desire,
If one manages to do them,
Just as one would like,
By such a wealth of union,
One quickly gets enlightened.

Also:

Unbearable self-denial
Is not to be relied on.
Rely on desirable qualities
To quickly be accomplished.

What's more, by this path without accepting and rejecting, the buddhas are very pleased. T

Buddhas and bodhisattvas
And those who know the practice
Of the highest action of mantra,

Attain immovability,
Supreme in the highest Dharma,
By relying on all enjoyables.

That these practices are connected with the proper kinds of beings and times is important. I
this feast practice or try to perform the "activity of all the protectors," they will just go to the lower

8) Fruition: the two siddhis

a) relative

Having attained the benefits of the path by these activities, one will quickly attain the two sid
will be the eight karmas, eight ordinary siddhis, and so forth. As for the eight karmas, the Two Exa

The powers, higher perceptions, destroying hosts of enemies, driving away, killing, magneti
and enriching will really be performed.

As for the eight ordinary siddhis, the Vajra Tent says:

With these there is no problem.
The eye potion and swift running,
The wondrous enchanted sword,
Finding treasures under the earth,
Magic pills and flying,
Becoming invisible,
The elixir for making gold.
By pleasing the vajra-holders.
One quickly becomes accomplished.

The Secret Essence says:

The mudra of songs and dances
Goes in a rush to the sky.

The mudra of songs and verses,
Attains the siddhis of Dharma.

The mudra of dress and ornament,
Gains the blazing, invincible king.

The mudra of eating and drinking,
Grants wish-fulfilling amrita.

The mudra of vowels and consonants,
Makes anything into anything.

b) absolute

Supreme siddhi is the establishment of buddhahood. The Two Examinations says:

As for trikaya being within the body,
That should be expressed by the form of samsara.
As for trikaya being completely known,
That is expressed by the wheel of great bliss.

By that the explanation together with the subsidiary points is completed.

3. The path that produces liberation, the extensive explanation of the developing and compl

a. The developing stage

There are five sections.

1) Meditation on the protection circles:

Now we will enter into the details of meditation on the mandalas of samadhi. In a solitary ar place

Sitting in cross-legged posture upon a comfortable seat,
Having taken refuge and aroused the bodhicitta,
Then from within the nature of simplicity,
Where dharmas all are empty and ego does not exist,
The syllable HUM arises, then in turn from that,
Extending above and below, as well as in all the directions,
The deployment of the protective circle is huge and vast.
Its ten spokes have the marks of the ten wrathful deities.
The circle is splendid with blazing fire within and without.

First, as for the preliminaries, sit cross-legged on a comfortable seat. Visualizing the guru a assembly of deities of the yidam mandala in space, take the three refuges and as it is explained in the Sp Net:

Myself as well as limitless sentient beings,
Are in reality primordial buddhas,
By I who know that this is really so,
May supreme bodhicitta be aroused.

Having said that three times, with the SVABHAVA mantra all dharmas are established as th
This is the suchness samadhi. The Great Development and Completion says:

HUM
The nature of bodhicitta, which is completely pure
Is primordially unborn, and eternally all-encompassing,
Limitless, topless and bottomless, boundless in every direction,
A non-existing, unperceivable state of simplicity,
Inexpressible beyond thought, a perfect space of equality.

The Principal Heruka says:

This inconceivable space of dharmadhatu
Is free from all concepts and discursive thoughts.
This inconceivable space of dharmadhatu
Is not perceived, as space is not perceived.

Meditate like that. From the state of dharmakaya is manifested the auspicious coincidence o rupakaya. As all lesser productions are exhausted in the empty nature of the great perfectio necessarily unties the knot of attachment to things and characteristics. The Stages of the Path says:

By emptiness all paths are marklessness.
Attachment to ego-grasping is liberated.

Then, in order to untie the knot of one-sided attachment to emptiness, there is meditation in all-illuminating samadhi. The appearance of all dharmas is natureless. With illusion-like compassion, med while the natural luminous wisdom of self-awareness without a grasper. The same text says:

Get accustomed to the king of self-awareness,
And so supreme enlightenment will be gained.
Therefore after the suchness of seeing this Rest in the ground of arising of compassion.
Their rising in sequence like this is a certainty.

Then from the two sections on the cause samadhi, play is the circle of what is to be guardec in the limitless universal brilliance of the space of the sky, comes a ten spoked wheel. Betw center, in the empty space inside, which is equal to dharmadhatu, the ten spokes are transformed into ten moon seats marked with HUM.

Above is Humkara. To the east is Vijaya. To the southwest Blue Danda. To the south Yam southwest Achala. To the west Hayagriva. To the northwest, Not Attained by Others To the Amritakundalin. To the northeast All-Victorious in the Three Realms, below Mahabala.
Each of them has one face and two arms ornamented with all the supreme and nirmanakay right leg is bent and the left extended. They hold scepters symbolizing their respective famil and vajra. the two wrathful ones above and below are of the tathagata family. They hold wheels. Those to southeast, of the vajra family, hold black and white vajras. Those to the south and southwest, of the ratna fa yellow gems.

Those to the west and northwest, of the padma family, hold dark red eight petalled lotuses.
north and northeast, of the karma family, hold dark green crossed vajras and swords.
In the extensive version, in their three centers and six hands are the lady tramens. Their s the seats of the protectors of the ten directions Each has the five symbols signifying increase and so five families.
These should be learned elsewhere.
As for the main topic, the cause samadhi: Having meditated on oneself briefly as the chief c palace, whether visualized or not, as empty. It is joined with the meditation of the seed syllable of vi deity.

2) Meditating on the mandala

Above and below the center of this protective circle, in the great space between the spokes
is one of the ten wrathful ones, in the center is a four-spoked wheel from the transformation of

In the center is the great mandala of Samantabhadra.
There are four sides, and four gateways, topped by aches.
The five-colored walls have ledges where there are the five sense-pleasures.
The cornices have garlands with jeweled pendent strings.
The eaves are decorated with balustrades and railings.
Ornamenting the dome is a precious-jewel vajra.
There are eight charnel grounds that surround the mandala.
In the center there is a seat of a lotus, sun and moon,
Supported by lions, elephants, horses, peacocks, and shang shang

This is the visualization of the support, the palace. The display of the field and palace is wit luminous
nature of mind is. This is the dwelling place of Samantabhadra. Moreover within each of th is the mandala of Samantabhadra. Meditate on this as being as limitless as the sky.
To the right and left of each of the four gates, are the two pillars of the gateways. The three liberation are in every direction.

The body of the palace is cubic. The five layered wall is blue, green, red, yellow, and last wh five are transparent like a rainbow. The four raised areas are the four wisdoms, the mirror-like wisdo
As a symbol of the dharmadhatu wisdom, in the middle is a circular vase pervading the whole of space. A walls are the precious cornices. On top of those are the precious eaves in the form of little dome-like outside of which are variegated chains of garlands and pendants of jewels and pearls. Moving with the sun a supporting the chains, is a precious railing, built in the shape of chörtens.
In the middle is the vase like a circular raincoat. the shrine hall's stratified roof above the ea covering the internal space, has a roof in two stages, above, in the center, center and on the four sides sp five pointed vajra fence. It is marked at the top with a vajra and precious jewel finial.
At each side of the gates in the four directions two pillars support the archways. Each archw layers, adorned with various ornaments. On top of them is a wheel turned by two deer, at whose ce of precious substances.
At the four corners are victory banners and on long poles are hanging pennants. From the e stories tipped with precious bells, are lifted garlands stretched from the center of the vajra finial to th the archways, from their jingling giving a pleasant sound.
There are Jeweled yak tails and silk tassels , with precious staffs and sun and moon finials.

kinds of deities and divine ornaments, and heaps of offering clouds from all the ten direction Outside the outer walls are ledges of desirable qualities, red where many transparent-appea goddesses on sun and moon seats pour offerings of the five desirable qualities with a flouris
Then there is a courtyard or field, green appearing around which, in the eight charnel ground self-arising stupas, Deje Tsegpa and so forth, and Garab Dorje (Prahevajra), Manjushrimitra, Pa Vimalamitra, and so forth, the eight teachers. The charnel grounds are adorned with eight fi eight clouds,
eight trees, eight lokapalas, eight deities, eight nagas, and so forth.
In the center of the palace is a throne whose center is adorned with a lion, the east with an e south with a horse, the west with a peacock, the north with a shang shang. On that is a sun, moon

In the other places of the deities, meditate that there are self-arising lotus, sun, and moon seats equal to the deities. The Secret Essence says:

Wisdom is visualized in the four directions and center.
With the spontaneous presence of the limitless mandalas,
By yogins with realization of the great perfection,
The mandala of the source of arising is realized.
A wheel with four spokes and a rim, a courtyard adorned by a cube.
Having square gateways, with music like heaps of various clouds.
This is adorned by forty-two different mandalas.
Great lion, elephant, horse, and garuda thrones float in space
With sun and moon and lotus or jewel seats.

Here as the garuda and peacock both are alike in overcoming poison, there is no distinction purification in overcoming the poison of desire.

The four great layers of the archways are divided into halves by sub-layers making eight. The Fierce Lightning of Illusion says:

In the space which is the space of the human mind
The edifice of the four elements is spontaneously present.
On top of that arising from the four kinds of jewels
Spontaneously present and completely immeasurable,
As for the beautiful ground which is supported by that,
It is carpeted with various kinds of jewels.

Giving way when pressed down, raising back on lifting,
On that there is the edifice of the palace itself.
With its cubic shape it is very beautiful.
It is made of four different kinds of precious jewels.

In the center of the structure is a four spoked wheel,
Also made of four different kinds of precious jewels.
At the peak of the vase is the crest ornament of dharma,

Variegated like the feather of a peacock.

Each of the four gates is adorned with an arch.
At the sides are eight pillars holding up the archways.
At the center of each is a vertical four spoked wheel.
The navel supports a tree made of precious substances.
The squares of the courtyards are beautifully brilliant.
The precious light rays collect together like a staff.

The deities have seats of a lotus, sun, and moon.
They sit on blazingly brilliant excellent jewel seats.
The foot supports of the precious thrones are beautiful.
The excellent ornaments that adorn this wondrous palace
Blaze with suns, and moons, and various precious jewels.

Canopies, victory banners, food, and parasols,
Flowing silken streamers and long garlands strung with pearls,
Covered with ringing bells and the finest yak tail whisks,
Adorned with various kinds of musical instruments.

The assembly of worldly deities is beautiful.
These and other ornaments are inconceivably excellent.
The four gates of the palace are adorned with elephants.
The silk tassels hanging from the archways
Are brilliant with a cascade of golden bells,
And chains with the symbols of the three excellent jewels.

The front of each gate is adorned with matching potted palms.
They have fine form and fragrance, and shine with radiance.
In these potted palms are cuckoos and so forth
Auspicious birds whose melodious voices resound with song.

In front of each gate is a washing pond of excellent shape,
Whose water fully possesses the eight limbs of excellent taste
In each are inconceivable countless gods and goddesses.

Outside the surrounding walls of this palace of deities
Are peaks and places for walking of indescribable beauty.

These and so forth are inconceivably excellent.
Primordially self-established without needing to be sought.

If this mandala is associated with the three purities of ground, path, and fruition, the ground sentient beings exist like that primordially. Therefore the four gates are the four immeasurables. Th are the four foundations of mindfulness. The five-fold wall is the five wisdoms. The eight pillars are the eight-fold noble path. The bells, collections of za ra or bakuli, garlands of suns and moons, yak tails and jew five senses and powers. The parasols are dharmadhatu. The wheels are the four truths. The cornices are nature of mind.
The garlands and pendants are the seven limbs of enlightenment. The eaves are the great stupas of the railing are inconceivable dharmata. The circular vase is the wisdom of dharmadhatu. The f four excellent wisdoms. The five seats are the essential purity of the five poisons. The vajra and jewel fin primordial luminous nature of mind. The eight charnel grounds are the eight consciousnesses. The eight teache self-arising wisdoms. The eight fires are the completely torment of false conceptions. The eight trees a natures of the kleshas. The eight ponds are the eight-fold purifying path. The eight deities are the eight ga The eight nagas are the assembly of eight qualities. The eight lokapalas are the eight collections of n wisdom. That faults at the time of impurity and enlightened virtues correspond two by two is kindness. For exam kleshas are counted as an aspect of the five wisdoms.
If they are connected to the path, they are associated with the thirty-seven factors of enlight four archways are the four foundations of mindfulness. The four tassels or ribbons are the four g abandonments. The four ornaments of wheels and so forth are the four legs of miracle. The five-fold wall is the f The cornices, garlands and pendants, eaves, railings, and overflowing containers are the five powers. The lion and so forth, plus the sun and moon are the seven limbs of enlightenment. The eight pillars are the the noble path.

The stairs by which the gates are entered are the six perfections. The four pillars are the fo immeasurables. These three together at each gate are the three gates of liberation. These are the virtues from the accumulation through the path of meditation.
If it is connected with the fruition, the connection is with the qualities of the level of buddhah for the 37
factors of completing the path, from this way of connecting, in particular the four fearlessnes lion-thrones. The ten powers are the elephant thrones. The ten faculties are the peacock thrones. The four le the horse thrones. That all knowables are unobstructed is the shang shang thrones. The five wisdom
The
inexhaustible wheel of ornament of body, speech, and mind is the swirling light rays. The pr beings are the parasols. The matchless finial and so forth are adornment by the ultimate buddha qualities.
arranged as in the
Net of Illusion. The details are as extensively explained there.
Though some tantrikas say that these things that are connected are not really in the mandal
of mantra is a wrong conception. Here the beautiful symbols appear like reflections in a mirror of display of these qualities, the palace and deities naturally-arising like a rainbow should be known to spontaneously. When the ground is free from all obscurations, the power of self-appearances of Akanishta actually
The Net of Illusion says:

The inconceivable self-existing mandala
By which all sentient beings are consecrated,
Possesses the perfection of all mandalas
Along with their environments and inhabitants.

c. Meditating on the deities

Now we shall discuss the mandala of the inhabitants, the deities. Within this palace, on thro

so forth, from the transformation of the seed syllables of the individual deities:

There are the deities of the five families with their consorts There are also eight male and ei sattvas.
There are also four male and four female door-keepers.
The buddhas of the six lokas are in their proper places.
Their bodies, perfect in color, scepters, and ornaments,
Emanate limitless light rays to the limits of the directions.

In the center is Vairochana together with Akashadhatvishvari, dark blue. In the east is Aksh
with Mamaki, white. In the south is Ratnasambhava together with Buddhalochana, yellow. In th together with Pandaravasini. In the north is Amoghasiddhi together with Tara.
On the ground below them is a four-spoked wheel. There the five families abide. Outside square and four square patterns. At each of the bordering corners inside and out there are eight altogether.

At the southeast corner is Kshitigarbha and Lasya, the goddess of grace green-blue. In the Akashagarbha and Mala, dark blue and blue In the northwest are Avalokiteshvara and Gita
are Samantabhadra and Gandhe green-yellow.
On the edges of the courtyards are the six buddhas. At the east gate are Yamantaka and hi south gate are Vijaya and consort At the west gate are Hayagriva and his consort. At the no Amritakundalin
and his consort. They stir up the continuum a little so that it will unite.

d. How to meditate on the great mandala of the environment and inhabitants.

In particular as for its being taught that action and doer are displayed in the courtyard, this courtyard of Vairochana's heart:

Within the heart-center of the principal deity,
Ground-Samantabhadra is being embraced by his consort.
His body is adorned with the major and minor marks.

In color he is like a spotless sapphire sky.
He is seated in cross-legged posture in a blazing globe of colors?
Meditate that from this light rays are emanated.
They purify the vessel and essence of the world.
All is completely pure as the gods and goddesses.

In the heart center of Vairochana on a sun and moon disk is Samantabhadra, in meditation w dark blue. By the emanation of light rays of all colors, all the environment and inhabitants o phenomenal world become one with the palace of deities. Meditate that all dharmas become of the nature of th
Akanishta
Gandavyuha. As this is joined with the texts, the Fierce Lightning says:

In the numerous host of wisdom deities
Who are the inhabitants of this palace
The deities are united with their consorts.

At the center in the heart of the glorious palace
Is Vairochana along with his mudra consort.
They are of the color of Indranila.
As their emblem they hold wheels in their hands.

In front of that hero is Vajrasattva with consort,
Having the colors of conch shell and of crystal.
As their sign they hold vajras in their hands.

To the right is the Bhagavan Ratnasambhava.
He is of yellow color like Jambunada.
As his sign he holds an eight sided jewel.

Behind is lord Amitabha, colored like ruby.
As his emblem he grasps a crimson lotus.

To the left is the lord Amogasiddhi.
With a body color like Indranila.
As his emblem he is bearing a sword.

They are all adorned with peaceful ornaments,

And are wearing the crown of the five families.
They are sitting in full lotus posture
With long necklaces and customary armlets.
Their bracelets and their earrings are exquisite.
The major and minor marks are all complete.

The consorts who are embraced with the left arm
Are Samantabhadri and Lochana Mamaki, Pandaravasini, and Tara.
They embrace the lords of upaya with the right hand.
With the left they grasp their signs and bells,
With customary ornaments like the fathers'.

The spokes of the wrathful wheel are self-existing.
In front of it there is a beautiful rise.
In the deities' hands are vajras of light blue.
Their sign is the three pointed vajra that they hold.

To the right of these is Kshitigarbha.
Green-blue in color grasping a precious sprout.
Behind this mandala is Akashagarbha.
He is blue and holding his symbol, a sword.

To the left embraced by beautiful Gita.
Lord Avalokiteshvara is light red.
He grasps a lotus, his customary sign.
His topknot is adorned with jñanasattvas.
He sits in the cross-legged position of the sattvas
Adorned with the customary ornaments.

Embracing these above four deities
Are the consorts Nritya, Lasya, Mala, and Gita.
Their right hands by upaya grasp the principals.
The left are in dance mudra, with mirror, and mala
They have a vina; and their ornaments
Are like those of the principal deities.

As for the beautiful squares that are at the borders

They are white to signify kindness or maitri.
They are adorned with beautiful snake-wood gandis.

In the square that is on the southern border
Is Nirviranavishkambin who is blue,
Holding in his hand a dharmachakra.
Beautiful on the border to the south-west
Is light red Mañjushrikumara.
He holds as his symbols a lotus and sword.
Beautiful on the border to the north-west,
Is Samantabhadra yellow-green in color.
His emblems are a jewel and ear of grain.
At the corner of the northeast intermediate direction
To the left of these who were just described above
Embracing these above four deities
Are the consorts gandha, pushpa, Gita, and Dhupa
With their right hands they embrace their consorts.
With the left they are holding their own signs.
With customary ornaments as before.

At the four gates are the four conquerors.
Blazing Yamantaka is dark blue
With a goat's head holding the scepters of confidence

Dwelling as the guardian of the east
Is blazing Vijaya, who is dark yellow,
Holding a vajra at the southern gate.
Blazing dark red is horse-headed Hayagriva,
Holding a skull and snake at the western gate.

Blazing Amritakundalin, dark green,
Holds a crossed-vajra at the northern gate.
He is standing in a dancing posture,
Adorned with the various charnel ornaments.

All these show their teeth in a frightening way
They are all enveloped in blazing fires
The sounds of HUM and Phat are loudly resounding.

Embracing these above four deities
Are Shemo, Gyaljema, Tamdrinmo, and Khyilma.
Awesome, holding iron chains and bells.
Their scepters are iron hooks and iron nooses.
Their accoutrements are like those of the conquerors.
Those at each of these gates are self-existing.

Within the beautiful courtyards of the palace,
Are the great sages, the six nirmanakayas.
They show whatever bodies are needed for taming.
And so the accoutrements they show are uncertain.

In these beautiful courtyards, in the front and back
Are Jepapo and -mo, of sky-like color.
They are resting in the state of samadhi.
These and so forth are inconceivably excellent,
Unexpressed and inexpressible.

The palace is filled by a host of deities.
The limitless mandala is self existing.
In the heart centers of these excellent deities
Are jñanasattvas whose light is full of colors
On their tongues are the syllables of their signs.
Their own signs clearly appear over all the mudras.
They are of every color, with all the styles,
Soft, supple, caressing, yielding, and young,
Clear, brilliant, and abundantly bountiful
They are consecrated with brilliant blazing.
That divine nature illumines the mandala.

Pure of the five skandhas, these are the pure deities of the five families. The deities with the
are explained as the union of appearance and emptiness. The eye, ear, nose, and tongue are t bodhisattvas.
Form, sound, taste, and touch are their four consorts, the four inner female bodhisattvas. Th nose, and tongue powers are the four external sattvas.

The four times, the past, future, present, and inconceivable dharmata, are the outer female l Touch,
the toucher, the touched, and awareness of touch having symbolized sense consciousness, and the four gates are the pure forms of the four ayatanas arising from sense consciousness. All dharma eternal nor nothingness. They have no self-natures and no characteristics. These are the four gates of The pure existence of the six kleshas, six perfections, six kinds of beings, and six purifying s alaya and alayavijñana is Samantabhadra and his consort. All these deities presently divided from ala the collections of consciousness with their faculties and objects. This is the situation of impurity. If they are they are joined to the wisdoms and buddha fields. Knowing them in that way is knowing them as the pure deit

e. How to recite the mantra

After the nature of the mandala thus elucidated has been known as one's own mind, from th

the heart centers of the deities filling the space of the sky, the mantra garland goes from the deity into that of the consort, and from the secret space, on the tips of whirling light rays, come a host of sylla bodies of deities and countless scepters. In the world they do benefit for sentient beings. Think that the self-sour resounds like a thousand thunders OM AH HUM SVAHA or OM HUM HRAM HRIH AH.

Recite the three syllables and the seeds of the five buddha families.
They become unborn sound-emptiness, like an echo.
Let yourself come to rest in this unfabricated state.

Recite the three syllables and the seed syllables of the five families. It is like the unborn roa thousand thunders. Within that rest in meditation without artificiality. Also abandoning the faults of ad omissions and reciting too fast, slow, weakly or, strongly, do the recitation. This very sound emptiness of re mantra is the completion stage of sound. From that state, undisturbed mind and yoga without attachment

b. The completion stage,

There are three sections

1. The main explanation of how to meditate

At this time:

Our minds are eternally of the nature of the deities.
Our bodies are the mandala; the words of our speech are mantra.
Within the great wisdom everything is self-perfected,
Wisdom and samaya are a non-duality.
Nothing needs to be summoned and there is nothing that comes.
Therefore, there is nothing that we could ask to depart.
There is no good and evil, no accepting and no rejecting.

This primordial mandala has always been within us.
By supplicating when we know that this is so,
This, which is unestablished, will never be made to be.

Having supplicated simply by knowing that all dharmas are the single mandala of buddhaho recitation, offerings, and praises, within the state of everything being the great spontaneous nature of one's own mind. Nevertheless in the yanas below yoga tantra there is attachment to the duality of and therefore the jñanasattva enters into one from outside, and also the departure of the deities after the s explained in the same way. The Wondrously Arisen King says:

Within the primordial mandala of self-existing equality,
Having attained the knowledge that one was always there,
By different stages of mind involved with meditation,
Inviting and supplicating is not necessary.

Since body is established as the deity, speech as mantra, and mind as samadhi, practice do differentiate samayasattva and jñanasattva. There is no contradiction between this and saying that begi delight in complexity should invite jñanasattvas and make offerings and praises to them. The Secret E

We enter the three thousand worlds as a few tiny syllables,
From space we invite the mandala make our offerings.

2. How afterwards one gathers everything into the conceptionless.

Afterwards, there is a gradual gathering in of attachment.
Rest in simplicity without conceptions of anything.
When not there in illusion like the moon in water, Dedicate the merit to help all sentient beings.

Here beginners gradually gathering in, meditate on emptiness and then by having trained in visualization of exhaustion, meditating within the illusory state of appearance/emptiness, dec

3. The stages during the sessions

Act as if all is illusion, emptiness/luminosity.
All appearances and sounds are deities and mantra.
All memories and thoughts are self-arising wisdom.
From moment to moment this should be known unwaveringly.

During meditation on the mandala of the deities, and also in post-meditation, the environmen phenomena of the world, are the palace, and the beings who inhabit the world are the gods sounds are mantra. All cognitions are self-arising wisdom. They rest shimmering in the great non-grasp whatever arises and is encountered is liberated. So that they do not become ordinary appearances and thou poisons, try to remain there undistracted day and night.

c. The accompanying samaya and action/practice,

1) The instruction to keep pure samaya,

Now as accompaniments to the practice of secret mantra:

Let us purely keep our root and branch samayas.
Know and accept them purely. Do not give up, but act.
Five times five samayas are meant to be accomplished.
These twenty-five can be summarized under body, speech, and mind.
Let us try to keep our minds completely pure.

As explained before, guard the three root samayas and the five times five branch samayas.
mind
being pure and faultless as the chief samaya. The Tantra of the Array of Samaya says:

What is often talked about
As "samaya blah blah blah"
Is guarding one's own mind
In a state of purity.
Samaya is a great wonder.
So all the buddhas have taught.

The Individual Enlightenment says:

Performing no evil deeds,
Acting in perfect virtue,
One's mind is completely tamed.
Thus it is taught by the buddhas.

That is enough for a brief summary, but for the extended version, there should be as many s assembly of thoughts of sentient beings. The Secret Essence says:

As for this samaya
It is most wonderful.
In the ten directions
In all of the six lokas,

As many as thoughts of beings
Inhabiting the three realms,
There are that many samayas
For the purpose of taming them.

Accountable samayas exist in relation to relative truth. In relation to absolute truth all dharm inexpressible, beyond any limits that could be guarded, the great suddenness, the unestabli Samantabhadra.

The same text says:

As the unestablished ultimate,
The mudra of supremacy,
The King Samantabhadra,
Everything is established.

The All-Creating King says:

Kye! As for the samaya of me the doer of all,
It is unborn like the sky, beyond all partiality,
Without the duality of guarding and non-guarding,
Realize the samaya of the King, the doer of all.

2) Delineating the particular times of practice and accomplishing

Moreover to complete the two accumulations and pacify all hindrances accomplish siddhi an all violations:

On the fifteenth day of the month and the time of the new moon,
And also on the feast days of the eighth and twenty-ninth,
And the tenth day and night of the waxing and waning moon,
Perform the proper approaching and accomplishing
With feasts and offerings, confession and amending.

There are six times for accomplishing siddhi and the remedy of confessing. These are the fi
the month, the time of the empty sky of the new moon, and the eighth, twenty-fifth, tenth, and tw
of the month. On these externally dakinis are abroad, and internally the pranas are especially well nadis. These are called "the times of close gathering." In particular, the night of the tenth day of the waxin the night of the twenty-fifth, the tenth day of the waning moon, in the places of practice, those who have the gather to accomplish whatever karmas they want to attain. They should exert themselves in the four,

on, and make feast offerings and confessions. By that, on these days of the month all transgression remedied. The supreme and ordinary siddhis are quickly accomplished. Moreover in single trees, rock mou lakes and, so forth there are gatherings of the dakinis at the auspicious times, which are therefore calle "gathering near."
The four inner chakras are always included in the dhatu and wisdom. This is called "gatheri auspicious time at the place of drawing near."
The external places are the twenty four places and so on. The "near" place, is any place wh
are.
Internally they are the twenty four places of the petals of the nadis, the crown of the head ar secret great bliss is the ground of offering. This is the "place of drawing near.

3. How from the virtues the fruition manifests,

Since on all these days the supreme level is chiefly established, arising from the secret indiv and oral instructions:

Let us earnestly try to reach the profoundest piths
Of the yoga of prana and mind, of nada and bindu.
By meditating on the path that unifies,
The experiences of bliss, luminosity, and non-thought.
Let us be vajra-holders within this very life.
Let us attain the state of perfect enlightenment.

As for the supported, the samadhi mandala, yogins familiar with the upaya of the developing stages always train in the completion stage of the great wisdom, knowing how to meditate o
nature of prana, nadi, and bindu as it is and in its ultimate arising. When one dwells in non-dual wisdo
of the navel, the drops of the melting element at the crown of the head, the great essence, fall from the heart
center. They activate the secret center and the downward going prana is reversed. By its e the heart, the support of the above-mentioned bodhicitta, mixed with light, is touched by that, so that the lu of mind is pervaded by mahasukha even more than before.

When the nature of bliss, luminosity, and non-thought arises, rest in the subtle light of the he
By the
arising of inconceivable wisdom whose body is space, this is called treading on the level of t
At that time,
body, speech, and mind become one and inseparable, and it is said that the three realms ar
Also as for the nadi petals of the heart center and their essences, the Commentary of the Se

"Whoever has that absorption" and so forth, means whoever has that absorption has the ess nature. If it so exists, as for the white silk essences of the nadis which are like twined cords producing the essence of the skandhas from non-obstruction is the essence of arising. It ap earth. This is the consort who illuminates the buddhas' eyes, Buddhalochana. That is the w the great emptiness. It produces the support of everything not being other than the state of purity.
These white silk cords, are vibrated by the vermilion sound essence. As for its existing like the essence of the mother, since it has made the skandhas primordially pure, that arising es appears as water. This is the consort Mamaki. The wisdom of equality is the nature that co these in a single space without separation.
The breath-essence, gold, existing under the earth as mere vapor, producing the primordial support of the rising and motion of the skandhas, appearing as the air element is Tara and a accomplishing wisdom. This nature produces the essence of great bliss.
Moreover, the primordial heat-essence, like the sun resting in a mirror, existing as a mere fragrance, ripens as the apparent element fire. This is Pandaravasini and discriminating aw wisdom. It is the wisdom lamp of realizing everything as the space of mahasukha.
In the center of that light, consisting of the great bindu, bodhicitta is the great essence. It produces the support of the primordial luminosity of the skandhas. It is the essence of arisin appearing as space and the nadis. That is the wisdom of the great pervasiveness, the consc Samantabhadri revealing the luminous state of everything as the space of authenticity, appearance/emptiness. The essence like a flower of molten gold is prajña, the nature of all
What is like precious saffron anthers is the essence of the king of Upaya, Samantabhadra, the father deities. Moreover, the precious white stone ke ke ru, seemingly filling all gaps, is like wisdom. By that the essence of bodhicitta is seen as if unseen, without a seer, and noth That which is the father is the mother. That which is the mother is the father. They are seen radiance without difference. That should be viewed as that having that itself. That is called What exists in that way is the union of upaya and prajña. Not only that, but it exists as all th realms. That nature of bodhicitta is viewed. It should be continuously viewed and magnetiz

In the center of the eight nadis of the heart, are the essence nadis, divided like ten hairs of a and no bigger, and within that the blood essence is the breath. The essence of breath is luminous l example, like the oily wick of a blazing lamp, self-arising wisdom is luminous with the brilliance of the five light essence of the elements goes up and down, since they dwell there like many oils, and like the blazing up of self-arising wisdom also produces great luminosity within the body, and in all the nadi petals. Since blis arises as the wisdom of self-awareness. Here appearance is the five fathers. All the solid earth of the na
is Buddhalocana. Moisture and water are the great essence Mamaki. Bliss and heat are Pand
and movement are Tara. Since simple space is inseparably united with these ladies, this is calle union. At that time, the body, speech, and mind syllables of the nadis blaze with light. When the syllables purification
have been burned, no karma and habitual patterns are conceptualized. Liberation of samsa produced.
This is supported by the nadis. By breath bliss is moved. By heat bliss is ripened. By spac equality/equanimity of the great perfection is produced. Realization of the complete liberatio worlds as Samantabhadra is produced. The same text says:

If it is asked, "If one meditates like that, what happens, and from what does it arise?" What is being talked about is the wisdom of buddhahood. It is of space as form. The great yoga is not different from the three realms. From what does it a the great essence, profound and unbroken, from that it arises. If it is asked what comes fron that that arises. That itself arises, so it is said.

When bindu-bodhicitta has just become workable and radiant, above and below OM are SU and above and below HUM are AH and NRI. Above and below AH are PRE and DU blazin light. The bindu drops of the essence become natureless. Since bindu is natureless, in the white silk cords no bigger than ten hairs of a horse's tail only the vibrating vermilion essence mother exists producing desire within the great bliss. By that blazing with light, the breath es gold in a brocade, abiding as a mere vapor produces movement within the great bliss. That light. Within it the essence of heat, like the sun in a mirror, existing as a mere fragrance, rip great bliss. Blazing with light, it becomes the natureless great essence.

Arising only in the form of space, all the three worlds spontaneously rise as non-individualized wisdom, so it is said. This bindu-bodhicitta arising as the form of space is dha That is called "just so."
Then within the navel the nadi petals blaze, and regarding how the heart bodhicitta is illumin made to blaze with light, the same text says:

The secret prajña bindu is called space and so forth. This secret prajña is called the bindu having the nature of Samantabhadri. This is dharmadhatu. Where does it dwell? In the nav center of sixty-four nadis dwells the sun. What is its nature like? It is like prajña and upaya. from that bindu, all marks being grasped is the fathers. It is upaya. As for this natureless bi dharmadhatu, this is prajña, the mothers. Thus bindu consists of inseparable prajña and up that bindu form and the three realms arise. All these elements in a mandala of forty-two do many Becoming a mandala, since all these are the bindu of dharmadhatu, they are said to be sealed as everything. Here the five wisdoms are spontaneously present. They exist and five and so-called. As the above essences become radiant from the power of heat, their hea
This is the bindu of the nature of Samantabhadri. Its dissolving downward is called "descen bindu of the nature of Samantabhadri blazes with light. This is called the blaze of dissolving essence of the heart center. By this the great essence brilliant gold, until then existing unde covering, having existed as a mere vapor, blazes with light, having become the radiant drop essence. Without the ground of breath, it becomes ever weaker until it is motionless. If tha absent, its causeless fruition existing as the great bliss is called the great-bliss offering. Tha great bliss dissolving into the above bindus is called urging the bindus to blaze with light. M by the heat of the heart center the bindus descend. By their touching the bliss heat in the ce nadi petals, again that heat becomes the essence. When it dissolves into the heart-center e ceasing of the cause of coarse prana, bindu rests without coming and going in the heart. Ex motionlessly, it is dharmata, absolute truth.

Then by the heat of the heart center, touching the essence in the center of the nadis of the t
essence proliferates in the heart. Also, by the ceasing of prana it rests in dharmata, about which the
says:

This light of the great essence dissolving into the bindu of the throat, is called union. Where does it dwell? In the center of sixteen nadis, as a lotus blossom, it is said to be in a nadi ma fives and six. Energized by the heat below, it blazes with light. Existing as the great bliss, t called the great bliss. The great bliss is spontaneously present. After this it does not move back.

rejoicing should be offered. By what is called the merit of the arising place of knowables an knowables are objects, and arisings are thoughts. Exhaustion is radiant bindu. This is calle wisdom of exhausting thoughts through light and luminous bindu. Bindu itself without nature as the great bliss. This is called the music of the play of bliss. That is called bindu entering dwelling in the place of great bliss.

Moreover, when the heat of the heart center dissolves into the throat-bindu, prana and thou wander.
This is the virtue of breath dissolving into bindu. As for heat, at the time of non-identification non-grasping at essences, when passion has been exhausted, there is the wisdom of great bliss. As for bre
non-identification, when aggression is exhausted, it is the wisdom of luminosity/emptiness. Whe hollows of the nadis are not identified, that is the time of exhausting ignorance, the wisdom of the simplicity dharmadhatu.
Now the heat of the throat enters the essence at the crown of the head. Regarding how the luminosity, and non-thought is produced, the same text says:

"In a mandala of three tens and two" and so forth having come into the center of thirty-two,
having come into the center of space, it exists as moon-bindu-bodhicitta.
That same bindu is the substance of buddhahood, dharmakaya, the main point. The perfection of the mandala of the ten directions and four times is this itself. Body, speech, mi and action are this same bindu.
But after the bindu of the great bliss has been touched by the light of that throat bindu, dissolving into light, it becomes a coronation vase of the nature of the great bliss. The three become non-different. After wisdom has arisen in the form of space, it becomes dharmakay of all things. In this sense, the yogin who becomes dharmakaya will see the faces of all the once.

Moreover, that great essence in the center of the space chakra at the crown of the head, bla because of that heat, is the mahasukhakaya. Having reached that, by enlightenment one tr
the great ushnisha. If the four stages of this are briefly summarized, first in the center of the navel, th heat, the bindu
having the essence of the sun, in the center of sixty-four nadis, is made into a condition by t heat in the essence of the heart center. Then the wisdom of nirmanakaya is realized.

When the heat blazes upward touching the great essence of the heart center, the prana and subsides. False conceptions are pacified. This is the wisdom of sambhogakaya. Since the mode of dharmas is free from producing movement, prana and mind dissolve back into luminosity as However,
as for the essences increasing in the nadi petals being the wisdom of bliss-emptiness, it is n essences are collected back into the essences in the center of the four essence chakras. A non-supreme The bliss-heat-desire aspect is the wisdom of bliss. The moving breath prana-dissolving aspect is the luminosity. Mixed with the space element aspect within the nadis, these arise as the three wisdoms of non-tho called the circle of the three wisdoms. As for the fruition of all these, incidentally one has mastery ove established as a rigdzin of mahamudra. By attaining the virtues of the paths of seeing and meditation, as sig one sees many buddha fields, accomplishes great samadhis and miracles, and benefits beings with inconce

Dharmas. Finally, by buddhahood, the spontaneous presence of wisdom manifests. The sa

"This is the ultimate empowerment." As for this and so forth, the yogin who is capable of thi is empowered with mastery of life and so forth, whatever is desired. There is no other empo than this. By oneself existing as the mandala, as above in the supreme samadhi, one becor mandala. Here by this self-existing buddhahood in which the two accumulations are perfect since one becomes all mandalas, their many enjoyments and ornaments do not fail to occur called the ornament.
"By the dual perfection, the union of bindu...," Since bindu is workable, there is dharmakaya
 This arises from perfecting the two accumulations. Such a yogin by the great compassion f beings of the ten directions and four times, does benefits like dream or illusion and liberates samsara.

By these passages the teaching of extraordinary completion stage is completed. Now as fo developing and completion stage:

By having the single yoga,

All mandalas are accomplished.
Therefore this itself
Develops as well as perfects
The realm of Samantabhadra.
Moreover as above,
In regard to elaboration,
There are complex and very complex,
and also supremely complex.
Inconceivable to thought,
the limitless mandalas
Become spontaneous presence.

These are the incidental verses.
Here first is the presentation from the viewpoint of those who are not able to enter into the e developing stage or only devote themselves to the completion stage with little elaboration. As for the ex all will be meditated upon by meditating on the single deity, after going to refuge and arousing bodhici
the Secret
Essence:

This rootless nature of mind
Is the root of all the dharmas.
The nature of the mind
Is the nature of the syllables,
The precious wishing clouds.

Also:

A is the middle way
Of having no conceptions
In between emptiness and a non-empty reality,

All is just a name,
A whirling syllable garland
Abiding as all the buddhas.

By reciting A A A, all dharmas in a state without one and many are unobscured in the center
from clouds. In the center of the sun and moon shining brilliantly with rays of light, glorious Sama Samantabhadri are non-dual. Having the mudra of meditation, as the nature of dharmakaya customary ornaments. Meditate on them in the midst of encircling light rays of the five color the light of the palaces of Akanishta all the space of the sky is filled, so that the phenomenal world blazes w OM AH HUM A A. Saying this as many times as you can, rest in the ultimate space of the s meditate on all the mandalas of the buddhas, since this is their source. The Secret Essence

In the limpid center of space on a sun and moon, Meditating on the king of wisdom,
Seated cross-legged, in meditation pasture,
We are meditating on all the mandalas
Of the victorious ones without remainder.

Then as for how meditating in a single completion stage is meditating on them all, visualize t heart of the one meditating like that, brilliantly blazing globes of light, having the radiance of the five non-thought, take hold of the mind and render it immovable. When prana becomes immovable, whatever exist.
One can rest for a day and night within the wisdom without one and many. Lights and rainb fields
are visibly seen. By mixing day and night the mind rests in self-awareness wisdom with no r Except for making clear that one's mind has been like that primordially, in attaining buddhahood no oth attained. The Secret Essence says:

In the four times and in the ten directions
No other perfect buddha will be found.
Mind itself is perfect buddhahood.
Do not search for any other buddha.

This kind of developing and completion stage unites all the mandalas of developing and com siddhis are accomplished. Little omissions and additions to rituals are no hindrance to siddh measureless

benefits. The same text says:

By completely uniting all mandalas,
All mandalas are accomplished.
Now there will be no transgressions
Of additions or omissions.

Now, as explained above, in the brief teaching and the details of the extensive meditation or these details should also be trained in. First, train successively in the three samadhis, the suchne so forth until the signs are attained. Then from a white A by emanating and gathering fine A's, emanate a vowels and consonants. Do the same from the seed syllable of the deity. The same text says:

A
From white A which has become completely stable,
Other very fine A syllables emanate.
Having filled and illumined the directions,
Even when they are gathered back again,
They are stable without increase and decrease.
From these the brightly blazing assembly of names
Is similarly emanated and gathered back.

Meditate on the seed syllables of the deities until they are clear. The virtues of this are long freedom from disease, not being harmed by obstacles of obstructing spirits and döns, accomplishing the fo uniting with the supreme level. The same text says:

This dependent arising of the vajra siddhi
Becomes the cause of wisdom.

Then meditate successively on the body of the deity, the ornaments, the syllable at the hear consort. Then while meditating on the retinue, Akshobhya and so forth, one after another, m development and completion as one. At this time the signs of perfecting the path of accumulation arise.

Then on a rise in front visualize the retinue with Akshobhya as the principal one. Perfectly v behind the mandala the retinue with Amitabha as the principal one. This is the mandala of three groups as body,
speech, and mind.
Then on a rise to the south and north visualize the mandalas of Ratnasambhava and Amogh quality and action. This is the mandala of five groups.
Then with the gate-keepers in union with their consorts, this is the root of all mandalas. The
to meditate on any other, since this is the mandala in which all others are included. These gate four directions are the gatekeepers of the four directions of all mandalas. For example, below the rise in th Ankusha and consort as gatekeepers. To the right below Ratnasambhava are Pasha and consort. The west and The faces of all these deities are seen from whatever direction they are viewed. The same text says:

From every direction their faces are clear and vivid.

Meditate on them facing in the direction of the principal deity. At that time, the virtues of the stages of the path of preparation are perfected.
Then in the four directions above and below meditate on the mandalas of the five families.
In the east is the mandala of Vajrasattva, like that there are 5 x 5. In the south, west and no three more, with 5 x 5. In the center is the mandala of Vairochana with 5 x 5. Within the 25 manda of deities of the root mandala is 42 2.[422?]. The rises 38 8 [388?] these 170 x 5 = 850, [810?] by med the virtues of the path of seeing are perfected.
Then the 1000 and 20,000 appearance-producing buddhas of the lower seven bhumis are p
Then meditating on those as limitless as space, there are limitless self-existing mandalas. T
the three pure levels are perfected. These very numerous teachings are established. This style the Great Net of Illusion Some deities are deities of blessing body, speech, and mind. Some are crown-orna

Some are heart syllable jñanasattvas. These divisions should be understood from the Secret Essence and s the explanation
together with the subsidiary points is completed.

C. The dedication of merit

Now there is the dedication of merit:

Thus by this utterly secret, unsurpassable heart,
Beset by karma and kleshas of beings here in samsara,
Yet living so close to the palace of Sri Heruka himself,
May the weariness of mind come to rest this very day.

By the power of wondrously risen unsurpassable virtue, may all beings preoccupied by the g be liberated from the city of samsara. May they effortlessly reach the primordial city of Heru primordial ultimate nature is self-existing. May they be confirmed by joy. May their weariness be relieved by th the Dharma of complete liberation.

Fully illumined by massive accumulations of virtue,
By the limitless radiant wisdom of the sun and moon,
May beings truly vanquish the darkness of the four continents.
May appearance of the good path of freedom be produced.

From the principal essence amid a measureless ocean,
By the crown jewels of the nagas, the two accumulations,
May degenerations of many births be cleared away.
By the wealth of the Dharma wishing-rain, may they be fulfilled.

By the power of riding the horse of the excellent vehicle,
Completely carried away from the three worlds that burden beings,
When all has been transformed to the path of enlightenment,
May they cross to the city of the great liberation.

This is the Commentary on the tenth chapter of the NATURE OF MIND, THE EASER OF W
Realizing the Ground that Does not Dwell in the Two Extremes

Having briefly explained the paths that ripen and free, together with the characteristics of the essences of these, the view, meditation, and action, now there is

X. THE VIEW OF PRAJÑA THAT REALIZES THE GROUND WITHOUT DWELLING IN DU EXTREMES.

There are nine main topics.

A. The nature of all dharmas consists of the unborn.
B. The view that realizes suchness.
C. What is to be abandoned.
D. The one who abandons.
E. There is no realization by the words of the doctrine.
F. Passing the pass.
G. The conviction of realization.
H. The primordial liberation of appearance and mind.
I. The dedication of merit.

A. The nature of all dharmas consists of the unborn

Having fully taught the two stages of secret mantra, now we shall enter into the teaching of t
all dharmas as the natural state, co-emergent wisdom, the primordially natureless essential me Dharmas. As has been explained:

By the yoga that unifies development and perfection
Dharmas enter into the empty and unborn.

"By" this means it starts to do this until it is completely done. The nature which should be kn unborn, transcending the four extremes. The Noble Sutra of the Arising of the Three Jewels says:

If one does not understand
How everything is empty,
The consequence is like making Everything into space.

For everything there is,
No nature at all exists.
Nothing becomes another.
How will an absent nature
Change into something else?
How will the natureless
Be anything at all?

Therefore it was taught
By the Tathagata.
That everything, even the Dharma,
Is motionless, stable resting.
Changeless and undisturbed,
It is simply peace itself.

As the sky is without awareness,
Not knowing that beings are stupid;
As mountains do not move,
So Dharmas are always motionless.

They do not die and transmigrate.
Therefore they are unborn.
So the Dharmas were taught
By the Victorious One.

The Absolute Samadhi says:

Dharmas are without birth
And also without arising;
With no death or transmigration
They do not have old age.

Since the Lion of Men has taught this,

Hundreds of sentient beings
Have been established in it.

They do not have a nature.
Nor does anything else.
And nothing else has them.

They are not internal
And also not external.
So the Lord Buddha taught.

The Gathering of Intentions says:

E MA HO, wondrous marvelous Dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
It is not empty, it is not non-empty.
Nor is it conceived as being in the middle.

Attachments to external objects are abandoned by those objects being known as one's own deities and the palace. Although they are known as unborn, even this antidote is essenceless. No "nature" of all dharmas. The Commentary Ascertaining the Intention says:

As they depend on mind only,
Thoughts of external objects
Are abandoned and left behind
As nothing whatsoever.

Later even that
Is completely left behind.

The Lankavatara Sutra says:

After they are seen to be mind-only,
They are not conceived as external objects.
After they exist in the perfect state,
They are seen as transcending even mind-only.

The yogin who exists without appearance
By that has the vision of the great vehicle.

In that way we enter into knowledge of emptiness.

B. The view that realizes suchness

There are five sections.

1. The natural state:

Though all the dharmas of samsara and nirvana
Are this simplicity that is without a self,
By fixation and ignorance, we wander here in samsara.
Though samsara's joys and sorrows do indeed appear,
From the time they appear, their nature is emptiness.
Therefore, we should know them to be like dreams and illusions.

Though all dharmas are empty and without a self, by not knowing this, by grasping me and m dreamlike confusions of samsara. Though individual joys and sorrows may be experienced,
to be natureless. The Wondrously Arisen King says:

The primordial universal Buddhadharma,
Is without a beginning, middle, or end,
Not rightly knowing this nature like the sky,
Fools all whirl about within samsara.

But with no bondage and no liberation,
Its nature is like the nature of illusion.

The Secret Essence says:

By conceptions that grasp at self
Space is tied in knots.
Without bondage and liberation,
The actual Buddhadharma

Is primordial self-perfection.
However in order to teach it
We make up complexities.

By grasping what is selfless as a self there is confusion. The Noble Clouds of the Three Jev

These are indeed selfless, but for foolish individuals, attached to grasping them as self, in th self-natures of the skandhas, a self exists. By being attached to that, they do not enter into Therefore, like the circle of a whirling torch, they wander in the revolutions of samsara.

These various confused appearances are established through attachment to habitual patter
Lotus
Array Sutra says:

The son of the gods, Lotus Array, spoke to Manjushri saying. "Manjushri, were these externa objects made by a creator, or how should they be viewed?" Manjushri said, "Son of the gods, these external objects were not made by a creator. They appearances of mind or habitual patterns of thought."
The son of the gods said, "However habitual patterns may have matured, how can these mountains, oceans, the sun and moon, and so on appear to be so hard and solid?" Manjushri said, "Son of the gods, they can so appear. In the great city of Varanasi, a bhram named Agnidatta meditated on his body as that of a tiger. The people of the city saw him as fled. The city was emptied. By meditating on exhaustion as earth and water, it appears as water. When the monks of yogachara meditate on filth and bones as their former perceptio appear. By unobstructed maturation of habitual patterns, why should all this not appear?"
The son of the gods said, "By the power of maturation of habitual patterns, why have variou selves appeared?" Manjushri said, "All appearances are uncertain. Some appearances of earth are dark. This earth only perceived as earth. Earth is also perceived as fire. Earth is also perceived as ac enjoyment. Earth is also perceived as suffering.
Fire is perceived as fire. Fire is also perceived as action and enjoyment. Fire is also percei as resting in place. Fire is also perceived as food. Water is perceived as water.
Water is also perceived as fire. Water is also perceived as earth. Water is also perceived a amrita. Water is also perceived as resting in place.
Space is perceived as space. Space is also perceived as resting in place. Space is also perceived as earth. These perceptions are uncertain. It is by the power of habitual patterns appear as they do.

Not certainly fixed as being any one thing, like a dream, things are natureless. For example appear in many roles as a friend, an enemy, a monk, a bhramin, and all kinds of other peopl appearance
is not contradictory. The various appearances of dharmas are essentially without dualistic n

The Dohakosha says:

Just as, when blown by wind, unmoving water
Is agitated into patterns of waves,
Thus like appearance of Saraha to the king
By stirring up oneness various things are produced.

Just as for stupid people wrongly looking
One lamp has the appearance of being two,
Thus for the non-dual viewed and viewer,
Kye ma! Mind appears as dualistic things.

Because of wind, the unity of water appears as many waves. One lamp, by pressing the ey
One Saraha is seen as both good and evil. All dharmas, in reality non-dual, but dualistically like these examples. Therefore, in their duality, all dharmas are appearances of what does not exist, li They should be known to be non-dual.

2. The refutation of maintaining that appearance is mind

Though phenomena appear within mind, apparent objects are not mind. As for the explanat

Thus all the things that appear to be external objects
Appear within the mind, and yet they are not mind.
Nor do they exist as anything else than mind.
Though by the force of habitual patterns, there appears
The dualistic appearance of grasping and fixation,
From the time they appear the grasper and grasped have not been two
This is like a face reflected in a mirror.

If a face is reflected in a mirror, the clear surface of the mirror can support the arising of the reflection. By the condition of this power of reflection, there is the appearance of the face. However the reflec really a face.

So, from the viewpoint of confusion, images of phenomena appear as this variety of things, v are really non-existent.
When they appear by the conditions of interdependent arising, as confusions of cause and variety of apparent objects, mountains and so on, is also not mind. Nor, as appearances due to con patterns of mind, are they truly existing objects other than ourselves. They are phenomena of confused someone with floaters, hairs seem to trickle in front of the eyes, but nothing like what appears really ex are the same.
Now someone may say, "Earth and rocks and so forth, these appearances, if they do not ex either inside or outside, how could that be? How could they be there at all?"
"Attached to establishing things only in terms of dualistic grasping, you are a pig!" So we sh
These phenomena, the phenomenal world of samsara and nirvana, do indeed appear, but fr appear, they do not exist as anything external, internal, or in between. Their appearance is eight examples of illusion. The Shri Samadhiraja Sutra says:

In a mirror surface or the surface of a vessel
As she adorns herself, a woman sees her face, Though her entire face seems to appear in these,
It is neither existent or non-existent there.
All dharmas should be known to be like that.

These appearances, appearing while they do not exist, are made to arise as a confused obje fixations of things as being that way. Grasping, zungwa, is the thought that grasps the thoug arising in the first instant. It is the nature of mind having confused phenomena n Fixation, dzinpa is later ana mind-contents.
The Discipline of Avalokiteshvara says:

Grasping, zungwa, the seer, is object grasping mind. Fixation, dzinpa, is mental contents e that.

This is the proper account of how it should be known. Most people, learned or unlearned, p "zungwa, the grasped," is just the object, appearances of mountains and so forth. dzinpa, "the graspe subject, one's own
awareness."
Well, cowboys, enough of your wrong conceptions! Tell me this--for noble ones who have 'a and dzinpa,' do objects appear or they do not?
If they appear, according to you, grasped and grasper appear to the noble ones. If the objec grasped
and awareness itself is the grasper, they would have to appear.
If they do not appear, what about the illusion-like appearances of the enlightened noble ones post-meditation, such as shravaka arhats who see mountains and viharas. what about the buddhas' measur appearances of objects in the knowledge of extent? Many reasonings and scriptures call th not appear a total mistake, let alone being beyond extremes. Dharmakirti says:

Because the wrong path is endless,
They should never have begun.

That appearance is mind has already been refuted, nevertheless, when these mountains an made into objects, the mind that first grasps this is "appearance." True, at this point appear apparent object are not distinguished. That intellect pure of projecting things externally is to that extent wise.
But then by becoming attached to a wrong or exaggerated meaning, it becomes fixated.
The apparent object is not mind. This is because mind exists in its fashion, even if it is natu
it goes into the mode of self and other, mind does not turn into appearances with color and shape.
object is one's mind, its existence is linked to one's own. if one's mind exists, the object exists. If it does n then the object certainly cannot not exist either. As mind is without color and shape, the apparent object wo etc. Since there is certainly appearance, and appearance is mind, that there is mere appearance would enta truly existing mind. This is pretty stupid. Arrogant people who say the apparent object is mind, are expo sublime illogic.

3. The phenomenal world is like illusion

Thus, when its reflection appears to arise in a mirror:

Though the image appears, no face is really there.
Nothing goes into the mirror that is other than the image.
But though it does not exist, the appearance of two is there Know that all the various dharmas are like that.

Though the face does not go into the mirror, it appears there. From the time it appears, no c than a face is there either. Just so, from the very time that all the dharmas of the phenomenal worl mind, they are established neither as mind nor something other than mind. They are like the eight example Mula-madhyamak-akarikas says:

Like dream. like illusion,
Like a castle of the gandharvas,
Like that is birth, and like that is duration.
Like that too is destruction taught to be.

The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

Like the moon that shines in a cloudless sky,
Though a clear, still lake shows its reflection,
The moon does not move from the sky into the water.
All dharmas should be known to be like that.

Just as for people by a rocky mountain,
By their singing, talking, weeping, and laughing,
An echo of their singing may arise,
But the melody never goes beyond those sounds,
All dharmas should be known to be like that.

4. Mind is essenceless,

When these appearances of variety are examined in terms of reasoning:

As long as they are not examined they will please us.
But when they are examined, they are ungraspable.
On thorough examination, they go beyond speech and thought.
They cannot be conceived as existing or not existing.
Extreme conceptions neither apply, nor do they not.

If we do not examine all dharmas, they appear to be truly existent. If we examine the atoms appearances, they are natureless. No grasped objects are perceived. Inner fixation is a pa beyond any identifiable essence, and so no mind of fixations is perceived. Non-dual and free from comp beyond
expressor and expressed. The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Kashyapa, what is this world-transcending medicine? It is exertion that completely seeks ou mind. Completely seeking out mind is like this: What is this mind that becomes passionate, aggressive, and ignorant? How does it arise in the past, future, or present. Past mind has c exhausted. Future mind has not yet arisen. That which is presently arising has no support c Kashyapa, mind does not exist internally, nor does it exist externally, nor between the two, nor is it perceived as something without these two.
Kashyapa, as for mind, there is no scrutiny, no showing, no appearance, no understanding,
existence.
Kashyapa, even by the buddhas, mind has never been seen, and never will be seen.
Kashyapa, if mind is sought everywhere, it is not to be found. That which is not to be found, is not to be perceived anywhere. That which is not to be perceived, will not be in the past.
be in the future. It will not arise in the present. It will not be something which has passed av something which is to come. Nor is it something that is arising now. It completely transcend three times.

Also:

Like mind, all dharmas too are not to be perceived, and therefore they do not exist at all.

The Sutra Requested by Maitreya says:

Mind has no shape. It has no color. It has no existence. It is like space.

The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

Those who wish to enter this sphere of realization of the Victorious One should abandon all wishes, like space. They should abandon grasping of concepts, thoughts, and perceptions. enter into this mind like space.

The Mula-madhyamaka-karikas says:

It excludes the expressible
And experience of mind.
Unborn and also unceasing,
With a nature like that of nirvana.

The All-Creating King says:

It is not a thing whose characteristics are shown.
It is apart from objects perceivable by sight.
It is unknowable by any verbal expression.
This, the essence that does not arise from any cause,
Is free from all the superimpositions of conception.

If one wishes truly to realize what is the meaning of this,
By example, it is eternal like the sky.
The meaning is the unborn, the space of dharmata.
Its sign is being the unobstructed nature of mind.

Dharmata, itself is like the space of the sky.
It is symbolized by the example of being like the sky.

5. The examples of naturelessness

These appearances of what does not exist, though, like an illusion, they appear to arise and

From the time they appear, their birth and such are natureless,
Like water in a mirage, or the moon's form in a pond.

Like the moon in water or the water in a mirage, from the very time they appear to arise, the realized

to be unborn and so forth. The Secret Essence says:

E Ma Ho! Wondrous marvelous dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
From the unborn is born all that there is.
Yet all this from its birth is birthlessness.

E Ma Ho! Wondrous marvelous dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
From the unceasing comes everything that ceases.
Yet in cessation this is ceaselessness.

E Ma Ho! Wondrous marvelous dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
From the non-enduring comes everything that endures.
Yet the time of enduring itself does not endure.

E Ma Ho! Wondrous marvelous dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
From the inconceivable comes all that is conceived,
Yet conception itself is inconceivable.

E Ma Ho! Wondrous marvelous dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
Though from what does not come or go there is coming and going,
The nature of coming and going never comes or goes.

The Dohakosha says:

As various rivers are all one in the ocean,
Many false things are overcome by one truth.
By the appearance of the single sun,
Many darknesses are overcome.

Though clouds receiving water from the ocean
May spread until they cover all the earth,
If we are inside them, they are like pure space,
There is no increase and there is no decrease.

The Buddha's perfection is completely fulfilled.
Co-emergence is the single nature.
As that all sentient beings arise and cease.
Within it there are neither things or non-things.

As narrow waters become one in the ocean, what appears to be born is one within the unbo darknesses are overcome by the single lamp of the sun, by knowing the single unborn, all co are also known as the unborn.
When clouds arise and cover the earth, within them there is nothing solid that is great or sm
and decreases; just so, arising from unborn dharmata, the dharmin appears to arise and cease, unborn nothing increases and decreases. Though within the naturally pure nature of mind, all beings are co attachment and grasping, their nature has never moved from the nature of mind. This is because mind itself primordially pure nature of things.

The Commentary Ascertaining the Intention says:

Subhuti said, formerly when the Lord and I were in a forest, a monk was also there. By perceiving various signs, we verified this. Some said that was by perceived by the skandhas the ayatanas. Some by the dhatus. Some by interdependent arising and the objects of min said, since the marks of one such dharma are known to be egoless, they cannot but all be li

C. What is to be abandoned

Thus of these dharmas appearing while they do not exist, which are primordially natureless:

in particular this appearance of the beings of the six lokas
Is an appearance of things that are not really there.
These are the forms of confusion, that come from habitual patterns.
As those whose eyes are filmed see hairs before the eyes,
And, if they want to be cured, must treat the imbalanced phlegm,
Those who want to purify confused appearance
Have to take the cure for the film of ignorance.

Those whose sight is obscured by a disorder of the phlegm treat the phlegm, when it appear drifting before their eyes and so forth. Similarly sentient beings, are obscured by habitual pa grasping "me" and
"mine" from beginningless time, and by the film of ignorance. Though they really exist as mi
luminous
nature of buddhahood, not only do they not see that, but they experience external stones, ro mountains, and internal attachments and thoughts of the kleshas and suchlike, like hairs in the eyes. From t appear they do not exist at all. They are merely seductions for fools. The Prasannapada says:

Because we follow the errors of ignorance, the world thinks complete absence of nature has
Those who have filmed eyes are attached to the nature of natureless hairs in the eyes and s the condition of having filmed eyes; similarly fools whose eyes of intellect are corrupted by th ignorance become attached to the natureless phenomena of things as having a nature.

The Lankavatara Sutra says:

Just as those with filmed eyes,
Wrongly grasp hairs in the eyes,
So these conceptualized things,
Are the false constructions of fools.

The noble ones who actually see naturelessness, realize only the purity and essencelessnes
the essential nature. The Prasannapada says:

When, those with the eye of undefiled prajña, free from the film of ignorance, use that vision then just as those who are free from filmed eyes do not see the hairs before the eyes percei who have filmed eyes, the noble ones, who do not see according to the constructions of fool minds, do not see these natures of things.

Also:

Because the deceptive dharmin beguiles fools, appearance is erroneous, like the seeming circle made by a whirling torch. On the level of no nature, all conditioned things are false, be they are the deceptive dharmin, like the water in a mirage. Whatever is true, like nirvana, is deceptive dharmin. Therefore by the reasoning of the teachings and these scriptures, things established as natureless.

D. Abandoning.

1. How to train in the middle way free from extremes

Here is what is said about those who wish to remove the film of this ignorance:

By insight-wisdom, which is the antidote for this,
Emptiness passes the pass of samsaric habitual patterns.
When we gain the conviction that emptiness appears,
 The two truths are known as non-dual appearance-emptiness.
Madhyamaka training cures dwelling within the two extremes. The extreme of existence as v non-existence.
Dwelling neither in samsara or in nirvana,
We will be liberated in the space of the sky.
This is the very essence of the true meaning itself,
The natural state, the nature of the great perfection.

True prajña is one's intrinsic personal wisdom. If by that the nature of dharmas is viewed; al
kleshas,
habitual patterns, and so forth, confusions of things that appear while they do not exist, are l
the emptiness which one has entered. The Mula-madhyamaka-karikas says:

Kleshas, karma and all
The doer and the fruitions,
Are like a gandharva castle,
Like an illusion or dream.

The Sutra of the Complete Purification of All Karmas says:

That karma should be viewed as being by nature essenceless emptiness.

It is also empty, because it arises from conditions, The Sutra Requested by Ma Dröpa says

What rises from conditions does not arise.

It does not have the nature of arising.
What depends on conditions is called empty.
To know it as emptiness is being heedful

Appearance/emptiness is emptiness merely of true existence. The Shri Prajñaparamita-sam

Form is emptiness. Emptiness is form. Emptiness is not other than form. From is not other emptiness.

The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

That, the nature of form
Is likewise emptiness.
Emptiness is form,
The primordially unborn.

Also:

The nature of passion and aggression is emptiness.
Ignorance and pride are completely produced by conceptions.
Yet these thoughts have not arisen and do not rise.
If we know that, we are among the leaders of beings.

The Sutra of All Dharmas Being Without Arising says:

Passion is not perceived and neither is aggression.
Within this, ignorance also will never be perceived.
All the dharmas are like an unbroken expanse of space.
Whoever knows this is an enlightened victorious one.

Divine and non-divine are one in the single nature.
Likewise equal and different are equality.
Because there is no Buddha, there are no Dharma and Sangha.
Whoever has knowledge of that becomes a capable one.

The nature of sentient beings is taught to be buddhahood.
The nature of buddhahood is taught to be sentient beings.
Sentient beings and buddhahood are not two different things.

Whoever has knowledge of that becomes an excellent being.

As for relative and absolute being non-dual, truth is inseparable. By training in the suchness way, the thingless essence of primordial purity, one will transcend suffering and be liberated from nihilism, and samsara and nirvana. This suchness is the great perfection beyond being produced or soug King
says:

All the vessel and essence of the phenomenal world,
Buddhas and beings, arise from the essence, enlightenment.
Therefore pass the pass to primordial non-duality.

The Embodiment of the Intention says:

E ma ho, wondrous marvelous Dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
It is uncontrived, unstained, and unfabricated.
The nature of suchness is completely pure.

E ma ho, wondrous marvelous Dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
As for the groundless, rootless nature of mind,
This is the root of all the various dharmas.

E ma ho, wondrous marvelous Dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
The naturelessness that is the nature of things,
Is the spontaneous presence of mahasukha.

E ma ho, wondrous marvelous Dharma.
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
It is not empty, and it is not non-empty.
Nor is it conceived to be a middle way.

2. Cutting the root of mind:

In reality appearance does neither good nor harm,
But if we have attachment, we are bound within samsara.
We need not analyze the variety of appearance;
We only need to cut the root of grasping mind.

Appearance does not bind. If we are not attached to external assertion and denial, we will n
with internal attachment. This is because no connections will be established. Since it is attachm
as for abandoning attachment, the Dohakosha says:

Where there is attachment, that is what is seen.
If there is realization, everything is that.
No one knows anything that is other than that.
That which has been read, and grasped in meditation,
Is also said to be the very heart of the treatises.

When external conceptualizations of apparent form, sound, smell, taste, and touch are analy natureless. When there is attachment to what is impure and so forth, even if it is renounced attached will not be liberated, because the root of grasping is not cut. If one throws a stone at a dog, not who hit it with the stone, the dog attacks the now-inert stone. Such practice of Dharma, will not liberate fro
When
someone throws a stone at a lion, it kills the thrower. Just so, one's own mind, the root of th passion and aggression, will be pacified by the examining prajña of naturelessness. The Edifice of the T

Kashyapa, the single cause of the external many is to be sought within. Kashyapa, in future time proud monks will arise who are like a dog chasing a stone. Kashyapa, how are they lik chasing a stone? The dog, frightened by that stone, chases after that stone, but not the one it.
Kashyapa, thus some monks and brahmins try to separate themselves from inner form, sou smell, taste, and touchables. They conceive dharmas as impermanent, deceptive, and dest since they do not know where they came from, if they go among villages, cities, towns, distri regions, and kings' palaces and retinues, they are still harmed by form, sound, smell, taste a touchables.
If these live in monasteries, at the time of death those who dwell in worldly discipline will be born in the celestial worlds. There too they are harmed by the five desirable qualities. Whe died and departed, they will not be liberated from the lower realms.

What are these realms? Those of hell beings, animals, the world of the lord of death, and th of the asuras.
Kashyapa, such a monk is like the dog chasing the stone. For example, though the dog is frightened by the stone, it does not chase the one who threw it but chases the stone. Simila monks and brahmins, frightened by form and so forth, live in monasteries. Though they live monasteries, if they see the objects of form and so on, they do not know how to keep their in equanimity.
What arises from that fault? From not knowing, they will live in villages again. There they will again be harmed by form and so on. Even if they experience the enjoyments of the god died and transmigrated from these temporary divine and human births, they will fall into the l realms. These fools will suffer death and transmigration. They will have a hundred such suf
The tathagata has taught that they are like the dog who chases the stone.
Kashyapa, yogachara monks of times to come will not be like the dog who chases the stone
For example, if people throw a stone at a lion, it knows where the stones came from. It will c the stones, but those who threw the stones, so that this will not happen again.
Likewise yogachara monks who have seen desirable qualities, knowing that they have arise from mind, knowing by examining their minds that these things do not exist, will be liberated lion eats the one who threw the stone, these yogachara monks, when they see external des qualities, know that they have arisen from mind, and know the nature of mind to be emptines Therefore they liberate it into union with the natural state.
Kashyapa, for example, it is like this. Those skilled in dressage make horses move here and there as they like, Untrained people cannot do that.Kashyapa, the yogachara monk too, ente whatever mental contents are seen to arise and fully experiences them. He has no question they come from, and thus completely controls the mind:

As a skilled trainer of horses,
Trains horses to be motionless Yogacharins see becoming
And remove the conflicts of mind

Kashyapa, for example it is like this, a secret divine yantra of illness makes life cease.
Kashyapa, similarly since all who view conceptually grasp an ego, the power of life of the Dh made to cease:

Just as a yantra harms life
And will not bestow any happiness;

Going into the view of ego,
Will destroy the life of Dharma.

Kashyapa, it is like this, for example, with whatever persons are bound, from that they need be liberated. Kashyapa, similarly the mind of the yogacharin, for whatever it has desire, fror should be liberated:

From whatever binds any persons,
From that they should be freed.
So from obscuring desires Yogacharins should be freed.

That is the secret of mind. The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Whoever has no knowledge of this secret of mind,
These will uselessly wander without any aim or meaning.

3. The mind arising as the six lokas is unreal

Arising as the objects of the six lokas

Within the appearance of mind there is no nature at all.
It is not found by seeking. By looking it is not seen.
It has no shape or color. No essence is there to grasp.
Nothing is either within the mind or outside of it.
Nowhere does it rise or cease throughout the three times.
There are no parts and divisions; no things; no ground or root.
There is nothing to characterize by saying, "It is this."
Mind is beyond the objects of conceptual thought.

If mind is viewed by mind, knowing that no nature at all is identified is knowing the suchness state. The Dohakosha says:

The root of mind is markless.
By triple co-emergence
Where it arises it subsides,
There is nowhere it endures.

Also:

The true mind knows no opposite.
Where it arises it sets.
Its outside is within.

Also:

Within the primordially purity
Of the nature of space,
By always looking and looking,
Seeing will be obstructed.

This is beyond conception, thought, and all complexity. The Noble Sutra of The Source of th
Jewels says:

There is nowhere dharmas are born
And nowhere they arise.
No dying and transmigration,
Nor any becoming joyful.

As the lion of men
Has taught all this completely,
Hundreds of sentient beings
have been established in it.

It has no essence anywhere,
There is nothing else,
No one has ever found it.
It is not within.

External things as well
Are nowhere to be found.
These teachings were presented By the Lord Buddha himself.

Though the sugatas have taught

The way of peace to beings,
There is no actual being
Who is ever going to find it.

These completely teach
The liberation of beings.
Having been liberated,
They liberate many beings.

Because all dharmas are taught
To be without a self,
Sentient beings are freed
From this universe of grasping.

One is liberated from going
And by liberation from going
One goes to somewhere matchless.

The great Sage has attained
The other shore of samsara.
Anywhere else to go
Is never found at all.

Elsewhere does not exist,
Any more than coming back.
And yet "I have gone elsewhere,"
Is what is taught in words.

One who speaks these words
Also does not exist.
Neither the one who spoke them
Or the words themselves exist.

One to whom they are spoken
Also will not be found.
One who knows them also
Is nowhere to be seen.

Because of wrong conception
By the power of desire,
All these beings here
Are simply wandering.

Whatever being understands
The Dharma of perfect peace,
Sees the self-arising Of the Tathagata.

Peaceful ones completely
Know the highest dharma.

Regarding its being groundless and rootless the Secret Essence says:

As for the groundless, rootless nature of mind,
It is not male or female, nor is it neuter.
It is not markless, and has no pedigree.
It has no color, and it has no shape.
It is not existent or anything.

4. Mind is uncreated or unfabricated

Without the increase and decrease of the three times, though it appears to arise continually, natureless.
From the time it arises as the six lokas, past mind:

It is seen neither in the past nor in the future.
It does not enter the present, remaining where it is.
Not using mind to look for mind, just let it be.

The past is gone. The future is not yet here. Present mind has no arising, duration, nor ces Unestablished
for even an instant, neither viewed not viewer exist. They are put to rest by themselves. Th
King says:

Since mind is not a thing that can be viewed by mind,
By looking it is not seen. Let it rest in suchness.

5. Mind as instantaneous

Thus from the very time of emanation:

Objects of conceptual mind are instantaneous,
Assertions and denials of mere recalled cognition.
There are no in and out from the time that objects appear.
What is sought is produced by the seeker, so it is taught.
So if one seeks oneself, one never will be found.

Whatever conceptions of mind have arisen, if they are searched for, they will not be found, s
the seeker. By looking for oneself one will not find it, since it is non-dual. If examined, oneself i non-existent, and so whatever it perceives is completely pacified. The All-Creating King says:

Intrinsically existing, motionless self-existence,
Naturally existing, uncreated by anyone;
This uncreated existence of suchness as it is,
Is taught to be supreme, the uncreated action.

Also:

By looking at one as two, one's meditation errs.
A single nature cannot be established as two.

6. Because it is primordially pure, it is without birth and cessation:

This is the natural state, eternally unborn.
The non-dwelling nature of mind, unobstructed and unceasing,
Groundless, rootless empty pervasion of the three times.
Ground of the ceaseless appearance of variety
With neither things or qualities, how can it be eternal?
Ceaselessly self-arising, how can it be nothing?
Neither dual nor non-dual, it is inexpressible.
Since here there is no existence, there is no recognition.
Its nature should be known to be primordial purity.

Because the naturally pure nature of mind is groundless and rootless, it is said to be empty.
arising is completely ceaseless, it is said to be appearance. Since if examined it has no things or cha is free from the extreme of eternalism. Since, as mere apprehension, it is ceaseless, it is free from the extre Since there is no other third class which would be both or neither, it cannot be identified as "this." Except l expressions like
"Naturally pure" it is inexpressible. It is wisdom unobscured by extremes. Saraha says:

As for spotless wisdom, unobscured by extremes,
Free from actions, it is not accretion of karma.
At any time it is changeless, therefore it is eternal

The net of wrong conceptions is nothing. Though it is divided into enlightened and other asp Embodiment of the Intention says:

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
The truly eternal is eternity.
This great eternal has no antidote.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
What is truly nothing is nothingness.
Enlightenment cuts the stream of what is wrong.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
Except for the universal and limitless,
Perfect buddhahood will not be found.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
Mind itself is perfect buddhahood.
No other sort of buddhahood exists.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
The three worlds have primordially been the essence, Unfabricated, unerring, and self-existing.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
The nature is this self-existing space.
The perfect Buddha does not need to be sought.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
State of goodness of all and everything;
Eternal-pervasion, wondrous to be told.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
Apart from this essence of enlightenment,
No non-realization exists at all.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
Everything is the Buddha and within it
There can be no obscuration by concept.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
Since thought itself is the purity of non-thought,
There is nothing other than sugatagarbha.

E ma ho, wondrous, marvelous dharma!
This is the secret of all the perfected buddhas.
Within the primordial essence of the buddhas
Realization is a spontaneous presence.

7. Be completely without accepting and rejecting, because this nature of mind is destroyed it:

If it should be examined, it seems to be non-existent.
But if it is not examined, it always will be there.
Within this primordial essence whose nature is non-duality,
There is no conception of accepting or rejecting.
There is no good and evil; there is no hope and fear.
How cold this exist by examining and analysis?
Shun the inconstant crowd of the mind of three times.

If with many analyses and examinations one examines the mind, it seems that it does not ex unexamined, it does not exist either. Therefore it is natureless. Without accepting, rejecting fear, be at ease like a destitute haughty bhramin elephant. As for the instruction of being naturally in that state o non-aggression without view, thought, examination, memory, and wish, Saraha says:

If the haughty elephant enters accumulations of mind,
If it cuts off coming and going it will be at leisure.
If it is realized like that, there is no place for defilement.
Shameless skillful ones will never realize that.

Also:

By letting loose the elephant of mind,
All the stains of ego all are destroyed.
Like paintings in space, or drinking rippling water,
Let the borders be just as they are.

The object elephant's powers having been grasped by the hand,
That will kill it and how will it be autonomous.
The yogin is someone like an elephant-guard...

E. the doctrine is not realized by words,

There are four sections.

1. it will not be realized by those who manifest pride.

Now there is the teaching that those who evaluate the Dharma merely verbally, will not reali

it truly is. Keeping track of whether the reason applies to the subject, the forward and reverse what kinds of things agree or do not agree with the reason, we are moved by individual conceptions and k kleshas, so that a bonfire of many sufferings blazes up. Skillful at burning away the true being of onesel such beings
manifest pride like a mountain,

The mind of relationship with complexities and concepts.
Is moved, as if by an always blowing blasting wind.
Though a mind like this will have no realization, Bodhicitta not coming or going, taking or leaving,
Is the all-creating essence of undefiled wisdom,
By resting in that way, that is how it is seen.

Regarding this, the essence or intrinsic nature, the Lankavatara Sutra says:

Sophistic fools examine
What is like a corpse.

Conceptual examination spreads a thousand great nets of complexities that have nothing to Dharma and the natural state of mind are primordially pure, with nothing that needs to be es cleared away.
Here the Precious Sky Sutra and The Tantra of Oral Instruction accord with the Abhisamaya Uttaratantra of Maitreya: 39

There is nothing to clear away,
And nothing to be established.
Reality views reality.
To see that is liberation

Enlightenment, bodhi, in Tibetan is jangchub. Eternally undefiled, it is pure, jang. With qual eternally complete, it is perfect, chub. Arising ceaselessly without obstruction, it is called, jangchub s sem, citta, of enlightenment, bodhicitta. As for the teaching that trikaya is primordially self-existing, the Al

King says:

The meaning of jang is this: The essence bodhicitta
Is self arising, primordial, and completely pure,
Everything that is done by the doer of all, the King,
Is completely pure in the state of Samantabhadra,
That is the explanation of the meaning of jang.

chub is like this: The essence is self-arising wisdom.
Appearance and existence, within the vessel and essence,
The buddhas of the three times and beings of the three realms
As suchness everything, is perfect everywhere,
As all-pervading perfection chub should be explained.

sem is like this: The essence is self-arising wisdom.
By that the vessel and essence of the phenomenal world
Is entered, empowered, and thereby rendered luminous.
That is the explanation of the meaning of sem.

Since all dharmas are naturally non-dual and pure, if we see essential naturelessness, we k
are.
When we realize that the nature of mind has no coming and going, kleshas neither arise nor neither abandoning or antidotes. The kleshas are pure as they are. The Song of the Oral Instructio Inexhaustible
Treasury says:

How could either kleshas or antidotes be produced?
People who work on them bind themselves in samsara.

Being liberated by seeing the pith, does not depend on abandoning any objects. By knowin objects in a dream and the one who grasps them, they are self-liberated. Though others wo liberated after abandoning objects, the mere appearance of objects and mind does not bind. However, an is grasped by bondage. As for the instruction to abandon attachment, Tilopa says:

Appearance does not bind, attachment binds.

Therefore cut attachment, Naropa.

The Dohakosha says:

Thinking, "that is pleasant,"
The mind of equanimity
That cherishes such irritation
Falls away from the essence.

Even a little bit
The size of a sesame-hull Produces forever after Nothing but suffering.

Mere appearance without assertion and denial does not produce attachment. From merely essence of mind, the mind will never produce conceptual apprehension. Though conceptua produced, it is not outside of the previous essence, and there is no belief in and be attachment to comple All-Creating King
says:

In the uncreated nature which is like the sky,
How can there be examination and analysis?

The Dharmaraja Sutra says:

When someone is struck with a poisoned arrow, if this is quickly pulled out, that person will be saved. Otherwise, while that persons is thinking, "this arose from the feathers, or this arc shaft or this arose from the point," the malady will spread, and that person will die.
Similarly, as we examine and analyze many reasons, with the power of the mental conception, kleshas arise and proliferate. Therefore, the mind should rest in complete non-t

The theories of arrogant people who conceptualize the meaning in mere words have little gr things are. By such knowing who will be satisfied? Whoever deteriorates because of not knowing, will dis believe in complexities, they will be far from suchness. The Dohakosha says:

That beings without remainder are excellent is refuted
Just by the fault of pride that cannot be their character.

Also:

Kye Ho! listen to me my son,
The corpse of argument by joy knows true abiding Because of the explanations and productions of sentient beings,
And so on, and so on and so on it cannot be realized.

The Commentary Ascertaining the Intention says:

The bodhisattva Arya Dharma said, "When I reached the buddha field called "Arrogance" of the tathagata Vast Glory, many kinds of extremists thought up all kind of useless philosophie pondered them. They thought about them. They investigated them. Not having realized the meaning, these sophists argued with each other. They abused. They reviled. Having seen philosophies were annihilated they said, "Kye ma! When the absolute of the tathagatas is ta truly beyond all conceptions, we think that is right!.

The Buddha said, Arya Dharma, now, by really being beyond all concepts, I have become enlightened. Having become enlightened, I have described it. I have clarified it. I have exp the absolute is individually and personally apprehended by the noble ones.
What is apprehended by individual beings is the sphere of concepts. Conceptions are the realm of philosophy. The absolute is inexpressible. Reasoning increases contention. The a pacifies contention. Truth cannot be examined, inferred, or pondered by reasoning. The ma realization of individual and personal awareness, is inexpressible. Therefore it annihilates conventionalities. The absolute Dharma is free from contention. It is beyond the sphere of conceptuality.

The Sutra Encouraging The Excellent Wish says:

Manjushri, those who by having heard much, are self infatuated and haughty, are separated from a true and proper attitude, and the continuum of their minds becomes unruly. Separate shamatha and vipashyana, they are far from the utter profundity of the Buddhadharma.

Knowing only verbally, such people never accomplish anything very beneficial. The Avatam

Just as a deaf musician,

Brings rejoicing to others
But cannot enjoy his own music
Such is dharma without meditation

A ferryman on a river
Helping others to cross over,
Just staying there till he dies,
Such is dharma without meditation

As the taste of molasses,
Is not known from mere description
Likewise the taste of emptiness,
Must be tasted in meditation.

Seeking the meaning verbally, devoting oneself only to examination and analysis, is not a ca
wisdom.
The Dohakosha says:

Not drinking the amrita
Of the guru's oral instructions,
Whose coolness satisfies
The torments of the mind,

In the desert of treatises,
In that desiccated plain,
Tormented by thirst
One will only die.

The holy guru exemplifying the meaning of profound dharmata is what will satisfy. Also:

For those who have a wish for rootless suchness
The guru's oral instructions are enough.

In entering the profound essential meaning, do not hope for enlightenment from merely verb Dharma or mere logical lumping together and hair-splitting. Of these two kinds of philosoph conceptions of real borders and dividing points are attached to the true existence of individu
words
designating these are postulated according to the mind, there are disputes about the classes and does not agree are with them.

Having become arrogant about such generalities about knowables, their individual ideas abo things and so forth, people make up a heap of distinctions, about the ground, form, and so o
these external natures could be established, their minds evaluate things in terms of superimpositio Within groundless confused appearance, such doctrines, and their bases of distinction, are n obscuring false conceptions. Don't do this. The commentary on the Sixty Stanzas on Reasoning says

Not only are you bound by the beginningless, universal bondage of the kleshas, but now by bad doctrines you are adding more bonds, like silk worms winding themselves up in their ow

The nature like the sky should be realized to have an essence without divisions. the All-Cre

All of the dharmas exist as examples of bodhicitta.
All are examples of that essence like the sky.
What is being described is the meaning of bodhicitta.

As for the instruction of defilement by mind-made meditation

Therefore as for the phenomena of incidental obscurations or natural obscurations, there are verses:

Within the purity of the spotless nature of mind,
Artificial defilements never will be seen.
Here why should we speak of development and perfection?
In meditative purity, defilements are exhausted.

By looking for complexities of developing and perfecting within the primordial spontaneous p nature, the essence without accepting and rejecting will not be seen. Pass the pass into the great perfection.
The All-Creating King says:

For students who rejoice in counting characteristics,
Counting mantras is taught and developing mandalas,
For whoever has placed their hopes upon the path of trikaya.

Those who produce understanding by means of heaping up concepts,
For the length of time of a hundred million kalpas
Will never realize the sense of the undeveloped mandala.

Kye! for me the teacher, the King, the doer of all,
By accumulations and mandala being self-perfected,
The nature of Dharmata does not need to be created.
As the nature with neither wish nor development,
Know The mandala of the King, the doer of all.

Similarly within the nature there are also no path, meditation, and so forth. The same text sa

As for bodhicitta, it is like the sky.
Within this nature of dharmas and mind which is like the sky,
There is no view or meditation, and also no guarding samaya.

Buddha activity is effortless; wisdom unobscured.
There is no training in the bhumis, and there is no treading the path.
There are no subtle dharmas and no non-dual relationship.

For mind there are no precepts, and nothing to be resolved.
Since this is beyond both exaggeration and denigration,
There is no passing the pass into reality.
This is bodhicitta, the view of the great perfection.

The Dohakosha says:

Free from meditation, what is there to wish for?
How will that which is inexpressible be explained?
By the mudra of samsara all beings have been seduced.
Who has not defiled the nature of things as they are?

Continuity has no mantra, no goal or meditation.
All these are causes of confusing one's own mind.
Mind's natural purity is unstained by meditation.
Its nature exists as bliss, so do not produce any torment.

The All-Creating King says:

That which is primordial undistracted, and unlost
Is completely undistracted by the tether of samadhi.

But undistracted samadhi can be the deceiver hope,
Within the provisional teachings of the mahayana,
When it has been presented in terms of cause and effect.

That which is primordial, undistracted, and unlost
Is the naturally resting nature, apart from cause ad effect.
This is the antidote to establishment and effort.

F. Passing the pass

There are four sections.

1. Passing the pass into the nature as limitless as space,

As for passing the path into the single nature, as limitless as space:

Within the primordial purity of the nature of mind,
Without abandoning, antidotes, separation or attainment,
Objects of meditation are superfluous.
Without outer grasping or inner fixation abandon clinging.
Without any grasping of "this," let us cut through attachment.
Without success or failure, abandon hope and fear.

Within the primordially enlightened nature of mind, there is now nothing to purify, so attachr accepting and rejecting are unnecessary. The All-Creating King says:

Kye mahasattva,
If one wishes to establish one's own mind,
Since it is established by being without desire,
One should rest in the equanimity of non-thought.
Naturally rest in the realm that neither accepts or rejects.
Naturally rest in the state that is naturally motionless.

Since inner and outer grasping and fixation do not exist at all, do not cling. The same text s

Without any inside or outside, this is dharmadhatu.
The aspect that is deep has no conceptual objects.

Since within unity there is nothing to call, "this," destroy the coils of attachment. The same t

As for mind, the nature of it is suchness.
Therefore all the dharmas are established as suchness.
Do not fabricate anything in that nature of suchness.

Also it says that there are neither success nor failure:

There is nothing to succeed at or fail in producing.
Do not be caught within the trap of hope and fear.

2. Passing the pass into the unity of the sky at the very moment of realization:

In insight which is fundamentally without change,
How can the different conditioned phenomena ever arise?
That very arising is liberation from the beginning.
Dharmakaya is one, like water and its waves.

Within the changelessness of one's own mind, whatever instantaneous phenomena of joy a happiness and suffering and so forth may arise are ungraspable. They liberate themselves other antidotes.
As for instant self-liberation without before or after, the All-Creating King says:

Liberation is self-liberation. There is no other kind.

Also the Song of the Oral Instructions of the Inexhaustible Treasury says:

That liberated instant is known as dharmakaya.
"There is another liberation by great bliss."
Though this is said by fools, it is water in a mirage.

Also:

As much as there is emanation from mind,

Just that much the nature of the lord Buddha,
Is otherness like water and its waves.

Such experience arises as we pass the pass into freedom from viewed and viewer.

3. The conceptual mind of assertion and denial disappears:

When anything is viewed, the viewer's essence is lost.
Objects and the directions, when sought will not be found.
The seeker too is not perceived in simplicity.
Without an object of action, the actor does not exist.

Viewing this arising, when we try to reject the watcher and leave things as they are, while we something to reject, not only are there no directions, places, and objects; but the borderless, all-encomp
is not perceivable either. There is no trace of anything to affirm or deny, no reference points at all support, mind,
being like space, the All-Creating King says:

Not existing, not realized, no vision of anything,
Naturally existing equanimity of non-thought.
As it is eternal, no mind of effort arises.
Mahasukha abides as the essence of all dharmas.

That is how it is encountered.

4. In encountering the ground, there is nothing to be viewed.

At that time, realization of the indivisible space of the nature of mind is spontaneously prese to what it is like when the self-existing throne of dharmakaya is attained, taking as an example the a

Reach the primordial state that is spotless like the sky.
Without its opposite, resting, how can anything go?
When exhaustion has been reached, there also is no coming.
Nobody looks at nothing, so where could we ever be?

That is a display of vajra song of realization without center or limit. What arises is liberated like a dispersing cloud. This is the realization arising at that time. By mixing primordial space, the mind, and its self-arising, self-liberated wisdom, the nature of mind is irreversible from the natural state. We r of the exhaustion of dharmas. This is liberation from the defile of knowledge of assertion and deni things and characteristics. We reach the stream of dharmata without coming and going. No one goes to go.
Yogins who reach such a state transcend the objects of confusion. They do not enter the ci They reach the ground like the sky. The nature of their minds encounters space. The three gates are effort like clouds disappearing into space, purified into the primordial ground of fixated conceptualization. Th are. This is the time when they ascertain the meaning which those of lesser fortune will not see, even if to them. The
All-Creating King says:

Mahasukha dharmakaya is perfect within the mind,
Let it pervade without the three times' before and after.

The Dohakosha says:

Kye lord sirs and madams now look here.
I have realized nothing but this itself.
Before a being whose karma is exhausted
Gain conviction about the nature of mind.

The time of encountering it is like that.

G. The conviction of realization

If this is known, we have a need for nothing else.
Buddhas are nothing now, just as confused as we are.
There are no questions. Rootless mind is gone.
No reference points, no grasping "This," and nothing certain.

Relaxed and even, letting go into unity.
Having realized this, here is the song that is sung.
By the rising of Drime Ozer it goes forth from the teaching.

All doubts about the natural state are resolved. This is the time of no further aspirations. Ot liberated yogins, have the same realization we do. So now, beyond this absence of doubts and questions, no teach us.
The Dohakosha says:

Before, behind and in the ten directions,
Whatever may be seen is that itself.
Today like Lord Buddha I have cut through confusion
Now I have no questions for anyone.

That is what it is like.

The former well-ordered sequence of view, meditation, and action, depends on higher and lo flight of stairs. Its customary attitude regards yogins as higher and lower. Now the mind wh questions about this is scattered, seeming to lose its ground and root. It finds no reference point at all. Whateve ungraspable, as if one were drunk. Appearances are unrecognizable, as if one were a little child. Without any action, all at once everything is on the same level, naturally, alertly at ease. Without any reference point is fundamental oneness beyond grasping. The phenomena of excellence arise within us. The Dohakosha Realization is like a wish-fulfilling gem.

Its confusion-destroying power is very wonderful.

This is when that happens. What arises arises as dharmata. When we reach the ground of out to be pure objectless wakefulness like the space of the sky. All karma and conditionality are Dohakosha
says:

Beings by karma are bound to the individual.

Once liberated from karma, they are free.
If one's own being is free, there will certainly be no other.
This is called the attainment of supreme nirvana.

This is when that occurs. Whatever is done is liberated into no reference point. By the aris power of non-fixation, one has neither bondage or liberation. The same text says:

If action and non-action are truly realized,
There is no bondage, nor is there any liberation.

By transmission of the realization of the guru, one is liberated. The same text says:

That which is the primordial nature of the unborn,
Today I have realized, as taught by the glorious guru.

Becoming god-like, one sings a song of the manifestation of the nature of mind, self-arising
the natural state, beyond existence or non-existence of the natural state. We realize of the pith limitless impartiality. With the rising of the thousand-rayed spotless disk of the sun, the world of goo made to appear.
Luminous mind is displayed as the lotus pond called liberation. One should know, "I have g the level of Samantabhadra."

H. by the explanation of the primordial liberation of appearance and mind, how we pass the great perfection,
encompassed and perfected as the great miracle.

There are three sections of closing and summary.

1. The first has six parts.

a. The teaching of the emptiness of apparent objects,

With instruction of appearance and mind as primordial liberation, we pass the pass into the great

perfection:

KYE HO my friends, look at apparent objects.
They are all the unborn. They are empty and equal.
Even though various images rise within a mirror,
The surface of that mirror is really only one,

When reflections arise in a mirror, there is really nothing but the radiance of the one bright mirror-surface, but still these forms appear. So all the dharmas of samsara are nothing else than the nature, er Sutra Requested
by Jönpa says:

As in the disk of a mirror,
Faces may appear,
So unestablished dharmas
Ought to be known by Jönpa.

b. The projecting mind is emptiness,

At the time of experiencing the naturelessness of all dharmas, as for appearances:

If we look at the mind that has projected this,
Mind is free from any affirming or denying.
Just as clouds in the sky arise and disappear,
The non-dual miracles of space are purity.
This is the spotless nature that is the primordial buddha.
This is uncreated self-existing dharmata.

Awareness, producing the view, is liberated from projecting objects. The phenomena of obj purified in non-fixation. When clouds fade away after arising in the sky, they go nowhere bu Self-dissolving, they become invisible. As awareness is liberated from projecting objects, the three times go into realization.

The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

Just as in space that has no clouds at all

Clouds make a sudden appearance everywhere,
And then as they vanish, with no clouds anywhere,
They make us think they went from whence they came,
All dharmas should be known to be like that.

All dharmas first arose from or in the space of the unborn. Now they remain there. In the en liberated back into it. Awareness of what arises too first arose from the empty nature of min present it remains there. Finally it will cease there. That is how it should be known. Such a nature is that of pr buddhahood. The

All-Creating King says:

As for the sky-like nature of the mind,
The essence of the primordial buddha, enlightenment,
It does not exist by effort and establishing.
Rest in that uncreated natural purity.

c. Body and mind are non-dual emptiness:

There is neither object or primordial purity.
There is no receiving and there is no letting go,
No bias or partiality, no negation or affirmation.
What appears has no true existence; what rises is emptiness.
All is equality, free from all reference points.

Apparent objects and fixation-producing awareness, appear while neither of them exists, as They are known without accepting and rejecting, and affirmation and denial. The All-Creatin

That which is only one within the state of suchness, Dharmata, appears as five kinds of separate objects.
The five desirables and undesirables then exist.
In single suchness, there is accepting and rejecting.

As these are appearances of self-arising wisdom,
They are not rightly rejected by its own agency.
What is produced by the wrong of rejection is samsara.

Whatever appears is empty of true existence, like the water in a mirage. When this is known reflection-like appearance of all dharmas should be abandoned. Then there is equality, essentially providi point for the mind.

d. External objects are uncertain and mind has no reference points:

Objects are uncertain, appearing in various ways.
In the great impartiality, mind has no reference points.
So the nature of mahasandhi should be known.

Appearances are not ascertained as one particular thing, but seem to be a variety. The awa fixates them also has no reference points. Everything is liberated as the partless singularity of the g perfection The Great Space says

Whatever appears is uncertain,
Mind too is impartial,
Having no reference points.
Unfabricated great space,
Manifests as the nature
Of the ultimate great perfection.

e. The reason for these

As for establishing the reason:

Within the world of dharmas of samsara and nirvana,
The dharmas of the past are equality without concept.
The dharmas of the future are unborn equality.
The dharmas of the present are non-dwelling equality.
The three times are timeless as equality with no ground.
All there is was always eternally complete.

As for the five fold equality:

1. Since all dharmas are equal, they should be known to be without accepting and rejecting
2. These dharmas of the phenomenal world are equal in that once they are gone, they will r
3. Since the future ones have not arisen, they are equal in not existing anywhere.
4. In the present they are equal in that if the apprehension that identifies inner and outer ess examined, none are found.
5 Yet equally when unexamined they appear. The Telling the Marks says:

Remain in realization that the three times are timelessness.

The three times are related by not being established in time, and since they are groundless empty.

Because everything is unborn they are also equal as prajñaparamita. Their duration and ce
from the time they appear are equal in not being established as anything whatsoever. The Middle Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, since all dharmas are equality, the perfection of prajña too is equality.

The Sutra of Motionless Dharmata says:

All dharmas by nature are unborn. By essence they are unmoving. They are free from the extremes of action. They are beyond the objects of complexity. They are primordial equality

f. The changeless nature of mind:

The phenomenal world that consists of samsara and nirvana
Is nothing but an image reflected in the mind.
The nature of that mind is the great space of dharmadhatu.
The nature of that space is changeless throughout the three times.
That changeless nature was nirvana from the start.
This fundamental enlightenment is Samantabhadra.

Whatever appears is a reflection of confused habitual patterns, arising as if in the surface of
The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

Mind is like a painter.
Mind produced the skandhas.
All the worlds there are
Are paintings of the mind.

The phenomenal world is the supported destructible inhabitants, sentient beings, within the environment. By becoming familiar with the habitual patterns of confused mind, they appear from the time they arise like a dream. One gains that conviction about the confused appearances of gains the conviction that appearance-fixating mind is empty like space. The Dohakosha says:

Mind should be grasped as being like the sky.
The nature of space should be grasped as being mind.

As for becoming convinced that space is changeless, the All-Creating King says:

Just as the space of the sky is changeless,
The space of the nature of mind is changeless.

What is changeless is the primordial peace of nirvana, the nature of Samantabhadra. The A says:

This primordial purity, the unchanging nature of mind
Is the self-existing essence, the doer of all, enlightenment.

2. second section

There are five parts.

a. Inseparable appearance and emptiness are primordially the same

Therefore, all dharmas are primordially and universally included and perfected as the wondr nature of the great perfection:

Inseparable and primordial appearance and emptiness.
Simplicity without perception of either one or many.

With neither bias or partiality, all is equal,
Equal appearance and emptiness; equal in truth or falsehood.
Existence is equal and non-existence is also equal.
This is equality transcending all extremes,
The single state of the space of primordial purity.

All dharmas are non-dual appearance/ emptiness beyond complexities of one and many, lik nothing solid and definite to them. The All-Creating King says:

All dharmas have a nature like the sky.
As for the sky itself, it is natureless.
There is no example of the sky.
All these dharmas without the least exception,
Should be known to really be like that.

Really equality like space, appearances are equally like reflections in a mirror. They are equ
emptiness, having no identity of their own. From the viewpoint of confused mind, they are equal in truly in the sense of having causal power. For example, either form or a reflection can produce form-grasping the eye-consciousness. They are equally false. Their natureless state is confused appearance, like hallucinations created by eating datura plants. They are equally existent, as emanations exhausted in their mere app equally non-existent, since their nature is not established, like water in a mirage. They are equally b extremes, like pure space. They are primordially equal as the space of dharmata beyond division or clearing aw example. As for their being primordially empty, the Noble Sutra of the Clouds of the Three Jewels says:

Dharmas, primordial emptiness, not coming into being,
Have no going or staying, bereft of all existence.
There is never anything to their illusory nature.

Pure of everything, completely like the sky,
The Dharma of the Victorious One has so been taught.
If they were not exhausted, they would not be seen.

These dharmas, from the above, have no selves or being.
Even the Buddha's teachings cannot exhaust such dharmas.
The teachings were taught only after such things were believed eternal.
Within samsara nothing conventional will be found.
Things that formerly rose leave no marks at all.
Those of future time are also known like that.

They naturally consist of nothing but karma and action.
Both supreme and ordinary karmas rise.
Dharmas are eternal peace that is empty of nature.
They should also all be known as selflessness.

The Moon Lamp explains it the same way.

b. all mentally imputed labelings are empty of essence

All that the mind examines is empty of any essence.
Names are inflated myths of individual essence,
Supposedly to be found in this temporary world.
There is neither true nor false, no connection of body and mind
One does not cover the other. There are neither subject nor object.

The doctrines of the skandhas, ayatanas, and so forth are mere mental imputations. As me dharmas do not exist, they are empty of essence. Nominal imputations have no reality inter
They are incidental and unestablished. The imputation, "This is a real specifically characterized phen exhausts itself as mere name and concept. Though imputed objects are maintained to be like a fire arising fro fire in a dream, the natures of these apparent forms of confused habitual patterns are not establishe
of the confused viewpoint of samsara are mere superimposed projections. In that sense, from the appear, they are equal in being only false.
However, if one analyzes apparent objects and the awareness that fixates them, there are falsity.
Object and perceiver are like space. There is neither related object nor relationship, and so not real.

Nothing has nothing to do with anything. Not only does relationship not exist, but general ar though set forth by the mind, are not specifically characterized or identifiable phenomena. Therefore, genera are equally either non-imputed phenomena or if they are imputed phenomena, they neither increase or So what if relationship and the fixated objects of grasping and fixation are shown by analysis
Then
all the fixations of fools are confused. A small child does has no such superimposed doctrin distinctions, but later becomes accustomed to projecting obscurations drawn from doctrines of bad learning. The Ascertainment says:

Beings will become rigidified,
Not seeing how virtue is harmed.
Kye ma! Who dealt this mess?
Unbearable devils of doctrine?

The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Subhuti, all dharmas are mere symbols, mere imputations. These mere symbols, mere imputations, are incidental. They are empty of essence.

c. Since mind does not emit anything, objects do not arise.

As for the example of the instruction of not fixating this non-relationship:

Just as various forms appear within a mirror,
Phenomenal objects rise in the space of sense awareness.
By grasping them we feel desire and aggression.
Then there is the confusion of the samsaric world.
Bring them all together, not projecting the mind.
No objective phenomena arise within the mind.
Being essenceless, they do not exist as two.

This short passage about the well-known example is added to make this easier to understar reflection of a face appears in a mirror, does one's face eject the reflection so that they beco does the reflection appear to be like the face, while not ejected out of the face? As for individual appearance in of the six senses, mind does not eject itself as an external object. Nor does the object appear within the phen apprehension of sense awareness. The face does not eject itself and become the reflection or image; but the reflec to appear like

it.
When phenomena arise the way they are grasped by mind is samsaric confusion. If these c mind is not externally ejected, and the external phenomena allegedly apprehended do not s internally. As what they appear to be, they do not arise anywhere.
  The mind of phenomenal arising too is not established externally, internally, or in between.
of phenomena does not exist. If phenomena are analyzed, they are essenceless. What arises Phenomena,
object and perceiver are things could not possibly be established. The Mula-madhyamaka-k

Where are they supported? Where do they arise?
In brief such things cannot exist as what they are.
And since they cannot be something other than they are,
They are not nothingness, and they are not eternal.

d. Since object and mind are natureless, they are self-liberated.

Appearing like this:

Objects all are one because they are without an essence.
All theories are one because their objects cannot be grasped. Appearance and mind are no primordial purity.
There is no need for analysis or examination.
They are a single fundamental liberation,

As the various things in a dream occur within a single state of sleep, all apparent variety is o naturelessness.
 Appearances seem to arise continually, but thoughts as one can apprehend no essence to are only a state of a single body of water. Just as obscured vision is one with the eye-awareness that appearance and mind are one within non-dual dharmata. Requiring no examination or analysis at all, beyond exar analysis, the nature of this pleasure garden in the sky is taught to be that of the sky itself. The Samadhira

Just as with perception of the ego
Train the mind with every kind of awareness.
The essence of all dharmas is emptiness.
They are completely pure like the space of the sky.

The All-Creating King says:

Thus, since all the dharmas of the phenomenal world
Are a unity within the unborn state,
No grasping and fixation are there to be perceived.
Beyond the reach of conceptions of either thought or speech
Their nature is a single space that is like the sky

e. If one realizes that what arises is self-liberated, that is sagacious:

Non-dual Samsara/ nirvana, is one within the mind:
A variety of rivers are one within the ocean.
All has the equal taste of single co-emergence.
The change of the four elements is one in the state of space,

One in freedom from mental negation or assertion,
One because whatever arises is liberated,
One in the purity of non-duality.
The play of waves is one with the water that is their substance.
Whoever realizes this can be said to be sagacious.

As rivers flowing from the four directions are one within the ocean, samsara and nirvana are mind. The All-Creating King says:

Both the environment and the inhabitants,
Buddhas and sentient beings, all the phenomenal world
Were made by mind, and they are one within the mind.

Whatever changes there may be in the four elements, they do not depart from space. So wh experiences of the view, meditation, action, and fruition may arise are one within the co-eme state. the Highest Peak says:

That which is co-emergent with the natural state
Is all of one taste with that, and it is one with that.

Assertions and negations that arise within the mind are one in being empty, because they ha suchness of co-emergent wisdom. As waves are one with water, what arises is one with the complexities of mind are one with the nature of mind. That nature is primordially without emanation and gat Embodiment of Realization says:

Complexity has no complexity.

Discursive thoughts dissolve in the ground like water mixing with water. The Dohakosha say

As when water is poured into water,
That water becomes of one taste;
Lord Buddha does not see Minds having faults and virtues.

The lord Buddha, the nature of mind, is without complexity, beyond objects of seeing. Thos
are sagacious. The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

To completely analyze the meaning, within the words of the sagacious there are no concept thoughts.

3. The instruction that the meaning of being without accepting and rejecting is being without fixation

a) The final summary, introductory:

Here all dharmas are not grasped as different.
These reflections have the nature of non-duality.
This play has no good and evil, accepting or rejecting.

Let us rest where the mind does not fixate duality.

Since essentially pure suchness arising as play, is beyond action, seeking, memory, and tho resting in the non-duality of mahasukha, the All-Creating King says:

Within the unborn, in dharmata completely pure,
The appearance of things that are born rises like a reflection.
Since the nature of what arises is non-dual,
Rest in mahasukha, the effortless nature of suchness.

b) the nature of the great perfection is without fixation

When one rests there:

Fixed objects do not arise when there are no reference points.
Insight without fixation is the completeness of being,
The nature of the great perfection, the natural state.

At this time non-fixating insight arises in natural freedom from all assertions and denials. Th
perfection
is spontaneously present.

The All-Creating King says:

Kye! I, bodhicitta, the king, who am the doer of all,
have no glorification and denigration of objects.
I meditate without any thoughts of anything.
Artifacts of the three gates rest naturally as they are,
Naturally liberated, just as they arise.
Just as unborn space transcends all partial divisions,
So the nature of mahasandhi should be known.

I. The dedication of merit

Now there is the dedication of merit:

Thus, because of the equal nature of all dharmas,

Having passed the pass of fixations of intellect.
With limitless awareness bound in servitude,
May our exhausted minds today ease their weariness.

By the merit of presenting this garland of the wondrously-arisen Dharma of instantaneous lib essential meaning, may whatever beings there may be, enter into being the space of the gre partiality. The fences of their personal doctrines and their view and meditation do not encounter the nature
and liberation. They are bound in assertion, denial, and so forth, wearied by attachment to true e these rest in spontaneous adherence to the conceptionless nature of the great perfection. This the vast s of all,
bodhicitta.

The heaped up clouds in the sky of the unborn essence Resounding with the thunder of emptiness, effortless suchness,
By the unmoving nature of mind, the level of enlightenment,
See the inexpressible essence of perfect equality.

May the minds of sentient beings, the state of confusion
Which have entered the entrapments of grasping and fixation,
Cross without exception into the nature of purity, Known as the great vastness, equal space free from existing,
The field of Samantabhadra, where all is eternally perfect.

Sailing waters disturbed by conception-related prana,
May all who far from profundity fixate reflected forms,
In the cool lake of non-thought, which is self-arising wisdom
Come to rest in spontaneous motionless clarity.

XI

The Commentary on the Eleventh Chapter THE NATURE OF MIND, THE EASE OF WEARI
THE PATH, SPOTLESS DHYANA, THE UNION OF SHAMATHA AND VIPASHYANA

Now that we have gained confidence in the view of the great freedom from extremes, the na

there is

XI. Meditation, the chapter of spotless samadhi

There are four parts.

A. Having, resolved the view, the teaching of meditation.
B. The teaching of the gradations of powers by which one meditates.
C. The explanation of the stages of the path of meditation.
D. The dedication of merit.

A. Having resolved the view, one should meditate:

Having explained the view of the great freedom from extremes, the natural state like the sky dharmas are by nature unborn; now there is the teaching of meditation, self-arising wisdom sun and moon. As just explained:

And so when we have seen the equality of all dharmas,
It is important to rest within the natural state.

After first cutting through extremes with the view, by meditation rest within that. Otherwise v liberated from the host of kleshas or perfect the virtues of the path. Therefore we really oug Rest in the sky-like purity of the natural state, cutting through complexities of hope and fear. The All-creatin

Kye Ho vajra being! Now meditate on the meaning.
In dharmata enlightenment without any meditation,
There are neither meditation or its object,
To rest in the nature without meditation is meditation.
The meaning is the unborn, which is the meaning of all.
When the marks of discursive thought are apprehended as suchness,
None of the motions of memory, discursive thoughts, and mind,
Can cause the least distraction from the unborn state.
When it is known that thinking like that is meditation,
Resting in non-meditation will never be distracted.

Also:

Kye Ho vajra being! Now you should meditate well!
Whatever appears, all the dharmas of sight and sound,
To one who well knows the meaning, are only that single meaning.
When the nature has manifested, that which has been shown,
Is realized to be the nature of the unborn itself.
Hopeless fearless non-distraction is meditation.

After hearing, contemplate and meditate on the meaning. This is so that the essence may a

The Sutra of Ascertaining the Truth of Suchness says:

Shariputra, if someone listens to the Dharma for ten kalpas, and someone else meditates fo
a finger-snap in the samadhi of suchness, the merit of the second will be increased much mor of the first.

B. The gradation of powers of those who meditate into high, middle, and low

1. Those of the highest powers,

a. How the very highest will be liberated:

Meditators:

There are levels of this teaching for those of different capacities.
Those of the highest powers will be liberated
By their realization of the natural state.
Meditation and its object are seen to be non-dual.
The phenomenal world is liberated as the ground.
Unbounded insight flows along like the stream of a river.

Having the good fortune of formerly accumulated merit, those of the highest powers, with the holy guru, are liberated just by realizing that they are already liberated. This brings them int state beyond meditation and meditator, like the sky. Without needing to work at meditation, their constant with the nature of mind is like the stream of a river. The All-creating King says:

Kye! what is taught by me the teacher the doer of all,
Is the all-inclusive unborn, completely pure samadhi.
Not depending on coarse conditions of meditating or not,
The object of meditation is whatever dharmas appear.
There is no particular way of where and how to rest.

This is liberation of things as they are without seeking is meditation.

Kye! within these oral instructions of non-meditation,
Since this is the meaning that goes beyond words and speech,
No former generations taught the doer of all.
Later ones will never teach the doer of all.
Even now the doer of all is not being taught.

Kye! By the teacher of teachers, the doer of all, the King,
The meaning is being displayed of unerring realization,
The essence beyond all glorification and denigration,
Like meditation and non-meditation disputing space.

b. Becoming Space free from meditation and meditator.

When such meditation becomes Space, as for the meaning or object:

We cannot delineate sessions with a definite, "this is it."
All is self-liberated as the field of Samantabhadra.
This self-arising vastness, which is the space of the ground,
Is suchness which has been like that from all eternity.
There is no straying, and also, there is no place we could stray.
It takes no special skill. We get no profit from it.
Convinced that there is no attainment nor non-attainment,
We are buddhas right now, without even having to ask.
Yogins like this are universal like the sky.

When we have been liberated from attachment to true existence, there is no meditation on a matter, there is no meditation at all. There no breaks between sessions. We continually abi non-attachment to true existence. This play without fixation, self-liberation beyond partiality, is experience of the fie Samantabhadra. The

All-Creating King says:

Kye! if we have attained the empowerment of the King,
Insight does not fabricate, suchness always rises.
Absence of cause and conditions is the path of excellent peace.
What rests in the ground is resting in itself.

The great upaya of the King, the doer of all,
Is the empowerment of ultimate realization.
If we enter into all objects exactly as they are,
We know both faults and virtues as equality.

Then we go beyond both entering and non-entering.
The changeless self-existence of the field of the King
Is the self-perfected nature--No progress, no renouncing.

As when we meditate on things and characteristics, there are no identifying signs and criteri text
says:

Like the dharmas of grasping at things and characteristics,
Criteria and signs are non-existent, like space.

With nothing we are supposed to reach, there is nowhere to go astray. With nothing in parti supposed to look at, the seer can have no obscuration. The same text says:

As for this itself, the nature of bodhicitta,
It is the essence of all the dharmas without remainder.
The unborn is completely pure and unobscured.
Without a path to tread, there is no such thing as straying.

Because of straying, obscuration, purification, improvement, view, and meditation, we look r
nature of mind without seeing it, and obscuration arises. Trying to progress where there is no such th straying. The same text says:

Within bodhicitta, the single nature of all dharmas,
Counting the one with numbers is straying and obscuration.
Progressing where there is no progress, straying rises.
By having a view about how things are without conception,
The nature is not seen and there will be obscurations.

From the time we become convinced that our own mind is really the primordial self-existenc we know enough not to aspire to any buddhahood other than that. From that very moment v
of buddhahood. The same text says:

Since the nature of mind is primordial enlightenment,
We cannot succeed or fail, and there is no hope and fear.

Also:

Since I, the doer of all, am that which is all-inclusive,
Therefore I am explained to be complete perfection.
From the triple nature of me, the doer of all,
Teacher, teaching, and retinue all arise into being.
With those the label "doer of all" has also arisen."

First, as for nature of the perfect teacher,
From the self-arising wisdom of me, the doer of all,
The triple nature of the three kayas has arisen.
Trikaya is taught to be the three-fold perfect teacher.

Regarding such a mantra-yogin the same text says:

The individual body of a god or human being Is realization, dharmata, and buddhahood.

c. The instruction of how intermediate and lesser ones should meditate

Those of average and low capacities

Have to make an effort to be familiar with this.
Until fixations of ego have subsided into space,
They must use various skillful means of meditation

Because they are not free of ego-grasping, the cause of samsara, those of average and less work hard at meditation. Here there are distinctions between meditation and non-meditation and fixation of mind subsiding or not subsiding into space. The All-Creating King says:

As for duality and pure non-dual wisdom
They are labeled as meditation and non-meditation.

d. The suitability of meditation

Those who have not reached self-arising and self-liberation, have the usual ordinary though

Evil discursive thoughts have led them into samsara.
To be free from these they use the means of meditation.
Later vast prajña rises, free from all extremes.

By conceptions one falls into samsara, Dharmakirti's Praise to Manjushri says:

Conceptions are great ignorance.
It is these that make us sink
In the ocean of samsara.
If we are without conceptions,
We will pass beyond the sufferings of conceptions.

The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

By constant conception we wander
In the wilderness of samsara.
Because of constant formation
Of karma and the kleshas,
Hundreds of sufferings
Are made to manifest.

Since these are pacified by meditating, by doing so the prajña in which all dharmas are perfe is sure to arise.

e. The need to unite shamatha and vipashyana

Kleshas are first suppressed by one-pointed shamatha.
Then, by vipashyana, they are eradicated.

The All-Supreme Clouds says:

By shamatha the kleshas are suppressed.
By vipashyana they turn into perfect enjoyment.

The Bodhicharyavatara says:

Having learned the kleshas will be overcome
By vipashyana possessing excellent shamatha;
First of all one should search for shamatha,
Established by genuine joy, without any worldly desire.

Regarding the single essence and the dualistic individual, resting or being in the first is sham
Luminosity
or clarity of the second is vipashyana. Shamatha and vipashyana are unified by realizing lu free from extremes. This is liberation from samsara. The Spiritual Letter says:

Without any prajña dhyana will not exist.
Without any dhyana, also there is no prajña.
Where these exist as two, there is samsara.
Get rid of it like a trace of polluted seas.

Difference has two divisions. There is difference according to words and difference accordi meaning.
As for the first, hearing about one pointed mind, is shamatha. Realizing the meaning of this
As for the second, by meditating, first, establishing one pointedness is shamatha. Later, rea natureless is vipashyana. The Clouds of the Three Jewels says:

Shamatha is one-pointed of mind. Vipashyana distinguishes dharmas as they really are.

The Commentary of Ascertaining the Intention says:

There are two kinds of shamatha and vipashyana, according respectively to prajña and the oral instructions. As for those arising from prajña, mental comprehension of the words of the aspects of sutra is shamatha. Realization of the meaning is vipashyana. As for that arising oral instructions, producing motionless mind by the oral instructions is shamatha. Realizatio meaning of that is vipashyana.

f. The explanation of the reason

The reason:

For the highest, evil thoughts dissolve in dharmakaya.
With neither good nor evil, we need no antidote.
Average ones meditate on unity with clear brilliance.
Thoughts of good and evil vanish into space.
Then there is realization of unity like the sky.
Lower ones first must search for the peace of shamatha.
Attaining a steady ease, whatever may be perceived.
Then, by vipashyana's discriminating awareness,
Everything is liberated as the ground:
Inner as well as outer, appearance as well as mind.
Thus, it is important to know the gradation of powers.

Those who come to an island of gold, will not find ordinary rocks and stones, even if they loo So, for those of supreme powers, whatever arises is liberated as dharmakaya. When the antidotes space, meditation with sessions and breaks is unnecessary. The All-Creating King says:

In uncreated suchness, the Buddha's realization,
How can conceptions of mind and mental events arise?
By knowing how to rest in unborn suchness itself,
One is free from characteristics of doing and seeking.

Average ones, by realizing the view, rest within the unborn, clarity free from drowsiness and discursiveness, like a motionless undisturbed pond. By that they unify shamatha and vipashyana. After discurs into space, sky-like realization arises. The Basket of Holy Samadhi says:

If we rest the mind
Exactly as it is,
In the dharmata of suchness,

Experience unobstructed
By any names arises.
This is called samadhi.

Lesser ones are stirred up like unruly monkeys and can hardly rest at all. They moisten the pointed shamatha, Then as a further antidote, by meditating on vipashyana they discriminate natureless emptiness and all appearances as illusion and so forth. By that they realize the unborn. Th by Maitreya
says:

Having established shamatha, train in vipashyana.

From the three sections on

2. How those of average powers should meditate, first there is:

a. The instruction to rest in non-thought

Those who have average powers in their ways of meditation also are of three kinds:

Now meditation for those of average powers is taught.
Just as when troubled water is being tossed by waves,
Reflections of bright stars are unsteady and unclear,
The undisciplined mind is lured into unsteadiness,
When it becomes preoccupied with complexities.
The luminous nature of mind and the clarity of wisdom,

The stars of the eyes and higher perceptions, do not arise.
Unwavering one-pointed meditation is important.

When water is agitated by waves, reflections that may arise are not grasped. Though the m self-existing virtues of the higher perceptions and so forth, because of disturbing waves of false concepti virtues do not manifest. Therefore meditating in unity is important. The Dohakosha says:

By waves of prana included in the mind Moving and stirring, the mind becomes unruly.
If the co-emergent nature is realized,
By that one's nature will be stabilized.

Rest like that, with no disturbance by the waves of thoughts. The water of mind will rest moti illuminated by the luminous lamp of the nature of mind. The same text says:

The excellent lord who is without any waves,
Samadhi without disturbance, will occur.
Rest in the water and the self-luminous lamp.
Not coming and going or accepting and rejecting.

b. The extensive teaching of how to meditate

1) The points of posture and means of resting

Free from the three extremes, rest in the nature of the three motionlessness.

The body is like Mount Meru, with the seven points of posture,
Because the senses are free from the limits of extremes,
Sensation is like the stars reflected in a pond.
The empty, luminous mind is as clear as the shining sky.
Neither drowsy or discursive, rest in simplicity.

As for the seven points of motionless body, as one meditates:

1 the legs are crossed
2 the hands are in the meditation mudra

3 the back is straight
4 the tongue touches the palate
5 the breath is slow
6 the eyes are focused on the tip of the nose
7 the neck is slightly bent forward.

As for motionlessness of the senses, the eyes do not fidget. The ears, nose, tongue, and bo hindered.
Whatever forms, sounds, smells, tastes, touch, and thoughts may arise, their sense doors a neither do we pursue them. The five eyes, the divine eye and so forth, and the six higher perceptions, resting the mind.
 If the doors of perception are hindered, clarity will not be attained. If we follow after thought continuity will not be cut. We will be no different from ordinary people.
Therefore, within the motionless pond of sense-awareness, meditate by letting objects of inc
appearance
arise without obstruction, like reflected stars and planets. If that discrimination of objects is grasped, in addition to no harm being done, individual virtues will arise. This non-conceptualization of phenomenal ap wisdom of
non-conception or non-thought.
If there are no phenomena, the mind perceiving these will also be absent. With apprehensio thought
nor non-thought, the wisdom of complete non-thought will be absent. Therefore, when objec senses, rest in non-thought. By the guru of individual and personal awareness, there will be a gap in the
of thoughts. This is the cessation of prana, and at that time realization will manifest. Though t breathing moves in the nose and mouth, thoughts will not move. In this gap in complexities, the time of simpl thoughts are pacified, there is no need to meditate on the antidote. Why talk about needing an antidote fo the presence of the yogini of simplicity, prajña? Saying that is it not necessary, the Dohakosha says:

The eyes are not closed, and mind too is unhindered.
As for cessation of prana, the glorious guru is realized.

At that time the cause of prana does not move,
Let alone with the yogini at the time of death.

That pith-resolution is called naturalness or non-fabrication of the six senses. Though objec within the senses, sense awareness does not conceptualize them. They rest naturally. Realization of samadhi in addition to that is not only not harmful, but facilitates the blossoming of enlightenment. The says:

As great an assembly of sense objects as may befall,
These without selfhood and karma completely blossom.

Motionless mind resting without the extremes of complexity will arise within the motionlessne and senses. As for resting in that clear mind without complexities, not moving from luminosity, th says:

Things and non-things both are bonds of the Sugata.
Do not distinguish samsara from equality.
The yogin and the oneness of the natural state
Should be known to be like water poured into water.

At that time, objects appearing as external things, and the non-thing mind of inner awarenes with thoughts within, bind co-emergent sugatagarbha. Because of that obscuration there are sar good and bad. Even our own samadhi, because of attachment and grasping, will not be produced conceptualizing things and non-things, when the time arises of not wishing for anything else, all the entities c conception without remainder dissolve into the ground, the nature of mind. When mind becomes motionless an liberated from samsara. Without dualistic grasping and attachment to self and other, we attain the body of great transcendence of thought and expression. The same text says:

When we completely analyze things as well as non-things,

There all beings without remainder are dissolved.
Then mind is motionless, becoming totally stable,
It is self-liberated from the things of samsara.
When both self and other are completely unknown,
Then the unsurpassable body will be attained.

The All-Creating King says:

Kye! within the realm of suchness of mahasukha
Do not exert the three gates; do not produce fabrications.
Do not engage the mind or follow after marks.
Rest in the meaning of bliss, which is self-arising wisdom.
This is realization of self-rising luminosity.
This is the actualization of buddha activity.
This is the realization of the doer of all the King.

2) How virtues arise

When one meditates like that in complete simplicity:

This is the single nature of the primordial state,
Dharmakaya with no perception of grasped and grasper.
In the spotless luminosity of the heart of the sun,
There arise bliss, luminosity, and complete non-thought,
And there is neither any center or any limit.

By passing beyond conception and thought into dharmata, discursive thoughts dissolve into Then there arises realization of the equal taste of dharmakaya, the luminous great perfectio
the nyam, the experiences of bliss, luminosity, and non-thought. This is the great symbol beyor meaning. The All-Creating King says:

The three times are a single one without distinction.
Arising is primordial, with neither before nor after.
Because dharmakaya is one and completely all-pervading,
One rests within the nature of the greatest of the great.

Also:

This wondrously arisen play is free from karma like space.
From thoughtless ignorance that immediately arises.

The Dohakosha says:

If we try hard, holding the guru's instruction,
Co-emergence will doubtlessly arise.
Its colors and qualities, unexampled by letters,
Are ineffable and pointless to describe.
Like attachment to the heart's bliss of a princess,
Who can teach that ultimate lord of Being?

The Sutra of the Ultimate Samadhi says:

In the state of dharmata,
Inconceivable by thought,
As mind rests without thought,
Experience without bias
Will certainly arise.
This is called samadhi.

3) How to realize dharmata

When this co-emergent self-arising wisdom arises, from the viewpoint of the mind of the yog

Appearance and emptiness are an all-pervading unity,
Transcending all the extremes of existence and non-existence.
Samsara and nirvana are not conceived as two.
Knowing and its objects are of a single essence.
See these as neither equal or not with dharmata.

The inner and outer dharmin, the eight examples of illusion, and dharmata, the essence by n not different. This is seeing the overall unity of appearance and emptiness. The All-Creatin

Whatever appears is one in the state of suchness.
As for this unfabricated king of equality, Realization of dharmakaya, arises from within.

The nature of mind beyond the extremes of existence and non-existence, the pure motionles wisdom, arises as the non-dual play of samsara and nirvana. The same text says:

Pacifying beginning, middle, and end,
Pacifying samsara and nirvana,
With the spontaneous presence of great bliss,
By matchless wisdom aware of autonomy,
Dharmas will not arise as something other.

At that time, knowable objects and the knower, mind, arise as the equality of non-dual wisdo
says:

Both inner and outer are subsequently inner.
This profound aspect has no conceptual objects.

4) The main cause of the wisdom of the noble ones

This is the cause of wisdom that sees the noble truths
Then the eye of mind, which is the seer of suchness,
Will perfectly establish the buddhadharmakaya.
May the fortunate rest in this equality.

From becoming increasingly familiar with wisdom without complexity, the path of seeing and are self-established. As to how this occurs, the Namnge says:

This what is real and what is not Having become completely familiar with these,
If that familiarity is perfected,
The fruition is bliss, luminosity, and non-thought.

c. The extensive teaching of the eight means of resting

1) Resting undistracted in simplicity

As for resting without many distractions of emanation and gathering,

In the unborn nature of mind, which is purity like the sky,

Events within the mind are not solidified.
But left to fade and vanish like a heap of clouds.
Rest in what is and what eternally has been so,
The undisturbed awareness of simplicity

Rest thoughts and mental contents as they are in the sky-like nature of mind, watching them clouds. As for meditating in that undisturbed state, the nature which is exemplified, the All C
says:

Kye Ho vajra being, meditate in suchness.
By realizing liberation a it is,
Undistracted resting in the nature is effortless.
All is self-arising and also self liberated.

Also:

This unborn nature of mind that is like the sky
Is unborn and ceaseless. Rest within that nature.

2) Resting in clear luminosity without disturbance

While resting in clear luminosity without disturbance:

We should let ourselves be like a clear and vacant ocean,
Free from the turbulent waves of grasping and fixation.

Clear because mind does not arise, smooth because it is not discursive, be like an ocean re clear
and pure of conceptual disturbances and defiling thoughts. The All-Creating King says:

The samadhi of a clear and peaceful ocean
Is not produced by word-dependent mind.
It is suchness pure of all disturbance.

Also:

When this is known, by resting within it undisturbed,
Not engaging in effort, the mind does not train in antidotes.

Objects are not abandoned, and mindfulness is not gathered.
Since anything that arises is itself the meaning,
Enter into the meaning of me the doer of all.

3) Resting free from partiality like the sky

Resting free from partiality like the sky:

We should let ourselves be like an empty, luminous sky,
Impartial and free from any clouds of discursive thought.

Rest in the primordially empty sky-like nature of mind, without emanating and gathering disc

The All-Creating King says:

Kye great vajra being, now you should meditate.
Within the enlightened nature that does not accept or reject,
Rest like space, without fabrications of body and mind.
Not meditating, because of being completely without
The attachment and fixation involved with attaining perfection,
Completely peaceful like space, free from all disturbance,
Have nothing to do with objects or notions of realization.

4) Resting in spontaneous actionlessness

As for resting free from assertion and denial, hope and fear:

Let us be firm and steady like the King of Mountains.
Free from hope and fear, let us neither affirm nor deny.

With the mind motionless like the king of mountains, rest without discursive thoughts of deni assertion.
The All-Creating King says:

Kye! the teacher of teachers, the doer of all, the king,
Cuts the bonds of duality by realization,
By simply resting in uncontradicted equality,
Realization of me, the doer of all, is established.

That which binds, discursive thought, has been cut through.
Not working on liberation, never gaining nirvana,
The essential meaning does not fixate biased conceptions.
Do not meditate on the goal, nor objects of compassion.

5) Resting in apparent objects as unobstructed

Resting the five gates in their intrinsic luminosity:

We should let ourselves be a clear and luminous mirror,
Within which apparent objects are like ceaseless reflections.

In the openness of clear and luminous mind, rest undistracted as the variegated apparent ob senses
vanish like mist. The All-Creating King says:

Kye, therefore vajra being now you should meditate.
Though our natural wisdom lies beyond conceptions.
In realizing it conceptual meaning need not be abandoned.
Just go beyond objects and do not guard consciousness.

As things are clearly the essence, do not meditate.
With phenomena clearly the essence, neither hope not fear.

6) resting in the clear luminosity of primordial liberation

Resting in clear luminosity, undefiled by antidotes:

Like a rainbow, eternally liberated as it is,
Let us shine purely, neither drowsy nor discursive.

As for resting without drowsiness or discursiveness in the clear luminous openness of mind,
King says:

Kye Ho vajra being, now you should meditate well.
By appearance of the goal as the pure space of the unborn,
Apparent things are not seen, and fear is not produced.

Appearance is self-liberation into the unborn.
Liberation realizes empty suchness in non-meditation.

Rest like that. Knowing appearance as emptiness is knowing that it is like a rainbow.

7) Resting one-pointedly like an archer

Resting with one-pointed attention:

We should let ourselves be undistracted like an archer,
In natural wisdom that neither gathers nor emanates.

Resting with mind undistracted from dharmata, precisely and directly focus the eyes like an arrow, the All-Creating King says:

The oral instruction is that this essence of non-meditation
Ought to be grasped with undistracted mindfulness.

8) Resting without action in spontaneous presence

Having put ourselves at ease, as for resting there:

Let us be like those who are sure their work is done,
And rest in spontaneous presence with neither hope nor fear.

To rest mind as it is, resolving it into the spontaneous resting of dharmakaya, relax naturally
of hope and fear. Then stay there. The All-Creating King says:

Kye, the yogin who enters and meditates on this path
Dwells from now on on the level of the Victorious One.
Not fixating realization, not grasping with partial bias,
Go into the essence beyond success and failure.

Having relaxed the three gates naturally, rest in mere non-distractedness with no need for c mindfulness. Even if we let ourselves be distracted and fall into ordinariness, our ordinary a in spontaneous
non-distraction. The same text says:

Kye, for the teacher of teachers, the doer of all, the king
In dharmata without meditation, thought, or concept
To rest while thoughts subside, is falling into samsara.
Seeking and meditating is the path of conceptualization.

How so? The same text says:

Kye O vajra being, now meditate in suchness.
Let the body be, and do not blunt the senses.
Do not try to discipline speech in any way.
Let the mind rest where it is. There is no need to move it.
By meditating in this actionless buddha activity,
Doing nothing at all the goal will be perfected.

Also:

Kye, to yogins having the fortune of entering all at once,
When realization of the doer of all is taught,
Not intimate mindfulness of the Space of realization,
But no meditation or entering is what they should be taught.

9. summarizing the meaning of the eight means of resting

Of these eight means of resting:

Here within the natural purity of samadhi
Shamatha and vipashyana are unified.
When we rest within the unborn, that is shamatha.
Vipashyana is simple, luminous emptiness.
They are united by having an essence inseparably one.

With neither grasping nor fixation, there is naturally pure samadhi. This is how to unify shan vipashyana. Resting in being is shamatha. The luminosity of that time is vipashyana. Altho these are inseparable, and from the time they are labeled as "unity," they are indivisible. In shamatha peace," any perception of resting in peace is pacified. In vipashyana, "clear seeing," conceptualization o does not occur.

Therefore they are inseparably one in the natural state. The Bodhisattva Pitaka Sutra says:

The bodhisattva's shamatha is contemplation of reality. Not even perception of peace exists Vipashyana sees the view, but never looks back even at the view. Therefore, what is seen i seen.

6. Treading the Path

Having learned how to see the inexpressible by the eight means of resting, now, as we rest
is the explanation of how to tread the path by means of four kinds of wisdom. Of these four, as for

1) The wisdom of appearance

As by the eight means of resting the mind rests in the natural state:

Now this profound and peaceful simplicity of mind
Sees the truth that is inexpressible by speech,
The wisdom of appearance, utterly without concept,
The luminosity known as prajñaparamita.

The first arising of clear, luminous, motionless wisdom is the wisdom of appearance. This is mind's
entering into the nature of mind beyond speech, thought, and expression. Its luminosity is th perfect knowledge, the prajñaparamita. The Precious Ocean says:

There are four kinds of luminosity.
After them is the level of the great wisdom.
Appearance is completely without conception.
The wisdom of increase comprehends illusion.
Final attainment, the path of the noble ones.
Complete attainment, finished with that path.

Nyime Namgyal connects these with the four situations of the bardo. They are explained as liberation.
Those who attain recognition that things are like that right now are liberated.

Though at this point realization is not complete, by the wisdom of appearance first arising, o
the nature of mind, the wisdom of the natural state.

By the path of liberation being already accomplished, one has planted the seed of enlighten

2) The wisdom of luminosity:

By seeing this the mind is totally in peace.
There is little attachment to affirmation and negation,
Regarding the various dharmas, external and internal.
Impartial compassion arises out of this emptiness.
Inspiring us to virtuous actions for self and others.
At this time we have an enjoyment of solitude,
Feeling a need for few distractions and entertainments.
Even in dreams our behavior will be wholesome and proper.
Now we are taking command of the path to liberation.

When wisdom recognizes the luminous nature of mind as the ground, incidental false conce
as they are, and the mother and son luminosities mix. By only virtuous behavior, there is th of the five dharma objects.
The mind of inner cognition complete with its assertions and denials, is free from all attac the self luminous emptiness of mind, by the arising of impartial compassion for sentient beings near benefits
oneself. One encourages only virtue. One delights in isolated mountain valleys, forests, an abandoning distractions and occupations. With this absence of unvirtuous thoughts, finally, even in drea and virtuous appearances rise. With body, speech and mind completely trained, "shinjang," the virtues o accumulation are in one's being. In the meditation hall one sees various manifestations of luminosity. The La
says:

Without any thoughts, having straightened the body,
To the Buddha and also to enlightenment
Having done prostrations again and again,

We should meditate on selflessness.

If having yoga we meditate on that,
We will have the lotus life empowerment.
We will be protectors for all beings.

If those possessing yoga make an effort,
Like the space of the sun and of the moon,
Mind is radiant and lotus-like,
Depicting truth like fire in the sky

Then:

At that time the godlike hand of buddhahood
By having arisen from all the buddha fields,
Anoints their heads with blessing and empowerment.
This is a sign of engagement with the real.

3) The wisdom of proliferation

With these:

Then by greater and greater familiarity,
Clarity and wisdom are more than they were before.
Appearance is realized to be like dreams and illusions.
When born and unborn alike are seen to be non-existent,
Dharmas are of one taste in non-duality.
This proliferating wisdom becomes complete non-thought.
We attain meditation that is adorned with joy.

By becoming more and more familiar with these former realities, obscurations to the empty l self-arising wisdom diminish. There are great waves of prajña, samadhi, and enlightened ex appearances are naturally seen as dream and illusion. The many natures of dharmas arise taste.

Resting in this space-like state is the wisdom of proliferation. The Stages of the Path of Mira

Even in dreams illusion will be seen.

It proliferates and increases.

4) The sign of attaining heat

At this time:

Now both body and mind are purer than before.
There is spotless realization of prajña and upaya.
Through the higher perceptions, compassion accomplishes benefits.
Saddened with samsara, we thoroughly renounce it.
Even in our dreams, all dharmas are realized thus.
Our bodies will have no lice or nits, or any worms.
We will be free from drowsiness and discursiveness,
Established in the state of samadhi day and night.
Such people will quickly see the path of the noble ones.

By spotless realization, there is the special sign of body and mind being shinjanged. By rest night in the samadhi of special union, we become inseparable from it. By compassion, activity to be sadness and extraordinary renunciation for samsara arise. Even in dreams, all dharmas are seen as drea so forth.
There will be no worms within the body and no lice and other parasites on its surface. One signs of the path of preparation and quickly come in contact with the path of seeing. The former text say

By its increase, it is not difficult
To attain fully the path of the noble ones.

5) The wisdom of the noble ones which is attained

Through greater familiarity this will be more intense.
The sun of wisdom that is realized through samadhi,
Arises now although it never rose before.
Now that we have seen the meaning of its being said
That there exists a single equality of all dharmas,
Possessing the eyes and higher perceptions unobscured,
We see limitless hundreds, thousands, and millions of buddha fields.

This is the spotless wisdom of the noble ones.
This is the manifestation of what we call "attainment."

First, by having seen the spotless wisdom of the luminous nature of mind, what is called the "attainment" is gained.
Internally the hundred and one pranas of the nadis of the heart center are purified. The wisd and white essence elements becomes increasingly luminous, and also by illuminating the other c special prana minds are supported, and by the 1200 pranas of the kleshas ceasing, according to mantraya appear as the primordial buddha fields.
According to the vehicle of characteristics, seeing the faces of a hundred buddhas and so fo as external appearance manifesting as the buddha fields. According to the level of the bhumis eyes, and higher perceptions of an individual being, and obscurations and obstructions are greatly purified, so attains non-obscuration. Seeing false conceptions for what they are, one is completely liberated from th are to be abandoned. Realization of luminous wisdom manifests. The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

Oppressions cease and indignities of the lower realms.
One is free from fear of samsara, unharmed by anxiety.

We are liberated from fear. By becoming familiar with this seeing which has been attained, of wisdom arises.

6) The first attainment of the wisdom of the noble ones:

By letting this increase, grow ever greater and greater still,
The samadhi of realization has countless qualities.
Dharmata is the same whether concepts are there or not.
The nourishing clouds of spotless wisdom still increase.
Meditation and non-meditation are not two.
Resting in meditation then becomes eternal.
Emanations beyond the compass of thoughts will be displayed.

We enter limitless buddha realms and visions of wisdom.

Becoming familiar with what has been seen is the path of meditation. By lesser, middle, and attainments, the previously explained countless virtues of each of the bhumis are attained.
one benefits sentient beings. From the first to the seventh bhumis, conceptions in post meditation, separ and post-meditation. By the manifestation of the three pure bhumis, one is without these conceptions post-meditation are mixed because they have the single taste of wisdom. The Uttaratantra says:

The mind that always acts and accomplishes Blazes like a fire.

There and so forth it has previously been explained.

7) How the noble ones are perfected by full attainment

With these special qualities of the vajra body:

With nadis and elements pure, prana as well as mind
Are supreme in great and spotless qualities,
Then there are what are called the wisdoms of full attainment.
Here the path of the noble ones will be completed,
and then enlightenment will quickly be attained.
This is the yana of the heart of luminosity,
Whose fruition liberates fortunate ones within this life.

The wisdom of the path of meditation is called the wisdom of full attainment. By meditating eight-fold noble path, there is co-emergence, and many stains are cleared away. In general, the virtue bhumis
appear from the workability of nadi, prana, and bindu. They also become workable through merit
and wisdom and through efforts of purification as required.
There are twenty-one knots in the central channel. By releasing the first two, there is the firs so on, until by releasing the nineteenth and twentieth the virtues of the tenth bhumi arise. The puri petals of the nadis.

The purifier is that by wisdom proliferating in the nadi petals, confused appearance attendin up and is emptied. By the purifier, the wisdom essence in the wisdom nadis, prana enters into the co motionlessness of non-thought. Realization of the paths and bhumis arises.
Moreover, by the workability of the navel emanation chakra, the virtues of union with the acc arise.
One sees the face of the nirmanakaya buddha. By the throat enjoyment chakra becoming w sambhogakaya appear. By the heart chakra becoming workable, there is the path of seeing sambhogakaya qualities of the bhumis from the first to seventh appear. By the crown cente the virtues of the three pure bhumis arise. When the twenty-first knot of the central channel is r the surrounding nadis are completely purified, so that the kayas and wisdoms appear.

The Vajra Miracle says:

As for the bhumis and the virtues of the bhumis
From growing and diminishing in the nadis
There is the action of prana and great bliss.
The purifier and ground of purification
Reciprocally wax as the other wanes.
Samsara and nirvana wax and wane.
The chakras, counted as three or four or five
Two times two times that are not perfected,
As the last tenth bhumi, the bhumi of wisdom.
By milking it is said to go up and down.

As explained above, the three chakras correlate with the three kayas. The four accord with mahasukhakaya as the fourth. The five are completed by those with the great wisdom as fif knot of the chakras is that of the tenth bhumi. The twenty-first is that of perfect buddhahood. When the one after another, we enter into luminosity. How the natural knots in the nadis are released will be ad explained in connection with the bardo.
In the situation where the arising of the four luminosities is recognized, as previously taught,

is in the middle of the central channel luminosity nadi. In the center of the heart the nature of the arises at the time of arising and dissolving. As for the way it dissolves, The Subsequent Tantra of the Ma Wisdom says:

At the time of death of sentient beings,
Form dissolves and passes into sound.
Sound and smell, and taste dissolve in touch.
Touch dissolves in the space of dharmadhatu.

At that time the Play of Wisdom says:

First earth dissolves in water.
Then water into fire.
Then fire into air.
Then air into consciousness.
The grasping and fixation Comprising consciousness,
Now enter luminosity.

By form dissolving into sound, form becomes unclear. By earth dissolving into water, bodily diminishes. By sound dissolving into smell, the ear no longer hears sound. By the dissolvin fire, the moist aspect dries up. The blood essences are forced into the nadis and collect in the roma and k smell dissolving into taste, the nose no longer smells odors. By the dissolving of fire into air, heat in from the extremities and enters into the essences in the petals of the four chakras. By smell dissolvi the tongue no longer experiences taste. By prana dissolving into consciousness, breathing ceases. All th
and
kyangma go upwards to the tip of the nose.
When touch dissolves into dharmas, the body no longer experiences touchables, and its lus Consciousness enters into luminosity. The HAM at the top of the central channel dissolves essence of roma. The red A at the nose dissolves into the red essence of kyangma. By the wisdom of dissolving into the great essence of luminosity, after subtle and coarse thoughts have ceased, luminous wis

buddhahood
that intrinsically exists within mind appears. From the empty nature of mind the four luminos dharmakaya arise, and from the aspect of appearance, the five luminosities of the spontaneous presence of rup First are the wisdoms of appearance, proliferation, attainment and complete attainment. As
the instant when consciousness dissolves into luminosity, the external sign or appearance is ligh five colors, having merely the aspect of a mirage. This arises when the five essences of the elements c center of the heart. The inner sign or essence is that the wisdoms of bliss, luminosity, and non-thought a mirror. The Commentary on Non-duality says:

First that mirage is seen,
With light rays of the five colors.

Also:

Appearance of knowables is complete non-thought.
Within that luminosity, abandoning grasping thoughts
Arising does not arise, and neither does the prana.
As they rest quietly, that is the first situation.

By that wisdom, the thirty-three thoughts arising from aggression cease. The Embodiment c Aryadeva says:

What are the names of the thirty-three thoughts? Non-passion, intermediate non-passion, extreme non-passion, mental going, coming, suffering, intermediate suffering, extreme suffe peace, discursive thoughts, fear, intermediate fear, extreme fear, craving, intermediate cravi craving, clinging, non-virtue, hunger, thirst, feeling, intermediate feeling, extreme feeling, the apprehender, apprehended, discrimination, shame, kindness, intermediate kindness, extrem fear, hoarding, and envy. Those are the thirty-three naturally existing thoughts.

Second, at the time of the wisdom of the dissolving of the proliferations of appearance, there
like that of the rising moon. By the mind entering into alaya, the white radiance of the nadi of ari

The inner sign is that more luminous than before, that is not fixated. The Namgyal says:

The second is like the moon.

Also:

Proliferating aspects are complete non-thought.
Greater luminosity does not fixate thoughts.
Subtle wisdom is non-thought that is free from prana,
In the second situation of resting quietly.

By that wisdom, the thirty-three thoughts arising from passion cease. The Embodiment of A
says:

What are the forty thoughts arising from passion?

1 desire, chags pa
2 intermediate desire, chags pa bar ma
3 extreme desire, kun tu chags pa
4 joy, dga' ba
5 intermediate joy, dga' ba bar ma
6 extreme joy, shin tu dga' ba 7 rejoicing, rangs pa
8 extreme gladness, rab tu mgu ba 9 wonder, ngo mtshar
10 laughing, bgod pa
11 satisfaction, tshim pa
12 embracing, 'khyud pa
13 kissing, 'o byed pa
14 sucking, 'jib pa
15 stable confidence brtan pa
16 play rtsen pa
17 pride, nga rgyal
18 action, bya ba
19 association, 'grogs pa
20 power, stobs pa

21 forgetfulness, dbrog pa
22 delight, spro ba
23 the union of co-emergent joy, lhan cig byed pa'i dga' ba la sbyor ba 24 union with supreme joy, shin tu dga' ba la sbyor ba 25 grace/ playfulness/ flirtatiousness, sgeg ma
26 complete grace , rnam par sgeg ma
27 the fruition of moods zhe 'bras, 28 virtue, dge ba
29 clear words, tshig gsal
30 truth, bden pa
31 untruth, mi bden pa
32 certainty, nges pa
33 clinging, nye bar len pa
34 the giver sbyin pa po
35 criticizing others, gzhan skur pa
36 bravery, dpa' bo
37 shamelessness, ngo tsha med pa
38 deceptiveness, gyo sgyu
39 attractiveness sdug pa
40 wildness, mi srun pa
41 great dishonesty. gya gyu che ba.
These are the forty? thoughts arising from passion.

Third, as for the wisdom of dissolving of proliferation into attainment, the external sign is like of the sun or brilliance of fire. It appears to be orange. As the klesha mind dissolves into alaya, it radiance of the nadi of discriminating wisdom. As the internal sign, wisdom that does not grasp bliss/luminosity aris than before.
The All-Victorious says:

The third is like the sun.

Also:

The wisdom of attainment is complete non-thought.
Not even luminosity, it is very subtle.
Complete luminosity of prana and mind arises

This is the third situation of resting quietly.

By this wisdom the seven thoughts arising from ignorance cease. The Embodiment of Actio

What are the seven thoughts arising from ignorance? Dullness, true forgetting, confusion, having nothing to say, sadness, laziness, doubt. All these seven thoughts arising from ignor

Fourth, the wisdom of attainment dissolving into complete attainment is like dark blue or gre
is the radiance of the central nadi as the ignorance of alaya dissolves into dharmadhatu. The even more than before all stains of attachment to clarity and luminosity are purified. The All-Victorious

The fourth is like darkness

Also:

Complete attainment is spotlessness without conception.
It is self-arising and self-luminous.
Supreme samadhi has no coarse or subtle natures.
This is the fourth situation, changeless and all pervading.

At that time, the blood and breath essences in the red and white cord-like veins of the heart dissolve into the bindus of A and HAM and the wisdom of ultimate simplicity manifests. This is the bu
By the successive arising of these four stages of luminosity, A and HAM are gathered into the nadi heart, gradually dissolving into the great essence in the nadis, which they become.
At the time of the first three luminosities, coarse obscurations dissolve into space. At the tim fourth, by the dissolving of subtle ones, this moment without all obscuration arises, revealing the first p liberation. This is the time when buddhahood manifests. This renunciation of the buddhas is irreversible. As reversed, though there is such renunciation in the path of the buddhas, if it is not recognized for what it is, this reversible in those without such renunciation.

As for its being irreversible if it is recognized, when we are liberated at the time of recognitio higher perceptions and so forth are attained without defilement, and there is no place to turn back t luminosity of dharmakaya.
The self-existing luminosity of rupakaya arises after the four moments. The All-Victorious sa

Fifth, within that cloudless sky,
Non-thought without center or limit arises.

First, from that dark blue radiance, like a cloudless autumn sky, there rises the mandala clus Vairochana.
Here within the luminosity of his heart center is the pith of the bodies and buddha fields of th families. Then the mandala clusters with Akshobhya, Ratnasambhava, Amitabha, and Amoghasiddhi as the pr
with their retinues, arise. Self-arising from the radiance in their hearts, at that time the mandala c space of Akanishta also arises. Those who have formerly encountered and stabilized this will be libe time.
Moreover since the moments of luminosity are days of samadhi, by having now meditated in thoughts will then not be emanated, and the former clear luminosity of the space of cessatio so, for a long time. Since the instants of the bardo are the stages of samadhi, from now on it is very impo stabilize them. If these are not recognized, the dream-like bardo of becoming will instantly appear, half of former ap half of those of our later existence and place. When these arise, the best reversing the fearsomeness of lack of true existence, the middle like the illusions of the developing and fulfillment stage, and the lowes refuge and so forth. It is taught that they are born in the celestial realms and liberated there.
That completes the exposition of how to tread the path of the four luminosities, together with points.

7. How those of lesser powers, by becoming gradually accustomed to the means of resting, the state of a vidyadhara.

There are three sections, the brief teaching, shamatha, and vipashyana.

a. The brief teaching:

In the stages of meditation for those of lesser powers,
At first there is a separate training in the skills
First of shamatha and then of vipashyana.
After both are stable, these meditations are unified.
Training in this involves innumerable techniques.

b. Shamatha,

1) Taming discursive thoughts

How is it done?

First, regarding the stages of practicing shamatha,
We should stay seated within a solitary place.
In- and out-breaths are counted and colors visualized
Remain for several days to tame discursive thoughts.

At the time of meditating, stay in a place free from disturbances of people and occupations,
forth,
among things which the mind naturally grasps as pleasant. Sitting cross-legged, rest the ha
Of the three luminous nadis, as from white roma one exhales the breath from the right nostril, all sicknes deeds, and obscurations are purified, like smoke escaping from a cook-house.
When it enters in, the samadhis of the buddhas and so forth becoming light, enter from the l
the red kyangma. Visualize that they dissolve in the central channel, and that for a little while th above and below the hearth of the Sage are grasped and united. Also in gradually sending as before, hold th while.
As for the colors of pranas, if the three places of the prana of spring are thickened by phlegr

is the green air prana. To clear away the heat of fire from the three of summer, there is the white
For the three of autumn, to clear away the motility of bile, there is the yellow earth prana. For the three of wi antidote to cold
and dampness, meditate on the red fire prana.
As for their shapes, meditate on the essences of prana and mind in the heart center as like a triangular,
round, and square. Those are their corresponding touchables.
As for counting, breaths up to seven are mentally counted.
Beginners should visualize the exhalation of that prana going four cubits and so forth from th
then more and farther until it fills the whole of the three realms. Make the mind completely undist time of drowsiness, not keeping it inside, eliminate it by forcefully expelling outward. At the time of virtue, faith, and so forth, hold them inside. After training prana for some days, completely non-conceptu clear and luminous mind arises. At that time, because the coarse pranas are motionless, mind is with the white and red essences of roma and kyangma are the motionless sun and moon. Within, as that r remains in non-thought within the central channel, co-emergent wisdom is recognized. The Dohakosha

In those whose prana and mind are without wandering,
The sun and moon are inactive and unengaged.
Those who do not know, exhale their minds at this time.

2) Holding the object one-pointedly

Then coarse discursive thoughts are suppressed, and after meditating in that way:

Practice the four immeasurables and the two bodhichittas.
Then, within the practice of the developing stage,
Meditate in one-pointed attention without distraction
On whatever spiritual object may be appropriate,
Such as a picture or a book of the holy texts.

Then train in the four immeasurables, kindness and so forth or in the bodhichittas of aspiring
The
Bodhicharyavatara says:

Pacify thoughts and meditate on bodhicitta.

Do that or the developing stage. The Dohakosha says:

Grasp with the mind the form of the deity, painted etc.

The Samadhiraja Sutra says:

With a statue that is gold in color,
Entirely beautiful, of the Lord of the World,
The mind of one into whom this image enters Meditates in the way of a bodhisattva.

Do that briefly. Alternately, those unfamiliar with the former objectless meditation can take s appropriate good object and meditate on it without being distracted to anything else. The Mahayanasutr

Having focused the mind on the object of meditation,
Never let yourself be distracted away from it.

3) The actual samadhi of shamatha

Resting in this way, the mind becomes workable.
It keeps to its object and does not go anywhere else.
It will stay as long as we rest in meditation.
When body speech and mind are pervaded with spiritual joy.
One pointed unwavering shamatha has been established.

The mind stays on its objects until we leave off meditation and does not emanate concepts.

blissful. In speech one says little and the words are smooth and soft. This is the time when shamatha is established. The Sutras say:

O monks, the body and mind of me the yoga practitioner are workable. Preoccupation with food is small. There is little speech and words are soft. The skin is supple and smooth.

From the two sections on

c. Vipashyana

1) The way of training.

When shamatha has become workable, as for training in vipashyana:

Then we learn the meaning of vipashyana.
All the external appearances of the phenomenal world,
All these various dharmas of samsara and nirvana,
Are like the appearances of a dream or an illusion.
They are like a reflection, an emanation, or echo,
A castle of the gandharvas, an illusion or mirage,
Or heat ripples in the air, totally insubstantial.
They appear, but within the nature of emptiness.

Appearing while they are primordially non-existent, meditate on appearances as being like th
of illusion. The Shri Samadhiraja says:

These dharmas are hollow like a plantain tree.
They are ephemeral like lightning in the sky.
They are illusory, like the moon in water.

Also:

Like a castle of the gandharvas or a mirage,
They are like an illusion or like a dream.
All dharmas should be known to be like that.
Meditation on marks is empty of an essence.

The Sky Treasury Sutra says:

By the single Dharma all dharmas are illusion,

Like a mirage they are hollow and ungraspable .
It should be concluded that they are false and impermanent.
Those not kept from this go to the heart of enlightenment.

All the vessel and essence of the phenomenal world as it appears from the viewpoint of con dream-like pure appearances of the three jewels are not really established. By not collectin patterns of the viewpoint of confusion, they are purified. These appearances arise as if they were pure, bu
from the viewpoint of dualistic appearance, they are false. The sutras say:

Nirvana too is like a dream, like illusion.

The buddhas appearing from the viewpoint of confusion have the false nature of an emanati nirmana, like the moon in water. Appearing while in fact they do not emanate from the spac
dharmakaya
and sambhogakaya; the pure nature of the buddhas dwelling in Akanishta is not false and n
confused
conceptions, samsara and its joys and sorrows follow continuously one on the other, like a s generations. Yet from that very time depending on the unborn nature of mind, there is neither samsara nor no sam
like a dream.
From the time they arise within the confused sleep of habitual patterns, confused experienc
all. The Noble Sutra Requested by the Close Retinue says:

Minds terrified of hell thus have been taught by me:
Though many thousands of sentient beings have been saddened,
By death and transmigration going to the lower realms,
Those beings in actuality never really existed.

Whatever swords, great arrows, and weapons have come forth,
Even if they did harm, they have never existed.
Even as these weapons descend they do not exist.

A variety of pleasant flowers all in bloom
Elegant golden houses, with a pleasant glow,
None of these have ever been produced at all.

These are established in the power of conception
In the power of conception, the world has been imputed.
By fixating their perceptions fools have done that work.
Neither fixation nor non-fixation ever arise.
They are illusory thoughts, no more than a mirage.

In brief, meditate on these dharmas of imputed appearances of what does not exist as tenuo
like
the eight examples of illusion.

a) The way they arise

As for not fixating these illusions at all and meditating on them as being like the sky, dharma

Since all is non-entity like the selfless space of the sky
Meditate in this simplicity, the state of the unborn.
Realize external dharmas to be non-entity.
Realize grasping and its objects as natureless.

Those appearances without true existence, except as mere imputations, are really intrinsica
and are not complex objects. Meditate within that. Eliminate fixated thoughts of external objects truly existent or truly non-existent. When it is realized that the grasped object is unperceived and inconceiva to that, the mind with thoughts of grasping it, does not exist. Then the subsequent fixation too cannot e none of these objects have an essence, realize and meditate on this as dharmata beyond perception and Samadhiraja Sutra says:

In limitless kalpas that are already past,
The principal ones of men were led by me.
The great Sage served them as a sturdy ship.
Names arose in the manner of non-things.
From the time they arose, they supremely existed as space.
All dharmas are taught to be in truth like space.

Then in accord with imputed characteristics,

Sounds resounded in all the various worlds.
All the gods emitted excellent sounds.
Unreality was the alleged Victorious One.

As soon as he was born, he took seven steps,
The Buddha all dharmas were taught as unreal.
The Sage who is the teacher of all dharmas
When the Buddha was victorious over all dharmas,
Like Grass, and toilet sticks, and medicinal rocks,
"Dharmas are unreal," the sound arose.

As many as the worlds, that many sounds:
"All unreal, entirely unreal."
Like that, the melodious sound phenomena
Of the leader of the world supremely rose.

b) The thirteen means of resting

a) Examining the mind

After meditating like that:

Then examine inner mind in the following way:
There is no essence in separating conceptions of mind.
Affirmations, negations, truth and falsity,
Joy as well as sorrow, and also indifference,
Project their different objects, yet we cannot grasp them.
Consider where we come from, and where is this we are now?
Where do we finally go, and what is our color or shape?
Examining this in our thoughts, this is what we shall see:

Various objects are defined as pleasant and unpleasant, existent and non-existent, true and sorrowful, and so forth. In reality, without any essence at all, at first they are without any cau arising. Where nothing arises, nothing can endure. Therefore their endurance is essenceless. In what does not en no cause of cessation.

These objects are empty of individuating characteristics. They have no color, no shape, no r
They
will not be found externally, internally, or in between, even if we look for them. The example unfindable state is the sky. There is nothing to grasp or analyze. Objects are elusive, insubstantial, and compl They arise in freedom from action and actor. This is realizing the natural state, dharmakaya. The Univers

As for the rootless nature of the mind,
Emptiness and suchness eternally so,
Inexpressible wisdom, naturally so, Ungraspable, it is not found when looked for.

b) Resting naturally relaxed

At that time:

At this time, thinking no thoughts within our minds,
Relax like someone who suffers fatigue to the point of exhaustion.
Do not think about anything. Forsake intellectualizations.
Let everything rest in non-dual equanimity.

Letting go of the previous repetitious steps of conceptual analysis is like relieving someone e burden. We reach the end of our struggle. It is gone. Relaxing into the natural state, withou mindfulness of anything at all, rest in the blissful brilliance of insight. Let ceaseless appearance go free and like vanishing mist.
The Dohakosha says:

That mind which has been bound in entanglements
Will doubtlessly be freed when these are relaxed.
The very things that are the bonds of fools,
Completely liberate those who are capable.

In general, meditate on the mind. When it is grasped one-pointedly, let its intrinsic emanatio
like.
That is relaxing in the natural freshness of dharmata. Discursive thoughts are like growing a
text says:

Bonds are our undertakings that go in the ten directions.
If these are abandoned, we rest stable and motionless.
Wrong understanding is realized to be like a tail.
Even children like you can directly perceive yourselves.

Like a raven on a ship, the mind emanates outward, saying, "I won't come back." Having ap external objects, then it returns inside. There it dwells in self-existing realization of emptines before. The same text

says:

Objects are pure. There are none to manifest.
One is coursing in emptiness alone.
Like a raven who flies up from a ship,
Having circled and circled, it must return.

When objects of form and so forth are emanated from the mind, they have no true existence dependent on them for an instant. Self-eliminated, they rest in emptiness with nothing to an example, as the raven, flying outward from a ship over the ocean, cannot depend on external objects, but ret

c) How realization arises

The way of meditating:

We realize that the individual grasped as "I"
Does not exist as an independent, controlling ego.
The mind that fixates one also is without a nature.

By eradicating thoughts attached to self and ego and becoming accustomed to the reality th
be found, the individual who fixates is egoless. Therefore fixation is natureless. Since former c grasping are essenceless, grasping too is realized to be essenceless. By the two kinds of self being real neither objects or the one who makes them arise within samsara are established. Samsara is liberated into liberation

of nirvana. This is because samsara is not other than mind. The Dohakosha says:

The nature of samsara is the essence of mind.
Directly know that fools are skewered by an arrow.

With such realization, even if there is no liberation during this life, there will be in the next. T on the Middle Way says:
Hundred

For anyone who knows this,
If nirvana is not attained,
Within a later life,
It will be without effort.

For example, even if experiencing great waves of happiness and unhappiness is impossible
of experiencing nirvana later.

d) How to attain stability

After shamatha and vipashyana are individually stabilized:

Then they are unified as wisdom, the natural state.
Appearance and mind are non-dual, like the moon reflected in water.

When the moon arises in the water of a pond, there is no difference between the water and
the time of appearance and the fixation of appearance, the mind that fixates is non-dual with ap false appearance is grasping. Grasping should not be understood as the apparent object. The a its emptiness are non-dual, like the water and the moon in water.

e) How it is non-dual

Though it is like that, by not understanding this:

Grasping duality is the confusion of samsara.
Awareness of non-duality goes to the peace of nirvana.
Therefore, let us train in this non-duality.
Dharmas are of the essence of mind, and thus unborn.
The nature of the mind is pure and undefiled.
Rest in this spotless simplicity, emptiness/luminosity.

By grasping what does not exist as selfhood, independent reality, the confusion of samsara, as terrifying, like water in a dream, becomes even more terrifying. Habitual patterns of confuse stabilized when they are not established as anything other than confused appearances of mind. The r of arising of these confused appearances is also pure of nature. It too is essencelessness. Therefore obscured by kleshas.
The Uttaratantra says:

Since the nature of that mind is luminosity, the kleshas are seen to be essenceless.

Rest in immaculate wisdom, the essence unobscured by extremes, the essence of simplicity not struggle with conceptual analysis. This obscures the nature of mind. Proliferating false con like a poisonous snake in a basket. Left alone, it does no harm; but it will if teased. Mind too should be left a effort and establishing or accepting and rejecting. The Song of the Oral Instructions of the Inexhaustib says:

As for the nature of mind, which is the natural state,
It is hard for anyone to realize.
As for the spotless essence undefiled by extremes,
No one should analyze primordial purity.
If it is analyzed, it is like what happens
To a person who teases a dangerous, poisonous snake.

The All-Creating King says:

Just as appearances are one in suchness,

Within this do not fabricate anything.
Rest in the uncreated king of equality,
The ultimate state, the non-thought of dharmakaya.

f) How the middle way free from extremes is realized:

The way of meditating:

By that the disturbances of kleshas are pacified.
We rest within the great wisdom, completely without conceptions.
Insight, samadhi, and higher perceptions are established.
We realize there are neither grasping or fixation,
As well as the middle way, which is freedom from all extremes.

Disturbances of the kleshas are pacified. By wisdom with neither grasping or fixation, the sa
complete
non-thought, enlightened insight, the buddha qualities of liberation, the five eyes, and the hig perceptions are established. The Prajñaparamita-samgatha says:

Dhyana eliminates baser qualities of desire.
Insight, higher perceptions, and samadhi are gained.

g) Free from anything to meditate on or a meditator, this is buddhahood

At the time of meditating:

At this time the mind is like the space of the sky.
In this space of simplicity no objects are perceived.
Within this dharmata there is no meditation,
Nor is there any object upon which to meditate.
There is no agent of action, and nothing to act upon.
This is the spotless purity of buddhahood.

At the time of that meditation, from the mind's sky-like freedom from emanation and gatherin objects
still appear; but since there is no conceptual grasping, these appearances are non-dual wisd perceive dualistic

natures. Since there are neither meditation or meditator, causes of action and their produce as they are.
Dissolving mind and mental contents into space, we reach the space of the primordial natur goal, the nature of mind. This is abiding in self-existing realization, dharmakaya, buddhahood. The Dohako

Continuous buddhahood has no exclusions.
Since mind itself is essentially purity,
This itself is the spotless, ultimate level.

As mind and mental contents dissolving into the natural purity of the nature of mind, there is thoughts. They are like salt dissolved in water. The same text says:

Mind is motionless and stably resting.
As salt dissolves and disappears in water,
So the mind dissolves into its nature.
Self and other are seen as equality.

h) The way of realizing dharmata

At this time:

There is no grasping of objects by any perception/conception.
Any more than with a mirage, or the moon reflected in water.
Perceiving no fixation, impartial and undisturbed,
When appearance and mind are non-dual, the perfections will be there.
Let us appreciate the amrita of dharmata.
Deep and peaceful simplicity, uncompounded and luminous.

Externally, we realize that the five kinds of grasped object are like a mirage, or the moon ref
water.
Therefore, conception/perception attached to grasping thoughts as truly existent does not Internally, we realize that fixating awareness is partless like space, and that fixation is esse
Awareness
with neither grasping or fixation, fresh reality, without intermediate processing by emanation
is the perfection of prajña. It is profound, peaceful, simple, naturally luminous, individual and pers
This is like amrita:

Profound and peaceful, simple and luminous, uncompounded
I have found a dharma that is like amrita.

This side is samsara. The other is nirvana. Perceiving neither, the three paths of learning b
are the perfection of prajña. The Abhisamayalankara says:

It is not the extremes of this side or the other.
Nor is it a matter of dwelling between the two.
Knowing the three times to be equality,
This is maintained to be the prajñaparamita.

i) The way of the ultimate view

As for abiding within this, by the vast, great samadhi without fixation:

Let us cross the ocean of these three worlds of samsara
Within the vast ship of samadhi where grasping is never found,
Arriving at last in the nature of the great perfection.
Along with the bliss of the ground there is a constant well being.

When we have crossed the ocean of samsaric complexities, abiding, as if in a ship, in realiz
of the great vastness, the ground is primordial simplicity. The mind at that time is mixed with s This non-dual space and wisdom is called "the great perfection," so that is we have reached. Self-arising, realization
perfects all goals. The All-Creating King says:

Kye, therefore as prophesied by me the doer of all,
Make unerringly stable the meaning of what you heard.
Arising from buddha activity free from action and seeking,
Unmade realization will complete all goals.

j) Identifying the defining characteristics of shamatha and vipashyana.

At the time of meditating, as the mind is quiet, without emanation and gathering:

Within this peaceful resting, or being, of shamatha,
A being which is the emptiness of dharmakaya,
Vipashyana is appearance of luminous rupakaya.
These are upaya and prajña and the two accumulations.
Both developing and perfection are established.

The non-thought emptiness of resting is shamatha. Its cause is dharmakaya, completing the wisdom and prajña. Appearance because of luminosity is vipashyana. Its cause is rupakaya
the accumulation of merit and upaya. At that time, the ultimate six conceptionless perfections a
The Bhrama
Special Mind Requesting Sutra says:

No fixation is generosity.
No guarding is discipline.
No dwelling is called patience.
No effort is exertion.
No wishing is known as dhyana.
No conception is prajña.

As for practice of these six, generosity and so forth, they are perfected not by dwelling on th
going beyond any thought of them. At this time true discipline is also perfected. The Sutra Reque Sthavira
Devaputramati

When discipline and transgression are not perceived, this is called perfection of discipline.

The two accumulations are also perfected. The Ten Wheels of Perfecting the Bhumis says:

That non-conceptualizing is the accumulations of merit and wisdom.

The Ultimate Wisdom Sutra says:

The bodhisattva Pinnacle of Wisdom asked, "How should yogacharin monks gather the accumulations?"

The Buddha spoke, saying, What is accumulated is merit and wisdom. Accumulation is thei manifold increase.
How is the accumulation of wisdom gathered?
It is generosity and so forth, white dharmas, which possess characteristics.
How is wisdom accumulated?
It is prajña and so forth, which possess no characteristics
How are these two gathered?
The accumulation of merit is called the accumulation of samsara. It is like, for example, the water in an ox's track. Why so? It is quickly lost and exhausted. It beguiles fools. Having e the happiness of gods and human beings, they whirl about once more in the lower realms.
The accumulation of wisdom is called the accumulation of nirvana. It is like the water in a great ocean. It is not lost. It is not exhausted. It is not deceptive. It produces attainment of
O
Pinnacle of Wisdom, the accumulation of wisdom alone should be gathered.

The intention is that things belonging to merit are transformed into wisdom by dhyana, and t
that sense should be emphasized.

k) The functions or actions of shamatha and vipashyana

Arousing this prajña that realizes vipashyana,
We can remain within it because of shamatha.

Our previously becoming acquainted with the meaning of realizing vipashyana, depended o
Therefore we should certainly try to unify the two.

l) the time of realizing non-conception by becoming familiar with this

At this time of resting any attachment in equality:

When we no longer dwell in the mental phenomena
Of grasping and fixation of either things or non-things,
That is the non-duality of space and wisdom.
Mind and its objects are not perceived, and are pacified.

When one meditates in the genuine meaning, realization that grasping and fixation of things
are natureless is the vipashyana that is "first to be done." Abiding within the state thus realized, arising of the phenomena of mind is the shamatha, "to be done later" If space and wisdom are non-dual, vipashyana as the fruition is established. Then these two should be known as inseparable. Bodhicharyavatara says:

Neither things or non-things exist before the mind,
Other will be absent, in the peace of non-conception.

the six sections on

2) How to establish samadhi by becoming familiar with this.

a. The virtues of samadhi

How, by becoming familiar with this, are the virtues of samadhi established? Though the mi virtues primordially, when they are obscured by defilements, they do not appear. Meditating vipashyana, we have an opportunity to purify all these obscurations. When the false conceptions of minc space:

Whenever the nature of mind, in primordial purity,
Is free from temporary, incidental false conceptions,
Then the nine dhyanas and miraculous experience,
As well is the various higher perception will be there.
Countless clouds of samadhi are spontaneously present.

When the incidental false conceptions of mind are purified, a host of good qualities are established, such as the nine dhyanas.

b. Explanation of the nine dhyanas

i) What are they?

When the mind, with desire to be in its natural place,
Meditates one-pointedly on anything,

With discursive thought and analytic discernment,
With bliss, and well-being, the first dhyana has arisen.
When meditation so analyzes without fixation,
That luminous mind of bliss and well being is the second dhyana.
When meditation neither conceives or analyzes,
Steeped in bliss and well-being, the third dhyana has arisen.
Then when meditation has gathered in its bliss,
There is the fourth with all the benefits of well being.

Here for mind with the wish for cessation, there are the four dhyanas, and the five formless a nine samadhis are the nine ultimate absorptions. Here, the mind of desire becomes one-po above-described union of shamatha and vipashyana is the wisdom of complete non-thought. By meditating w bliss,
These
luminosity, and complete non-thought of wisdom are attained from the desirable support of b
The
support is attaining human birth with the freedoms and favors.
From access and the main meditation of the mind of dhyana, access is the preparatory stag

some do just the main meditation. Also each dhyana is said to be the access to the next.
1) When the mind rests one-pointedly, there is access to the first dhyana, which can handle has the discursive thought that one should meditate. By joining this to resting in complete non-thoug with analytic discernment of the peak of mindfulness, there is the real object of meditation, the wisdom of examines thoughts and the boundary of meditation and post-meditation.
2) As for the second dhyana, from the access of the first, one joins non-thought only to anal discernment without examination by discursive conceptual thoughts. The main object is luminosity and n
3) As for the third, from the access of the second, transferring by being without either exam discursive thought or analytic discernment, the special main object non-thought arises.
4) As for the fourth, from the access of the third, together with joy and bliss attained by sam special object arises. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

The first dhyana has conception and discrimination.
The second discriminates without conception
The third's attention neither conceives or discriminates
Bliss-gathering attention is the fourth.

ii) How the mind attains formless dhyana

The mind of dhyana:

Then the mind is pure translucency like space.
This attains the ayatana of limitless space.
Then there is mind, without the complexities of all dharmas,
Attainment of the realm of limitless consciousness.
Then there is simplicity with neither mind nor appearance,
Attainment of the realm of nothing whatever.
Mind freed from complexities of existence and non-existence,
Is within the realm of neither existence nor non-existence. Then there is cessation of the na Composed of all the different complexities of the kleshas.
This is when the peace of nirvana is attained.

5) From the support of dhyana arise the special formless minds. First there is realm of limit
As all
dharmas are pure like space, there is steady attention to the undefiled essence.
6) Limitless consciousness is mind-only. There is attention on limitless mind, without begin
7) As for nothing whatsoever, because of non-conception or non-thought, the mind sees no
8) The peak of samsara is attention to mind beyond all extremes of existence and non-exist
9) In cessation, all the complexities of mind cease. The Commentary on the Madhyamakav

Cessation occurs because all complexities of the mind cease.

To classify, after the mind examines and analyzes there is discriminating cessation. Not exa
in dharmata is non-discriminating cessation. Moreover, the cessation of the bodhisattvas, bec still looks after sentient beings. The Madhyamakavatara says:

Though this is indeed samadhi of all-inclusive cessation,
Compassion remains, arising for helpless sentient beings.

If it is asked, but then complexities do not cease, do they? In the compassion of the wisdom non-thought, complexities do not exist. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Within the nine ultimate absorptions, there is the goal, "I should produce absorption." In general in the dhyanas of ordinary beings and noble ones, aside from attaining the great frui mind of equal space, there is the bliss of shamatha. Having thought, "all dharmas are like s within that state, from the subsiding of the engagements of mind, one is impelled into the for states of mind up to the peak of samsara.
Noble ones, in particular, by the wisdom of vipashyana, attain the unified nature that does n grasp dharmas as "me" and "mine." Having attained the mind of a great being, by attaining supreme wisdom whose meditation sees as far as Akanishta, they pass beyond suffering to Within this mind are all the virtues of the formless dhyanas. Though these samadhis are inc within it, the mind does not have the individuating characteristics of those realms. Therefore ones of the great vehicle do not fixate the arising of these realms.

iii) The way of practicing the nine dhyanas.

As just explained:

Then at the end we practice the skills of these nine dhyanas
Either in order, or out of order on the spot.
We shall have the knowledge, both for ourselves and others,
Of all the actions done in former and later lives.
We shall know the places where their minds will go.
Having completely eliminated the obscurations,
We shall see their deaths and births and transmigrations.
We shall manifest one and many emanations.
Because there are no kleshas, we shall have the wisdoms
That know the nature of dharmas and also their extent.
We shall see buddha fields filled with buddha-sons.

By meditating on the ultimate samadhis the formerly unknown eyes and higher perceptions There are miraculous displays, and the virtues of leaping up from bhumi to bhumi. Having s fields, we listen to the dharma there, perfect the accumulations, and so forth. Finally, from the three w meditating on these objects, as for the yawning lion, having meditated upward by stages in the four dhyanas and attainments,

also meditate by stages downward as if one were climbing up and down a nine-runged ladd Prajñaparamita says:

If it is asked, "what is the samadhi of the yawning lion of a bodhisattva mahasattva?" it is like fully attains the first dhyana. After saying, "I am resting there," after ceasing with that it is ta
that after that one goes on up to the peak of samsara, and then back down to the first dhyana.

As for the lesser sudden approach, after having meditated upward on the dhyanas, formless cessation, one should jump back down to the first and meditate there.
From the two sections of the greater sudden approach, going up to cessation in a similar wa first dhyana. Having meditated on cessation, do likewise in each to cessation. Having ente meditate on them by turns. As for entering into non-meditating mind, having arisen from cessation, prod non-meditation. So gradually meditate down until the first dhyana.

Similarly the way is taught that without the first dhyana, entering into the second, one shoul cessation, and meditate downward on each one. Then leave out the second, third, fourth, fi seventh, all eight, up to the eighth. Then meditate downward on each one. The Abhisamayalankara says:

In the nine dhyanas including the stage of cessation,
Both having gone and come in a twofold way,
Desire that realizes consciousness
Will grasp the border of non-meditation.

As for the sudden approach, among the dhyanas
Having skipped the first and second and third,
The fourth and fifth and sixth and seventh and eighth,
Go up to cessation in different ways.
The eyes and higher perceptions have been discussed.

c. The time of attaining the three samadhis

At the time of attaining the special samadhis:

Fully realizing appearance as illusion,
We shall have attained the illusion-like samadhi.
Since disturbance is pacified, the mind is free from torment.
Then there is the samadhi like a spotless moon.
In a single equality no dharmas are perceived.
There is the samadhi like a cloudless sky.
There will be countless hundreds and thousands of such samadhis.

The single disk of the sun, by dispelling darkness is called the "light-maker". By radiating lig
is the
"one with a thousand lights." By making lotus blossom, it is called "the friend of the lotus."
such different names. Similarly, when appearance is realized as illusion, one-pointedness on that is called illusion-like samadhi.
Pacifying the darkness and torment of the kleshas is the spotless moon samadhi. Realizing are like space is the cloudless sky samadhi. By the manifold increase of the virtues of these and oth within a single mind, hundreds, thousands, and countless others are attained. The illusion-like samadhi an taught in the sutras.

d. Briefly the relationship of vipashyana and shamatha to samadhi

Vipashyana is the meaning of total realization,
And proper shamatha will grasp this one-pointedly.
So retention and samadhi are in spontaneous union

The words and sense of the dharma, which have been well realized by discriminating vipash one-pointedly grasped and kept in ones being by shamatha. As for vipashyana, within that is resting in samadhi. The Blossoming Wisdom says:

Vipashyana is the keeper
Of the gate of Dharma.
Shamatha is samadhi.

Regarding that grasper, the Tantra of Well-establishing says:

As to the why of "keeper,"
There are three kinds of keeping.
Both words and meaning are kept,
And good karma kept from damage.
Because of keeping these,
It is called their keeper.

By that the details of the subject are completed.

C. The stages of the paths of meditation on this

There are explanations of the purposes of the paths of accumulation, preparation, seeing, m
more learning. With the final summary, there are six sections.

1. The path of accumulation

a. The lesser path of accumulation:

Now as for the particular paths and their divisions which should be known:

We are liberated by treading the five paths.
On the lower level of the path of accumulation
We should meditate on the four objects of mindfulness.
These four objects are body, feeling, mind, and dharmas.

Since all the buddhas attained enlightenment after having traveled over the five paths, th are described here.
The first, the path of accumulation, starts from the time of first meditating on producing the r supreme enlightenment. Until heat arises in one's being, the realizations of hearing, contemplating, a along with the virtuous accumulations of samadhi are the path of crossing to the land of liberation.
The cause of this path is awakening the gotra, the enlightened family. This is dependent on aroused bodhicitta of the mahayana. The fruition is the four subsequent paths. Semantically, it is ca

of accumulation
because it chiefly "accumulates" hearing, contemplating, and merit.
Of the three divisions, in the lesser chiefly meditate on the four objects of mindfulness, body mind, and dharmas, both in meditation and post-meditation.
Here in meditation meditate on the bodies of oneself and others as being like space. Post-m illusion. Also, as an antidote to desire, meditate on perceptions of impurity.

Feelings too in meditation are not conceptualized, and in post-meditation are meditated on
and insubstantial like a plantain tree. Turn the attention to suffering.
Meditate on mind as unborn and impermanent.
Meditate on dharmas as only names and merely illusory. The Sutra Teaching the Topic of E

Whoever sees body as being like space, has the object of mindfulness of looking at the body with the body. Feelings are not conceived as internal, external, both, or neither. This is the mindfulness that looks at feelings. Mind is merely a name. By its nature it is unborn. Whoe this has the object of mindfulness of mind. Whoever sees all dharmas as non-dual has the o mindfulness of dharmas.

b. The middle path of accumulation

After developing the former path from becoming familiar with it, meditate on the four means abandoning:

On the middle level of the path of accumulation
We truly abandon the four attachments to good and evil.
By yearning, effort, diligence, and exertion.

So that non-arising of non-virtue will be produced, yearning is produced, and effort. One trie
and exerts oneself to abandon persons and so forth that produce the non-arising of virtue; and in arising may increase, one produces effort and so forth, those four. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita s Subhuti, what are these four true ways of abandoning. They are like this. In order that non-the non-virtuous may be produced, one produces yearning. One makes an effort. One is di undertakes to exert oneself supremely.

c. The greater path of accumulation

On the greater meditate on the four legs of miracle.
yearning, investigation, contemplation and mindfulness.

Meditate on the four legs of samadhi-miracle, yearning, investigation, contemplation, and mi Mother says:

The yearning samadhi leg of miracle and these others, four altogether are taught.

On the greater path of accumulation, discipline is directed at enlightenment and we make ar binding the gates of the senses, understanding the proper measure of food and not sleeping last quarters of the night. By remaining conscientiously in non-accepting and non-rejecting there are delight happiness,

joy, faith, devotion and other such virtues that are causes of liberation. By making an effort contemplating, and meditating, we are joined to the path of preparation. Also from the lesser path of accum starts gathering the accumulations for three countless kalpas. The Summary of the Vehicles says:

Those with the powers of fortune and ripening,
Becoming specially supported minds
As bodhisattvas over three countless kalpas,
They will make an effort it is taught.

At the time of meditating on the four objects of mindfulness, the time of arising of the path of
is uncertain. As for the particular antidotes of this path, when we have conceptually seen how damage, the antidotes completely eliminate them. As for what is abandoned, when we have seen the fau dharmas, the corresponding attachments that make them manifest are cut off and abandoned. As for wha the two egolessnesses are realized in a general way through hearing and contemplating. There is a realization

from meditation. The General Compendium says:

Prajña arising from meditation is also relevant.

As for qualities, there are the eyes, higher perceptions, and all kinds of others. The Mahaya
says:

At that time from out of the stream of Dharma
From the buddhas there are shamatha and vast wisdom,
Extensive oral instructions will be attained.

Also:

Dwelling completely within the gates of Dharma,
One is instructed by seeing tathagatas,
As if led away from strife and contention,
One is led from the manifold thickets of faults
To be established in true enlightenment.

At the time of attaining the greater path of accumulation one is mindful of the three prajñas c contemplating, and meditating, the three jewels, and the three characteristics of all compour impermanent defiled and painful. All dharmas are empty, selfless, nirvana and peace. Thes mudras of Dharma. Also faith, exertion, mindfulness, samadhi, and prajña are the five according with l arising within the essence of the senses. One meditates on discipline and generosity, the free and and birth, and the inhaling and exhaling of the breath. If the practice is completely performed, one should impure
perceptions and the eight thoughts of a great being.
In preparation, first meditate on taking refuge and arousing bodhicitta. To accomplish the fir purification, meditate on the nine impure perceptions. These are that the dead body of oneself and othe

1). rotten
2). worm-eaten
3). bloody red 4). green

5). black 6). devoured
7). scattered
8). burned
9). decomposed.

For desire meditate on impurity, for hatred kindness, and for ignorance interdependent arisin Requested by Pungzang says:

Desire is mostly eliminated by one's having viewed Impure flesh and fat, and skin and skeletons.
Aggression by the stream of kindness and compassion,
And ignorance by the path of interdependent arising.

As for the Eight thoughts of a great being, the Commentary on the Twenty-thousand says:

One thinks the thought, 1) "I am always able to remove suffering from sentient beings," and the thought, 2) "I am always able to establish beings who are afflicted by poverty in great w the thought, 3) "A body of flesh and blood can always be of use to sentient beings," and the
"I could always benefit sentient beings by staying in hell for a long time," and, 5) "By world world-transcending great wealth, I can always fulfill the hopes of sentient beings," and, 6) " become enlightened, I could always eliminate the sufferings of sentient beings," and the tho
"the arising of what does not benefit sentient beings, the taste of the absolute being analyze unity, words that do not make all beings think, livelihood that does not benefit others, and lik body and prajña and wealth and power, and rejoicing in doing harm to sentient beings--in all generations may these never occur," and the thought, 8) "because the fruition of the evil de sentient beings always ripens in myself and the fruition of my virtue always arises in them, m happy."

Meditate on these together with taking refuge and arousing bodhicitta. Moreover, as taught
in the realm of complete purity.

2. the path of preparation

Then there is the explanation of the path of preparation:

There are four divisions of the path of preparation.

In the stages of heat and peak we meditate on the five powers
Faith and energy, awareness samadhi and prajña.
In patience and highest dharma these five are the five supreme forces.

The support of the path of preparation is beings of any of the six realms in whom the greater accumulation has arisen and been finished. Countless gods, nagas, asuras, and so forth fo described in the sutras. The support of thought is any of the six desire or samadhi levels. The cause is f greater path of accumulation. The Small Commentary says:

According with liberation, for delighted sentient beings there are therefore the aids to liberation.

The essence is the worldly wisdom arisen from meditation. The four divisions are heat, pea patience, and highest dharma. There is meditation in the stages of heat and peak experienc exertion, mindfulness, samadhi, and prajña. They are called powers because they actually produce t bodhicitta. The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Faith and these others are explained as powers.

Moreover there are the four wisdoms of the four paths of preparation. First, as for the heat o mahayana, in attaining the wisdom of appearance, all dharmas are seen merely as mental appearances. arising of worldly meditation, the antidote to grasping the true existence of objects is produced. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Like that for bodhisattvas,
Within their meditation,
Except as expressions of mind,
All objects are unseen.

As for such appearances, certainty in the dharma produces mental patience. The Sutra of P

Gate says:

As for patience with the appearance of knowables, the thought of certainty in the dharma is the designation of the word.

That is also presented in the Mahayanasutralankara commentary. Peak experience is the w appearance. Because the appearance of dharmas is intensified, by making an effort to med
meditation
on appearance arising as the middle way is attained. The Sutra of Possessing the River Ga

In order to intensify
The appearances of dharmas,
One should make a total
And persevering effort.

Patience is an aspect of the wisdom of suchness. Meditation-arisen appearance is grasped mind-only. Supreme attainment of that produces an antidote for attachment to external objects. T
says:

As for having intensified
The appearance of all the dharmas,
One should dwell in mind only.
Then all appearances,
Will truly appear as mind.
At this time distraction
Of grasping will be abandoned.
The distraction of fixation
Then will remain alone.

As for the highest or supreme dharma, the immediately preceding wisdom undistracted gras arising in meditation on mere appearance is completely perfected. There is nothing betwee attainment of the path of seeing of the mahayana. The same text says:

At that time unobstructed
Samadhi is quickly reached.

The four aspects of ascertainment are each divided into three as lesser, middle, and greater altogether. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

Thus in terms of the aspects of ascertainment,
There are lesser and middle, and the great.

As for the particular antidotes, suppression is the antidote of abandoning. In general the fou antidote
are:

1). antidote of eliminating,
2). antidote of abandoning,
3). supporting antidote,
4). antidote of keeping one's distance.

Of the two kinds of abandoning antidote, suppressing abandons by keeping down manifesta from the root the seeds are also cleared away, as with an unobstructed path. As for the spe characteristics of abandoning, the seeds of obscuration and their manifestations are kept down, and one is lib poverty and degeneration of individual beings. As for the special characteristics of its realization, by the arising in worldly meditation, the two egolessnesses are realized in an abstract way. As for the virtues, it is ta clouds of the three jewels there are many samadhis, dharanis, higher perceptions, and so forth.
As for what makes the path of preparation higher than the path of accumulation, though it is distinction
from the greater path of accumulation in meditation arising, in terms the wisdom of complete being very clear, the two are distinguished as relatively near and far from the path of seeing. The Grea the Eight Thousand says:

If there are no obstacles, this "very nearly arising of the path of seeing," should be known as especially according with the aspect of liberation.

3. The path of seeing

Then as for first seeing the wisdom of the noble ones:

The path of seeing occurs at the first bhumi called "supreme joy."
Here we meditate well on the seven limbs of enlightenment.
Joy and shinjang here are added to the five powers.

On completing the great supreme dharma, there is the arising of the wisdom of the path of s nature of sixteen moments. For each of the four noble truths:

1) suffering
2) the cause of suffering
3) the cessation of suffering
4) the path leading to cessation

there are:

1). acceptance of knowing dharmas
2). knowing dharmas
3). acceptance of subsequent cognition
4). subsequent cognition

As for these sixteen natures, The Abhisamayalankara says:

According with the four truths of suffering and so forth
There are dharma knowledge, and subsequent cognition,
With the acceptance of each, the instants of these natures,
And the way of knowing all these, is called the path of seeing.

The commentary says:

Of the individual truths, acceptance of knowing dharmas, knowing dharmas, acceptance of subsequent cognition, and subsequent cognition, as for the natures of these sixteen momen occasion of knowing all these, there is the path of seeing.

The body of a being that is the support of this wisdom is one with the greater supreme dharr that of any of the beings of the six realms. It is not the seeing of the view of the shravakas. The su thought is the four dhyanas. The main cause is finishing the level of supreme dharma. Accumulation and prep external causal factors. The fruition is production of the subsequent two paths. In the essence, by dividing t truths, depending on defilements of the dhatu being abandoned, there are the sixteen moments. F

and antidotes, as for the first, there are five kinds of defiling views. These are:

1). views of a transitory collection,
2). views that fixate extremes,
3). wrong views,
4). fixating a view as supreme, and 5). fixating discipline and asceticism as supreme.

Also there are the five defiling non-views of doubt about these. By the ten kleshas of these t views arise in the desire realm, there is a wrong way of entering each of the four noble truths. The wrong ways
altogether.
For the two above, defiling views and non-views, for each of the four truths, there are also n
times
two wrong enterings due to the nine bases of enmity, or seventy-two. Thus, all the kleshas a seeing, are 72 +
30 or 112. The Universal Compendium says:

As for the hundred and twelve kleshas, those are the kinds of kleshas to be abandoned by seeing.

As for enmity not entering into the four levels of dhyana and the four formless attainments, s being has been moistened with shamatha, the nine tormented states of mind which are the bases of en Within these nine are

A. the three thoughts regarding oneself

1). This has harmed me before.
2). It will do so now.
3). In the future too, it will do so.

B. the three analogous thoughts about harm to friends
C. the three analogous thoughts about benefit to enemies

As for the ways of wrong entering by these kleshas, taking the truth of suffering as an exam

1) By the view of a transitory collection, within the truth of suffering one fixates me and mine
2) By the view that grasps extremes, within the truth of suffering one fixates the extremes o
non-existence,
eternalism, and nihilism.
3) By wrong view, one grasps the truth of suffering as non-existent.
4) By ignorance, one enters not knowing the characteristics of the truth of suffering.
5) By doubt, one enters doubting whether the five skandhas do or do not suffer.

Within these five ways of entering,

1) Because of attachment to desire, desire is produced.
2) By pride, haughtiness and arrogance are produced.
3) By fixating the view as supreme, the supreme ultimate is fixated.
4) By fixating discipline and asceticism as supreme, one fixates the path to purification and l
5) The way of entering with enmity toward what does not accord with these five, produces a

Entering the other three truths should be similarly understood. Moreover, the name of the tr
is conceptualized, and one does not perceive the real entering of it.

As for the divisions of the antidotes, by seeing the kleshas of the three realms, the kleshas v abandoned are abandoned. Here for the truths of suffering, its cause, cessation, and the pa

four acceptances of knowing the dharmas.
These characteristics cannot be within in one mental substance within one instant of arising
there are four aspects individually regarding the four truths, seeds of being seen and abandoned, and completely abandoning antidote is not without obstruction. They are abandoned by a hundred and twel of seeing and abandoning.

Moreover, the direct cause of acceptance of knowing the dharmas of the individual four truth corresponding things to be abandoned are encountered as two potencies. At a second time its corresponding to-be-abandoned are encountered as two non-potencies. At a third time, the dharma
acceptances and all their corresponding to-be-abandoned subtle seeds are abandoned in th simultaneously made to cease. The Uttaratantra says:

As the sprout and so forth gradually arise,
As the husk of the seed is cut and split apart,
So by having seen the ultimate nature of suchness
What is abandoned by seeing is driven out.

In the one mind-substance, the individual dharmas of the four truths are an antidote that is a complete liberation from the kleshas, which are aspects of those four truths about the three realms. S
the four acceptances and the four subsequent knowledges, this is the path of the special antidotes o distance. These abandonments also deal with the two obscurations. They liberate from these two. The Cen

The two-fold obscurations
Of kleshas and of knowables,
As for those obscurations
When they have been exhausted,
That is called liberation.

As for the distinctions of these two, The Uttaratantra says:

Where there are thoughts of avarice and so forth,
These are called the obscuration of kleshas.
Where discursive thoughts of the three realms,
These are called the obscuration of knowables

The obscuration of kleshas is the avarice and so forth of an unpacified mind, whose essenc obscured by unhappiness.
The obscuration of knowables it thoughts of grasping and fixation, the object and perceiver v from attachment to the true existence of the three realms, where the essence is likely to be c obscured by unhappiness.

False conceptions of the obscuration of the kleshas are abandoned by seeing. The co-eme abandoned by meditation.
As for the obscuration of knowables, coarse thoughts of grasping and fixation are abandone Subtle
ones are abandoned by meditation.
As for the distinctions of realization: By world-transcending prajña, the two egolessness are perception. The qualities are the previously mentioned hundred and twelve of the first bhum
As for the distinction of time, first by the revelation of the four truths there is the one time of t acceptances. After that, there arises the one time of the four knowledges. After that arises
the four acceptances of subsequent cognition. After that, by the arising of the single time of the four cognitions, in the four moments of completing the action, the essence of four kinds and sixteen aspects arises simultaneous realization of the four truths, and so the four acceptances gradually arise.
Those things abandoned by seeing are instantly abandoned by acceptance of the Dharma. This happens in stages over the four aspects of the path of seeing.
Moreover, at the time of the first bhumi, one meditates on the seven limbs of enlightenment.

The Spiritual Letter says:

Mindfulness, investigating dharmas, and exertion
Joy, shinjang, samadhi, and equanimity;
These are the seven limbs of enlightenment.
This assembly of virtues makes one attain nirvana.

How so? The Sutra Teaching the Side of Enlightenment says:

1) Manjushri, for whomever there is no mindfulness and therefore no attention, seeing all dharmas as unreal is the limb of enlightenment of true mindfulness.
2) Manjushri, for whomever, because of completely not practicing virtue, non-virtue, or what is neutral, all dharmas are eliminated and unperceived, there is the limb of enlightenment of investigation of dharmas.
3) Manjushri, for whomever, because of having destroyed perception of a body, there is neither accepting or rejecting of the three worlds, there is the limb of enlightenment of true e
4) Manjushri, for whomever because they have destroyed joy and non-joy, all formations do not produce joy, there is the limb of enlightenment of true joy.

5) Manjushri, for whomever, because conceptual things are not conceived, the mind has become completely trained for all dharmas, there is the limb of enlightenment of shinjang.
6) Manjushri, for whomever, because they think of all dharmas as destroyed, mind is not conceived, there is the limb of enlightenment of true samadhi.
7) Manjushri, for whomever, because they do not dwell on anything, depend on anything, produce passion, or produce bondage, there is equanimity whose sight does not follow after this attainment of joy is the limb of enlightenment of true equanimity.

d. The path of meditation

Because of becoming familiar with what has been seen:

There are lesser, middle, and greater paths of meditation.
Each of these again has been divided in three.
From lesser lesser to greater greater there are nine.
These are stainless, light-producer, and brilliant shining;
Difficult to conquer, presence, and far-going,
Immovable, good understanding, and finally cloud of dharma.
On these we travel over the noble eight-fold path,
Right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right livelihood, Right effort, right mindfulness, and last right meditation.

The path of meditation accords with the true meaning seen on the path of seeing, producing familiarity with this. The Abhisamayalankara says:

With the path of seeing Ascertain the limbs.
With the path of meditation,
Contemplate over and over.
Encounter and true perception
Are the path of meditation.

Within the path of meditation there are lesser, middle, and greater, again divided into three, are nine in all. What are they?

The lesser lesser is the second bhumi, the spotless one.

The middle lesser is the third bhumi, the light producer.
The greater lesser is the fourth bhumi, the brilliantly shining.
The lesser middle is the fifth bhumi, the one difficult to conquer. The middle middle is the si presence.
The greater middle is the seventh bhumi, the far-going one.
The lesser greater is the eighth bhumi, the immovable one.
The middle greater is the ninth bhumi, good intellect.
The greater greater is the tenth bhumi, the clouds of Dharma.

Regarding these nine levels, the same text says:

As for these nine bhumis, the greater greater and so on
They are antidotes to defilements, lesser of lesser and so forth,
On these paths those defilements will be purified.

What is abandoned by meditation also has greater, middle, and lesser, and they are similarl nine as greater greater, middle greater, lesser greater, greater middle, middle middle, lesser middle, middle lesser, and lesser lesser. On the nine levels of the stainless one and so forth they are gradually ab Moreover, these go from the lesser lesser, the second bhumi, the stainless one, on which th defilement is abandoned by meditation, up to abandoning the lesser lesser defilement to be meditation on the greater greater path of meditation, the tenth bhumi.

These terms have the approach that coarser defilements are called greater and subtle ones support arising on these paths of meditation is the same as for the path of seeing. For the n are men and women of the three continents and gods of the desire and form realms. Other births are pos bodily support that has achieved birth can be any. The same text says:

The fields and the practice exist like an illusion,
Samsara is received according to one's thoughts.

The support of mind is said to be mostly the four dhyanas and whatever others there may be first three paths. The fruition is the path of no more learning. The essence, is that dependin antidote for abandoning particular defilements on the nine bhumis there are

1) union,
2) the path of non-obstruction
3) the path of complete liberation
4) the special path.

These also abandon the obscurations of those bhumis. Union and the path of non-obstructi
of abandoning. The path of complete liberation is the antidote to the support. The special pat of keeping one's distance .
For example, at the instant of the arising of the wisdom of the second bhumi, by the finish of one of the first, manifestations of suppressing kleshas that obscure the second are abandoned.
While the wisdom of the second arises unobstructed, the corresponding apparent seeds of r
discipline,
intrinsic but uncertain in their manifestation, are completely abandoned.
In the second instant, there is the main object. By the path of complete liberation, the antido support is produced.
At the end of the bhumi, the level of the special path is the antidote of keeping one's distanc
From the first instant of these bhumis until they are finished, their individual obscurations are in this
way. These defilements are completely exhausted and abandoned at the same time the bh Here these days some coarse describers of the perfections say that all abandonings by seei
on arising. They maintain that all that is abandoned by meditation is abandoned by the path of this stupid kind of antidote guarding and dharmas are seen as being the same thing. The Edifice of the Thr

Here by bodhisattvas, at the time when this spotless one has completely arisen, the defilem of mischievous discipline are completely abandoned.

From that, up to the tenth aspect of defilements that do not accord with the tenth bhumi, at t
these

bhumis arise, having been abandoned on the path of non-obstruction, by the path of comple antidote to the support is produced, until by the special antidote, the obstruction of keeping one's distance i Moreover, if all that is abandoned on seeing is abandoned by meditation on things as they a things be abandoned at all?
The quality was already explained in the case of the previous bhumi. As for how the 9 defile bhumis are abandoned, there are six co-emergent stains:

1) desire,
2) enmity,
3) pride,
4) ignorance,
5) the view of a transitory collection,
6) the view that fixates extremes.

By divisions of the realms, in the desire realm there are all 6. Within the dhyanas and formle attainments,
enmity is absent, so there are 5 and 5 there, 16 altogether.
By the levels, in desire there are 6. There are 4 dhyanas + 4 formless attainments. With tho 5,
there are 26. [46?]
Divided by greater and middle, the 6, plus greater and middle [and another?] desire = 9. In
also 9
each, = 54.
In the 4 levels of dhyana, since enmity is discarded, the greater middle 5 kleshas are 9 a Similarly in the formless realm, there are 45 in 5 sets. By combining them, those things aba meditation are 440. [?]
The way of abandoning is that by union they are suppressed. By having no obstacles they a abandoned.
By complete liberation, the antidote to the support is produced. By the special path by the m producing the antidote of keeping one's distance, within the nine bhumis the manifestations and seeds are abandon Within these bhumis one completely meditates on the eight-fold noble path. The Spiritual Le

Right view, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness
With right samadhi are limits placed on speech and action.
Right thought is concerned with the eight limbs of the path.
Meditate on these for the sake of producing peace.

The Sutra Teaching the Side of Enlightenment says:

Manjushri, wherever someone sees all dharmas as without inequality and non-dual, this is right view.
Manjushri, wherever someone sees all dharmas as unseen, seeing them as without thought without conception, completely without discursive thought, this is right thought.
Manjushri, wherever someone sees all dharmas as inexpressible, this is right speech.
Manjushri, completely establishing all dharmas in a manner without effort and without establishing is right effort.
Manjushri, seeing all dharmas without engaged attention and mindfulness is right mindfulness.
Manjushri, since all dharmas are not conceptualized, they are naturally at rest in meditative equality/equanimity. Seeing them in the non-disturbance of non-conception is right samadh

If one looks at the intrinsic essence of these bhumis, it is beyond conceptual thought. The A

says:

As for these bhumis of the buddha-sons, their appearance is utterly and completely pure, lik the track of a bird in the sky.

By clearing away the details obscuring the dhatus, they are transformed into the ultimate dh looks with the vision of buddhahood. This is differently presented. At the time of the final purificat individual defilements, the primordial space of the dhatu or luminous buddhahood is seen in its intrinsi like the moon appearing by the power of the time of the month. The Praise of Dharmadhatu says:

Just as in the cycle of the moon,
It is seen to grow from moment to moment,
So the ones who dwell upon the bhumis,
Are gradually seen to be increasing.

Just as on the fifteenth day of waxing,
The circle of the moon is round and full,
So at the completion of the bhumis,

Dharmakaya is said to be complete.

e. The path of no more learning:

Reaching the end of practice on these four paths of learning,
Involved with the thirty-seven factors of enlightenment,
Then we reach the final path of no more learning.
Here in non-dwelling nirvana we pass beyond suffering.

When accumulation of the thirty-seven factors of enlightenment on the paths of learning is fi
the level of no more learning, the enlightenment of buddhahood manifests. Here the bodily sup the ordinary vehicles, is of the bhramin or kshatriya castes of Jambuling. According to the mahayana, it that by attaining the sambhogakaya realm of Akanishta, the buddha is born with that as a support. It is the s
of a bodhisattva of the tenth bhumi.
The support of thought is the four dhyanas. The cause is the four paths of learning of the m fruition is establishing limitless beings in enlightenment by the great buddha activity. As for
the inexhaustible body, speech, mind, quality, and action of the level of buddhahood is the sphe ornament. As for abandoning, the two obscurations together with their habitual patterns are abandoned. The

The kleshas and likewise birth,
And likewise the obscurations
Of kleshas and knowables,
Completely incompatible,
These classes are overcome.
That is the explanation
Of ultimate buddhahood.

As for the distinguishing characteristics of the realization, one realizes complete perception
The
commentary to the Uttaratantra says:

Bhagavan you have limitless comprehension of dharmakaya

Limitless knowables pervading the space of the dhatu are seen.

As for the qualities, all the limitless world-transcending qualities are perfected. The Precious

Middle Way says:

By the buddhas, other than that,
In the palace of omniscience,
That vastness is expressed
By saying they have the ten powers.
As for each of these powers
The alaya of beings
is already immeasurable.
The immeasurableness of the buddhas,
Is said to be comparable
To the space of all the directions
With its earth, water, air, and fire.
It is said to be just that.

6. The final summary expressing the purpose of the paths and bhumis

Now the final summary tells the purpose of these paths and bhumis.

No buddhas have ever arisen anywhere at all Without having first gone through these ten bhumis and five paths.
Liberated through many lives in many kalpas,
This is the path where all of them have placed their trust.
Those on the vehicles of either cause or fruition,
Must learn these paths and bhumis and travel over them.

It is impossible that unsurpassable enlightenment should arise without fully completing the p

The Sutra of Buddhas and Beings says:

Those who attained the kalpa's buddhahood
Who became its lord steersmen, all of these Arose by having traversed the paths and bhumis.
Therefore desiring the treasury of the Buddha,

Supported by ultimate buddhahood, strive on these.
Aside from this path, it will not rise from another.

Whether buddhahood is attained over many kalpas, in ten lives, six, and so forth, or very qu life, one must travel according to the paths and the bhumis. That is because the obscurations of thes and their good qualities perfected. These days, when people try to attain buddhahood without depen bhumis,
the accumulations are not perfected. The obscurations are not purified. Exponents of this n maintaining say that without completing the paths and bhumis enlightenment is attained, and that the same bless another way.
But this would contradict the great learned and accomplished ones of the sutras and tantras treatises.
Therefore, try to train in the genuine paths and bhumis.

D. The dedication of merit

Now as for the dedication of the merit to perfect enlightenment, this true way:

When all beings by this essence, profound and luminous,
Have thoroughly pacified disturbances of mind,
Exhausted by long belief in complexity here in samsara,
May the mind today relieve its weariness.

Cooled by the appearance of the rain of this good presentation of this true, great path, by th falling water of merit flowing into the filled ocean, when the disturbance of the kleshas of beings have bee pacified, may this nature of mind exhausted by the beginningless complexities of samsara ease its wearin
of the natural purity of dharmakaya mahasukha.

May the mirror-like wisdom, the great full lake of dharmata,
In equality of non-thought, free from the stains of extremes,
Reaching the goal of renunciation/realization,
Fulfill without remainder all the hopes of beings.

Those who wander alone in the darkness of ignorance,
Oppressed by suffering in the torments of the three fires
Sightless and separate from the path of liberation,
Not remaining here, may they soon attain nirvana.

Though they have the freedoms and favors without exception,
They are impermanent and essenceless.
Having abandoned all unwholesome evil deeds,
Without exception may they attain enlightenment.

XII The Commentary on Chapter 12: THE LIMBS OF THE PATH OF SKILLFUL MEANS IN SAMADHI

Having practiced in that way, we are unified with the ultimate fruition, buddhahood. Now

XII. The chapter on actions of benefit has three sections. These are

A. The instruction to train in dhyana
B. The cause of establishing the teaching of the three immovable samadhis
C. The dedication of merit.

A. The instruction to train in dhyana.

Having explained the extremely profound way of meditation, now the truly established nature
be discussed. As just explained:

Thus, in order to unify our meditation,
There is training in the three limbs of unwavering samadhi.

The essence of the path to be perfected, the special dhyana, also has three limbs of union b
be perfected.

B. The three immovable samadhis

there are two sections,

1. The brief teaching
2. The extended explanation.

1. The brief teaching

These three limbs are like this:

The first is the procedure for the one who wants to achieve it.
The second is the means of how we ought to practice.
The third is non-duality, the essence of the practice.

All true samadhi involves these three:

1). The individual by whom it is established
2). The means for establishing it
3). The essence which is established.

2. The extensive explanation

There are three sections

a. The procedure by which it is established
b. The skillful means by which it is established
c. The three-fold essence of the practice of non-duality.

a. The procedure by which it is established

There are five parts of the procedure, for the one who wants to practice.

1) the practice for renunciates,

First the individual:

Those who practice this must have renunciation,
Keeping their bodies far from the bustle of civilization;
Keeping their minds far off from the host of complexities;

In such a way, samadhi will quickly be established.

With body and speech disturbed by the bustle of activities, and mind disturbed by a thousan complexities, if one does not even practice shamatha, why speak of samadhi? Therefore, k the rat-race, alone in a solitary place like a remote forest. Keep the mind far from the host of compl within one's being, moistened by shamatha, profound samadhi will be established. The Samadhiraja Su

Prince, therefore those desiring samadhi should forsake places disturbed by bustling activity and exert themselves while remaining alone in a solitary place.

It will not be established, while living in a house. The same text says:

Whoever stays inside or outside a house
As for attaining completely pure enlightenment,
Such a buddha has never arisen yet.
They do not exist, and never will.

2) That those who are disciplined and have heard much will establish samadhi:

They should have faith and humility as well as modesty.
With care and pure discipline, they should delight in goodness.
Knowing much and desiring little, they are content.
In such a way, samadhi will quickly be established.

By having faith, it will be established. By having faith in the Dharma, one enters and remain excellent faith will therefore increase more and more. The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

For persons who have faith
White dharmas arise by themselves.

With "humility as well as modesty," meditating in samadhi, enthusiastically not giving up, one yogic union. These take care of guarding the mind from disturbance, and so samadhi will be Sutra on Ultimate Samadhi says:

By care, humility, and modesty

Ultimate deep samadhi will be established.

Regarding establishing it by discipline, the former text says:

Having discipline and staying with that,
One will attain the excellent peace of samadhi.

Rejoicing in virtue and having heard much, having few desires and knowing what is enough samadhi. The Moon Lamp says:

Desiring excellent qualities, and knowing what is enough

Having heard much of the Dharma, but reducing personal baggage,
Staying in solitude, rejoicing in being alone,
By this it is not hard to gain this supreme samadhi.

3) Establishing it by abandoning the five obscurations:

Controlled in mind and body, they love to stay in solitude.
They abandon the love of chatter, and being drowsy or lazy.
Neither wild or regretful, they have little to ask of others.
In such a way, samadhi will quickly be established.

PLUncontrolled body and mind, wildly discursive, contradict the path of peace. Living in citie places swarming with people, one will be distracted, and vipashyana will be interrupted. A place of with many people and dear friends is a place of passion and aggression contradictory to samadhi. Tho damaged by delight in talking will obscure and hinder its arising. They will therefore give birth to much and contention.
If these are abandoned, samadhi will naturally develop, and the dharma of the Victorious Or
The
former text says:

Without preoccupations, delighting in solitude
With few acquaintances, pure of sleep and laziness,
Neither depressed or manic, body and mind are controlled.

By that it is not hard to gain supreme samadhi

The Wisdom Mudra says:

One's body far from crowds, completely devoted to peace,
As graceful as a deer, will be the cause of non-dwelling.
Like air within the sky, without desire for things;
One will grasp the Dharma of the Victorious One.

4) Its being established by staying in solitude with few activities:

Without the bustle of cities and people who live in them,
In solitary places with little need of support.
They have no connection with various goals and actions.
In such a way, samadhi will quickly be established.

Those who depend on and frequent cities, the people who are part of them, crowds, and pla congregate, rather than remaining in solitary places as renunciates, because of the complet objects and many activities of this life, non-dual never establish the samadhi of peace. When we live with few objects and activities, wholesomeness will naturally develop. Samadhi will be established, because ther proper attentive apprehensions of the mind. The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

Future monks, easy going, not controlling distraction,
Infatuated with property and being reverently served,
Will just get angry with anyone who is disciplined.
Those desiring samadhi should not attend on these.
Rather staying alone, they should put extremes to rest
Living like that they should rejoice in solitude.

With only proper attentions, they will produce transcendence The Spiritual Letter says:

Really trying to see the ultimate absolute,
Becoming accustomed to training in proper kinds of attention--
There is no other Dharma than having such virtues as these.

5) For those having the family of the mahayana it will be established:

Caring little for happiness in this life or the next,
Or to attain nirvana for their own benefit,
Desiring liberation for the sake of other beings,
They are sad with samsara and have renunciation.
In such a way, samadhi will quickly be established.

These remain in peaceful solitude, entrusting themselves to samadhi for the benefit of other the self-serving peace and bliss of the shravakas and pratyekabuddhas is not the path of holy b the great vehicle. They do not wish for the fruition of happiness in this life or the next or for peace as for oneself. These individuals are sad with samsara, and practice dhyana with an attitude of renunciation, for th sentient beings of samsara. The True Samadhi says:

Completely not desiring the happiness of samsara,
Free from the wish of seeking solitary peace
For compounded beings one has a feeling of sadness
Because of that, supreme samadhi is established.

None of the joys of this life are desired. In particular, train in diminishing personal baggage the craving for wealth. The Spiritual Letter says:

Like evil villains, and poison, weapons, foes, and fire
The mind of happiness is expelled because of desire.
Therefore liberate the skandhas from desire.
The Lord of Sages taught that their fruit is like a kimba
Therefore abandon it. By being bound in its chains,
In the prison of samsara these worldly ones are bound

Within, sexual passion is what must chiefly be abandoned. The same text says:

Separate yourself from women with princess bodies.
Do not crave the nine holes of such a stinking vessel,

Like a vessel of everything filthy, covered by skin and ornaments,
See it as something that properly ought to be put aside.

The Objects of Mindfulness says:

Woman produces ruin
In this world and the other.
Do yourself a favor.
Have nothing to do with them

The Bodhisattva Pitaka Sutra says:

Even If one examines a thousand world realms, there is no enemy like my wife.

In brief, the idea is that the most predominant kleshas in our being should be examined and
All
attachment for objects of the six senses should be abandoned. The Spiritual Letter says:

Whoever is stable, for the objects of the six senses
Always unstable and forever moving about,
With the attitude of war, must conquer these enemies.
At first the capable will have to be very brave.

And also:

Gambling and physical pampering.
Lazy good for nothing associates,
Boozing and night-time tomcatting,
And addiction to nasty gossip,
These six should be abandoned.

By grasping our own dharma as supreme, we disparage others, and doubt profound Dharma impermanent as permanent, the untrue as true, the erroneous as ultimate, and the suffering happiness.
These last four errors entirely unite one with samsara, so these are the chief things to aband
text says:

Though we grasp ascetic discipline

Supremely with the body,
The four errors, views, and doubts Completely united these three Block the gates to the city
Of ultimate liberation.
This should be well known.

In particular, if there is gain there is joy, and if loss sorrow; and if there is happiness there is if unhappiness sorrow; if one becomes famous there is joy, but if disparaging and unpleasant there is sorrow; when there is praise, we feel joy, and, when there is blame, sorrow. These eight wo should certainly be abandoned. The same text says:

Joy and sorrow,
Loss and gain,
Praise and blame,
And pleasure and pain,

These, by the Worldly-wise
Are called the eight worldly dharmas.
Let us produce equanimity
For these non-objects of mind.

In regard to establishing the seven riches the same text says:

Purity and discipline,
Learning and generosity,
Spotless perfect humility,
Modesty, and prajña,
These are the seven riches
As they were taught by the Sage.

Householders and so forth should encourage others to virtue and establish supportive activi text
says:

Hurting people and theft,
And sexual peccadilloes,
Desire for drinks and snacks,
Delight in high seats and music
Dances and special garlands-- Abandon these and follow
The discipline of the arhats.

If one has these eight limbs,
Reconciliation,
Desirable activity,
A pleasant godlike body
For men or women is taught.

In brief, meditators dwelling in solitude, by the discipline of their vows restrain the mind from associated with evil activity. By the discipline of gathering wholesome dharmas, samadhi, liberation, an were not possessed before are established. Wholesome dharmas that were formerly possessed incr day and night on the side of wholesomeness alone. By the discipline of performing benefit for sentie remaining in samsara are urged to virtue. Those desiring the Dharma who have gone wrong in the ongoi discipline, those whose Dharma was too much for them, should be made to rejoice. Finally, do not injure eve insects, ants
and such sentient beings. Giving them food and so forth, speak the name of the Tathagata,
of the three jewels, and always think that even these will certainly get enlightened eventually. Alw these be liberated as my retinue," and "Even these may be emanations." Having thought that, arouse devotion and sacred outlook. Even if it exists now today produc apprehension of separation and impermanence. Not even for an instant being mundane, let only with the wholesome.

b. how this is accomplished by the limbs of the skillful means of practice

There are two sections

1) General means of practicing shamatha and vipashyana,
2) Individual means of practicing shamatha and vipashyana,

1) the means of practicing shamatha and vipashyana, has three parts.

a) Abandoning and antidotes

Two meanings/benefits:

Then in regard to the limbs of practice,
These five obscurations ought to be abandoned:
Being drowsy, dull, discursive, disconsolate, or doubtful.
Practice the union of shamatha and vipashyana.
Being drowsy and droopy will obscure shamatha.
Discursiveness and depression disrupt vipashyana.
Doubt harms both, incompatible with either one.

Yogacharins have five obscurations of dhyana. Within true shamatha revealing clear lumino drowsy and droopy, depression is produced. Within the one-pointed lucency of vipashyana, by being dis disconsolate, proliferation of thoughts is produced. When there is doubt, neither shamatha nor vipashyan
As for drowsiness, or sleepiness, entering into it involuntarily, the mind is gathered up. Dullness is where objects are not clearly known. These should be abandoned. The Spiritual Letter says:

Discursive-disconsolate; malicious; dull and drowsy;
Interested in desire; and being doubtful.
These five obscurations are errors about the wholesome.
It should be known that they are plundering thieves.

Discursiveness and disconsolateness are taken as one. Drowsiness and dullness are on desire,
malice, and doubt there are five.

b) Clearing away hindrances:

These five obscurations can be summarized
Under the headings of drowsiness and discursiveness.
If there is drowsiness, we should try to refresh our practice.
If there is discursiveness, meditate one-pointedly.

Drowsiness and dullness are depressive sinking, so meditate trying to adopt a refreshed and attitude.
If there is discursiveness about other things or people, try to meditate on the nine means of

c) Relying on unifying the antidotes

It is like this:

Vipashyana without shamatha is discursive complexity.
Without vipashyana, shamatha will go nowhere.
It is the highest path when these two are combined.
This is the antidote for the two obscurations.

Prajña unmoistened by shamatha is only verbal understanding. Shamatha uncompleted by and cannot be expected to elevate one above the seeds of samsara. Therefore, try to unify Spiritual Letter says:

Without any prajña, samadhi does not exist.
Without samadhi, also there is no prajña.
Where there are both, the black ocean of samsara,
Will have be searched for like the tracks of cattle.

2) Individual means of practicing shamatha and vipashyana,

Of the two individual explanations of shamatha and vipashyana,

a) shamatha,

There are four sections

i) The cause of its being established,

Here first:

When body, speech, and mind, and intellect are at ease,
Then it can be said that shamatha is established.
There is equanimity with the natures of all dharmas,
The chief ancillary is that all conceptions are pacified.
In samsaric style, the mind is grasping a single object.

The complete non-thought of samadhi is established by putting the three gates completely a
the body at ease, the nadis are put at ease. By putting the nadis at ease, prana is put at ease.
prana at ease the red and white essential elements are at ease, naturally collecting in the petals of the four chakra
Then the mental resting of shamatha is naturally established. This is because the supports of mind, t essences,
motionlessly collect in one place.
Within this, the nature of mind continually exists in its natural state, even, uninterrupted ung inexpressible equality that does not come, go, or remain anywhere at all.
The half of this that is the aspect of vividness and transparency is vipashyana. The aspect o resting is shamatha. Their non-duality is called their union. Because it always exists in all beings, lun is easily encountered when there is the remedy of exhaustion through natural motionlessness and so done by the yogin, whether emanating or resting, by knowing shamatha/vipashyana where everything is fabrication or defilement, there is liberation.

ii) The way of grasping the object

As for the way in which the mind grasps a single object:

One kind has an apparent object and one does not.
Either kind can be external or internal.
In all that makes four ways the object can be grasped.
When there is an apparent object of shamatha,

It will be form and such, the objects of the five senses.
That without form is one-pointed resting in non-thought.
External objects are things like rocks and trees and statues.
Internal ones are like the inverted heart-center lotus

First, as for the way the mind grasps, in shamatha with an apparent object, the mind rests w motionless one-pointedness on form, sound, smell, taste, and touchables, whatever objects Internally,
unsupported by appearance, the mind grasps complete non-thought.
Within the body, on bodies of gods, mantric syllables, or the downward-opening heart lotus a emblems, the chakras and so forth, or by meditating on light and so forth, the shamatha of th complexities arises in shamatha which is predominantly bliss.
Externally, if one grasps rocks, trees, images of bodily forms, and so forth without distraction
clear and luminous half of shamatha will arise. Here because predominating complexities are graspe proliferations are grasped as internal. By the diminishing of thoughts, if they are grasped as drowsiness predominating, they will be grasped as external. Moreover, by the mind having first graspe characteristics, afterwards the state without characteristics will arise.
Those who do not know this, if their minds grasp bodily forms and so forth, go into complexit
say they are resting in a state without complexity of nothing whatsoever, they miss the point. Th of those with little experience.
Here though one's mind seems to be steadily on/directed toward something, at the time of fi toward that, a thought precedes it. Then, not remaining on the appearance of that object, th emanating and gathering is substanceless, pure, and vivid, like an autumn sky free from clouds does not res cannot possibly do

so.
In a state without appearance, even if the mind grasps, further damage will not occur. If the faults, one will not be harmed by drowsiness or discursiveness and cannot possibly be. In brief, no
the appearance of objects, with a mind resting free from emanation and gathering is called dhyana. Whatev

whether
with or without appearance, by realization of bliss and the experiences of luminosity, and no ornament, the great non-fixation free from extremes, must arise. If it doesn't arise, there are faults. If it do the samadhi of genuine dhyana in which upaya and prajña are non-dual will arise within us.
***
iii) The limbs of means:

In brief:

To rest the mind one-pointedly on a single object
Is the means by which shamatha will be established.

The object on which one wants to rest is one pointedly grasped by the mind. Then by the ni resting
the mind, it should be stabilized.

On that object the mind should

(1) rest and
(2) continually rest.

If it emanates outward, the mind should be
(3) brought back to resting.

As one becomes more and more assiduous, there is
(4) thoroughly resting.

When that has produced joy, there is
(5) taming,
(6) pacification of the faults of distraction.

When sleepiness, dullness and so forth have been cleared away, there is
(7) complete pacification.

Non-emanation of other produces
(8) one-pointedness.

By not struggling with that, there i
(9) resting in equanimity.

The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

Resting the mind, continually resting, bringing back to resting, taming, pacifying, complete pacifying, one-pointedness, and resting in equanimity.

iv. The means of practice:

When one-pointed shamatha has arisen by means of this,
By reason of its stabilization and spreading outward,
The wisdom of vipashyana will proliferate.
It is important to gain the benefit of this
That it should be mixed with everything we do.
Relying on this, in freshness of both body and mind,
We should meditate as is described before.
It will quickly be established by doing this.

It is not achieved merely by the condition of the mind's having achieved one-pointedness, si suitable for mixing with vipashyana. At that time one-pointedness is mixed with vipashyana, illusion and so forth. Also shamatha is mixed with emanation and gathering and so forth. If this is not d mind has been distracted by emanated objects, by meditating as before, attaining self-control over the objec wants to rest, and the period for which one wants to rest, and the way in which one wants to rest, the pow disengaging will arise. The Mahayanasutralankara says:

By that, having made that increase,
By that increase having gone far,

The main practice of resting will thus truly be attained.

b) Vipashyana

There are eight sections

i. The principal feature and the subsidiary aspects that are like its retinue.

Having trained in shamatha:

For whoever wants the clear seeing of vipashyana
Within the limpid clarity of the luminous mind,
Discriminating awareness is the principal aspect.
Being and resting within the equality of non-thought Exist in the form of a retinue surrounding that.

At the time of shamatha, within luminous mind, the clear state of looking at the nature of dha principal feature, like the ruler. The luminous aspect of the mind of non-thought, not emanat the retinue or the ordinary people.

ii) Training in the skill of discriminating vipashyana

Discriminating vipashyana:

Here there are the two aspects of dharmin and dharmata.
The dharmin is viewed like the eight examples of illusion.
As for dharmata, the way that we should train
Is that phenomena are the emptiness of space.
By resting within suchness, wisdom will arise.

From stabilized meditation, examine in detail the essence of these external appearances, th
arising of the dharmin, appearing as dream, illusion, and so forth. Meditate within that as long as is de Circles of Kshitigarbha Sutra says:

All these dharmas are like
An illusion or a mirage.
A dream or trick of the eyes,
An echo or emanation

Like colored scarves of a dancer
These should be realized.
I bow down to this
As an excellent field of merit.

Looking at it like that, rest without mental struggle in dharmata, the naturally existing unborn
The Precious Treasury of the Unborn says:

Not realizing anything, also not thinking anything,
Create nothing artificial; let the nature be.
That is the precious treasury known as the unborn.
All the victorious ones of the three times have gone there.

Meditating in that way, within the realization that all objects are like illusion, do not enter into fixation. Within realization of the nature like space, arises the wisdom of unobstructed objects of appearanc
wisdom of simplicity, emptiness/luminosity. The All-Creating King says:

Kye! As for me enlightenment, the doer of all, the king,
I am a perfect mirror that looks at all the dharmas.
All that rises is natureless in luminosity,
It is taught that by not looking there is the luminous nature.
Within the realm of suchness, which is the unborn, Realize the great seeing, without any objects to look at.

iii) The benefit of training in drowsiness and discursiveness as play

In the pond of this vipashyana meditation:

In relying on this, we should train on the various dharmas as play,
Viewing them purely as non-dual illusion and emptiness.
When there is proliferation, we should compose the mind
Within the equality that is found in shamatha.
At this time in luminosity like the sky
We see in simplicity the empty, luminous essence.
This frees us from the two-fold clouds of the obscurations.

Sometimes there rises the luminosity like an ocean.
Within its clarity, what arises is liberated.
It is important to gain the benefit of this,
And that it should be mixed with everything we do.
Thus vipashyana will quickly be established.

In the pond of vipashyana, the unborn, proliferate many dharmas of denying, affirming and s them as a play of vividly insubstantial illusion, passing the pass into non-dual illusion. If thou emanate, meditate as before in shamatha. Relying on that state, meditate on the eleven apprehensions below. M

the conceptions of independent arising and so forth. If because of these there is emanation, me and do not analyze. If by this there are conceptualizing thoughts, put the mind in a state of non-thought flicker with conceptual analysis. To prolong this, contemplate the reason for completely grasping the m
the reason of shamatha, not moving the mind from resting. Contemplate the reason for vipashyana, the clarity.
Contemplate the reason for non-dually mixing luminosity and emptiness in union. Contempl equanimity, the natureless equality of all dharmas. The Middle length Prajñaparamita says:

1 Apprehend with thoughts and analytic discrimination;
2 Without thoughts, apprehend with just analytic discrimination
3 Apprehend with neither thought nor analytic discrimination.
4 Apprehend shamatha.
5 Apprehend vipashyana.
6 Apprehend their unity.
7 Apprehend the reason for completely grasping the mind.
8 Apprehend the reason for shamatha.
9 Apprehend the reason for vipashyana.
10 Apprehend the reason for their union.
11 Apprehend the reason for equanimity.

That is the meaning. If the mind emanates, tame it. If it becomes drowsy, refresh it. By trai skill of uniting shamatha and vipashyana, the ocean and waves arise like luminosity that has becom that is the mind's reference points rest without fixation in luminosity/emptiness. This is unharmed by th flickering thoughts that are self-liberated at the very time of their arising as our own nature. Like cloud sky, as the imputations of vipashyana becoming space, the luminous nature of mind is seen, changeles artificiality, naked luminosity/emptiness. Even if mind exists, it exists within dharmata. Con attained that it is primordially pure of existence and non-existence. By manifestation arising as the play of dh appears is known as the play of wisdom. This is the time when conditioned appearances are liberated wisdom.

By seeing the essence of one's own mind as trikaya, one is liberated from the dharmas of ch effort and establishing. The All-Creating King says:

Kye ho, listen to me now O mahasattva!
As for dharmakaya, it is bodhicitta.
As for Bodhicitta, it is dharmakaya.
Not even an atom was fabricated by anyone.
Therefore, there is neither buddhahood nor mind.

As for Sambhogakaya, it is bodhicitta.
Bodhicitta likewise is sambhogakaya.
All the different forms arising from the mind
Are not anything else other than sambhogakaya itself.

As for Nirmanakaya, it is bodhicitta.
Bodhicitta likewise is nirmanakaya.
There is no other producer of benefit for beings.
All of the buddhas throughout the three divisions of time
Are not anything else than bodhicitta itself.

Previously, the buddhas abiding in the past
Saw self-realization of unfabricated mind.
At this time the buddhas dwelling in the present

Are the realization of unfabricated mind.

Now they do benefits for others, sentient beings.
In time to come for buddhas arising in the future,
This naturally existing nature of the mind
Is not destined to have its former fabrications,

Now the mind of samadhi has no fabrications,
Having remained to the end on the path of non-fabrication

iv) Having trained in both, as for inseparably uniting them

Thus having trained individually in shamatha and vipashyana, inseparably unite these two s
and emanation rest in equality/equanimity:

In the union of shamatha and vipashyana
It is equal whether awareness rests or proliferates.
Both are primarily the wisdom of non-thought.
The encompassing style of this unification is its freedom
From all the complexities of existence and non-existence.]
Both within the principal wisdom of non-thought
Are the retinue of undisturbed simplicity.

As for "union," when the excellent essence of luminosity/emptiness arises, emanation and re contradictory. The main point is wisdom that does not grasp apparent objects, the freedom non-thought. The nature of awareness that does not move from this state exists as a retinue. Th principle thing is always the non-dual nature of mind, at the time of meditating in shamatha/vipashyana this is Therefore, it possesses those means of non-distraction as a retinue or aspect. Nagarjuna says:

When grasping and fixation
Go into non-duality,
Not different from the nature,
They are said to be in union.

At that time, by the subsiding of incidental complexities, the nature of mind, goes into the gro
water
poured into water. There is no division in their equal taste. The Dohakosha says:

The mind of the natural state,
For the yogin in unity,
Should be known to be Like water poured into water.

v) The non-duality/dual non-existence of arising and liberation

At the time of abiding in that union, concepts:

Because we rest in the state of letting things be as they are,
By their very arising things are liberated.
Therefore we are resting within equality,
Unifying shamatha and vipashyana.
Bliss, luminosity, and non-thought will then arise.
Appearance and emptiness are the spontaneous presence
Of upaya and prajña, developing and completion.

Like waves being pacified within water, whatever thoughts arise, instantly having gone into r
as they are, rise and are liberated at the same time, this is vipashyana, clear seeing of liberatio
This
accumulation of merit with appearance is the spontaneous presence of the developing stage Self-pacified intrinsic self-awareness , abiding with luminous clarity, is shamatha. It is the pe
the accumulation of wisdom which is without appearance. Their unified nature primordially abid presence
of mind. The All-Creating King says:

Knowing this, abide undistracted in the real,
Do not make any effort or train the mind in antidotes.
Do not postulate objects or rest in mindfulness.
Whatever arises then will be the meaning itself.
So enter into my world--be the doer of all.

vi) Meditation to train in the skills and to dispel.

By meditating in this union undefiled by fabrication:

Moreover we should train in the individual skills
Both of shamatha and of vipashyana
As antidotes for discursiveness and drowsiness.
And if drowsiness and discursiveness increase,
We should meditate in order to dispel them

In addition to vipashyana, one should meditate on shamatha. By meditating in vipashyana w drowsiness and shamatha when there is discursiveness, there will be liberation from these f

vii) The explanation of what is gained:

When there is the benefit, like a clear and cloudless sky,
Looking into total space with the sun at one's back,
Simple awareness of emptiness/luminosity rises.

At the time of a cloudless sky, when faults have been put behind, look with the outlook of the luminosity/emptiness that indeed arises at that instant is the wisdom of union. The Prajñapa

says:

Examine the pure space which is the meaning of this.

viii) How the outer, inner, and secret luminosities arise.

At that time:

Outer space is pure, but only an example,
Of the greater inner space of the nature, dharmata.
The secret space is the heart of luminosity.
Know realization as being composed of these three spaces.

When we look at the example of external space, the meaning, self-awareness actually arise
arising of the realization of secret wisdom, this is what all the instructions of the ultimate meaning ar teaching. The Dohakosha says:

However, the sayings of the guru should be viewed as one.

Also:

Entering into the essence of the sayings of the guru
Is like seeing a treasure placed in the palm of your hand.

The All-Creating King says:

If one wants to realize what this truly means,
Mix with the example, the purity of the sky.

The Middle Length Prajñaparamita says:

As for producing the yogic union of the perfection of prajña, union with space is produced.

The Dohakosha says:

The nature of mind should be grasped as being like space.
The nature of space should be grasped as being mind.

The example is the luminous, empty, unobstructed outer space of the sky. Awareness at thi luminous, empty, unobstructed wisdom. That is inner space.
That empty, luminous, simple wisdom arises co-emergently with the experiences of bliss, lu thought. By that all dharmas are self-liberated into the characteristic of space. This liberatio fixations of things and characteristics is the secret space of the great luminosity. At that time, there are the ter smoke and so forth,

1) smoke
2) mirage
3) firefly
4) lamp
5) blazing
6) moon

7) sun
8) Rahu
9) cha shas or mchog gi cha
10) bindu seeing.

and the appearance of the five lights [bindus of the five buddha family colors]. By the enteri mind into the central channel, space is completely illuminated. The Avatamsaka Sutra says:

From the nature without conception and perception,
Come the varied phenomena of the mandalas of light.
These several luminosities that shine in the center of space,
By expressing variety, have never risen at all.

Signs of true and stable samadhi arise within one, even if one does not want them.

c. The practice of non-duality,

From the eight limbs,

1) The great perfection beyond accepting and rejecting,

Third meanings:

The limbs of the essence are establishing non-duality.
This is the great perfection, where all is of equal taste.
Accepting and rejecting are things that should not be done.
Cast away attachment to any objective reference.
Attachments to the grasper are the formations of samsara.
Without fixated objects, as it is in space,
There is no bondage and also there is no liberation.

The essential nature is beyond effort and establishing and accepting and rejecting, like spac
this is the view. Not being distracted from this is meditation. Therefore, having become aware tha is beyond existence and non-existence, accepting and rejecting, and hope and fear, attain stability by this samadhi.

Since here there is no thought of improvement, why speak of any other meditation. The All-

Since desiring bliss is the sickness of desire,
By not desiring bliss, bliss will be received.
By establishing buddhahood, there is no establishment.
The nature that need not be sought is spontaneously present.
Do not conceptualize, and the nature need not be sought.

Also:

Kye mahasattva,
If you wish to establish the nature of your own mind,
As it is self-established when you are without desire,
Do not establish the equanimity of non-thought.
Rest in the sphere of the nature that does not accept and reject.
Naturally rest in the state of natural motionlessness.

As for mind, the essence of it is suchness.
All of the dharmas, likewise, are established as suchness.
Do not fabricate within the state of suchness.
Do not establish anything other than the essence.
If it is sought, the buddha-space will not be found.

It was already made, it need not be made now.
It was already established. That need not be done again.
Meditate in non-thought. Don't realize anything.

If fixation and attachment exist, one will not be liberated from samsara. The Song of the Ora
of the
inexhaustible Treasury says:

If the mind of yoga is drunk
With the poisons of hope and fear,
Co-emergent wisdom
Will be bound in place
Having no reference point,
We will be beyond bondage

As well as liberation.

The same text says:

The ultimate vajra mind
Has neither hope nor fear.

Even going to hell,
We will not suffer there.
Even in fruition,
There is no more to gain.

Having abandoned benefit
And harm by pleasure and pain,
By good and evil actions,
These will not grow and diminish.

Wanting a better Buddha,
Besides this non-duality
The realization of wisdom,
One should be called a fool.

2) The teaching of the meaning of this by example

As for the extensive explanation of this nature of dharmata beyond accepting and rejecting

For example:

Like various reflections and the surface of a mirror,
Such are the various dharmas and the state of emptiness.

As reflections are not something other than the surface of a mirror, all dharmas should be kn emptiness.
The Edifice of the Three Jewels says:

In a pure and luminous mirror,
As reflected natures appear,
All dharmas are reflections

To be truly viewed as unborn.

3) The example of assertion and denial

Just like various clouds within the space of the sky,
Such are various affirmations and negations
As they are found within the space of the nature of mind.

Accumulating and dissipating moment by moment, clouds do not move from the space of th whatever affirmations and denials arise within the space of the mind do not move from the s of mind.
The Newly-strung Mala of Oral Instructions says:

All clouds are within the sky.
All thoughts are in dharmata.

4) The example of realized experience:

Just like various rivers in the expanse of the ocean,
Is realized experience in the space of meditation.

As tributary streams are one in the ocean, experiences of realization are of one taste with th
The
same text says:

Within the limitless ocean of precious qualities,
All the various waters of experience
Flow together and then they are naturally motionless.
A stable mind is characterized by wish-fulfillment

5) The example of samsara and nirvana:

Like various illusions and the space of emanation;
Such are the variety of samsara and nirvana
Emanating within the space of dharmata.

Illusions are natureless from the time they appear. Just so, be aware that samsara and nirv
from

dharmata. The Sutra Requested by Bhadra says:

Dharmas, in the nature of illusion,
Are taught as emptiness of any essence.

The Dohakosha says:

That which is samsara is that which is nirvana

6) The example of mind and the nature of mind:

Like the space of the ten directions that is without a ground,
Is the state that views eternally liberated dharmas.
As water pours into water without duality,
So mind and the nature of mind cannot be separated.

The space of the sky has no different natures; so all dharmas are of non-dual nature. The A
says:

Just as the sky is inseparable,
All dharmas are inseparable.

When water is mixed with water, they are not two. When thoughts that arise within the spac mind dissolve back into the ground, these also are not two. The Golden Mala says:

As water dissolving in water is not two,
So it is with mind and the nature of mind.

7. The example of thought and non-thought:

Just like various dreams within the state of sleep,
Such is the state of the action that does not accept or reject.
Just like an ocean and the waves within its waters,
Such is equality of discursiveness and non-thought.

Dreams do not move from sleep. So all that is accepted and rejected is of one taste in non-text

says:

Dreams are luminosity in the Space of sleep.
Dharmas are luminosity non-dual from emptiness.

Waves are made of water. They are not something other than water. Thoughts and non-tho
The Dohakosha says:

So long as there are emanations of mind,
So long there is the nature of lord Buddha.
Can there be otherness of water and waves?

8. The example of hope and fear:

Just as we are happy with a successful business,
There are neither hope or fear within fruition.
Know the monolithic state of the great perfection
To be the all-encompassing space of dharmata.

When we successfully take care of business, the mind is in a relaxed and comfortable state fear.
Just so, having gained conviction that buddhahood is one's own mind, one is relaxed and co that. The
same text says:

If a mad elephant should get its mind together,
It will stop coming and going, and start resting at its ease.
Thus for realization, there is nothing else to look for.

If this state of the nature of mind, self-arising wisdom without accepting and rejecting, is fully there is liberation from perception of the characteristics of action and seeking. The All-Creating King

This path has no completion of anything at all Perfect as one, perfect as two, perfect as all,
It is therefore the bliss of the perfection of action.

It is perfect as one as perfect bodhicitta.

It is perfect as two as perfect actions of mind.
It is perfect as all as perfection in its fullness.

By this teaching of the unity of perfection,
One will dwell in realization of buddhahood.
By the reality of this perfection of everything,
Everything is really made to be complete.

Whoever so abides within this established action
Whether this body is that of a god or human being,
Is enlightened in dharmata, benefiting beings,
With effortless non-establishing, dwells in perfect bliss.

C. The dedication of merit

Now the merit of these sayings is dedicated:

Thus by the single taste of difference as non-dual,
All beings are liberated from self as well as other,
From grasping subject as well as fixations of the object.
Exhausted here within the confusion of samsara
By the perception and conception that "this is it,"
May mind this very day relieve its weariness.

This supremely wondrous merit, vast and non-dual, is like immaculate space. May those in
beings,
exhausted in samsara by the confusion that grasps duality, though they have become far-dis
a hundred light rays of merit are emanated by the bhumis and divine realms, ease their weariness in th
of the Buddha Bhagavat, built of flowers.

Realms of the gods adorn the sky above the earth,
Arising on red supporting feet of spotless light,
To these seven levels of noble ones may all beings cross.
May they have the vast wealth of the Buddha's treasury.
In their mountain peaks and forests may they be delighted with lands of herbs adorned with flowers and flowing water.

Because of having passed through this life successfully,
May liberation and its qualities be established.
As the moon, only beautified by being wreathed in clouds,
Makes white kumut lotuses stretch into space and bloom,
By this may the "good light rabbit " of peace be grasped.
For beings without remainder, may there be the ground of life.

. This work is part of a trilogy. The other titles are like this one except for substituting bsam dhyana/meditation and sgyu ma/ illusion for sems nyid. Dzogchen or ati is the tradition that this teac of, and also its fruition. A basic understanding of the titles is that samsara involves sufffering and w
The view
that sees the nature of mind, practicing meditation, and regarding activity from the viewpoint
being illusory are means of easing or weariness or relaxing tension. The result of doing so is resti

perfection.
The three means regarded from the viewpoint of the great perfection produce the fruition. If samsarically regarded they are part of the problem. The Sanskrit offered for sems nyid is ci primary meaning is mind in the conceptual sense, the very thing that needs to be eased. In the sam
the notion that our being is intrinsically bad and needs to be made into something else is a prob
the sense of clinging to confused views and goals is a problem.
This points out a central point of ati, that this very world of samsara is the world of nirvana, when we relax our confused fixations about it and stop struggling wit
that confusion suggests of saving ourselves and the world from spiritual degradation.
. This work is part of a trilogy. The other titles are like this one except for substituting bsam
dhyana/
meditation and sgyu ma/ illusion for sems nyid. Dzogchen or ati is the tradition that this teac
of, and also its fruition. A basic understanding of the titles is that samsara involves sufffering and w
The view
that sees the nature of mind, practicing meditation, and regarding activity from the viewpoint

being illusory are means of easing or weariness or relaxing tension. The result of doing so is resti

perfection.
The three means regarded from the viewpoint of the great perfection produce the fruition. If samsarically regarded they are part of the problem. The Sanskrit offered for sems nyid is ci primary meaning is mind in the conceptual sense, the very thing that needs to be eased. In the sam
the notion that our being is intrinsically bad and needs to be made into something else is a prob
the sense of clinging to confused views and goals is a problem.
This points out a central point of ati, that this very world of samsara is the world of nirvana, when we relax our confused fixations about it and stop struggling wit
that confusion suggests of saving ourselves and the world from spiritual degradation.
. Mind, sems, sometimes = samsaric mind sometimes = sems nyid the nature of mind = en
. realm. The same name is used for a bodhisattva personifying the sambhogakaya buddh
. bstan bcos, usually treatise or shastra. Here KPSR said that the sense was more the tea
and
US said that the connotation was teachings delivered for certain purposes.
. This increases merit so that enlightenment is gained. If reasoning is rightly used it inspire appreciate directly the experiential meaning of the teachings and teacher. But often the result is just th make it all seem very conceptualized, abstract, and proud of its orthodoxy. It becomes uselessly cir teachings
are true because the Buddha taught them, and the Buddha is an authentic, true person beca
so.
We have to be inspired to see for ourselves what is meant. For example, the Gelugpas ofte reasoning and then practice. The Nyingmas and Cages tend to start in the middle with som
the end, if they practice well, they all go to the same place. KPSR.
. central = where the Buddha's teaching is taught.
. HVG., literally something like "perverted the limits of action."
. Having the perfections pertaining to oneself, and having the perfections pertaining to othe perhaps.
. This passage consists of mnemonic cues, comprehensible only if one already knows the

. The title means Entering the path to enlightenment.
. rtog pa.
. dpyod pa.
. sems 'byung.
. rtog.
. spyi la dmigs par mthong ba'i rtog pa.
. sems.
. blos shes bzhin.
. dmigs pa: actually can mean perceive, apprehend, imagine, or conceive in different conte conceptualization is explained in terms of imagery, minimizing this distinction somewhat.
. Treasury of elements of existence
. Entering the Middle Way.
. Great: beyond mind and not mind, all-inclusive.
. rig pa: VCTR liked insight (= wisdom) because the same word is used for conceptual und Awareness or apprehension. Sometimes kaya and wisdom is used to express the enlighten . bslang.
. From the Sanskrit, this seems to be a copyist's error me (flames) for mo (women)

. 'gro rnam 'byed kyi mdo: [Analytic discrimination of going/beings //?
. I.e. monks and lay-people.
. The seven aryan riches, 'phags pa nor bdun, faith, discipline, generosity, learning, decenc
prajña.
. sa gsum: over on and under the earth.
. {gser gyi ri bdun the 7 golden mountains [[from Abhidharmakosha: surrounding Mt Meru [rim] rnam a'dud, rta rna, [horse's ear] lta na sdug, [Pleasing-to-the-eye] seng ldeng can, [Acacia [sandalwood] Forest] gshol mda'a a shing a'dzin [yoke]] ES

Beyond Mt Meru and completely surrounding it like curtains are seven mountain ranges, eac
These seven golden mountain ranges [are named according to the shape of the peaks] Yoke, plow, Acacia [sandalwood] Forest, Pleas Horse's Ear, Bent, and Rim: Myriad Worlds 110.

. as far as Nyashing Dzin and the other... Usually the outer volcanic iron mountains are cal Face Mountain Range. Since Nyashing Dzin is already said to be one of the inner mountains, this may be a copyists error.

. It contains a thousand squared or a million worlds.

. It contains a thousand cubed, or a billion, worlds. However, Mipham argues in his comme Kalachakra that the proper meaning is a realm of three thousand worlds like ours, and cites texts that have this approach.
. The first buddha of the present kalpa.
. As a name = Kuvera.
. Some think legs pa = sadhu just has the sense of guard well. Sadhu means good, i.e. a r renunciate devoted to goodness.
. Below, upon, and above the earth.
. Forces of sudden affliction by madness and calamity, for Tibetans personified as demons
. lto 'phyes, a sort of python demi-god, not the same as nagas.
. a'phags pa'i nor bdun.
. A long verse passage.
. Flowing in four directions from Mt Kailasha, these are the Ganges, Yamuna, Bhramaputra
. The precious wheel, gem, queen, elephant, horse, treasure-vase, and minister.
. A kind of yaksha with animal head
. lus srul po ES.
. The Life of Yeshe Tsogyal has some similar passages for any heterosexual females who
. blo. Nothing to do with low blows.
. These are the three poisons or root kleshas.
. shes pa.
. yul so so.
. sems, the sense identified with grasping.
. yul can gyi blo.
. yid la byed pa.
. rang ngo.
. Yoga practice.
. mtshan nyid, rnam grangs. mtshan nyid is the same word logicians use for the defining c discovered by valid reasoning. The word is one of the categories refuted by madhyamaka ( there it is allowed validity conventionally. Here, provocatively, it is simply equated with being distinguished from the accountable, which here is the sphere of conventional truth and falsity

. kun btags.
. rin po che sna bdun.
. rang [gi] snang [ba]. see glossary.
. It could also be said that if everything is mind, the term makes no distinction and is meani
of these arguments involve some questionable assumptions about what kind of distinctions are Conceptualizing experience can be subtler than dividing bricks into piles.

. This takes mind in the limited samsaric sense.
. The approach is like that of madhyamaka. If we take our ordinary concepts as literal desc
absolute reality, it is easy to get into trouble by inferring contradictory propositions.
. rang gi sang ba.
. don spyi.
. This appears to be addressed to an exponent of madhyamaka who holds that external ob
a conventional viewpoint, though not from the viewpoint of analysis for the absolute.
. Ordinary language distinguishes my sensations (personal appearances) of this flower from although there is no double vision of both at once. For example, if I close my eyes, the sens but the flower does not.

. This is a play on gnyis med which can mean either both are not (existent) or not two = nor Tibetan the reader has to try possible combinations of the above and pick the one that seem . snang ba, appearance, as used in Tibetan can mean something in mind, but can also incl
objects, which appear to us to exist and to be directly perceived. However the characteristics of eg a more predicable of mind than those of a perception of a tree. Neither, therefore an be the same a
. Red and white can have the sense subjective and objective.
. rang rig. Sometimes Longchenpa says things that sound similar, but would never say tha transcend emptiness.
. By identifying mind, true existence, and appearance, it will follow, although this is not wha exponents
of mind-only want to say, that what appears is what truly exists and that the confusions of th absolute
and truly exist.
. sems rig pa.
. Mipham's Shentong Senge Ngaro helps clarify this kind of reasoning considerably, explai positive statements like those of the Uttaratantra can and cannot be made about the absolut
. rang mtshan pa gzhan.
. khams
. dpe bsdu'i bye brag.
. Explained in the STSN. Any truth in appearance, including wisdom, is annihilated, while t emptiness is fixated as a negative eternal absolute.
. srab mthug.

. Lord of Death and King of Hell.
. gro bzhin skyes rna bye ba ris.
. Wooden clacker.
. Cleaned it up, eliminated each other.
. Or fermenting grain.
. Iron trees of hell with sharp leaves etc.
. 1 having blisters; 2 bursting blisters 3 swo tham tham pa: teeth chattering 4 achu 5 ALA
ltar7
pad ma 8 pad ma che.
. blong blong: made dark and filthy, or suffering from intense panic.
. Guenther reads this as "the country of Magadha."
. khal: 25-30 lb.
. cf. JOL p. 61
. Such as yakshas, mountain-top spirits, powerful rakshasas and their kings cannibal demo and eating corpses and such, often harmful, especially if not propitiated. Vaishravana is a k

Ravana is their supreme king, supposed to live in Sri Lanka.
. {'dul ba lung gzhi'i mdo} - pn Sutra on teachings that are the bases of discipline.

. ngal snabs read nar snabs.
. KPSR explains this by saying it means the skandhas are closely associated with suffering
. ES Four Currents {'dod pa}, = desire {srid pa}, existence {ma rig pa}, ignorance {log pa wrong
views.
. rtog pa of the pars rtog dpyod, conception and analysis which are linked to grasping and f
. Air.
. The first dhatus appears to = physical element, while the second also seems to have the s dhatus.
. The sense in which there is a time of becoming enlightenment vs. enlightenment being pr
. rig.
. yid or sems.
. gzung ba'i rtog pa. Longchenpa uses the two terms as equivalent.
. 'dzin pa'i rtog pa. Sometimes dpyod pa instead of rtog pa.
. vasanas, bag chags, stored habitual patterns.
. dbyen spyos
. Klesha mind is the main villain here. There is some ambiguity about conception generatin consciousness.

. yul and yul can.
. yid.
. Cf. a second account below. In general it is said that dhyana 2 eliminates concept and ar concentrated joy, and 4 bliss, leaving several other factors such as those named.

. in the god realms.
. The Ornament of Clear Realization.
. Compendium of the Perfection of Knowledge.
. The main objection seems to be not frivolity but possibly misleading people.
. Treasury of the Clear Presentation of Dharmas.
. cf. {'bras bu lnga} - rgyu mthun gyi 'bras bu dang, bdag po'i 'bras bu dang, skyes bu byed dang, rnam smin gyi 'bras bu dang, bral ba'i 'bras bu ste lnga'o,//.
the five fruitions are the fruition according with the cause, dominant fruition, being-producing fruition of ripening, and fruition of separation. The last applies only to good actions.
. Guenther has 2 extra lines p 62.
. Son of Champion Wealth.
. Going to Ceylon
. When these relative virtues are practiced in the absence of prajña.
. Empty continuity? It could also mean thousand tantras.
. Dharmakaya
. Rupakaya.
. Their true enlightened nature
. Or a statue in a clay mold.
. 1 Passion, 2 aggression, and 3 ignorance; 4 all acting or as 5 imprint;
That to be abandoned by 6 seeing and 7 meditation;
The higher bhumis relatively 8 impure and 9 pure. This summarizes the relationship of the examples to the defilement removed and the level of the path on which the removal occurs.

. This can also be read as saying that there are further rag-like obscurations to be abandor the path of meditation of the second to sixth bhumis. It can be read as saying that this is do analytic meditation which establishes universal lack of true existence and self-nature. Longchenpa r
as saying that is nihilism which rejects the wisdom of sugatagarbha. Mipham's Lions Roar that is a good source for sorting out the issues involved.

. cf. UT page 40.
. kha myag. It affects the mother too.
. gzhan dbang VCTR.
. 6 paramitas and compassion.
. The glossary to the Rain of Wisdom q.v. says they are like the seven aspects of supreme natureless, filled with the wisdom of bliss-emptiness, possessing changeless mahasukha, th
enjoyments
without suffering, their changeless wisdom bliss is uninterrupted, they are filled with the grea

Taming others in all the times and directions they have continuity.
. ES lists a The Arya-subhapariprcha-nama-tantra Good Army Tantra dpung bzangs kyi md

. mgron, also entertainments, festivities, invitation as a guest
. The five powers and faculties of a buddha.
. karma.
. That accomplishes wishes.
. River of ashes and boiling water in the fourth supplementary hell.
. stong can mean either, and both work in context.
. dpyod here is on the level of direct comprehension.
. mhkhen po, upadhyaya. Learned one, teacher, preceptor. This is the way the teacher is hinayana, as opposed to the guru of vajrayana
. BCV ci nas ting 'dzin brtson pa ni As for trying to keep samadhi in every way
com ci nas rtse cig sems kyis ni
==========
bdag gi yod 'di gar /spyod/dpyod ces.//think "where is mind

. com srog la bab kyang srung shig ces BCV thams cad 'bad pas...with every effort.

. spyan lnga BVC spyan sna before their eyes.
. bcv rnam comm rnams: pronunciation and meaning the same.
. com chags pa bcv chags par
. bvc sa rko rtsa com sa brko rtswa. no difference pronunciation and meaning.
. bcv dor com btang. Can be synonymous, but might not.
. bcv brtan pas com par. No difference in meaning.
. bav 'am or com dang and.
. slu sems bcv bslu sems. No difference in pronunciation or meaning.

. comm 'gyod BCV 'gyed: no difference in meaning.
. com yid ni brtan por. bcv de ni brtan par referring back to another "yid." Same meaning.
. bcv brtan stable, trustworthy com brten: supporting, trustworthy.
. bcv bcas dang com dang bcas. No difference in meaning.
. bcv yid 'di this mind com yid ni, as for mind. No real difference in meaning.
. com sprul zhing nga rgyal med pa ni: Without emanation and pride: Error. A plausible cop bcv
sprul pa bzhin du nga med par.
. bsngo. The same word is used for dedication the merit.
. Something like eight stupas or eighth stupa.
. Sa skya = place having white earth, lime, or chalk.
. = child or fool listening.
. dgrar bcas = with enemies.
. This story ifs the subject of the Gandavyuha Sutra.
. <Going to refuge in them is causal refuge.>
. Body, speech, and mind.
. {gsung rab yan lag bcu gnyis} - twelve divisions of the teachings. 1) {mdo 'i sde}. = genera
2) {dbyangs kyis bsnyad pa'i sde}. = hymns and praises. 3) {lung du bstan pa'i sde}. = prophec bcad pa'i sde}. = teaching in verse. 5) {ched du brjod pa'i sde}. = aphorisms. 6) {gleng gzhi'i sde}.
narratives. 7) {rtogs pa brjod pa'i sde}. = biographical narratives. 8) {de sta bu byung ba'i sd narratives of former events as examples. 9) {skyes pa'i rabs kyi sde}. = {jatakam} narratives of former birt rgyas pa'i sde}. = extensive teachings. 11) {rmad du byung ba'i sde}. = narratives of marvels. 12) { pa'i sde}.
= teachings in profound doctrines.

mdo sde dbyangs bsnyan lung bstan tshigs su bcad ched brjod rtogs pa brjod dang de ltar byung gleng gshi shin tu rgyas dang skyes rabs bcas.
gtan phab rmad du byung ba'i sde rnams so Sutra and geya vy_kara_a and g_th_,
Ud_na and nid_na, avad_na and ityukta,
Jataka vaipulya, adbhuta[dharma], and upadesha.

. {dge bsnyen} - layman, lay devotees, virtue obtained, people with the five precepts [not to lie, not to steal, not to take intoxicants, not to engage in sexual misconduct], [upasika]. The five to b for laymen, lay-vows. see also under renunciate and layman {dge tshul} - novice, novice monk, novitiate . those five with the addition of afternoon food, singing and the wearing of ornamen

be renounced by novices {dge slong} - fully ordained monk with 250 precepts, --ma nun with 3

. Like buddha family.
. The Tibetan for "jewel" in this case literally means "rare and excellent."
. The new transmission schools call the inner tantras anuttara yoga, and say that it has wit mother,
and non-dual tantras, eg. Hevajra, Chakrasamvara, and Kalachakra. The nyingmas usually mahayoga are two more vehicles, anuyoga and ati yoga. This passage has been phrased t . gzungs can also mean to the power of retentiveness of what is learned on all levels. G: sp sustenance
. {kun tu sbyor ba gsum} - the three fetters. 1) {'jig lta} = {'jig tshogs la lta ba} -view of a transitory collection, futile view, perishable view. - satkaryadrsti futile view, wrong view believing in the and mine in the many impermanent, perishable entities included within the five perpetuating skandhas belief in the transitory collection, parikalpitasatkagadrsti, intellectual futile view. 2) {tshul brtul mchog
-holding a discipline as paramount. 3) {the tshom nyon mongs can} -possessing the klesha of doubt.]

. {rgyal srid rin chen sna bdun} - the seven precious royal possessions. 1) {'khor lo} -, {rtsib
-1000
spoked wheel. 2) {nor bu} -, {yid bzhin nor} -wish-fulfilling gem. 3) {btsun mo} -queen 4) {glan
-,
{khyu mchog glang} herd-leader or bull elephant. 5) {rta mchog} excellent horse - 6) {khyim

{dmag dpon} -general.

. {'dod lha drug} - the six kinds of desire gods/ gods in the realm of desire, [{rgyal chen bzh rtsa gsum pa} - {'thab bral} - {dga' ldan} - {'phrul dga'} - {gzhan 'phrul dbang byed} {'phrul dga'} -
in creation, the Nirmanarati devas, delight in emanation, one of the 28 classes of gods in the 'd realm.

. {gzhan 'phrul dbang byed} - constantly enjoying pleasures provided, one of the 28 classes desire realm, land of controlling other's emanations, the Paranirmitavasavartin gods, Heaven others's emanations, the 6th heaven in the realm of desire gods.

. Youth, prince.
. Lord of third and highest first dhyana realm.
. bsam pa dag pa bcu. The following may or may not be the same: As for the ten purities, virtue, 4-6) study, 7) the path, 8) knowing what is not the path, 9) the thirty-seven factors o enlightenment chos sum bcu bdun and 10) producing the ripeness of sentient beings. The first two are counted body,
speech and mind.

. Dharma, meaning definitions, and brilliant confidence.
. the eighth bhumi.
. This and "at the end above: rgyun mthar.
. The four dhyanas, four formless attainments, and samapatti of cessation.
. Or forgotten.
. These are buddha qualities.
. sprul sku gsum, bzo ba'i sprul sku, skye b'i sprul sku, mchog gi sprul sku. OR skye ba'i s mchog gi sprul sku OR sna tshogs sprul sku; 'gro 'dul sprul sku and rang bzhin sprul sku: The working tülkus are gifted individuals, artists, craftsmen, scientists etc who so benefit beings. The born or tamin
the rinpoches usually called tülkus, who have taken human birth in order to tame beings by the supreme tülku is the Buddha.

. Here, as in the name of the Gyalwa Karmapa, karma is synonymous with buddha activity.
. {nges par 'byed pa'i cha dang mthun pa bzhi}: {drod} {rtse mo} {bzod pa}{'jig rten pa'i cho
. {dad pa gsum} - ES Three Faiths. Sincere faith {dang ba'i dad pa}. conviction {yid ches pa irreversible devotion {phyir mi ldog pa'i dad pa}. the three kinds of faith. inspired, aspiring, an faith [or confidence]

{dad pa} - Faith, as one of the eleven virtuous mental states, devotion, to have/ feel faith, to to believe,
willingness to participate. yid ches pa dang/ dang ba dang/ 'dod pa gsum -

Another list in Tilopa biography:

By means of the ten causes, two types of faith arise: outer faith and inner faith. There are th outer faith:
faith of faith, faith of desire and faith of trust.
The object that gives rise to the faith of faith is the three jewels. The object that gives rise to faith of desire is the four truths...[details omitted]... relying on samsara and nirvana, knowing what to what to reject are the essence of the faith of desire. The object that gives rise to the faith of trust is virtuous and evil deeds. Do not make white actions the ground of all dharmas.
Inner faith also has three aspects. The first: the object of the faith of faith is the holy guru wh authentic embodiment of all places of refuge. The second, the faith of desire, is the desire t the holy guru and one's own mind be inseparable. It is the desire to mix together the guru's mind and all times, day and night. The third is the faith of trust: One should attain confidence in the know realization that the body, speech, and mind of the guru and one's own body, speech, and mi
. Who is the true spiritual friend, [cut for meter.]
. bde ba or virtue.
. good, evil, and neutral. Cut for meter.
. An onion is good western equivalent.
. Variant: commentary has “ give credence to complexities.”

. dam pa gnyis.
. good, evil, and neutral. Cut for meter.
. An onion is good western equivalent.
. Variant: commentary has “ give credence to complexities.”

. dam pa gnyis.
. There are some problems with section headings in this chapter not being of the number c
. The commentary says nine.

. gsang ba bsam gyi mi khyab pa'i mdo.
. most translations say something like "reflected on this."
. phyung: give remove reveal, draw out.
. dga' byed, joy producer. Sanskrit equivalents are Rama or Nanda.
. Supreme among those who possess glorious [buddha] qualities.
. The text here says de dag, "they," but otherwise only one seems to be mentioned.
. among the animals
. A class of pretas.
. Gold, silver, turquoise, coral, pearl, emerald, sapphire.
. I like what HVG did with this one . Kettle-drum style.
. I.e. the Buddha.
. Attaining the first bhumi, supremely joyful.
. Subject, action, and object of an action. Has other meanings in other contexts.

. Can also mean non-conceptuality, non-perception, imagelessness.
. True, absolute, ultimate. Below, three excellencies = ^_____^
. Can also mean dyer, and that would be the most likely meaning for these words in isolatio not seem to be the most likely meaning in this case. Of course this is using the root verses to explain the commentary.
. This seems to correspond in a general way to Chapter 51 of Cleary's translation pp. 328 f differences in detail
. Where the previous passage is more like a summary this is a particular verse on p 339 of

Look at Sudhana, son of compassion and love, universally kind;
Welcome tranquil eyes, do not flag in practice.
. Next verse. The differences here seem to come from differences in translation in differen
. The same also means kindness.
. P. 349 Cleary
. Cf. Cleary p. 350. This is summary.
. Trungpa Rinpoche had a catchy quote that might be a variant on, this something like:

Like swarming bees on honey or flies on rotten meat
Creating an all consuming power of effort
We shall gain supreme enlightenment.
. de kho
. One of the four scriptures of the Vinaya.
. Shantideva says dpung. Longchenpa glosses this as dpung tshogs: troops. Ie it is a met evil.

. grel chen substitutes 'dun pa "aspiration.
. In a good sense, so that one is steadfast and confident.
. Situation, conditions, specific application.
. [[always exert yourselves to guard]]
. read srog shing.
. gong nas gong du literally means higher and higher. This is thog med bzang po's reading translations have eg "generosity is highest than others."
. It is conceivable than inanimate things are meant.
. The Triskhanda Sutra, in ed. Bereford Mahayana Purification Practices, Library of Tibetar Archives Dharamsala, 1978
. nga pa.
. {'phags pa'i nor bdun} - the seven aryan riches/ faith, discipline, generosity, learning, deco modesty, and knowledge, knowledge/ intelligence.
. {ldem por dgongs pa rnam bzhi} - Four Kinds of Covert Intention . The covert intention wit entry into the teaching {gzhugs pa la ldem por dgongs pa}. or avatarabhisandhi., in respect of characteristics {mtshan nyid la ldem por dgo lakshanabhisandhi., in respect of antidotes {gnyen po la ldem por dgongs pa. or pratipak_h_bhisandhi., and in respect of interpretation {bsgyur ba dgongs pa}. or pari__man_bhisandhi. Refer to Fundamentals, Pt.3, [GD-MK]
. Do my message.
. longs spyod: often enjoyment, but that is too fruition oriented for this case.
. Aggressive actions etc.
. pratimoksha, so so thar pa.
. cho ga, spyod yul.
. Although this is seemingly contradicted by common experience, strictly speaking it shoulc when the karma connected to harm has been worked through, no further harm will take place.
. ^___ ____ ___^ seem =.
. yung drung.
. The ninth dhyana is then called the "peak of samsara."
. rdza: substance.
. mthong ba'i chos la bde bar gnas pa'i bsam gtan. ES. [sder gnas read bder gnas]
. bsam gtan.
. dga' bde. bde is frequently translated bliss.
. nyer bsdogs

. bor rtog. read brtag pa. Guenther has an interesting discussion in PPA 49ff suggesting t usage (used by the schools who most emphasize this meditation) is a little different than this, drawn from the Bodhisattvabhumi of Asanga. He sa former brtag pa, vitarka, combines notions of examining, positing, forming the basis of judgement and introducing new contents to the mi vichara, involves sustained analysis. In this case the contrast is not between greater and lesser degrees of conceptuality in cognition.
. dpyod pa. Rtog dpyod: conception and discernment, ideas and scrutiny.

. yid la byed pa.
. shed.
. <virtuous>.
. <This is made to manifest.>
. <of training.>
.[tribal or common].
. rngam glog is also the name of a deity.
. This can also be a name for Mount Meru, which has sides of precious substances.
. bldad pa.
. sbubs.
. <Various>. See chos dpal rgya mtsho's commentary for details. .
. Lord of the mandala, Vairochana and his consort Akashadhatvishvari.
. dran rig.
. Snying po'i don la blang 'dor med pa'i phyir, could mean because within ultimate sugatag nothing to accept or reject, etc, but that seems less clear.
. grags shing gnas, OR exist and are known by talked about in sounds of speech.
. bkod, also as “display” just above.
. Ordinary meanings and communication seem to become a universal display of teachings.
a certain point on the path this may be intense enough to become a sense of being haunted
. Here the essence of the concepts of ordinary understanding, rig pa is transparently seen the ati sense, insight-wisdom beyond concept. Longchenpa takes pains to point out that the differe
and saying conceptual mind is Buddha is as great as that between heaven and earth. This sort
the VCTR translation of rig pa as insight—which is both ordinary and extraordinary.
. ...Three mandalas.
. rdzogs. This is similar to emptiness/luminosity.
. gshags.

. The net of nadis and prana, which when mastered gives mastery of the network of interde
. bdegs = btegs
. don snod. With intensified neurosis or psychosis one becomes like a broken vessel that c teachings.
. chagya nyi is two mudras, jor might be union, application, or wealth.
. tana gana = sbyor sgrol, union and liberation. Liberation sometimes = killing. The other a consuming intoxicants in feast practice. These five are the negation of the five precepts of g which often accompany refuge vows for lay disciples.
. The five amritas substituting human flesh for brains.
. bud med kun usually means "all women.
. This suggests, but doesn't actually say live 5,000 years.
. rang snang.
. Kayas and amritas.
. This could mean that their seed syllables or symbolic emblems are on the spokes, a not i
of sadhanas, and perhaps of another version of this practice. However the visualization as des
that the wheel arises from H__ and that from it come ten seats marked with the same syllable.
. Sambhogakaya
. Beams over the main shrine area that protrude.
. phibs.
. pu shu.
. {lda ldi} - silk tongues tied together at the upper end in garlands ste a particular kind of o hung on house tops, fringe or tassel, string of beads or flowers, cloth wreath.
. [also name of deity] , Deje Tsegpa.
. The roof structure over the square.
. tsong tsong.
. bsil ba dang, zhim pa, yang ba, 'jam pa, dvangs pa, dri ma med pa, lto la mi gnod pa, mgrin pa la mi gnod pa bcas yon tan sna brgyad dang ldan pa'i chu bzang.

. sometimes also azure
. Guenther says: 1" of light.
. tshon gang as above.
. Lapis lazuli.
. pi wang

. <of skillful means>.
. 'byung ba.
.
. Like "sphere" in English it doesn't mean something technical like chakra but just the place happens.
. noose.
. Confused dualistic appearance.
. Skyes pa: might mean person, birth, or object of arising. The overall point would be the s
. This split in time distinguishes the terminology from the more common use of the same w Longchenpa and others, to refer to the simultaneous split of non-dual vision into the duality object.
. gzig pa. Leopard. Presumably for gzigs: usually honorific for see or realize. Perhaps just

. Ma dros pa: Lake Manasvowar which never gets warm.
. dam pa as in don dam pa.
. 'gro, going cal also mean beings.
. <and six lokas.>
. As opposed to the pure fruition approach where it is said that primordially here is nothing
. Another pen name of Longchenpa, "Spotless Rays of Light."
. rang mtshan: individualizing characteristics.
. Datura contains alkaloids like scopolamine which can be dangerously toxic.
. spyod: Including realization and activity
. spyod bsdus (sgron ma?).
. it is logically possible to read the last as a general characteristic of all the others, though i there is nothing in the grammar to encourage this.
. khams 'dus.
. Ripples in the air, transitory light forms on a wall, mirages optical illusions.
. dmigs can mean perceived, conceived, imagined, or taken as an object of attention. All a in fact are related in the way we deal with objects.
. of an individual and of dharma.
. Also Saraha.
. rtog pa. Thought or conception. But like dmigs pa, it is commonly used to refer to any co samsaric perception.
. blo bde.
. This is discussed in hinayana texts like Buddhagosha's Path of Purification.
. Source of proliferation, [of dharmas] ^____^ has negative connotation like the spread of fi space is still a non-thing dharma.

. Usually neither perception not non-perception.
. The nine dhyanas have a particular focus, so they are to that extent consciousness rather without reference point. But that consciousness does have a sense of border--like the phenomena around a black hole.
. VCTR 73, p 63, 3rd is effort. The point is still emptiness of mind, but rather than analytica illusion-like emptiness, spontaneous presence and activity is emphasized.
. 'dun dang 'bad rtsol brtson 'grus bzhis: Guenther: willingness, eagerness, resoluteness, p
. sems = bsam thought or mind = contemplation; and mindfulness = exertion VCTR
. Second time.
. thog bsring ES
. cho ga.
. Poisonous cucumber causing thirst and then death.
. They don't fit the list in the root verses. E.g. malice and desire are not mentioned at all th
. yid la byed pa bcu gcig.
. What yogachara calls bon-duality, madhyamaka calls non-true existence.
. rang rig.
. dmigs
. the moon, with its rabbit's image.

72

71

The Great Perfection, The Nature of Mind, The Easier of Weariness 1

http://www.tipitaka.fr/index.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/tipitaka.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vipassana.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/alphabet.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sects.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/glossaire.html http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/vinaya.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/mahavagga.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/mahavagga/mv1-1.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/mahavagga/mv1-2.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/mahavagga/mv1-3.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/mahavagga/mv1-4.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/mahavagga/mv1-5.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/vinaya/mahavagga/mv1-6.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/sutta.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/digha.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/digha/dn01.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/digha/dn31.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn012.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn019.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn022.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn027.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn036.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn044.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn051.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn054.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn060.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn074.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn075.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn082.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn086.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn107.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn128.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn129.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn140.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/majjhima/mn152.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-012.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-025.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-038.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-059.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-063.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn01-038.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn02-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn02-018.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn02-025.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn02-026.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-015.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-017.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn03-025.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn04-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn04-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn04-019.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn04-021.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-008.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn05-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn06-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn06-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn06-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn06-015.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn07-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn07-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn07-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn07-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn07-014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn08-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn08-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn08-012.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn09-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn09-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn09-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn09-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn09-014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn10-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn10-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn10-012.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn11-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn11-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn11-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/sagatha/sn11-021.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-015.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-017.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-019.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-020.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-023.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-025.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-038.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-052.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-061.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-063.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-064.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-065.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn12-067.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn13-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn14-016.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn14-027.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn14-035.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn14-036.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn15-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn15-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn15-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn15-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn15-012.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn15-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn15-014-9.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn16-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn16-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn16-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn16-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn17-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn17-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn17-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn17-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn18-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn18-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn18-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn18-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn18-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn19-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn20-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn21-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn21-003.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/nidana/sn21-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-022.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-033.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-043.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-053.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-054.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-056.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-057.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-058.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-059.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-079.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-083.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-087.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-089.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn22-095.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn23-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn23-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn23-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn23-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn24-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn24-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn25-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn26-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn27-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn28-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn29-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn29-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn29-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn30-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn30-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn30-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn31-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn31-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn32-001.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn32-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn32-053.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn33-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn33-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/khandha/sn34-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-020.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-023.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-024.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-028.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-053.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-060.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-063.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-080.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-082.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-088.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-097.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-099.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-100.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-127.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-136.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-230.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-232.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-240.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-246.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn35-247.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-015.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-019.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-021.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn36-031.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn37-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn37-034.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn38-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn38-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn38-014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn38-016.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn39-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn39-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn39-012.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn39-016.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn40-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn41-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn41-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn42-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn43-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn44-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn44-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/salayatana/sn44-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-091.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-103.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-115.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-127.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-139.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-149.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-150.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-152.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-157.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-160.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-172.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-173.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-174.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-175.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn45-176.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn46-051.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn46-053.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn46-054.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn46-055.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-019.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-020.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-035.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-037.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn47-040.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn48-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn48-038.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn48-044.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn48-054.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn48-056.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn51-015.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn51-020.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn52-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn54-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn54-008.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn54-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn55-016.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn55-021.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn55-022.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn55-024.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn55-030.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn55-031.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn55-040.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn56-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn56-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn56-022.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn56-031.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn56-035.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn56-045.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/samyutta/maha/sn56-048.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-011-020.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-021-030.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-045-046.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-062-065.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-076-080.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-082-097.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-188-267.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-298-307.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-308-321.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/01/an01-563-599.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/02/an02-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/02/an02-032.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/02/an02-034.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/02/an02-038.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/02/an02-039.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/02/an02-119-127.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/02/an02-201.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-015.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-022.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-034.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-035.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-039.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-040.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-045.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-047-8.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-052.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-053.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-055.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-061.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-062.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-065.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-068.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-069.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-071.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-078.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-079.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-083.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-091.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-101.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-102.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-103.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-104.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/03/an03-130.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-033.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-034.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-037.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-041.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-042.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-045.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-049.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-063.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-073.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-077.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-094.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-095.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-111.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-113.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-115.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-123.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-162.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-165.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-182.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-183.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-184.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-190.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-192.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-197.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-199.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-235.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-252.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/04/an04-255.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-028.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-030.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-031.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-034.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-036.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-043.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-056.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-073.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-114.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-144.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-159.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-161.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-162.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-176.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-180.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-190.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-196.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-198.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-254.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-256.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/05/an05-264.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-012.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-019.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-023.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-036.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-045.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-050.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-052.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-055.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-063.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-066.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-076.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-077.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-096.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-097.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-102.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-103.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/06/an06-104.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-049.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-050.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-051.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-061.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-062.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-064.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-071.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/07/an07-074.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-009.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-013.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-017-18.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-019.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-021.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-026.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-030.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-035.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-039.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/08/an08-074.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-003.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-005.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-007.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-011.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-014.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-015.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-016.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-023.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-036.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-040.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-041.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-042.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-062.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-063.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/09/an09-064.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-002.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-006.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-020.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-021.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-022.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-029.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-030.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-048.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-053.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-058.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-059.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-061.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-062.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-072.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-076.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-094.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-095.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-104.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/10/an10-219.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/anguttara/11/an11-016.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp01.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp02.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp03.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp04.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp05.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp06.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp07.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp08.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp09.html

http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp10.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp11.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp12.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp13.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp14.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp15.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp16.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp17.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp18.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp19.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp20.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp21.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp22.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/dhammapada/dhp23.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/suttanipata.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/suttanipata/snp04-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/udana.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/udana/ud03-010.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/udana/ud05-001.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/udana/ud07-004.html
http://www.tipitaka.fr/sutta/khuddaka/udana/ud07-009.html

ÉÍÍÍ

mindful of the social and economic well-being of the masses and always wished by his advice to alleviate the misery of the people, and see that they lived without too much unhappiness. It is true that real happiness is derived from a life of purity and peace; but it is obvious that without a certain degree of material and economic security no moral and spiritual progress can be achieved.

So far as a monk is concerned there are four requisites for progress on the path to purity and freedom. They are robes, food, a lodging and medicine. These are the bare necessities without which no human being can live. Basically they are also the fundamental needs of a layperson. Although the Buddha did not attach much importance to material progress in the modern sense, nor to mundane welfare, he did not entirely ignore it, because it is the basis for humans' mental or spiritual progress as pointed out above.

The Buddha was very outspoken with regard to certain aspects of material conditions and social welfare. So it is not right to say that Buddhism is interested only in lofty ideals and that it ignores the social and economic welfare of people. As the discourses like Mangala, Vyagghapajja and Sigala clearly indicate, the Buddha looked at life as a whole, in all its religious, social, economic and political aspects.

The code of conduct set forth by the Buddha is no mere negative prohibition but an affirmation of doing good - a career paved with good intentions for the welfare and happiness of all humankind. These moral principles aim at making society secure by promoting unity, harmony and right relations among people.

No human can live in isolation, we are dependent on one another. We must learn to live together in concord and amity, without quarrels, in harmony and unison, regarding others with gentle looks of loving-kindness, instead of the fierce glare of unfriendliness, and bring together those at variance and encourage those already in union.

Knowing that true social service could bring about such wholesome results, the Buddha instructed and encouraged people to be of help to themselves and to others. In Buddhism to protect oneself is not egoism or love of self, not selfish security, but self-discipline and self-training. To the extent that we are morally and mentally strong and confident, so can we help others. Altruism, as a principle of action, is based on our character and mental development. One must train, must guard oneself to be of service to others. A person may be large-hearted, sociable and ready to succour others, but if their private life is questionable, and leads to no good, from the standpoint of the Buddha they neglect themselves very badly and really cannot serve others; they are not a real helper of society.

In the Sigala Sutta, the discourse to the young man named Sigala, the Buddha's doctrine of love and good-will between humans is set forth in a domestic and social ethics. The sixty-one duties enumerated in this discourse speak in no uncertain terms of the moral obligation and social service of every individual in society. These are reciprocal duties to be performed by parents, teachers, husband and wife, children, friends, relatives, neighbours, servants, workers and employees and religious men.

It is stated categorically that the king should rule righteously and not unrighteously. Never resting on his laurels, the king or ruler is expected to be kind and dutiful to his subjects like a benevolent father to his children. In order to be just, honest and upright to all without partiality or favouritism the ruler is expected to avoid the four wrong ways of treating people: that is with desire, anger, fear and delusion. In this respect, Asoka the Great of India, may be regarded as one of the most just, wise and benevolent rulers of all time. This is shown by his edicts:

> "All men are my children."
>
> "Just as I want my children to enjoy all prosperity and happiness in this life and the next, so I want the same for all men. The world should be comforted by me. From me the world should receive happiness and not sorrow."
>
> "There is no duty higher than to promote the happiness of the whole world".

If we carefully study the history of Sri Lanka, we find that those rulers who were aware of the admonitions of the Buddha, ever endeavoured to lead a righteous life, and guided people both morally and economically.

All our social service, our progress, economic or otherwise, should be just and righteous and not devoid of //Dharma//, law or truth, not at the cost of moral and spiritual values.

As the Buddha so clearly pointed out, //Karuna//, compassion, is the virtue that urges man to engage in all social work, working for the good of others. If you remove //Karuna// from the teaching of the Buddha, you remove the heart of Buddhism; for all virtues, all goodness and righteousness have //Karuna// as their basis, as their matrix.

The whole dispensation of the Master is permeated with that salient quality of Universal Loving Compassion, //Karuna//.

Compassion is surely not a flabby state of mind. It is a strong enduring thing. When a person is in distress, it is the truly compassionate man's heart that trembles.

Through love one adds to the fund of human happiness, one makes the world brighter, nobler and purer and prepares it for the good life better than in any other way.

If one has developed a love that is truly great, rid of the desire to hold and to possess, that strong clean love which is untarnished with lust of any kind, that love which does not expect material advantage and profit from the act of loving, that love which is firm but not grasping, unshakeable but not tied down, gentle and settled, hard and penetrating as a diamond but unhurting, helpful but not interfering, cool but invigorating, giving more than taking, not proud but dignified, not sloppy yet soft, the love that leads one to the heights of clean achievement, then in such a one can there be no ill-will at all and he is the true social worker in the eminent sense of the term.

So serve to be perfect. Be perfect to serve.

<end of file>

A SELECTION OF SHWE OO MIN SAYADAW'S TEACHINGS

? Without awareness, there can be no wisdom and life becomes meaningless.
Only with awareness is there wisdom, then life becomes fulfilling.
? Don't miss the precious opportunity to raise your children well.
Only a well-adjusted child grows into a well-adjusted adult.
And it is a well-adjusted adult who will contribute positively to society.
? Be vigilant. Live mindfully.
Two instructions of the Buddha.
The persistent use of Sati is the way to attain Nibbana.
? You may have good Kamma,
But succumb to laziness and life cannot be fulfilling.
You may be intelligent,
But succumb to laziness and success will elude you.
? If you do your job properly and I do mine, what's there to say?
? If you seek a happy life, always be aware.
When you maintain awareness,
The mind remains clear and happiness abounds.
? If you don't forget to be aware - Nibbana.
If you do forget - the grave.
Appamada means not forgetting. We remember to be aware in order to develop wholesome qualities. This leads beyond death, to the Deathless.
Pamada means forgetting. We forget to live a wholesome life and this leads to death - again, again and again.
So don't forget to be aware of what you say and do - always.
? There are three ways of knowing the Buddha / the Truth :
To see with the eyes,
To reflect through imagination,
To understand with wisdom.
We must learn to appreciate the value of wisdom
Only then do we really understand the Dhamma
Only then do we really know the Buddha.
? Examine your mind!
If there is any kind of suffering, the cause is your own doing.
? Defilements of the mind can arise with every sense contact.
Nothing less than constant and persistent awareness will prevent their taking hold.
? Maturity is not a title others can give you,
True maturity of heart and mind is achieved through growth and development.

? The Sasana depends on those with a noble heart, well-versed in the Teachings of the Buddha, who have Sila, Samadhi and Pañña.
Only then, with patience and perseverance, can someone effectively serve the Sasana.
? We meditate to develop Right View.
This cannot be achieved by the ego; meditation must proceed naturally by watching any experience just as it is.
This is the way to develop Right View.
? Attakilamathanuyoga (indulgence in pain, self-mortification) and Kamasukhallikanuyoga (indulgence in pleasure, self-indulgence) are the two extremes from which we must free ourselves.
When we are free from one extreme, we tend to get caught in the other.
2
Only with awareness and Wisdom can we find the Middle Way (Majjhima Patipada).
Be aware until the light of wisdom appears!
? We need to have a good heart and the right attitude in every situation.
If others are right, be happy for them.
If others are wrong, have sympathy for their misfortune and give them what help you can.
Then there will be harmony.
? Old age, death and separation are unavoidable.
Kamma (action) determines your future.
Only Ñan?a (wisdom) can set you free.
? People in this country buy fish, birds and other captive animals to release them to make merit.
Sometimes their aspiration is less than wonderful: “I release you once, may I be released ten times.” But wishing to be released implies being reborn – is this a good deal?
A better aspiration would be: “Just as this creature has become free from certain death, may this deed support me that I may become free from old age, sickness and death.”
? Have you ever watched an angry person? A jealous person? A conceited person? Do you see the madness? The Buddha said “puthujjano ummattako”, “ordinary worldlings are mad” meaning ordinary worldlings are crazed because they are being burned by the fires of defilements
? Thinking “If you’re good then I’ll be good” actually implies “If you’re not good, I will be bad”. This is really a frightful attitude.
A truly virtuous person is one who remains virtuous regardless of how others behave.
? What is it in your life that you are relying on?
Psychics? Gods? Rites and rituals? Astrology? Lucky charms?
Remember, it is actually only Kusala Kamma (wholesome action) that we can rely on.
? Belief in lucky days and unlucky days is just superstition.

But it is truly lucky if we can spend the day full of Right Thought, Right Speech and Right Action.
And it is really unfortunate to spend the day full of Wrong Thought, Wrong Speech and Wrong Action.
Remember this!
? Practising Satipa????hana weakens the kilesas.
When dosa arises, stay aware of it and it won't last long.
When lobha arises, stay aware of it and it won't get what it wants.
This is how the kilesas are weakened.
? There are three Pa??i words, 3 A's, that are helpful to remember:
Alobha, Adosa, Amoha.
Alobha is the opposite of lobha which is being stingy, not wanting to give. If you can remove greed for even one moment, that's alobha.
Adosa is the opposite of dosa which is getting frustrated or dissatisfied when you don't get what you want.
If you don't want to have dosa, develop metta.
When there's no dosa, that's adosa.
Amoha is the opposite of moha which does not know when there is anger and greed.
To eradicate moha we have to keep a good hold on Sati.
sayadawutejaniya.org

The last A, Amoha comes only with mindfulness and wisdom.
? People lose even a little bit of money and Oh! How they cry!
How about the billions of kusala they are losing every second?
Nobody knows to cry over that.
? In the world, auditors go from office to office checking accounts to see that they balance.
But don't just monitor the business accounts; monitor your thoughts, words and actions.
In balance, is your conduct more wholesome or unwholesome?
3
Every day it is important to audit your conduct.
? Being vegetarian or eating raw food (food untouched by fire) doesn't mean the fires of defilements aren't touching you. It isn't the food itself that determines if there is any defilement.
To be free from the burning of defilements while eating requires mindfulness and wisdom.
That is what matters.
? Now, while you have the opportunity, it is important to build a strong practice.
In times of adversity we will regret it if we aren't adequately prepared.
Therefore we must practise now while conditions are favourable.

? The Sasana is the Teachings of the Buddha.
Purifying speech & action is the Teachings of Sila, Purifying the mind, learning to quell anxieties and grief, is the Teachings of Samadhi, Purifying our View is the Teachings of Pañña.
Only when these Teachings become our own experience, will we truly be well, happy and free from danger
? The quality of your understanding of the Dhamma cannot be measured by others.
You have to actually practise the Dhamma and develop your own wisdom to see the Truth for yourself. You can't experience the Dhamma through reading or listening to others.
Try it now and you will understand now. Ask yourself "Is the mind pure or not?" Just look.
Every moment of awareness is a moment of purity.
? If we are attached to having only good experiences in meditation then bad experiences tend to come. If we are averse to bad experiences, good experiences tend not to happen.
Meditation is knowing how to simply watch the experience, whether it be good or bad. If we can watch like this, we will realise that things are simply the way they are; there is no inherent good or bad.
Our responsibility is merely to acknowledge whatever we are experiencing.

RIGHT SPEECH - BUDDHA'S WORDS

from the Sama~n~naphala Sutta - Digha Nikaya 2
(The Fruits of the Contemplative Life)

For free distribution only, as a gift of Dhamma

"Abandoning false speech, he abstains from false speech. He speaks the truth, holds to the truth, is firm, reliable, no deceiver of the world. This, too, is part of his virtue.

"Abandoning divisive speech he abstains from divisive speech. What he has heard here he does not tell there to break those people apart from these people here. What he has heard there he does not tell here to break these people apart from those people there. Thus reconciling those who have broken apart or cementing those who are united, he loves concord, delights in concord, enjoys concord, speaks things that create concord. This, too, is part of his virtue.

"Abandoning abusive speech, he abstains from abusive speech. He speaks words that are soothing to the ear, that are affectionate, that go to the heart, that are polite, appealing and pleasing to people at large. This, too, is part of his virtue.

"Abandoning idle chatter, he abstains from idle chatter. He speaks in season, speaks what is factual, what is in accordance with the goal, the Dhamma, and the Vinaya. He speaks words worth treasuring, seasonable, reasonable, circumscribed, connected with the goal. This, too, is part of his virtue.

Revised: Sat 16 October 1999
http://www.accesstoinsight.org/canon/digha/dn2.html

<!-- vvvv

<!-- vvvv

<!-- vvvv

<!-- vvvv

<!-- vvvv

<!-- vvvv

THE SINGALOVADA SUTTANTA

®MDNM¯

1. Thus have I heard.

At one time the Blessed one was dwelling near Rajagaha, in the bamboo-grove where the squirrels are fed. In due course,

Singala the householder's son, having risen early and left the city, his clothes and hair streaming wet, raised his hands in salute and veneration to the various directions: to the east, south, west, north, below and above.

2. Just that morning, the Blessed one, having dressed and taken his bowl and robe, went towards Rajagaha on his alms-round. The Blessed one saw

Singala who, having risen early and left the city, his clothes and hair streaming wet, was raising his hands in salute and veneration to the various directions: to the east, south, west, north, below and above.

Having seen Singala the householder's son, the Blessed one said: "Why, o householder's son, do you, having risen early and left the city, your clothes and hair streaming wet, raise your hands in salute and veneration to the various directions: to the east, south, west, north, below and above?"

"My father, when he was dying, told me; `dear one, I wish you would venerate the directions'. Indeed then, sir, I, holding my father's words in honour, respect, reverence and worship, having risen early and left the city, my clothes and hair streaming wet, raise my hands in salute and veneration to the various directions: to the east, south, west, north, below and above".

"But, o householder's son, thus are the six directions not worshipped in the discipline of a noble one."

"How then, sir, are the six directions to be venerated in the discipline of a noble one? It would be to my benefit, sir, if the Blessed one would explain the teaching of how the six directions are to be venerated in the discipline of a noble one."

"Certainly, o householder's son, listen thoroughly and pay attention; I shall speak."

"Just so, sir" assented Singala the householder's son to the Blessed one. The Blessed one spoke as follows:

3. "O householder's son, it is through abandonment of four active defilements, non-performance of the four causes of evil, non-practicing of the six causes of loss of riches, that the noble disciple embraces the six directions, becomes a conqueror of both worlds, is established in this world and in the world beyond. At the dissolution of the body after death, he is reborn in a heavenly world.

What are the four active defilements which are to be abandoned?

(1) The defilement of taking life;

(2) The defilement of taking what is not given;

(3) The defilement of sensual misconduct;

(4) The defilement of false speech;

These, o householder's son, are the four active defilements that are abandoned."

Thus spoke the Lord.

4. After the Well-farer had spoken thus, the Teacher continued:

"Slaughtering life,

Taking with strife.

Speaking in lies,

Adulterous vice.

To these comes no praise

from those who are wise."

5. "Which are the four conditions of wrong actions from which one refrains?

(1) The practice of desire leads to the performing of evil actions.

(2) The practice of anger leads to the performing of evil actions.

(3) The practice of delusion leads to the performing of evil actions.

(4) The practice of fear leads to the performing of evil actions.

Since the Noble disciple, o householder's son, does not practice desire, does not practice anger, does not practice delusion and does not practice fear, he refrains from the four conditions of wrong actions."

Thus spoke the Lord.

6. After the Well-farer had spoken thus, the Teacher continued:

"Desire, anger, delusion, fear.

Ignore this lesson and soon,

One's authority so dear

Declines like the waning moon.

"Desire, anger, delusion, fear.

Heed this lesson and soon,

One's reputation so clear

Grows like the waxing moon."

7. "And what are the six causes of loss of wealth with which he does not associate himself? Indeed, o householder's son,

(1) Careless addiction to liquor and drugs is a cause of loss of wealth.

(2) Being about on the street at night is a cause of loss of wealth.

(3) Frequenting fairs is a cause of loss of wealth.

(4) Careless addiction to gambling is a cause of loss of wealth.

(5) Joining evil friends is a cause of loss of wealth.

(6) Being idle is a cause of loss of wealth.

8. Six indeed, o householder's son, are the dangers of careless addiction to liquor and drugs;

(1) Tangible loss of wealth;

(2) The breaking out of quarrels;

(3) The increase of diseases,

(4) Loss of reputation;

(5) Shamelessness;

(6) and the sixth is the decline of intelligence.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the six dangers of careless addiction to liquor and drugs.

9. Six indeed, o householder's son, are the dangers of being about on the street at night;

(1) He himself is unguarded and unprotected;

(2) His wife and children are unguarded and unprotected;

(3) His property is unguarded and unprotected;

(4) He is suspected of evil behaviour;

(5) False rumours about him abound;

(6) And he is visited by great suffering.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the six dangers of being about on the street at night.

10. Six indeed, o householder's son, are the dangers of visiting fairs;

(1) `Where is the dancing?';

(2) `Where is the singing?';

(3) `Where is the orchestra?';

(4) `Where is there oratory?';

(5) `Where are the cymbals?';

(6) `Where are the drums?'

These indeed, o householder's son, are the six dangers of visiting fairs.

11. Six indeed, o householder's son, are the dangers of careless addiction to gambling;

(1) In victory he produces hate;

(2) He mourns the possessions he has lost to the winner;

(3) His present wealth is wasted;

(4) His words are ineffective in the assembly;

(5) His friends and companions treat him with contempt;

(6) And he is not sought after as a spouse, since a gambler cannot support a wife.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the six dangers of careless addiction to gambling.

12. Six indeed, o householder's son, are the dangers of joining evil friends.

Any and all (1) rogues, (2) drunkards, (3) gluttons, (4) cheats,

(5) swindlers and (6) men of violence are his friends and companions.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the six dangers of joining evil friends.

13. Six indeed, o householder's son, are the dangers of sloth; one says,

(1) `It is too cold' and does not work;

(2) `It is too hot' and does not work;

(3) `It is too late' and does not work;

(4) `It is too early' and does not work;

(5) `I am too hungry' and does not work;

(6) `I am too full' and does not work.

Those abundant tasks of his that need doing stay undone, riches do not arise, and existing riches diminish. These indeed, o householder's son, are the six dangers of sloth."

Thus spoke the Lord.

14. After the Well-farer had spoken thus, the Teacher continued:

"One is called a drinking mate
One professes friendship.
But he who cares for your fate,
he is your friend indeed.

Sleeping late, perhaps with another's wife,
Nursing and spreading grudges,
Evil friends and stinginess:

These six destroy a man.

Evil friends, evil mates,

Delighting in evil behaviour,

Both in this world and the next, alas!

This man destroys himself.

Gambling, wenching and drinking,

Dancing and singing, then

Basking by day like a snake.

Untimely prowling, evil friends and stinginess:

These six destroy a man.

They throw the dice, they fill the cup.

They lie with others' dearly loved wives.

He who serves the low and not the high

Fades like the waning moon.

Thirsty while drinking,

Having no wealth, having nothing,

He enters debt like going

To a well for water.

No family will be his.

Not by habitually sleeping late,

Nor by using the night to roam,

Nor by constant drunkenness and intoxication

Can one support one's home.

`Too cold', `too hot'

`Too late'; so they cry.

Labour having been left to its lot

Advantages pass the yougsters by.

But he who hot and cold

Considers no more than the grass;

Who does the duties of a man,

For him happiness will never pass."

15. "These four, o householder's son, are to be known as enemies disguised as friends.

(1) The ever-taking man is to be known as an enemy disguised as a friend.

(2) The big talker is to be known as an enemy disguised as a friend.

(3) The flatterer is to be known as an enemy disguised as a friend.

(4) The spendthrift is to be known as an enemy disguised as a friend.

16. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding the ever-taking man as an enemy disguised as a friend.

(1) He is always taking;

(2) He desires much for very little;

(3) He performs his duty out of fear;

(4) He only performs those duties that benefit him.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for regarding the ever-taking man as an enemy disguised as a friend.

17. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding the big talker as an enemy disguised as a friend.

(1) He discourses on the past;

(2) He discourses on the future;

(3) He takes up with useless people;

(4) If present obligations should arise, he pleads misfortune.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for regarding the big talker as an enemy disguised as a friend.

18. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding the flatterer as an enemy disguised as a friend.

(1) He is familiar with evil;

(2) He is unfamiliar with the good;

(3) In one's presence he discusses one's beauty and virtue;

(4) Behind one's back he talks about one's faults.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for regarding the flatterer as an enemy disguised as a friend.

19. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding the spendthrift as an enemy disguised as a friend.

(1) He is a friend while you are drinking intoxicating liquor;

(2) He is a friend while you go about on the street at night;

(3) He is a friend when you visit fairs;

(4) He is a friend when you carelessly gamble.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for regarding the spendthrift as an enemy disguised as a friend."

Thus spoke the Lord

20. After the Well-farer had spoken thus, the Teacher continued:

> "The self-seeking friend, the big-mouth,
>
> The sycophant and the friend in wastage;
>
> These four are no friends at all.
>
> Having perceived this, may the wise man
>
> Avoid them like the plague"

21. "Four indeed, o householder's son, are those to be known as true friends.

(1) The helper is to be known as a true friend.

(2) He who is constant in happiness and in adversity is to be known as a true friend.

(3) He who speaks with one's welfare in mind is to be known as a true friend.

(4) He who is compassionate is to be known as a true friend.

22. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding the helper as a true friend.

(1) He guards the unwary;

(2) He guards the property of the unwary;

(3) He gives refuge when you are in dire straits;

(4) When troublesome matters arise, he presents twice as much [as you need].

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for regarding the helper as a true friend.

23. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding he who is constant in happiness and in adversity as a true friend.

He knows which hidden things to (1) divulge and which to (2) conceal;

(3) He does not forsake you in times of trouble;

(4) He will abandon the care of his own life.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for seeing he who is constant in happiness and in adversity as a true friend.

24. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding he who speaks with one's welfare in mind as a true friend.

(1) He restrains [you] from evil;

(2) He instructs you in goodness;

(3) He causes that which has not been heard to be heard;

(4) He explains the way to the life hereafter.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for seeing he who speaks with one's welfare in mind as a true friend.

25. Four indeed, o householder's son, are the reasons for regarding he who is compassionate as a true friend.

(1) He does not rejoice in your adversity;

(2) He rejoices in your prosperity;

(3) He restrains [one] who speaks ill [of you];

(4) He encourages [one] who speaks well [of you].

These indeed, o householder's son, are the four reasons for seeing he who is compassionate as a true friend."

Thus spoke the Lord

26. After the Well-farer had spoken thus, the Teacher continued:

"The helping friend,

The friend for better or worse

The friend who says what one should hear

And the compassionate friend;

These four friends are to be known as such by the wise.

He should honour and respect them

As a mother cares for her own child.

The virtuous and wise man

Speaks words like drops of fire.

He gathers possessions just as the bee does.

Riches continue accumulating like an anthill.

Having thus accumulated riches,

Householders can tend to their families.

If these riches are divided into four

He binds the friends to him.

With one part of this wealth let him enjoy;

With two may he do business

And may he hoard the fourth

That it may be there in misfortune."

27. "And what, o householder's son, is the noble disciple's protection of the six directions? O householder's son, the six directions should be known as [signifying] these six.

(1) The eastern direction is to be seen as the mother and father.

(2) The southern direction is to be seen as [one's] teachers.

(3) The western direction is to be seen as the wife.

(4) The northern direction is to be seen as [one's] friends and companions.

(5) The lower direction is to be seen as the slaves and servants.

(6)The upper direction is to be seen as the recluses and priests.

28. O householder's son, the mother and father, as the eastern direction, are to be tended by the child in five ways:

(1) [He thinks:]`I, once supported, shall support [them];

(2) `I shall fulfil my duty towards them';

(3) `I shall maintain the family lineage';

(4) `I shall regulate my inheritance wisely';

(5) `Then, later, I shall give offerings to propitiate their spirits'.

And in these five ways, o householder's son, do the mother and father, as the eastern direction, having been tended by the child in five ways, respond in sympathy:

(1) They restrain him from evil;

(2) They establish him in goodness;

(3) They instruct him in a branch of knowledge;

(4) They provide him with a suitable wife;

(5) And in due course they present him with his inheritance.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the five ways in which the mother and father, having been tended as the eastern direction by the child in five ways, respond in sympathy. Thus is the eastern direction dealt with, rendering it tranquil and free from fear.

29. O householder's son,teachers as the southern direction, are to be tended by the pupil in five ways:

(1) By rising [out of respect];

(2) By attending to them;

(3) By being eager to learn;

(4) By waiting on them;

(5) by receiving as much as possible of their knowledge.

And in these five ways, o householder's son, do teachers, as the southern direction, having been tended by the pupil in five ways, respond in sympathy:

(1) They teach their specialty;

(2) They cause [the pupil] to grasp what they themselves thoroughly understand;

(3) They teach all their knowledge;

(4) They make the pupil known among their friends and colleagues;

(5) And they make all [their pupil's] directions safe.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the five ways in which teachers, having been tended as the southern direction by the pupil in five ways, respond in sympathy. Thus is the southern direction dealt with, rendering it tranquil and free from fear.

30. O householder's son, the wife as the western direction, is to be tended by the husband in five ways:

(1) With honour;

(2) Without disrespect;

(3) With faithfulness;

(4) By relinquishing authority;

(5) And by presenting her with ornaments.

And in these five ways, o householder's son, does the wife, as the western direction, having been tended by the husband in five ways, respond in sympathy:

(1) She does her work well;

(2) She accepts his retinue;

(3) She is faithful to him;

(4) She guards the provisions;

(5) And she is skilful and diligent in her duties.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the five ways in which the wife, having been tended as the western direction by the husband in five ways, respond in sympathy. Thus is the western direction dealt with, rendering it tranquil and free from fear.

31. O householder's son, friends and companions, as the northern direction, are to be tended by the son of a good family in five ways:

(1) By generosity;

(2) By kind speech;

(3) By guarding their welfare;

(4) By impartiality;

(5) By honesty.

And in these five ways, o householder's son, do friends and companions, as the northern direction, having been tended by the son of a good family in five ways, respond in sympathy:

(1) They guard the unwary;

(2) They guard the property of the unwary;

(3) They give refuge to those who are in dire straits;

(4) They do not forsake you in times of trouble;

(5) And they honour your progeny.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the five ways in which friends and companions, having been tended as the northern direction by the son of a good family in five ways, respond in sympathy. Thus is the northern direction dealt with, rendering it tranquil and free from fear.

32. O householder's son, slaves and servants, as the lower direction, are to be tended by the gentleman in five ways:

(1) By scheduling the work according to each one's ability;

(2) By not making them work for food alone;

(3) By nursing them when they fall ill;

(4) By giving them tasty foodstuffs;

(5) And by relinquishing them at the right time.

And in these five ways, o householder's son, do slaves and servants, as the lower direction, having been tended by the gentleman in five ways, respond in sympathy:

(1) They rise earlier;

(2) They lie down later;

(3) They give alms;

(4) They perform good deeds;

(5) And they earn a good reputation.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the five ways in which slaves and servants, having been tended as the lower direction by the gentleman in five ways, respond in sympathy. Thus is the lower direction dealt with, rendering it tranquil and free from fear.

33. O householder's son, recluses and brahmins as the upper direction, are to be tended by the son of a good family in five ways:

(1) With friendliness in physical acts;

(2) With friendliness in vocal acts;

(3) With friendliness in mental acts;

(4) By not closing the door against them;

(5) And by giving them food.

And in these six ways, o householder's son, do the recluses and brahmins, as the upper direction, having been tended by the son of a good family in five ways, respond in sympathy:

(1) They restrain him from evil;

(2) They establish him in goodness;

(3) They respond with good thoughts;

(4) They cause that which has not been heard to be heard;

(5) They explicate that which has been heard;

(6) And they explain the way to the life hereafter.

These indeed, o householder's son, are the six ways in which recluses and brahmins, having been tended as the upper direction by the son of a good family in five ways, respond in sympathy. Thus is the upper direction dealt with, rendering it tranquil and free from fear."

Thus spoke the Lord.

34. After the Well-farer had spoken thus, the Teacher continued:

"Mother and father are the first direction,

Teachers the south

The wife the west

And friends the north.

Slaves and servants are the direction below;

Above are the ascetics and priests.

You should honour these directions;

This will greatly profit the householder in his family.

The wise man practices morality,

He is mild and intelligent,

Humble in conduct and unselfish.

For this he receives acclaim.

He is productive and not lazy,

He trembles not in misfortune,

His conduct is faultless and he is wise.

For this he receives acclaim.

He makes friends and keeps them,

He is approachable and without envy;

A guide, a teacher, a peacemaker.

For this he receives acclaim.

Generosity, kind speech

And immediately useful conduct,

Impartiality in all affairs;

These indeed hold the world together

As the linchpin does the wheel.

But where these do not hold together,

No mother receives from her son's deeds

Any honour and respect, nor does the father.

The holding together by these

Has been examined by the wise.

By that, these virtues attain eminence

And are to be praised."

35. When the Blessed one had spoken thus, Singala the householder's son said this: "Very good, sir! Very good, sir! Just as that which has been overturned may be set upright, or as that which has been hidden may be uncovered, or as the path may be shown to a lost person, or as a lamp may be carried into darkness saying "may those with eyes see!", just so has the teaching been explained by the Blessed one. O sir, I wish to go for refuge to the Blessed one, to the teaching and to the assembly of monks. May the Blessed one henceforth consider me a lay disciple, who has gone for refuge as long as life lasts."

telakaá¹-Ä• hagÄ• thÄ• á¹ƒ0.0001

||namo tassa bhagavato arahato sammÄ• sambuddhassa ||

<1> laá¹ƒkissaro jayatu vÄ• raá¹‡arÄ• jagÄ• mÄ«

bhogindabhoga rucirÄ• yata pÄ«á¹‡a bÄ• hu,

sÄ• dhupacÄ• ranirato guá¹‡asannivÄ• so dhamme á¹-hito vÄ«gatakodhamadÄ• valepo.

<2> yo sabbalokamahito karuá¹‡Ä• dhivÄ• so mokkhÄ• karo ravikulambara puá¹‡á¹‡a cando,

Ã±eyyodadhiá¹ƒ suvipulaá¹ƒ sakalaá¹ƒ vibuddho

lokuttamaá¹ƒ namatha taá¹ƒ sirasÄ• munindaá¹ƒ.

<3> sopÄ• namÄ• lamamalaá¹ƒ tidasÄ• layassa

saá¹ƒsÄ• ra sÄ• garasamuttaraá¹‡Ä• ya setuá¹ƒ, sabbÄ• gatÄ«bhaya vivajjita khema maggaá¹ƒ dhammaá¹ƒ namassatha sadÄ• muninÄ• paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ.

<4> á¹ƒ0.0002 deyyaá¹ƒ tadappamapi yattha pasanna cittÄ•

datvÄ• narÄ• phalamuá¸·Ä• rataraá¹ƒ labhante, taá¹ƒ sabbadÄ• dasabalenapi suppasatthaá¹ƒ

saá¹…ghaá¹ƒ namassatha sadÄ• mitapuÃ±Ã±akhettaá¹ƒ.

<5> tejo balena mahatÄ• ratanattayassa lokattayaá¹ƒ samadhigacchati yena mokkhaá¹ƒ,

rakkhÄ• na catthi ca samÄ• ratanattayassa

tasmÄ• sadÄ• bhajatha taá¹ƒ ratanattayaá¹ƒ bho.

<6> laá¹ƒkissaro parahitekarato nirÄ• so rattimpi jÄ• gararato karuá¹‡Ä• dhivÄ• so,

lokaá¹ƒ vibodhayati lokahitÄ• ya kÄ• maá¹ƒ

dhammaá¹ƒ samÄ• caratha jÄ• gariyÄ• nuyuttÄ• .

<7> á¹ƒ0.0003 sattopakÄ• ra niratÄ• kusale sahÄ• yÄ• bho dullabhÄ• bhuvi narÄ• vihatappamÄ• dÄ• , laá¹ƒkÄ• dhipaá¹ƒ guá¹‡adhanaá¹ƒ kusale sahÄ• yaá¹ƒ

Ä• gamma saá¹ƒcaratha dhammamalaá¹ƒ pamÄ• daá¹ƒ.

<8> dhammo tiloka saraá¹‡o paramo rasÄ• naá¹ƒ

dhammo mahaggharatano ratanesu loke,

dhammo bhave tibhavadukkha vinÄ• sahetu

dhammaá¹ƒ samÄ• caratha jÄ• gariyÄ• nuyuttÄ• .

<9> niddaá¹ƒ vinodayatha bhÄ• vayathappameyyaá¹ƒ

dukkhaá¹ƒ aniccampi ceha anattataÃ±ca,

dehe ratiá¹ƒ jahatha ja jajjarabhÄ• janÄ• bho

dhammaá¹ƒ samÄ• caratha jÄ• gariyÄ• nuyuttÄ• .

<10> á¹ƒ0.0004 okÄ• sa majja mama natthi suve karissaá¹ƒ

dhammaá¹ƒ itÄ«halasatÄ• kusalappayoge,

nÄ• â€™ laá¹ƒ tiyaddhasu tathÄ• bhuvanattaye ca

kÄ• maá¹ƒ na catthi manujo maraá¹‡Ä• pamutto.

<11> khitto yathÄ• nabhasi kenacideva leá¸• á¸• u

bhÅ«miá¹ƒ samÄ• patti bhÄ• ratayÄ• khaá¹‡ena,

jÄ• tattameva khalu kÄ• raá¹‡amekamatra lokaá¹ƒ sadÄ• nanu dhuvaá¹ƒ maraá¹‡Ä• ya gantuá¹ƒ.

<12> kÄ• maá¹ƒ narassa patato girimuddhanÄ• to majjhe na kiÃ±ci bhayanissaraá¹‡Ä• ya hetu,

kÄ• maá¹ƒ vajanti maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ tibhavesu sattÄ•

bhoge ratiá¹ƒ pajahathÄ• pi ca jÄ«vite ca.

<13> á¹ƒ0.0005 kÄ• maá¹ƒ patanti mahiyÄ• khalu vassadhÄ• rÄ• vijjullatÄ• vitatamegha mukhÄ• pamuttÄ• ,

evaá¹ƒ narÄ• maraá¹‡abhÄ«ma papÄ• tamajjhe

kÄ• maá¹ƒ patanti nahi koci bhavesu nicco.

<14> velÄ• taá¹-e paá¹-utaroru taraá¹ƒgamÄ• lÄ•

nÄ• saá¹ƒ vajanti satataá¹ƒ salilÄ• layassa,

nÄ• saá¹ƒ tathÄ• samupayanti narÄ• marÄ• naá¹ƒ

pÄ• á¹‡Ä• ni dÄ• ruá¹‡atare maraá¹‡odadhimhi.

<15> ruddhopi so rathavarassagajÄ• dhipehi

yodhehi cÄ• pi sabalehi ca sÄ• yudhehi, lokaá¹ƒ vivaá¹ƒciya sadÄ• maraá¹‡Å«sabho so kÄ• maá¹ƒ nihanti bhuvanattaya sÄ• li daá¹‡á¸• aá¹ƒ.

<16> á¹ƒ0.0006 bho mÄ• rutena mahatÄ• vihato padÄ«po

khippaá¹ƒ vinÄ• sa mukhameti mahappabhopi,

loke tathÄ• maraá¹‡acaá¹‡á¸• a samÄ«raá¹‡ena

khippaá¹ƒ vinassati narÄ• yumahÄ• padÄ«po.

17 rÄ• majjunappabhÅ«ti bhÅ«pati puá¹ƒgavÄ• ca

sÅ«rÄ• pure raá¹‡amukhe vijitÄ• ri saá¹…ghÄ• ,

tepÄ«ha caá¹‡á¸• a maraá¹‡ogha nimuggadehÄ•

nÄ• saá¹ƒ gatÄ• jagati ke maraá¹‡Ä• pamuttÄ• ?

<18> lakkhÄ« ca sÄ• garapaá¹-Ä• sadharÄ• dharÄ• ca

sampattiyo ca vividhÄ• api rÅ«pasobhÄ• , sabbÄ• ca tÄ• api ca mittasutÄ• ca dÄ• rÄ•

ke cÄ• pi kaá¹ƒ anugatÄ• maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ vajantaá¹ƒ?

<19> á¹ƒ0.0007 brahmÄ• surÄ• suragaá¹‡Ä• ca mahÄ• nubhÄ• vÄ• gandhabbakinnaramahoragarakkhasÄ• ca, te cÄ• pare ca maraá¹‡aggisikhÄ• ya sabbe ante patanti salabhÄ• iva khÄ«á¹‡apuÃ±Ã±Ä• .

<20> ye sÄ• riputtapamukhÄ• munisÄ• vakÄ• ca

suddhÄ• sadÄ• savanudÄ• paramiddhipattÄ• ,

te cÄ• pi maccuvaá¸·abhÄ• mukha sannimuggÄ•

dÄ«pÄ• nivÄ• nalahatÄ• khayataá¹ƒ upetÄ• .

<21> buddhÄ• pi buddhakamalÄ• malacÄ• runettÄ• battiá¹ƒsalakkhaá¹‡a virÄ• jita rÅ«pasobhÄ• ,

sabbÄ• sacakkhayakarÄ• pi ca lokanÄ• thÄ•

sammadditÄ• maraá¹‡amattamahÄ• gajena.

<22> á¹ƒ0.0008 rogÄ• turesu karuá¹‡Ä• na jarÄ• turesu

khiá¸• á¸• Ä• paresu sukumÄ• rakumÄ• rakesu, lokaá¹ƒ sadÄ• hanati maccu mahÄ• gajindo

davÄ• nalo vanamivÄ• varataá¹ƒ asesaá¹ƒ.

<23> Ä• puá¹‡á¹‡atÄ• na salile na jalÄ• sayassa

kaá¹-á¹-hassa cÄ• pi bahutÄ• na hutÄ• sanassa,

bhutvÄ• na so tibhÅ«vanampi tathÄ• asesaá¹ƒ

bho niddayo na khalu pÄ«timupeti maccu.

<24> bho moha mohitatayÄ• vivaso adhaÃ±Ã±o

loko patatyapipi maccumukhe subhÄ«me,

bhoge ratiá¹ƒ samupayÄ• ti nihÄ«napaÃ±Ã±o

dolÄ• taraá¹…gacapale supinopameyye.

<25> á¹ƒ0.0009 ekopi maccurabhihantumalaá¹ƒ tilokaá¹ƒ

kiá¹ƒ niddayÄ• api jarÄ• maraá¹‡Ä• nuyÄ• yÄ«,

ko vÄ• kareyya vibhasuvesu ca jÄ«vitÄ• saá¹ƒ

jÄ• to naro supina saá¹ƒgama sannibhesu.

<26> niccÄ• turaá¹ƒ jagadidaá¹ƒ sabhayaá¹ƒ sasokaá¹ƒ

disvÄ• ca kodhamadamohajarÄ• bhibhÅ«taá¹ƒ, ubbegamattamapi yassa na vijjatÄ« ce

so dÄ• ruá¹‡ona maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ vata taá¹ƒ dhiratthu!

bho bho na passatha jarÄ• sidharaÃ±hi maccu

mÄ• haÃ±Ã±amÄ• namakhilaá¹ƒ satataá¹ƒ tilokaá¹ƒ, kiá¹ƒ niddayÄ• nayatha vÄ«tabhayÄ• tiyÄ• maá¹ƒ dhammaá¹ƒ sadÄ• â€™ savanudaá¹ƒ carathaâ€™ ppamattÄ• .

<28> á¹ƒ0.0010 bhÄ• vetha bho maraá¹‡amÄ• ravivajjanÄ• ya loke sadÄ• maraá¹‡a saÃ±Ã±amimaá¹ƒ yatattÄ• , evaÃ±hi bhÄ• vanaratassa narassa tassa

taá¹‡hÄ• pahÄ«yati sarÄ«ragatÄ• asesÄ• .

<29> rÅ«paá¹ƒ jarÄ• piyataraá¹ƒ malinÄ«karoti

sabbaá¹ƒ balaá¹ƒ harati attani ghorarogo, nÄ• nÅ«pabhoga parirakkhita mattabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ

bho maccu saá¹ƒharati kiá¹ƒ phalamattabhÄ• ve?

<30> kammÄ• nilÄ• pahatarogataraá¹ƒgabhaá¹ƒge

saá¹ƒsÄ• ra sÄ• gara mukhe vitate vipannÄ• ,

mÄ• mÄ• pamÄ• damakarittha karotha mokkhaá¹ƒ dukkhodayo nanu pamÄ• damayaá¹ƒ narÄ• naá¹ƒ.

<31> á¹ƒ0.0011 bhogÄ• ca mittasutaporisa bandhavÄ• ca

nÄ• rÄ« ca jÄ«vitasamÄ• api khettavatthu, sabbÄ• ni tÄ• ni paralokamito vajantaá¹ƒ

nÄ• nubbajanti kusalÄ• kusalaá¹ƒva loke.

<32> bho vijjucaá¹ƒcalatare bhavasÄ• garamhi

khittÄ• purÄ• katamahÄ• pavanena tena,

kÄ• maá¹ƒ vibhijjati khaá¹‡ena sarÄ«ranÄ• vÄ•

hatthe karotha paramaá¹ƒ guá¹‡ahatthasÄ• raá¹ƒ.

<33> niccaá¹ƒ vibhijjatiha Ä• maka bhÄ• janaá¹ƒva saá¹ƒrakkhitopi bahudhÄ• iha attabhÄ• vo,

dhammaá¹ƒ samÄ• caratha saggapatippatiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ

dhammo suciá¹‡á¹‡amihameva phalaá¹ƒ dadÄ• ti.

<34> á¹ƒ0.0012 rantvÄ• sadÄ• piyatare divi devarajje namhÄ• cavanti vibudhÄ• api khÄ«á¹‡apuÃ±Ã±Ä• , sabbaá¹ƒ sukhaá¹ƒ divi bhuvÄ«ha viyoganiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ

ko paÃ±Ã±avÄ• bhavasukhesu ratiá¹ƒ kareyya?

<35> buddho sasÄ• vakagaá¹‡o jagadekanÄ• tho tÄ• rÄ• valÄ«parivutopi ca puá¹‡á¹‡acando,

indopi devamakuá¹-aá¹ƒkita pÄ• dakaÃ±jo

ko pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• a-na-samo tibhavesu jÄ• to?

<36> lÄ«lÄ• vataá¹ƒsamapi yobbana rÅ«pasobhaá¹ƒ

attÅ«pamaá¹ƒ piyajanena ca sampayogaá¹ƒ,

disvÄ• pi vijjucapalaá¹ƒ kurute pamÄ• daá¹ƒ

bho mohamohitajano bhavarÄ• garatto.

<37> á¹ƒ0.0013 putto pitÄ• bhavati mÄ• tu patÄ«ha putto

nÄ• rÄ« kadÄ• ci jananÄ« ca pitÄ• ca putto, evaá¹ƒ sadÄ• viparivattati jÄ«valoko

citte sadÄ• ticapale khalu jÄ• tiraá¹…ge.

<38> rantvÄ• pure vividhaphullalatÄ• kulehi

devÄ• pi nandanavane surasundarÄ«hi,

te veâ€™ kadÄ• vitatakaá¹‡á¹-akasaá¹ƒkaá¹-esu

bho koá¹-isimbalivanesu phusanti dukkhaá¹ƒ.

<39> bhutvÄ• sudhannamapi kaÃ±canabhÄ• janesu sagge pure suravarÄ• paramiddhipattÄ• ,

te cÄ• pi pajjalitalohagulaá¹ƒ gilanti

kÄ• maá¹ƒ kadÄ• ci narakÄ• laya vÄ• sabhÅ«tÄ• .

<40> á¹ƒ0.0014 bhutvÄ• narissaravarÄ• ca mahiá¹ƒ asesaá¹ƒ

devÄ• dhipÄ• ca divi dibbasukhaá¹ƒ surammaá¹ƒ, vÄ• saá¹ƒ kadÄ• ci khurasaÃ±citabhÅ«talesu

te vÄ• mahÄ• rathagaá¹‡Ä• nugatÄ• divÄ«ha.

<41> devaá¹…ganÄ• lalitabhinnataraá¹…gamÄ• le raá¹…ge mahissarajaá¹-Ä• makuá¹-Ä• nuyÄ• te,

rantvÄ• pure suravarÄ• pamadÄ• sahÄ• yÄ•

te cÄ• pi ghorataravetaraá¹‡iá¹ƒ patanti.

<42> phullÄ• ni pallavalatÄ• phalasaá¹ƒkulÄ• ni

rammÄ• ni nandanavanÄ• ni manoramÄ• ni, dibbaccharÄ• lalitapuá¹‡á¹‡adarÄ«mukhÄ• ni

kelÄ• samerusikharÄ• ni ca yanti nÄ• saá¹ƒ.

<43> á¹ƒ0.0015 dolÄ• â€™ nilÄ• â€™ nalataraá¹ƒgasamÄ• hi bhogÄ• vijjuppabhÄ• ticapalÄ• ni ca jÄ«vitÄ• ni,

mÄ• yÄ• marÄ«cijalasomasamaá¹ƒ sarÄ«raá¹ƒ

ko jÄ«vite ca vibhave ca kareyya rÄ• gaá¹ƒ?

<44> kiá¹ƒ dukkhamatthi na bhavesu ca dÄ• ruá¹‡esu

sattopi tassa vividhassa na bhÄ• jano ko, jÄ• to yathÄ• maraá¹‡arogajarÄ• bhibhÅ«to

ko sajjano bhavaratiá¹ƒ pihayeyyaâ€™ bÄ• lo?

<45> ke vÄ• pi pajjalitalohagulaá¹ƒ gilanti

sakkÄ• kathaÃ±cidapi pÄ• á¹‡italena bhÄ«maá¹ƒ, dukkhodayaá¹ƒ asucinissavanaá¹ƒ anantaá¹ƒ

ko kÄ• mayetha khalu dehamimaá¹ƒ abÄ• lo?

<46> á¹ƒ0.0016 loke na maccusamamatthi bhayaá¹ƒ narÄ• naá¹ƒ na vyÄ• dhidukkhasamamatthi ca kiá¹ƒci dukkhaá¹ƒ, evaá¹ƒ virÅ«pakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ na jarÄ• samÄ• naá¹ƒ

mohena bho ratimupeti tathÄ• pi dehe.

<47> nissÄ• rato nalakalÄ«kadalÄ«samÄ• naá¹ƒ

attÄ• nameva parihaÃ±Ã±ati attahetu,

sampositopi kusahÄ• ya ivÄ• kataÃ±Ã±Å« kÄ• yo na yassa anugacchati kÄ• lakerÄ• .

<48> taá¹ƒ pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• asadisaá¹ƒ visasÅ«lakappaá¹ƒ

toyÄ• â€™ nilÄ• â€™ nalamahÄ«uragÄ• dhivÄ• saá¹ƒ, jiá¹‡á¹‡Ä• layaá¹ƒva paridubbalamattabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ

disvÄ• naro kathamupeti ratiá¹ƒ sapaÃ±Ã±o?

<49> á¹ƒ0.0017 Ä• yukkhayaá¹ƒ samupayÄ• ti khaá¹‡e khaá¹‡epi anveti maccu hananÄ• ya jarÄ• sipÄ• á¹‡Ä«, kÄ• laá¹ƒ tathÄ• na parivattati taá¹ƒ atÄ«taá¹ƒ

dukkhaá¹ƒ idaá¹ƒ nanu bhavesu acintanÄ«yaá¹ƒ?

<50> appÄ• yukassa maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ sulabhaá¹ƒ bhavesu

dÄ«ghÄ• yukassa ca jarÄ• vyasanaá¹ƒ caâ€™ nekaá¹ƒ, evaá¹ƒ bhave ubhayatopi ca dukkhameva

dhammaá¹ƒ samÄ• caratha dukkhavinÄ• sanÄ• ya.

<51> dukkhagginÄ• sumahatÄ• paripÄ«á¸·itesu lokattayassa vasato bhavavÄ• rakesu,

sabbattatÄ• sucaritassa pamÄ• dakÄ• lo

bho bho na hoti paramaá¹ƒ kusalaá¹ƒ ciá¹‡Ä• tha.

<52> á¹ƒ0.0018 appaá¹ƒ sukhaá¹ƒ jalalavaá¹ƒ viya bho tiá¹‡agge dukkhantu sÄ• garajalaá¹ƒ viya sabbaloke, saá¹ƒkappanÄ• tadapi hoti sabhÄ• vato hi

sabbaá¹ƒ tilokamapi kevaladukkhameva.

<53> kÄ• yo na yassa anugacchati kÄ• yahetu

bÄ• lo anekavidhamÄ• caratÄ«ha dukkhaá¹ƒ,

kÄ• yo sadÄ• kali malÄ• kalilaÃ±hi loke

kÄ• ye ratoâ€™ navarataá¹ƒ vyasanaá¹ƒ pareti

<54> mÄ«á¸·hÄ• karaá¹ƒ kalimalÄ• karamÄ• magandhaá¹ƒ

sÅ«á¸·Ä• sisallavisapannagarogabhÅ«taá¹ƒ, dehaá¹ƒ vipassatha jarÄ• maraá¹‡Ä• dhivÄ• saá¹ƒ tucchaá¹ƒ sadÄ• vigatasÄ• ramimaá¹ƒ vinindyaá¹ƒ.

<55> á¹ƒ0.0019 dukkhaá¹ƒ aniccamasubhaá¹ƒ vata attabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ

mÄ• saá¹ƒkilesaya na vijjati jÄ• tu nicco,

ambho na vijjati hi appamapÄ«ha sÄ• raá¹ƒ

sÄ• raá¹ƒ samÄ• caratha dhammamalaá¹ƒ pamÄ• daá¹ƒ.

<56> mÄ• yÄ• marÄ«cikadalÄ«nalapheá¹‡apuÃ±jagaá¹ƒgÄ• taraá¹…gajalabubbulasannibhesu,

khandhesu paÃ±casu chaá¸·Ä• yatanesu tesu

attÄ• na vijjati hi ko na vadeyyaâ€™ bÄ• lo?

<57> vaÃ±jhÄ• suto sasavisÄ• á¹‡amaye rathe tu, dhÄ• veyya ce cirataraá¹ƒ sadhuraá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• , dÄ«paccimÄ• lamiva taá¹ƒ khaá¹‡abhaá¹…gabhÅ«taá¹ƒ

attÄ• ti dubbalatarantu vadeyya dehaá¹ƒ.

<58> á¹ƒ0.0020 bÄ• lo yathÄ• salilabubbulabhÄ• janena

Ä• kaá¹‡á¹-hato vata pibeyya marÄ«citoyaá¹ƒ,

attÄ• ni sÄ• rarahitaá¹ƒ kadalÄ«samÄ• naá¹ƒ

mohÄ• bhaá¹‡eyya khalu dehamimaá¹ƒ anattaá¹ƒ.

<59> yoâ€™ dumbarassa kusumena marÄ«citoyaá¹ƒ

vÄ• saá¹ƒ yadicchati sa khedamupeti bÄ• lo,

attÄ• nameva parihaÃ±Ã±ati attahetu

attÄ• na vijjati kadÄ• cidapÄ«ha dehe.

<60> poso yathÄ• hi kadalÄ« suvinibbhujanto

sÄ• raá¹ƒ tadappampi nopalabheyya kÄ• maá¹ƒ, khandhesu paá¹ƒcasu chaá¸·Ä• yatanesu tesu

suÃ±Ã±esu kiÃ±cidapi nopalabheyya sÄ• raá¹ƒ.

<61> á¹ƒ0.0021 suttaá¹ƒ vinÄ• na paá¹-abhÄ• vamihatthi kiá¹ƒci dehaá¹ƒ vinÄ• na khalu koci mihatthi satto, deho sabhÄ• varahito khaá¹‡abhaá¹ƒgayutto,

ko attahetu aparo bhuvi vijjatÄ«ha?

<62> disvÄ• marÄ«cisalilaÃ±hi sudÅ«rato bho bÄ• lo migo samupadhÄ• vati toyasaÃ±Ã±Ä«, evaá¹ƒ sabhÄ• varahite viparÄ«tasiddhe

dehe pareti parikappanayÄ• hi rÄ• gaá¹ƒ.

<63> dehe sabhÄ• varahite parikappasiddhe

attÄ• na vijjati hi vijjumivantalikkhe,

bhÄ• vetha bhÄ• vanaratÄ• vigatappamÄ• dÄ•

sabbÄ• savappahananÄ• ya anattasaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ.

<64> á¹ƒ0.0022 lÄ• lÄ• karÄ«sarudhirassuvasÄ• nulittaá¹ƒ

dehaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ kalimalÄ• kalilaá¹ƒ asÄ• raá¹ƒ,

sattÄ• sadÄ• pariharanti jigucchanÄ«yaá¹ƒ

nÄ• nÄ• sucÄ«hi paripuá¹‡á¹‡aghaá¹-aá¹ƒ yatheva.

<65> á¹‡ahÄ• tvÄ• jalaÃ±hi sakalaá¹ƒ catusÄ• garassa

meruppamÄ• á¹‡amapi gandhamanuttaraÃ±ca,

pappoti neva manujo hi suciá¹ƒ kadÄ• ci

kiá¹ƒ bho vipassatha guá¹‡aá¹ƒ kimu attabhÄ• ve?

<66> deho sa eva vividhÄ• sucisannidhÄ• no

deho sa eva vadhabandhanarogabhÅ«to,

deho sa eva navadhÄ• paribhinnagaá¹‡á¸• o

dehaá¹ƒ vinÄ• bhayakaraá¹ƒ na susÄ• namatthi.

<67> á¹ƒ0.0023 antogataá¹ƒ yadiva muttakarÄ«sabhÄ• go dehÄ• bahiá¹ƒ aticareyya vinikkhamitvÄ• ,

mÄ• tÄ• pitÄ• vikaruá¹‡Ä• ca vinaá¹-á¹-hapemÄ•

kÄ• maá¹ƒ bhaveyyu kimu bandhusutÄ• ca dÄ• rÄ• ?

<68> dehaá¹ƒ yathÄ• navamukhaá¹ƒ kimisaá¹…ghagehaá¹ƒ

maá¹ƒsaá¹-á¹-hisedarudhirÄ• kalilaá¹ƒ vigandhaá¹ƒ, posenti ye vividhapÄ• pamihÄ• caritvÄ•

te mohitÄ• maraá¹‡adhammamaho vatevaá¹ƒ!

<69> gaá¹‡á¸• Å«pame vividharoga nivÄ• sabhÅ«te kÄ• ye sadÄ• rudhiramuttakarÄ«sapuá¹‡á¹‡e, yo ettha nandati naro sasigÄ• labhakkhe

kÄ• maÃ±hi socati parattha sa bÄ• labuddhi.

<70> á¹ƒ0.0024 bho pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• asadiso viya sÄ• rahÄ«no

mÄ«á¸·hÄ• layo viya sadÄ• paá¹-ikÅ«lagandho,

Ä• sÄ«visÄ• layanibho sabhayo sadukkho

deho sadÄ• savati loá¹‡aghaá¹-ova bhinno.

<71> jÄ• taá¹ƒ yathÄ• na kamalaá¹ƒ bhuvi nindanÄ«yaá¹ƒ

paá¹…kesu bho asucitoya samÄ• kulesu,

jÄ• taá¹ƒ tathÄ• parahitampi ca dehabhÅ«taá¹ƒ

taá¹ƒ nindanÄ«yamiha jÄ• tu na hoti loke.

<72> dvattiá¹ƒsabhÄ• gaparipÅ«rataro viseso

kÄ• yo yathÄ• hi naranÄ• ri gaá¹‡assa loke,

kÄ• yesu kiá¹ƒ phalamihatthi ca paá¹‡á¸• itÄ• naá¹ƒ kÄ• maá¹ƒ tadeva nanu hoti paropakÄ• raá¹ƒ.

<73> á¹ƒ0.0025 posona paá¹‡á¸• itatarena tathÄ• pi deho

sabbattanÄ• cirataraá¹ƒ paripÄ• lanÄ«yo,

dhammaá¹ƒ careyya suciraá¹ƒ khalu jÄ«vamÄ• no

dhamme have maá¹‡ivaro iva kÄ• mado bho

<74> khÄ«re yathÄ• suparibhÄ• vitamosadhamhi

snehena osadhabalaá¹ƒ paribhÄ• sateva,

dhammo tathÄ• iha samÄ• carito hi loke

chÄ• yÄ• va yÄ• ti paraloka mito vajantaá¹ƒ.

<75> kÄ• yassa bho viracitassa yathÄ• nukÅ«laá¹ƒ

chÄ• yÄ• vibhÄ• ti rucirÄ• maladappaá¹‡e tu,

katvÄ• tatheva paramaá¹ƒ kusalaá¹ƒ parattha

sambhÅ«sitÄ• iva bhavanti phalena tena.

<76> á¹ƒ0.0026 dehe tathÄ• vividhadukkha nivÄ• sabhÅ«te mohÄ• pamÄ• davasagÄ• sukhasaÃ±Ã±amÅ«á¸·hÄ• , tikkhe yathÄ• khuramukhe madhulehamÄ• no

bÄ• á¸·haÃ±ca dukkhamanugacchati hÄ«napaÃ±Ã±o.

<77> saá¹ƒkapparÄ• gavigate niratattabhÄ• ve dukkhaá¹ƒ sadÄ• samadhigacchati appapaÃ±Ã±o, mÅ«á¸·hassa ceva sukhasaÃ±Ã±amihatthiloke kiá¹ƒpakkameva nanu hoti vicÄ• ramÄ• ne.

<78> sabbopabhoga dhanadhaÃ±Ã±avisesalÄ• bhÄ«

rÅ«pena bho sa makaraddhajasannibhopi,

yo yobbanepi maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ labhate akÄ• maá¹ƒ

kÄ• maá¹ƒ paratthaparapÄ• á¹‡aharo naro hi.

<79> so yÄ• cako bhavati bhinnakapÄ• lahattho

muá¹‡á¸• o dhigakkharasatehi ca tajjayanto, bhikkhaá¹ƒ sadÄ• ribhavane sakucelavÄ• so dehe paratthi paracittaharo naro yo.

<80> á¹ƒ0.0027 itthÄ« namuÃ±cati sadÄ• puna itthibhÄ• vÄ•

nÄ• rÄ« sadÄ• bhavati so puriso parattha, yo Ä• careyya paradÄ• ramalaá¹…ghanÄ«yaá¹ƒ

ghoraÃ±ca vindati sadÄ• vyasanaÃ±ca nekaá¹ƒ.

<81> dÄ«no vigandhavadano ca jaá¸·o apaÃ±Ã±o

mÅ«go sadÄ• bhavati appiyadassano ca, pappoti dukkhamatulaÃ±ca manussabhÅ«to vÄ• caá¹ƒ musÄ• bhaá¹‡ati yo hi apaÃ±Ã±asatto.

<82> ummattakÄ• vigatalajjaguá¹‡Ä• bhavanti dÄ«nÄ• sadÄ• vyasanasokaparÄ• yaá¹‡Ä• ca,

jÄ• tÄ• bhavesu vividhesu virÅ«padehÄ•

pÄ«tvÄ• halÄ• halavisaá¹ƒva suraá¹ƒ vipaÃ±Ã±Ä• .

<83> pÄ• pÄ• ni yena iha Ä• caritÄ• ni yÄ• ni yo vassakoá¹-inahutÄ• ni anappakÄ• ni, laddhÄ• na ghoramatulaá¹ƒ narakesu dukkhaá¹ƒ

pappoti cettha vividhavyasanaÃ±ca nekaá¹ƒ.

<84> á¹ƒ0.0028 lokattayesu sakalesu samaá¹ƒ na kiá¹ƒci

lokassa santikaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ ratanattayena,

taá¹ƒtejasÄ• sumahatÄ• jitasabbapÄ• po

sohaá¹ƒ sadÄ• dhigatasabbasukho bhaveyyaá¹ƒ.

<85> lokattayesu sakalesu ca sabbasattÄ•

mittÄ• ca majjharipubandhujanÄ• ca sabbe, te sabbadÄ• vigatarogabhayÄ• visokÄ•

sabbaá¹ƒ sukhaá¹ƒ adhigatÄ• muditÄ• bhavantu.

<86> kÄ• yo karÄ«sabharito viya bhinnakumbho

kÄ• yo sadÄ• kalimalavyasanÄ• dhivÄ• so,

kÄ• ye vihaÃ±Ã±ati ca sabbasukhanti loko

kÄ• yo sadÄ• maraá¹‡arogajarÄ• dhivÄ• so.

<87> á¹ƒ0.0029 so yobbanoti thaviroti ca bÄ• lakoti

satte na pekkhati vihaÃ±Ã±atireva maccu, sohaá¹ƒ á¹-hitopi sayitopi ca pakkamanto

gacchÄ• mi maccuvadanaá¹ƒ niyataá¹ƒ tathÄ• hi.

<88> evaá¹ƒ yathÄ• vihitadosamidaá¹ƒ sarÄ«raá¹ƒ

niccaá¹ƒva taggatamanÄ• hadaye karotha, mettaá¹ƒ parittamasubhaá¹ƒ maraá¹‡assatiÃ±ca

bhÄ• vetha bhÄ• vanaratÄ• satataá¹ƒ yatattÄ• .

<89> dÄ• nÄ• di puÃ±Ã±akiriyÄ• ni sukhudrayÄ• ni

katvÄ• ca tamphalamasesa mihappameyyaá¹ƒ, deyyaá¹ƒ sadÄ• parahitÄ• ya sukhÄ• ya ceva

kimbho tadeva nanu hatthagataÃ±hi sÄ• raá¹ƒ?

<90> hetuá¹ƒ vinÄ• na bhavatÄ« hi ca kiá¹ƒci loke saddova pÄ• á¹‡italaghaá¹-á¹-anahetujÄ• to,

evaÃ±ca hetuphala bhÄ• vavibhÄ• gabhinno

loko udeti ca vinassati tiá¹-á¹-hatÄ« ca.

<91> á¹ƒ0.0030 kammassa kÄ• raá¹‡Ä• mayaÃ±hi yathÄ• avijjÄ• bho kammanÄ• samadhigacchati jÄ• tibhedaá¹ƒ, jÄ• tiá¹ƒ paá¹-icca ca jarÄ• maraá¹‡Ä• didukkhaá¹ƒ

sattÄ• sadÄ• paá¹-ilabhanti anÄ• dikÄ• le.

<92> kammaá¹ƒ yathÄ• na bhavatÄ«ha ca mohanÄ• sÄ•

kammakkhayÄ• pi ca na hoti bhavesu jÄ• ti,

jÄ• tikkhayÄ• iha jarÄ• maraá¹‡Ä• didukkhaá¹ƒ sabbakkhayo bhavati dÄ«pevÄ• nilena.

<93> yo passatÄ«ha satataá¹ƒ munidhammakÄ• yaá¹ƒ buddhaá¹ƒ sa passati naro iti so avoca,

buddhaÃ±ca dhammamamalaÃ±ca tilokanÄ• thaá¹ƒ

sampassituá¹ƒ vicinathÄ• â€™ pi ca dhammataá¹ƒ bho.

<94> á¹ƒ0.0031 sallaá¹ƒva bho sunisitaá¹ƒ hadaye nimuggaá¹ƒ dosattayaá¹ƒ vividhapÄ• pamalena littaá¹ƒ,

nÄ• nÄ• vidhabyasanabhÄ• janamappasannaá¹ƒ

paÃ±Ã±Ä• mayena balisena nirÄ• karotha.

<95> nÄ• kampayanti sakalÄ• pi ca lokadhammÄ• cittaá¹ƒ sadÄ• pagatapÄ• pakilesasallaá¹ƒ,

rÅ«pÄ• dayo ca vividhÄ• visayÄ• samaggÄ•

phuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒva merusikharaá¹ƒ mahatÄ• nilena.

<96> saá¹ƒsÄ• radukkhamagaá¹‡eyya yathÄ• munindo gambhirapÄ• ramita sÄ• garamuttaritvÄ• ,

Ã±eyyaá¹ƒ abodhi nipuá¹‡aá¹ƒ hatamohajÄ• lo

tasmÄ• sadÄ• parahitaá¹ƒ paramaá¹ƒ ciá¹‡Ä• tha.

<97> ohÄ• ya soâ€™ dhigatamokkhasukhaá¹ƒ paresaá¹ƒ

atthÄ• ya saá¹ƒcari bhavesu mahabbhayesu,

evaá¹ƒ sadÄ• parahitaá¹ƒ purato karitvÄ•

dhammo mayÄ• nucarito jagadatthameva.

<98> á¹ƒ0.0032 laddhÄ• na dullabhataraÃ±ca manussayoniá¹ƒ

sabbaá¹ƒ papaÃ±carahitaá¹ƒ khaá¹‡asampadaÃ±ca,

Ã±atvÄ• na Ä• savanudekahitaÃ±ca dhammaá¹ƒ

ko paÃ±Ã±avÄ• anavaraá¹ƒ na bhajeyya dhammaá¹ƒ?

<99> laddhÄ• na buddhasamayaá¹ƒ atidullabhaá¹ƒca saddhamma maggamasamaá¹ƒ sivadaá¹ƒ tatheva,

kalyÄ• á¹‡amittapavare matisampadaÃ±ca

ko buddhimÄ• anavaraá¹ƒ na bhajeyya dhammaá¹ƒ?

<100> evampi dullabhataraá¹ƒ vibhave suladdhÄ• maccheradosa viratÄ• ubhayatthakÄ• mÄ• , saddhÄ• didhammasahitÄ• satatappamattÄ•

bho! bho! karotha amatÄ• dhigamÄ• ya puÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ.

264 4#S 1
DEVATA
#S 2
DEVAPUTTA
#S 3
KOSALA
#S 4
MARA
#S 5
BHIKKHUNI
#S 6
BRAHMA
#S 7
BRAHMANA
#S 8
VANGISATHERA
#S 9
VANA
#S 10
YAKKHA
#S 11
SAKKA
#S 12
NIDANA
#S 13
ABHISAMAYA
#S 14
DHATU
#S 15
ANAMATAGGA
#S 16
KASSAPA
#S 17
LABHASAKKARA
#S 18
RAHULA
#S 19
LAKKHANA

#S 20
OPAMMA
#S 21
BHIKKHU
#S 22
KHANDHA
#S 23
RADHA
#S 24
DITTHI
#S 25
OKKANTIKA
#S 26
UPPADA
#S 27
KILESA
#S 28
SARIPUTTA
#S 29
NAGA
#S 30
SUPANNA
#S 31
GANDHABBAKAYA
#S 32
VALAHA
#S 33
VACCHAGOTTA
#S 34
JHANA
#S 35
SALAYATANA
#S 36
VEDANA
#S 37
MATUGAMA
#S 38
JAMBHUKHADAKA

#S 39
SAMANDAKA
#S 40
MOGGALLANA
#S 41
CITTA
#S 42
GAMANI
#S 43
ASANKHATA
#S 44
AVYAKATA
#S 45
MAGGA
#S 46
BOJJHANGA
#S 47
SATIPATTHANA
#S 48
INDRIYA
#S 49
SAMMAPADHANA
#S 50
BALA
#S 51
IDDHIPADA
#S 52
ANURUDDHA
#S 53
JHANA
#S 54
ANAPANA
#S 55
SOTAPATTI
#S 56
SACCA

#D 1

BRAHMAJALA
#D 2
SAMANNAPHALA
#D 3
AMBATTHA
#D 4
SONADANDA
#D 5
KUTADANTA
#D 6
MAHALI
#D 7
JALIYA
#D 8
MAHASIHANADA
#D 9
POTTHAPADA
#D 10
SUBHA
#D 11
KEVADDHA
#D 12
LOHICCA
#D 13
TEVIJJA
#D 14
MAHAPADANA
#D 15
MAHANIDANA
#D 16
MAHAPARINIBBANA
#D 17
MAHASUDASSANA
#D 18
JANAVASABHA
#D 19
MAHAGOVINDA
#D 20

MAHASAMAYA
#D 21
SAKKAPANHA
#D 22 MAHASATIPATTHANA
#D 23
PAYASI
#D 24
PATIKA
#D 25 UDUMBARIKASIHANADA
#D 26 CAKKAVATTISIHANADA
#D 27
AGGANNA
#D 28
SAMPASADANIYA
#D 29
PASADIKA
#D 30
LAKKHANA
#D 31
SIGALAKA
#D 32
ATANATIYA
#D 33
SANGITI
#D 34
DASUTTARA
#M 1
MULAPARIYAYA
#M 2
SABBASAVA
#M 3
DHAMMADAYADA
#M 4
BHAYABHERAVA
#M 5

ANANGANA
#M 6
AKANKHEYYA
#M 7
VATTHUPAMA
#M 8
SALLEKHA
#M 9
SAMMADITTHI
#M 10
SATIPATTHANA
#M 11
CULASIHANADA
#M 12
MAHASIHANADA
#M 13 MAHADUKKHAKKHANDHA
#M 14 CULADUKKHAKKHANDHA
#M 15
ANUMANA
#M 16
CETOKHILA
#M 17
VANAPATTHA
#M 18
MADHUPINDIKA
#M 19
DVEDHAVITAKKA
#M 20
VITAKKASANTHANA
#M 21
KAKACUPAMA
#M 22
ALAGADDUPAMA
#M 23
VAMMIKA
#M 24

RATHAVINITA
#M 25
NIVAPA
#M 26
ARIYAPARIYESANA
#M 27 CULAHATTHIPADOPAMA
#M 28 MAHAHATTHIPADOPAMA
#M 29
MAHASAROPAMA
#M 30
CULASAROPAMA
#M 31
CULAGOSINGA
#M 32
MAHAGOSINGA
#M 33
MAHAGOPALAKA
#M 34
CULAGOPALAKA
#M 35
CULASACCAKA
#M 36
MAHASACCAKA
#M 37 CULATANHASANKHAYA
#M 38 MAHATANHASANKHAYA
#M 39
MAHAASSAPURA
#M 40
CULAASSAPURA
#M 41
SALEYYAKA
#M 42
VERANJAKA
#M 43

MAHAVEDALLA
#M 44
CULAVEDALLA
#M 45 CULADHAMMASAMADANA
#M 46
MAHADHAMMASAMADANA
#M 47
VIMAMSAKA
#M 48
KOSAMBIYA
#M 49 BRAHMANIMANTANIKA
#M 50
MARATAJJANIYA
#M 51
KANDARAKA
#M 52
ATTHAKANAGARA
#M 53
SEKHA
#M 54
POTALIYA
#M 55
JIVAKA
#M 56
UPALI
#M 57
KUKKURAVATIKA
#M 58 ABHAYARAJAKUMARA
#M 59
BAHUVEDANIYA
#M 60
APANNAKA
#M 61
AMBALATTHIKARAHULOVADA
#M 62

MAHARAHULOVADA
#M 63
CULAMALUNKYA
#M 64
MAHAMALUNKYA
#M 65
BHADDALI
#M 66
LATUKIKOPAMA
#M 67
CATUMA
#M 68
NALAKAPANA
#M 69
GULISSANI
#M 70
KITAGIRI
#M 71 TEVIJJAVACCHAGOTTA
#M 72
AGGIVACCHAGOTTA
#M 73
MAHAVACCHAGOTTA
#M 74
DIGHANAKHA
#M 75
MAGANDIYA
#M 76
SANDAKA
#M 77
MAHASAKULUDAYI
#M 78
SAMANAMANDIKA
#M 79
CULASAKULUDAYI
#M 80
VEKHANASSA
#M 81

GHATIKARA
#M 82
RATTHAPALA
#M 83
MAKHADEVA
#M 84
MADHURA
#M 85
BODHIRAJAKUMARA
#M 86
ANGULIMALA
#M 87
PIYAJATIKA
#M 88
BAHITIKA
#M 89
DHAMMACETIYA
#M 90
KANNAKATTHALA
#M 91
BRAHMAYU
#M 92
SELA
#M 93
ASSALAYANA
#M 94
GHOTAMUKHA
#M 95
CANKI
#M 96
ESUKARI
#M 97
DHANANJANI
#M 98
VASETTHA
#M 99
SUBHA
#M 100

SANGARAVA
#M 101
DEVADAHA
#M 102
PANCATTAYA
#M 103
KINTI
#M 104
SAMAGAMA
#M 105
SUNAKKHATTA
#M 106
ANENJASAPPAYA
#M 107
GANAKAMOGGALLANA
#M 108
GOPAKAMOGGALLANA
#M 109
MAHAPUNNAMA
#M 110
CULAPUNNAMA
#M 111
ANUPADA
#M 112
CHABBISODHANA
#M 113
SAPPURISA
#M 114 SEVITABBASEVITABBA
#M 115
BAHUDHATUKA
#M 116
ISIGILLI
#M 117
MAHACATTARISAKA
#M 118
ANAPANASATI
#M 119

KAYAGATASATI
#M 120
SANKHARUPAPATTI
#M 121
CULASUNNATA
#M 122
MAHASUNNATA
#M 123
ACCHARIYAABBHUTA
#M 124
BAKKULA
#M 125
DANTABHUMI
#M 126
BHUMIJA
#M 127
ANURUDDHA
#M 128
UPAKKILESA
#M 129
BALAPANDITA
#M 130
DEVADUTA
#M 131
BHADDEKARATTA
#M 132
ANANDABHADDEKARATTA
#M 133
MAHAKACCANABHADDEKARATTA
#M 134
LOMASAKANGIYABHADDEKARATTA
#M 135
CULAKAMMAVIBHANGA
#M 136
MAHAKAMMAVIBHANGA
#M 137
SALAYATANAVIBHANGA
#M 138

UDDESAVIBHANGA
#M 139
ARANAVIBHANGA
#M 140
DHATUVIBHANGA
#M 141
SACCAVIBHANGA
#M 142
DAKKHINAVIBHANGA
#M 143 ANATHAPINDIKOVADA
#M 144
CHANNOVADA
#M 145
PUNNOVADA
#M 146
NANDAKOVADA
#M 147
CULARAHULOVADA
#M 148
CHACHAKKA
#M 149 MAHASALAYATANIKA
#M 150
NAGARAVINDEYYA
#M 151
PINDAPATAPARISUDDHI
#M 152
INDRIYABHAVANA
MV 1
MAHA

MV 2
UPOSATHA

MV 3
VASSUPANAYIKA

MV 4
PAVARANA

MV 5
CAMMA

MV 6
BHESAJJA

MV 7
KATHINA

MV 8
CIVARA

MV 9
CAMPEYYA

MV 10
KOSAMBA

CV 1
KAMMA

CV 2
PARIVASIKA

CV 3
SAMUCCAYA

CV 4
SAMATHA

CV 5
KUDDHAKAVATTHU

CV 6
SENASANA

CV 7
SANGHABHEDA

CV 8
VATTA

CV 9
PATIMOKKHATHAPANA

CV 10
BHIKKHUNI

CV 11
PANCASATIKA

CV 12
SATTASATIKA

ÉÍÍÍ

==========

Tibetan Meditation, Yoga, and Spiritual Practice Sources

==========

==========

Buddhism - General
==========

"550 Books on Buddhism"
Dharma Publishing

"Bodhisattva of Compassion"
by John Blofeld
Shambhala Publications

"Entering the Stream" Excellent Introduction to Buddhism
An Introduction to the Buddha and His Teachings by Samuel Burcholz and Sherab Chodzin Kohn
Shambhala Publications

"How the Swans Came to the Lake"
A History of Buddhism in America
Dharma Communications

"The Shambhala Dictionary of Buddhism and Zen"
Shambhala Publications

"Ways of Enlightenment" Techniques of Spritual Practice Buddhist Studies at Nyingma Institute Dharma Publishing Excellent Introduction to Buddhist Practice

==========

Tibetan Buddhism - General

==========

Note: Anyone interested in the practice or study of Tibetan Buddhism should obtain the book catalogs from:
Dharma Publishing
Shambhala Publications Inc.
Snow Lion Publications
Dharma Communications
and "550 Books on Buddhism"

Note: There are many excellent books by The 14th Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso.

"Kindness, Clarity, and Insight"
by The 14th Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso

"Magic and Mystery in Tibet" Penguin Book

"Initiations and Initiates in Tibet"
Shambhala Publications, Inc.
by Alexandra David-Neel

"Memoirs of Political Officer's Wife in Tibet, Sikkim, and Bhutan"
by Margret D. Williamson in collaboration with John Snelling Wisdom Publications

"Ocean of Wisdom"
by The 14th Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso

"Opening of the Wisdom Eye"
by The 14th Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso

"Princess in the Land of Snows"
by Jamyang Sakya and Julie Emery Shambhala Publishing

"Reflections of a Himalayan Pilgrim"

"Way of the White Clouds"
by Lama Anagarika Govinda

"Tibetan Buddhism from the Ground Up" A Practical Approach for Modern Life
by B. Alan Wallace
Dharmacrafts

==========

Meditation - Practice
==========

Note: Many of the best books on meditation and yoga are advertised in "Yoga International" Magazine.

Note: Many meditation and yoga books by all publishers listed here are available from Dharma Communications or Shambhala Publications. Both have catalogs and do extensive mail order.

Note: Anyone interested in the practice or study of Buddhism should obtain the book "550 Books on Buddhism" from Dharma Publishing.

==========

Introduction To Meditation Books
==========

These are particularly good first books, but not only first books, on meditation.

"How to Meditate"
A Practical Guide
by Kathleen McDonald

edited by Robina Courtin
Dharma Communications

"Meditation" Kagyu Master Advice to Beginners
by Bokar Rinpoche
Dharma Communications

"The Practice of Tranquility and Insight" Kagyu Master
A Guide to Tibetan Buddhist Meditation
by Khenchen Thrangu
Dharma Communications

==========

Meditation - Practice
==========

"Kum Nye" Volumes 1 and 2 Good sections on meditation, by Lama Tarthang Tulku Tibetan Yoga, and self Dharma Publishing massage

"Meditation"
Advice to Beginners
by Bokar Rinpoche
DharmaCrafts

"Openness Mind"
by Lama Tarthang Tulku
Dharma Publishing

"The Practice of Tranquillity and Insight"
A Guide to Tibetan Buddhist Meditation
by Kenchen Thrangu

==========

Tibetan
=======

"A Flash of Lightning in the Dark of Night"
A Guide to the Bodhisattva's Way of Life
by H.H. the Dalai Lama
DharmaCrafts

"Gesture of Balance"
by Lama Tarthang Tulku
Dharma Publishing

"Introduction to Tibetan Buddhism"
by John Powers
Snow Lion Publications

"Shambhala - Sacred Path of the Warrior"
by Lama Chogyam Trungpa
Shambhala Publishing

"The Practice of Tranquility and Insight" Practical guide
A Guide to Tibetan Buddhist Meditation Beginning and advanced by Khenchen Trangyu
DharmaCrafts

"The Snow Lion's Turquoise Mane" Wisdom Tales from Tibet
by Surya Das
introduction by the Dalai Lama foreward by Daniel Goleman

"The Tibetan Book of the Dead" One of the first Tibetan spiritual
The Great Liberation through books ever transalated into English Hearing in the Bardo transalated with commentary
by Francesca Freemantle and Lama Chogyam Trungpa
Shambhala Publications

"The Tibetan Book of Living and Dying"
by Sogyal Rinpoche
Snow Lion Publications

"The World of Tibetan Buddhism"
An Overview of Its Philosophy and Practice
by Tenzin Gyatzo, The 14th Dalai Lama Translated, edited, and annotated by Geshe Thupten Jinpa
Wisdom Publications

Numerous other books
by the Dalai Lama

==========

Tantra
======

"Introduction to Tantra"
A Vision of Totality
by Lama Yeshe
edited by Jonathan Landaw
Dharma Communications

"Passionate Enlightenment: Women in Tantric Buddhism"
by Miranda Shaw
Princeton University Press
This thoroughly researched treatise is an excellent book
on the correct, practical aspects of tantric practice.

"Mother of the Universe: Visions of the Goddess and Tantric Hymns of Enlightenment"
by Les Hixson
Quest Books

-- Ramprasad and Application

"Tantra"
by Philup Rawson

"Tantric Mysticsm of Tibet"
by John Blofeld

"Tantric Practices in Nying-Ma"
by Khetsun Sangpo Rinpoche

"Yoga, Tantra, and Meditation in Daily Life"
by Swami Janakananda
Pyramid Books

==========

Applying Meditation And Spiritual Life To Everyday Life Path of Action
==========

Note: Many books on application of meditation and spiritual practice to daily life are listed in the catalogs of Dharma Communications and Parallax Press.

"A Guide to Walking Meditation"
by Thich Nhat Hanh Fellowship Publications
Note: A practical instruction book by Zen Master Thich Nhat Hanh on how to extend formal meditation to the process of walking.

"Chenrezig, Lord of Love" Principles and Methods of Deity Meditation
by Bokar Rinpoche
DharmaCrafts

"Enlightened Courage"
An Explanation of Atisha's Seven Point Mind Training
by Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche
DharmaCrafts

"Mastering Successful Work" Techniques on how to apply spiritual by Lama Tarthang Tulku practices to work.
Dharma Publishing

"Skillful Means" Techniques on how to apply spiritual by Lama Tarthang Tulku practices in daily life.
Dharma Publishing

"Start Where You Are"
A Guide to Compassionate Living
by Pema Chodron
DharmaCrafts

"Transforming Problems Into Happiness"
by Lama Zopa Rinpoche Wisdom Publications

==========

Retreat -- Ascetic Practice
==========

"Jamgon Kontrul's Retreat Manual" translated by Ngawang Zangpo
DharmaCrafts

"Living With the Himalayan Masters" by Swami Rama
Himalayan Institute Publishing

"Sanctuaries"
The Northeast A Guide to Lodgings in Monasteries, Abbeys, and Retreats in the United States
by Jack and Marcia Kelley
Shambhala Publications

==========

Women's Spirituality
==========

"Mother of Knowledge" Formost Disciple of Padmasambhava
Biography of Lady Yeshes mTsho-rgyal
Dharma Publishing

"Passionate Enlightenment: Women in Tantric Buddhism"
by Miranda Shaw
Princeton University Press
This thoroughly researched treatise is an excellent book
on the correct, practical aspects of tantric practice.

==========

Children's Spiritual Books
==========

Note: DharmaCrafts has many spiritual books for children.

"A Treasury of Wise Action" Jataka Tales for Older Children
Jataka Tales of Compassion And Wisdom
Dharma Communications

"Dharma Family Treasures" Sharing Mindfulness with Children edited by Sandy Eastoak
DharmaCrafts

"Jataka Tales" Classic Series of Buddhist Stories
Dharma Publishing
Dharma Communications

"Learning from the Dalai Lama" Secrets of the Wheel of Time by Karen Pandell & Barry Bryant
foreward by Richard Gere
Dharma Communications

Simple introduction to the Buddhist way of life for children. How to make mandalas at home.
Kalachakra

==========

Martial Arts/Warrior Path And Spiritual Practice Books
==========

"The Door to Satisfaction"
The Heart Advice of an Tibetan Buddhist Master
by Lama Thubten Zopa Rinpoche
DharmaCrafts

==========

The Arts And Spiritual Practice Books
==========

"Creating Mandalas"
For Insight, Healing, and Self-Expression
by Susanne F. Fincher Foreward by Robert A. Johnson
Shambhala Publications

==========

Spiritual Practice Book Publishers and Distributors
==========

Book catalogues are generally available :

21st Century Bookstore -- Spiritual Children's Books
P.O. Box 702 -- Imports from India
Fairfield, IA 52556
(515) 472-5105

Asian Humanities Press
P.O. Box 3523
Fremont, CA 94539
(510) 659-8272
(510) 659-0501 -- Fax

Bodhi Tree Bookstore Catalog and Extensive Mail Order
8585 Melrose Ave.
West Hollywood, CA 90069
(800) 825-9798

Blue Dolphin Press Tibetan and Kagyu books
12380 Nevada City Highway
Nevada City, CA 95959
(916) 265-6923

Dharma Communications Zen Mountain Monastery
P.O. Box 156
South Plank Road
Mt. Tremper, NY 12457
(914) 688-7993

Dharma Publishing Nyingmapa Institute
2425 Hillside Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 548-5407

DharmaCrafts
405 Waltham St.
Suite 234
Lexington, MA 02173
(617) 862-9211

East West Bookshop
1170 El Camino Real
Menlo Park, CA 94025
(415) 325-5709

Element Books
42 Broadway
Rockport, MA 01966

Heian International, Inc.
1815 West 205th Street
Suite 301
Torrance, CA 90501

Himalayan Academy Publications
1819 Second St.
Concord, CA 94519

Himalayan Institute Publishing
RR1 Box 400
Honesdale, PA 18431
(800) 822-4547

Inner Directions — Taoist books and others
P.O. Box 231486
Encinitas, CA 92023
(800) 545-9119

Kamtsang Choling USA Bookstore — Tibetan Kagyu books
P.O. Box 27901-452
San Francisco, CA 94127
(415) 661-6467

Nilgiri Press — Books for translating spiritual ideals into daily life
Box 256
Tomales, CA 94971
(800) 475-2369

Parallax Press Books on meditation, application
P.O. Box 7355 to daily life and social activity
Berkeley, CA 94707 Books by Thich Hhat Hanh

Pacific Spirit Whole Life Products
The Mystic Trader Large selection of Tibetan Religious articles
Forest Grove, OR 97116
(800) 634-9057

Pyramid Books
New Age Collection
P.O. Box 3333
Altid Park
Chelmsford, MA 01824-0933
(800) 333-4220

Samuel Weisner Books One of the oldest
Box 612
York Beach, ME 03910-0612
(800) 423-7087

Shambhala Publications Inc. Major publisher
300 Massachusetts Ave.
Horticultural Hall
Boston, MA 02115
(617) 424-0228

Shasta Abbey Buddhist Supplies Zen Center
Box 199
Mt. Shasta, CA 96067
(916) 926-6682 -- Customer Service
(800) 653-3315 -- Orders
(916) 926-5796 -- Fax

Snow Lion Publications
P.O. Box 6483 Extensive Tibetan Books and Material
Ithaca, NY 14851
(800) 950-0313

(607) 273-8519

State University of New York Press
C/O CUP Services
P.O. Box 6525
Ithaca, NY 14851
(800) 666-2211 Orders
(607) 277-2211 Customer Service

Triumph Books
Box 216
Liguori, MO 63057-9999
(800) 325-9521, ext. 216

Wisdom Publications
361 Newbury St,
Boston, MA 02115
(800) 272-4050

Windhorse Publications Buddhist Books by Ven. Sangharakshita Heartwood Circle
Newmarket, NH 003857
(603) 659-5456

Yes International Publishers
(800) 866-2672

==========
Spiritual Art, Statues, Thankas, Meditation Supplies
==========

Charles O.Hara
P.O. Box121
Susquehana, PA 18847
(717) 853-4725

Dharma Communications Zen Mountain Monastery
P.O. Box 156

South Plank Road
Mt. Tremper, NY 12457
(914) 688-7993

Dharma Publications Nyingmapa Institute
2425 Hillside Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 845-1710

DharmaCrafts
405 Waltham St.
Suite 234
Lexington, MA 02173
(617) 862-9211

Pacific Spirit Whole Life Products
1334 Pacific Ave.
Forest Grove, OR 97116
(800) 634-9057

Pyramid Books
New Age Collection
P.O. Box 3333
Altid Park
Chelmsford, MA 01824-0933
(800) 333-4220

Shasta Abbey Buddhist Supplies Zen Center
Box 199
Mt. Shasta, CA 96067
(916) 926-6682 -- Customer Service
(800) 653-3315 -- Orders
(916) 926-5796 -- Fax

Tara Enterprises
Kunzang Palyul Choling Monastery Tibetan (800) 775-TARA

==========

Spiritual Practice Video, Audio, Material for the Blind

==========

Audio Literature Presents Buddhist Books on Cassette 3800 Palos Verdes Way
South San Francisco, CA 94080
(415) 952-3400
(800) 841-2665

Dharma Communications Zen Mountain Monastery
P.O. Box 156 Large selection
South Plank Road
Mt. Tremper, NY 12457
(914) 688-7993

Specific Videos:
"Introduction to Zen Meditation"
"Introduction to Zen Buddhism"
"The Home Practice Tape"

DharmaCrafts
405 Waltham St.
Suite 234
Lexington, MA 02173
(617) 862-9211

Pacific Spirit
1334 Pacific Ave.
Forest Grove, OR 97116
(800) 634-9057

==========

Periodicals -- Magazines

==========

Gesar Tibetan Buddhism Journal
Dharma Publishing

2145 Hillside Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 548-5407

Kagyu Life International Tibetan Kagyu Journal
P.O. Box 27901-452
San Francisco, CA 94127
(415) 661-6467

Mandala Journal
The Foundation for the Preservation of the Mahayana Tradition
FPMT Central Office
P.O. Box 1778
Soquel, CA 95073
(408) 476-8435

Purple Lotus Journal
Amitabha Publishing
628 San Mateo Ave.
San Bruno, CA 94066
(415) 589-9559

Shambhala Sun
1365 Spruce St.
Boulder, CO 80302-4886
(902) 422-8404

Tantra
P.O. Box 108
Torreon, NM 87061-0108
(505) 384-2292

Tricycle, The Buddhist Reveiw
P.O. Box 3000
Denville, NJ 07834-9897
(800) 950-7008

==========

Book Stores -- Meditation, Yoga

==========

Bodhi Tree Bookstore Catalog and Extensive Mail Order
8585 Melrose Ave.
West Hollywood, CA 90069
(800) 825-9798

Field's Bookstore Polk at California 1419 Polk St.
San Francisco, CA 94109
(415) 673-2027

Forest Books New and Used 3080 16th St. Mail Order
San Francisco, CA 94103
(415) 863-2755

Moe's Books -- Used Books Telegraph and Dwight Way 2476 Telegraph Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 849-2087

Shambhala Booksellers Telegraph and Dwight Way
2482 Telegraph Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 848-8443

Shakespere's Books -- Used Books Telegraph and Dwight Way 2499 Telegraph Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 841-8916

==========

Centers -- Meditation -- Practice

==========

==========
California
==========

Most of these places offer free instruction in meditation.
Call for details.

This listing is primarily for the San Francisco Bay Area.
A few major National Institutes are also listed. For Meditation and Yoga Instruction in other areas, the following books, available from Shambhala Books in Berkeley, CA, can be consulted.

"A Handbook of Tibetan Culture"
"Buddhist America"
"Spirit Seeker's Guide"

"North American Guide to Vajradhatu Centers"
available from: -- Lama Chogyam Trungpa, Kagyu Tradition
Karma Dzong -- Meditation Centers related to 1345 Spruce St. -- Naropa Institute
Boulder, CO 80302
(303) 444-0190

==========
==========
Tibetan

==========
Dharmadhatu -- Kagyu -- Lama Chogyam Trungpa
2288 Fulton St. -- Meditation -- Instruction
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 841-3242
(510) 649-9470

==========
Dharmadhatu -- Kagyu -- Kalu Rinpoche

1892 Fell St. -- Meditation -- Instruction
San Francisco, CA
(415) 752-5454

==========
Kamtsang Choling USA -- Kagyu -- Shamar Rinpoche
Buddhist Centers -- Lama Ole Nydhal
33 Marne Ave. -- Meditation -- Instruction
San Francisco, CA 94127 -- Beginners welcome, retreats
(415) 661-6467
74034,1033 -- email Compuserve ID

California Centers in:
Los Angeles
Nevada City
San Diego
San Luis Obispo
Tiajuana

160 Worldwide and 15 USA Centers

==========
Nyingmapa Institute -- Meditation, Yoga
1815 Highland Place -- Many types of instruction
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 843-6812

==========
Padma Shedrup Ling -- Lama Yonten
Box 117 -- Meditation -- Instruction
Fairfax, CA 94978
(415) 485-1356

==========
Sang-ngak-cho-dzong -- Nyingma 2508 Eagle Ave.
Alameda, CA 94501
(510) 865-1394

==========
National Locations
==========

For meditation and yoga instruction in various locations, the following books, available from Shambhala Books in Berkeley, CA, can be consulted.

"A Handbook of Tibetan Culture"
"Buddhist America"
"Spirit Seeker's Guide"

"North American Guide to Vajradhatu Centers"
available from: -- Lama Chogyam Trungpa, Kagyu Tradition
Karma Dzong -- Meditation Centers related to 1345 Spruce St. -- Naropa Institute
Boulder, CO 80302
(303) 444-0190

==========
==========
Kamtsang Choling -- Kagyu -- Shamar Rinpoche
Buddhist Centers -- Lama Ole Nydhal
33 Marne Ave. -- Meditation -- Instruction
San Francisco, CA 94127 -- Beginners welcome, retreats
(415) 661-6467 -- International Institute
74034,1033 -- email Compuserve ID

California Centers in:
Los Angeles
Nevada City
San Diego
San Luis Obispo
Tijuana

160 Worldwide and 15 USA Centers Call, write, or email for locations

==========

Namgyal Institute -- Buddhist Studies
P.O. Box 127 -- North American Monastery
Ithaca, NY 14851 -- of the Dalai Lama
(607) 273-0739

==========

Naropa Institute -- Kagyu, Lama Chogyam Trungpa 2130 Arapahoe Ave.
Boulder, CO 80302
(303) 444-0202

==========

Sakya Monastery of Tibetan Buddhism
108 N.W. 83rd Ave.
Seattle, WA 98100
(206) 789-2573

==========

The Foundation for the Preservation of the Mahayana Tradition
FPMT Central Office Global network of Buddhist centers and
P.O. Box 1778 activities
Soquel, CA 95073 Founded by Lama Thubten Yeshe and (408) 476-8435 Lama Thubten Zopa Rinpoche

==========

Vegetarian Cook Books

==========

"The Odiyan Cook Book"
Dharma Publishing

==========

Computer Community

==========

There are a number of Buddhist Computer Bulletin Boards. Several are listed as a place to start.

Access to Insight — Specializes in Theravada Buddhism and practice centers
P.O. Box 107
Pepperell, MA 01463
(508) 433-5847

America Online — Buddhist special interest groups and file library
(614) 457-8600

BuddhaNet — Buddhist file library
+61-2-456-4483 — member of both DharmaNet and BodhiNet

Compuserve — Large online Buddhist community
(614) 457-8600

Dharmanet International — Major Buddhist network
Barry Kapke, Director
P.O. Box 4951
Berkeley, CA 94704-4951

Dzogchen Foundation
http://www.kei.com/homepages/surya/dzogchen/

Kamtsang Choling Home Page — International Kagyu Organization
http://144.92.74.130

Lama Surya Das
http://www.kei.com/homepages/surya/

Nyingma Institute Home Page
http://www-leland.stanford.edu:80/~wgs/nyngctr.html

Tiger Team Buddhist Information Network 1920 Francisco St.
Suite 112
Berkeley, CA 94709

(510) 268-0102 -- data -- Specializes in Tibetan and Zen Buddhism
(510) 540-6565 -- voice

The Well Large collection of Buddhist special interest groups info@well.sf.ca.us large online Buddhist community
(415) 332-4335

==========
Human Rights -- Socially Engaged Spiritual Practice
==========

Amnesty International
San Francisco Office
(415) 441-3733

Ananda Marga Tantra Yoga Path of Bliss
Quest Center activity in 200 countries
R.R. 1, Box 1366
Hop Bottom, PA 18824
(717) 289-4021

Buddhist Peace Fellowship Engaged Buddhism -- Peace, Ecology, etc
P.O. Box 4650
Berkeley, CA 94704
(510) 525-8596

Community of Mindful Living Engaged Buddhism -- Peace, Ecology, etc
P.O. Box 7355 Mindfullness practice in daily life
Berkeley, CA 94704 Thich Nhat Hanh orientation
(510) 527-3751

Fellowship of Reconciliation
Box 271
Nyack, NY 10960
The nondenominational Fellowship is dedicated to nonviolent resolution of conflict, integration of faith in daily life, and compassionate action.

Tibet:----------

Canada Tibet Committee
4675 Coolbrook
Montreal, Quebec H3X ZK7 Canada
(514)-487-0665
(514)-487-7825
email: fourniel@ere.umontreal.ca

International Campaign for Tibet Representative of the Dalai Lama 1735 I Street, NW, Suite 615
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 785-1515
(202) 785-4343 Fax
email: ict@igc@apc.org

International Committee of Lawyers for Tibet 347 Dolores Street, Suite 206
San Francisco, CA. 94110
(415)-252-5967
(415)-626-0865 Fax
email: iclt@igc.apc.org

Tibet House Brochures and newsletters 241 East 32nd St.
New York, NY 10016

Tibet Support Group
43 New Oxford Street
London WC1A IBH England
71-240-2493
71-405-3814 Fax
email: tibetsupport@gn.apc.org

Tibetan Aid Project Supports monks, nuns, and monasteries in Asia 2910 San Pablo Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94702

(800) 33-TIBET
(510) 84-TIBET
(510) 548-2230 Fax
email: tap@dnai.com

Tibetan Rights Campaign
4649 Sunnyside Ave. North
Suite 342
P.O. Box 31966
Seattle, WA 98103-0066
(206) 547-1015

Newsletter

Tibetan Woman's Association
Mcleodganj, Dharamala, HP, India
91-1892-2527
91-1892-4213 Fax
email: two@cta.unv.ernet.in

Women Working For Tibetans
P.O. Box 21614
1850 Commercial Drive
Vancouver, B.C. V5N 4A0
(604)-737-7701

==========
==========

<!-- vvvv

<!-- vvvv

please download this

http://www.mettanet.org/tipitaka/index.html

http://www.accesstoinsight.org/lib/bulk.html

THE NOBLE EIGHTFOLD PATH:

The Way to the End of Suffering

by Bhikkhu Bodhi

First edition 1984 published as Wheel Publication No. 308/311
Second edition (revised) 1994

Copyright 1984, 1994 by Bhikkhu Bodhi

Buddhist Publication Society
PO Box 61
54, Sangharaja Mawatha
Kandy, Sri Lanka
ISBN 955-24-0116-X

This electronic edition is offered FOR FREE DISTRIBUTION ONLY
by arrangement with the publisher.

This text is a gift of Dhamma. You may print this file for your personal use, and you may make and distribute unaltered copies of this file, provided that you charge no fees of any kind for its distribution. Otherwise, all rights reserved.

This electronic edition was transcribed directly from the BPS's PageMaker disks by John Bullitt <metta@world.std.com>. The endnotes have been moved from the end of the book to the end of the chapters in which the notes appear.

* * * * * * * *

CONTENTS

TITLE.TXT Title Page, Preface, Abbreviations
CHAPTER1.TXT The Way to the End of Suffering
CHAPTER2.TXT Right View
CHAPTER3.TXT Right Intentions
CHAPTER4.TXT Right Speech, Right Action, and Right Livelihood
CHAPTER5.TXT Right Effort
CHAPTER6.TXT Right Mindfulness
CHAPTER7.TXT Right Concentration
CHAPTER8.TXT The Development of Wisdom
Epilogue
APPENDIX.TXT Appendix: A Factorial Analysis of the Noble Eightfold Path Recommended Readings
About the Author

* * * * * * * *

PREFACE

The essence of the Buddha's teaching can be summed up in two principles: the Four Noble Truths and the Noble Eightfold Path. The first covers the side of doctrine, and the primary response it elicits is understanding; the second covers the side of discipline, in the broadest sense of that word, and the primary response it calls for is practice. In the structure of the teaching these two principles lock together into an indivisible unity called the //dhamma-vinaya//, the doctrine-and-discipline, or, in brief, the Dhamma. The internal unity of the Dhamma is guaranteed by the fact that the last of the Four

Noble Truths, the truth of the way, is the Noble Eightfold Path, while the first factor of the Noble Eightfold Path, right view, is the understanding of the Four Noble Truths. Thus the two principles penetrate and include one another, the formula of the Four Noble Truths containing the Eightfold Path and the Noble Eightfold Path containing the Four Truths.

Given this integral unity, it would be pointless to pose the question which of the two aspects of the Dhamma has greater value, the doctrine or the path. But if we did risk the pointless by asking that question, the answer would have to be the path. The path claims primacy because it is precisely this that brings the teaching to life. The path translates the Dhamma from a collection of abstract formulas into a continually unfolding disclosure of truth. It gives an outlet from the problem of suffering with which the teaching starts. And it makes the teaching's goal, liberation from suffering, accessible to us in our own experience, where alone it takes on authentic meaning.

To follow the Noble Eightfold Path is a matter of practice rather than intellectual knowledge, but to apply the path correctly it has to be properly understood. In fact, right understanding of the path is itself a part of the practice. It is a facet of right view, the first path factor, the forerunner and guide for the rest of the path. Thus, though initial enthusiasm might suggest that the task of intellectual comprehension may be shelved as a bothersome distraction, mature consideration reveals it to be quite essential to ultimate success in the practice.

The present book aims at contributing towards a proper understanding of the Noble Eightfold Path by investigating its eight factors and their components to determine exactly what they involve. I have attempted to be concise, using as the framework for exposition the Buddha's own words in explanation of the path factors, as found in the Sutta Pit@aka of the Pali Canon. To assist the reader with limited access to primary sources even in translation, I have tried to confine my selection of quotations as much as possible (but not completely) to those found in Venerable Nyanatiloka's classic anthology, //The Word of the Buddha//. In some cases passages taken from that work have been slightly modified, to accord with my own preferred renderings. For further amplification of meaning I have sometimes drawn upon the commentaries; especially in my accounts of concentration and wisdom (Chapters VII and VIII) I have relied heavily on the //Visuddhimagga// (//The Path of Purification//), a vast encyclopedic work which systematizes the practice of the path in a detailed and comprehensive manner. Limitations of space prevent an exhaustive treatment of each factor. To compensate for this deficiency I have included a list of recommended readings at the end, which the reader may consult for more detailed explanations of individual path factors. For full commitment to the practice of the path, however, especially in its advanced stages of concentration and insight, it will be extremely helpful to have contact with a properly qualified teacher.

Bhikkhu Bodhi

* * * * * * * *

Abbreviations

Textual references have been abbreviated as follows:

DN Digha Nikaya (number of sutta)
MN Majjhima Nikaya (number of sutta)
SN Samyutta Nikaya (chapter and number of sutta)
AN Anguttara Nikaya (numerical collection and number of sutta)
Dhp Dhammapada (verse)
Vism Visuddhimagga

References to Vism. are to the chapter and section number of the translation by Bhikkhu Nanamoli, //The Path of Purification// (BPS ed. 1975, 1991)

* * * * * * * *

ï»¿ <h1>DĀNA</h1>Comment contribuer (sans argent !) à dhammadana.org</a

Parajika 1
Ê× ²¨ ÂÞ ÒÄ
Origin Story
Ôµ Æð ¹Ê ÊÂ
On one occasion, the Buddha taught Dhamma to a large gathering of people at Vesali. Soon dispersed, 'gladdened and delighted' by the discourse, the young man Sudinna, the son of t Kalanda Village, approached the Buddha and asked to join the order of monks. He was told their parents' consent could be ordained and so Sudinna returned home to ask his parents f
ÓÐ Ò» ´Î£¬ ÊÀ ×ð ÔÚ Åþ Éá Àë (Vesali) ³Ç Îª Ò» ´ó Èº ÖÚ ¿ª Ê¾ ·ð Àí¡£ ·ð Àí ¿ª Ê¾ ¹ý ºó
Ãû Ðë Ìá ÄÇ (Sudinna) µÄ Äê Çá ÈË£¬ Ëû ÊÇ åÈ À¼ ÍÓ (Kalanda) ´å ÖÐ Ò» ´ó ¸» ÉÌ µÄ ¶ù
ÐÄ Éú »¶ Ï² âù ÔÃ£¬ Ç° È¥ ¼û ÊÀ ×ð Æò Çó ³ö ¼Ò¡£ Ëû ±» ¸æ Öª£º ½ö ÓÐ ÊÂ ÏÈ µÃ µ½
Ðë Ìá ÄÇ »Ø Ïç Ïò Ë« Ç× Çë Çó Ëû Á½ µÄ Ðí ¿É¡£
His parents refused. They made it plain that they could never allow their only child to leave t quickly realized that further pleading would be useless and so there and then he lay down o telling his parents "If you don't let me ordain, I will die right here!"
For several days Sudinna lay there, not eating, hearing his parents' desperate entreaties.
Ëû µÄ Ë« Ç× ¾Ü ¾ø¡£ Ëû ÃÇ Ö± ½Ó ¸æ Ëß Ëû Ëµ£¬ Ëû ÊÇ Ëû ÃÇ Î¨ Ò» µÄ ¶ù ×Ó£¬ ¾ø
Ìá ÄÇ ¾Í Ã÷ ÁË ÔÙ Çó ÏÂ È¥ Ò² ÊÇ °× ·Ñ µÄ¡£ Ëû µ± ÏÂ ÎÔ µ¹ ÔÚ µØ£¬ ²¢ ¸æ Öª Ëû µÄ ¸¸
ÈÃ ÎÒ ³ö ¼Ò£¬ ÎÒ ¾Í ËÀ ÔÚ Õâ Àï£¡¡± Ðë Ìá ÄÇ ¾Í Õâ Ñù ÔÚ ÄÇ µØ ÉÏ ÌÉ ÁË ºÃ ¼¸ Ìì£¬ Ëû Ë« Ç× µÄ ¿Ò Çó£º
"Dear Sudinna, our only child, precious and beloved ..... Your death would leave us desola despair ..... Please get up dear son, eat and drink and enjoy yourself ..... Amuse yourself w pleasures of youth and when you wish you can do meritorious deeds as well ....." ¡°Ç× °® µÄ Ðë Ìá ÄÇ£¡ ÎÒ ÃÇ ¾´ °® ±¦ ±´ µÄ ¶À Éú ×Ó£¬ ¡-¡- Äã µÄ ËÀ Íö ½« ¸ø ÎÒ ÃÇ ´ø ºÃ ¶ù ×Ó£¡ Çë Æð À´ °É£¡ ³Ô °¡£¬ ºÈ °¡£¬ Ïí ÊÜ ÈË Éú ¡-¡- ÒÔ Çà ´º Äê »ª È¥ Óé ÀÖ ×Ô ½ Ëæ Äã µÄ Ï² »¶ ×ö ÉÆ ÊÂ ÖÖ ¸£ ¡-¡-¡£¡±
The parents called in Sudinna's friends to try to bring their son back to his senses but throug remained unmoved, resolute in his aim. The parents were left with no choice; rather than ha they gave their consent for him to ordain.

After his ordination, Sudinna went far away from his parents to the land of the Vajji where he practised the duties of a bhikkhu, also observing some of the Dhutaoga austerities. Some tim there came to be a great famine in the land of the Vajji, Sudinna decided to return to his hom Kalanda and look to his family for his basic needs.
His parents were overjoyed to see their son return after such a long and immediately they co back into layman life. They invited him to take his one meal of the day in their house the nex prepared more than food for their son, Sudinna. They massed their wealth into huge heaps Sudinna's ex-wife clothed in the gown, jewellery and perfumes which were once irresistibly a husband and stood her between the gold. They offered the meal to Sudinna and then led hi with his ex-wife displaying her charm in the midst and offered that to him!

Sudinna responded by saying to his father, whom he addressed as "householder", that he w by placing the gold in hempen sacks and sinking the lot in the middle of the Ganges! Then t bedazzling ex-wife he disdainfully called her "sister" at the shock of which she fainted away.
though was more cunning: "At least beget us an heir, a grandchild", she entreated, "so that not be lost with our death". The stubborn old woman pleaded with Sudinna over and over u yielded; and he agreed to produce an offspring. Thus a few days later, in a secluded forest, Sudinna had sexual intercourse with a woman, his ex-wife.
Sudinna soon became prey to guilt and remorse-- "he became haggard, wretched, of bad c veins showing all over his body, melancholy, of sluggish mind, depressed, repentant, weigh fellow bhikkhus noticed something was bothering him. Thus it was that Ven. Sudinna confes the bhikkhus and thereafter to the Buddha.
The Buddha chided Ven. Sudinna saying that it would have been better for Sudinna if he ha the mouth of a venomous black snake or a red-hot pit of charcoal because even though that excruciatingly painful, even causing an agonizing death, that would be as nothing to karmic into the hell-realms awaiting the bhikkhu who willingly had his penis enter a woman. It was t Buddha laid down the first training rule:
Rule - Translation
SHOULD ANY MONK - PARTICIPATING IN THE TRAINING AND LIVELIHOOD OF THE M TRAINING, WITHOUT HAVING DECLARED HIS WEAKNESS - ENGAGE IN THE SEXUAL DEFEATED AND NO LONGER IN COMMUNION.
Rule - Synopsis
SEXUAL INTERCOURSE - GENITAL ANAL OR ORAL WITH ANY BEING IS A PARAJIKA.
Explanation
When a bhikkhu who desires a sexual intercourse has his penis enter the genital, anal or ora human being or an animal, male or female, dead or alive, penetrating to a depth equal to the sesame seed or greater, then that bhikkhu commits a Parajika. Also, when a bhikkhu willing to receive anal or oral sexual intercourse from a male human being or animal, then on pene already mentioned, that bhikkhu commits a Parajika. Whether or not there a covering, such example, between the organs involved is irrelevant to the offence. The Vibhanga goes on to supernatural beings - yakkhas, nagas and petas - who could temporarily adopt a human for in any of the above mentioned ways with any one of these beings of either gender is also a
When a bhikkhu is being sexually assaulted and he cooperate by deliberately making even effort to help accomplish the sexual intercourse then, when penetration to the depth mentio that bhikkhu commits a Parajika just the same. But when either mental assent is absent OR makes absolutely no physical effort to cooperate, then there is no offence at all for him. For bhikkhu is sexually assaulted without his knowledge while asleep drugged or delirious = no

A bhikkhu is forced to submit to sexual intercourse and puts up a struggle to escape to no a offence.
A bhikkhu is compelled to participate in sexual intercourse he is unwilling throughout but put through fear of' further physical violence = no offence.
The offence of Thullaccaya associated with this rule occurs in the Vibhanga only for the unli sexual intercourse by way of the decomposed genital, anal or oral orifice of a corpse! Howev associated offences of Thullaccaya, Sanghadisesa and Dukkata for unsuccessful attempts a arising from the second Sanghadisesa: should a bhikkhu desiring sexual intercourse, and th with lust, come into physical contact with the object of his desire then for the lustful physical alone he incurs an offence of Thullaccaya when his partner is a homosexual (the most comm see Sanghadisesa 2 below) or a female supernatural being (yakkha etc.); an offence of San partner is a woman or a girl; and an offence of Dukkata when the partner is a non-homosexu animal of any gender or a male supernatural being. There may also be an offence of Sangha intentional emission of semen (Sanghadisesa 1) when this is achieved outside the genital, a orifices of the beings mentioned above; for example, there would probably be such a Sangh intercourse with a mannequin. In the Vinitavatthu, sexual intercourse with a mannequin is a penetration, but if semen is subsequently emitted, the offence would probably be the Sangh has disrobed and has the status of a layperson is no longer subject to the Vinaya. Thus at th Vinayapitaka the correct method of disrobing is defined, namely: possessing the intention to makes it known to another person that one is hereby discarding the status of bhikkhu and be The actual words chosen are unimportant provided the meaning is the same, though the use in one's declaration is necessary; saying that one will disrobe is not enough. The person wh monastic or a layperson. It is essential only that the person who is told correctly understands one's words. If one says that one is disrobing not meaning to be taken literally, such as in a has not disrobed.
If a bhikkhu decides to disrobe, it is important that he follows the correct procedure, for if he disrobed properly then he is technically still a bhikkhu and subject to the Vinaya. He could th commit a Parajika, likely his first Parajika, and thus be ineligible for any future re-ordination a bhikkhu. The Vinitavatthu to the second Parajika gives the example of the unlearned bhikkh thought that he had committed a Parajika for stealing and was no longer a bhikkhu. Thinking matter, he committed sexual intercourse with a licentious young woman cowherd. The Budd the supposed theft had not constituted a Parajika and that man would still be a bhikkhu if ha sexual intercourse and thereby incurred a Parajika.
Lastly, we include an interesting case from the Vinitavatthu about a bhikkhu who took a mid closing the door of his abode:
"At that time a certain bhikkhu had gone to the Gabled Hall in the Great Wood outside of Ve day and was sleeping having left the door open. His limbs were stiff with the wind 'forces' (in at that time a large company of women bearing garlands and scents came to the park headi

Seeing the bhikkhu they had sexual intercourse with him and having taken their pleasure, ar a bull of a man!" they went on their way, taking up their garlands and scents."
That bhikkhu incurred no offence he was insensible throughout, but the Buddha instructed th henceforth to close the door when resting during the day.
1
Parajika 1

ÉÍÍÍ

suggestion, (that he could become wiser by travelling), he decided that he would travel. Some years later, someone mentioned to him that "In India, people die like flies." The adolescent Ven Mahinda wondered; "How do people die like flies? How are they allowed to die like flies?" He decided there and then, as a teenager, that he would travel to India and see for himself, the plight of the Indians.

Ten years after having that thought, he arrived in India as a Monk. He saw great poverty and great wealth. He also saw great warmth, courage and family spirit. All this he saw as a result of his thought ten years earlier.

The history of Nations is determined by the thoughts of the individual citizens. Your good thoughts and actions as a citizen of your country, will bring a good result for your country.

Ven Mahinda emphasised, that your current situation, is a result of your thoughts, and that you have an absolute free choice to think what you wish. Determine what you want to achieve in life, and keep those thoughts in your mind. But you should remember, that thinking;"I hope I will pass my exams/get that job." is not good enough. You must be more positive; you must think and tell yourself;"I will pass my exams/get a satisfying job."

By thinking positive thoughts, and reminding yourself of them, you will find your actions becoming more and more attuned. Your actions are tangible expressions of your thoughts, and you can achieve exactly as you think.

Also, when you are upset by others, it is important for you to maintain a positive and helpful attitude. By sending thoughts of loving kindness towards others in times of stress, or anger, you will overcome your own anger, and unhappiness. You will also be better able to let the disappointments and frustrations of life pass you by. Better still, you will be showing a good example to those around you, who will respect and appreciate your equanimity.

Do you understand now why you were born into your current family?

After answering many questions, the discussion ended by Ven Mahinda conducting a short, guided meditation for the 30 participants present.

Abridgement of the Dhamma talk given on Friday, May 8th 1992 at the UNSW as reported by Mike Kiddle. Friday Dhamma Talks between 7pm - 9pm are conducted regularly by the Unibuds througout the year, and are open to all students and the general public.

ÉÍÍÍ

- patience for natural movement,
- patience for mental suffering,
- patience for physical suffering,
- patience for human action.

The first type of patience is exemplified by when you feel hot or cold. We need patience for natural changes. If we want our hair to grow long, we must wait for it to grow. Sometimes we will be wet and sometimes we will be dry. We must wait for the weather to change before we can collect water, or perhaps before we can have a picnic. We must be patient with the elements and accept the weather conditions.

We need patience for mental activity. Sometimes we feel so sad in our minds. We feel so alone, everything goes wrong and we feel depressed. Yet when we open our eyes at other times, our mind is happier and we can see that everywhere on this planet there is great beauty, even under the sea.

The object of teaching Buddhism is to overcome yourself. It is to realise that our mind will fluctuate through the different emotions of happiness and sadness, enthusiasm and disappointment, anger and calm, excitement and boredom.

Some people say that they think they are being very patient if they want to go to the pub but don't go. You need restraint and tolerance. Sometimes you think you are very patient because you stay in the pub all night ! But this is not self control.

We also need patience for physical suffering. - When you go to the hospital, you have to have a lot of patience ! I have been here 9 years and recently I was very sick with the flu. I went to the doctor but he could not help me. He said "Just stay in bed and keep warm. Be patient and the flu will pass !"

When I was in the country as a young boy, I used to climb trees. I fell down many times but never hurt myself. But my friend next door fell out of the tree one day, hurting himself very badly. He had to stay many months in hospital. He had to be patient enough to allow his bones to knit together again.

Actually you have to study very hard. You have to earn money for your family, you will have to carry many heavy loads and greater responsibilities. Then you may become your own boss, and you will be even more important and have an even greater load and responsibility.

But patience brings beauty. Patience brings strength. Patience brings happiness.

In Asia, the people can be very patient. In Thailand especially, the women sit in the "Angel" position and do not move. They are very patient and can sit still in this position for a long time. It used to be very important for Thai ladies to be able to clasp their hands together for long periods. The Westerner could not understand why the Thai women behaved in this manner. But the Westerner could see that the Thai women were refined (disciplined) and had great patience. - In Chinese Kung Fu films, they emphasise how patient the charactors are.

If we don't learn to practise in this way, how can we succeed ? If you have a calm body, if you have a calm mind, you will have beauty, strength, and happiness. You can wear necklaces and adornments over your body, but your movements and your actions are far more visible and apparent to everyone. You can't hide how your mind is behaving. Patience is very beautiful. Patience does bring strength.

Sometimes you put chemicals on ants, and initially they die. But they have patience. After a few years they are patient enough to adapt to the poison and then it doesn't hurt them any more.

Our own body can also adapt. When I was in Darwin recently, I saw aboriginals talking together in the sun. It was very hot then, over 35 or 40 degrees. I couldn't believe that they could stand out in the sun for several hours and talk together. They did not show any awareness of the sun or its great heat. Supposedly I come from a hot country, Thailand, but it was far too hot for me. The aboriginals have had the patience to adapt to the sun and now have a pigment in their skin to survive in that environment.

When winter time comes, the trees must have patience, and animals must have patience and hibernate. They don't eat, they just stay still. For sure they must get cold, but they still survive. They learn from nature to be patient.

The ears of the fox in Europe are short whereas the ears of the fox in Africa are long. Why is this ? The ears of the fox in Africa are longer to let the heat out. The fox had patience and adapted to its different environment.

When you do a marathon, you have to run 42 km, or perhaps you are a good swimming athlete and like to swim in 1500 metre races. You have to have patience to train. They say there is no gain without pain. Each year those athletes at the Barcelona Olympics have been building up their patience, and training harder and harder. They have the patience to succeed, the patience that brings them strength, the patience that brings them happiness and satisfaction that they are performing well.

You come here to learn Buddhism, and to find happiness. It is difficult but you have to have patience to make small gains, and build on those gains. Some people like to run and cannot wait. Sometimes you have to be patient. If we want to grow a big tree, we have to wait. It will not grow for us in 10 minutes ! If we want to improve ourselves we should realise we can not do it in 10 minutes either. Sometimes you can not get an immediate result from your actions and you have to wait.

Turtles are very slow, patient, creatures, but they have very long lives, up to 150 years I heard someone say.

Sometimes when you wait, you think there is something wrong. Think of the hermit crab. It is like a shrimp, but takes over a vacant shell, and then carries the shell as its own house, to protect itself. If they don't have a shell, they would be eaten by all the other sea creatures and birds. The hermit crab can go everywhere, can feed, but they must carry their shell, - their house, on their back. And then they survive ! We should carry our patience around like the hermit crab carries its shell. Our patience will also protect us and help us survive. Please understand that the hermit crab does not live like a parasite, it lives like an orchid.

Coconuts are abundant in the Pacific region. When the coconut drops into the sea, the saltwater can not get in. The coconut can float for a 1,000 miles, find land and then grow itself into a tree. Coconuts grow and travel around the Pacific by themselves. The coconut is very patient and can exist and remain intact without succumbing to rot for many years. Do you remember that Australian man who survived in the Nepal snow recently for 43 days. What patience !

You can also eradicate your anger through patience.

Sometimes when you wait for someone, you can lose your patience. Let me tell you a story: In Japan, there were two very powerful, though evenly matched wrestlers. They decided one day that they would have a competition to see who actually was the best. So they set the time for the match the following day at 2 o'clock. One wrestler came promptly at 2 o'clock. The other wrestler decided purposely to come 2 hours late, at 4 o'clock. So who won the fight ? - The wrestler that had waited from 2 o'clock was so impatient that he could not concentrate properly and lost the fight !

We have all disappointed ourselves through being impatient at some time. There are many times in our life when we have to do, to go, to act. Patience is not always staying still, not hurrying, not rushing. Everything has to be ready on time, and patience is the discipline and training to be able to achieve that objective.

We can train animals, dogs and monkeys. I heard monkeys are hard to train apparently because they are more intelligent. The monkey is naughty and tricky, and knows what it is suppose to do, but prefers not to. Dogs have more patience, and accept training much more easily. How can we have more patience like the dog and gain more wisdom ? I never saw the crocodiles run in the Northern Territory, but I heard that they never eat turtles which are much slower than them. Why is this ?

If we use our wisdom, we can decide when we should use waiting or acting patience. I love patience. I love wisdom second. You can train yourself to become more patient. Look at the earthworm. it has no eyes nor fur. Yet it must be patient and gather its food searching through the soil.

Practise patience and you will achieve your goals. In Barcelona, you must be fast, strong, and tough, or skilled as in soccer. But in gymnastics, they give you points according to your poise, steadiness, and patience. The athletes have had to be very patient to go to the Olympics, - all the years that they have been training and the effort they have been putting towards achieving this ambition. It didn't take them 10 minutes to get there.

There is so much to tell about patience and its application in this world. I wish I could put patience in a bottle and offer it to you all this evening.
Thank you all for having good patience to listen to me.

Abridgement of the Dhamma talk given on Friday, July 31st 1992 at the UNSW as reported by Mike Kiddle. Friday Dhamma Talks between 7pm - 9pm are conducted regularly by the Unibuds through out the year, and are open to all students and the general public.

<end of file>

ÉÍÍÍ

family first. If the father and mother can set a loving, compassionate example to the children, then those children will be very lucky and will copy that example later.

If you just have good intention, but do not set an example, then the children will grow up the wrong way. Without sincerity and honesty, family life will collapse, partners will stay apart and no-one will look after the children.

To me, this is very sad, as the children will follow their parents' poor example. And even when the wife and husband divorce, they will not be better off, and nor will they be satisfied.

The Buddha lived over 2,500 years ago and taught the Five Precepts. These precepts are; to refrain from killing, taking what is not given, telling lies, sexual misconduct, and drinking intoxicating liquor. If you can't follow just the Five Precepts, then you will cause yourselves lots of trouble.

You must do your best!

If you observe the Five Precepts strictly, you will earn the respect of many. People will trust you. You will have name and fame where ever you go. But once you break the Precepts you will have lots of trouble!

Even sometimes when you keep the Five Precepts, you experience many conflicts and suffering.

Sometimes the more your name and fame spreads, you get trouble from others who are jealous, mean and selfish. You may get trouble from those who don't like the teachings. You must have patience. If you don't have patience, you will have a lot of trouble!

